Civil Action No. 15823

COMPLAINT

(Filed November 2, 1971)

The United States of America, plaintiff, by its attorneys, acting under the direction of the Attorney General of the United States, brings this civil action to obtain equitable relief against the above named defendants, and complains and alleges as follows:

I

Jurisdiction and Venue

1. This complaint is filed and this action is instituted under Section 15 of the Act of Congress of October 15, 1914, as amended (15 U.S.C. Section 25), commonly known as the Clayton Act, and under Section 4 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, as amended (15 U.S.C. Section 4), commonly known as the Sherman Act, in order to prevent and restrain continuing violations by the defendants, as hereinafter alleged, of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended (15 U.S.C. Section 18) and of Section 1 of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. Section 1).

2. Each of the defendants transacts business and is found within the Northern District of Georgia.

II

IV

Trade and Commerce

17. Commercial banks fill an essential and unique role in the Nation's economy. Their principal functions are the acceptance of deposits for safekeeping and convenience in making payments by checks, the granting of loans or advances of funds to individuals and business firms, and the creation through demand deposits of net additions to the supply of money. Most money payments in the United States are made through checks drawn against demand deposits, and the creation and holding of such deposits is a function peculiar to commercial banks and one which makes them to a great extent the administrator of the Nation's check payment system. Through the making of loans to individuals and business firms, commercial banks supply a significant part of the credit requirements of the Nation's economy. Commercial banks also accept time deposits from various types of depositors and provide a wide variety of other financial services, including personal and corporate trust accounts, the collection of drafts, bills, and other commercial instruments, the acceptance of bills of exchange, the issuance of letters of credit, the sale of cashier's checks and drafts on correspondent banks, the purchase or sale of securities for customers, the sale of foreign exchange, and the renting of safety deposit boxes. This combination of services is unduplicated by other financial institutions.

18. C&S National is the largest banking organization providing commercial banking services in the Atlanta Area. It operates at least thirty banking offices in Fulton County and one banking office in DeKalb County. As of December 31, 1970, it had total assets of $1.7 billion, total deposits of $1.4 billion, and net loans and discounts of $1.1 billion. As of June 30, 1970, its offices in Fulton County had total deposits of about $706 million, accounting for approximately 27 percent of total county deposits. Also, as of the same date, its office in DeKalb County had total deposits of about $13 million, accounting for approximately 4.4 percent of total county deposits. C&S National, through its wholly-owned subsidiary C&S Holding, controls about 94 percent of the stock of Citizens and Southern DeKalb Bank (hereinafter referred to as "C&S DeKalb") which operates two offices in DeKalb County. As of June 30, 1970, C&S DeKalb had total deposits of about $23 million, accounting for approximately 8 percent of total county deposits.

19. C&S Emory operates three banking offices in DeKalb County. As of December 31, 1970, it had total assets of $42.3 million, total deposits of $35.4 million, and net loans and discounts of $28.5 million. As of June 30, 1970, its total deposits accounted for approximately 13 percent of total DeKalb County deposits.

20. Combined, C&S National, C&S DeKalb, and C&S Emory represent the largest banking organization in DeKalb County. As of June 30, 1970, their combined deposits of about $73 million accounted for approximately 25 percent of total DeKalb County deposits.

21. C&S Chamblee operates two banking offices in DeKalb County. As of December 31, 1970, it had total assets of $21.1 million, total deposits of $18.7 million, and net loans and discounts of $10.7 million. As of June 30, 1970, its deposits accounted for approximately 6 percent of total DeKalb County deposits.

22. C&S Park National operates a single banking office in DeKalb County. As of December 31, 1970, it had total assets of $11.1 million, total deposits of $9.8 million, and net loans and discounts of $3.5 million. As of June 30, 1970, its deposits accounted for approximately 3 percent of total DeKalb County deposits.

23. C&S South DeKalb operates a single banking office in DeKalb County. As of December 31, 1970, it had total assets of $5.1 million, total deposits of $4.3 million, and net loans and discounts of $2.1 million. As of June 30, 1970, its deposits accounted for about 1 percent of total DeKalb County deposits.

24. C&S Tucker operates two banking offices in DeKalb County. As of December 31, 1970, it had total assets of $26.5 million, total deposits of $23 million, and net loans and discounts of $14.8 million. As of June 30, 1971, its deposits accounted for about 7 percent of total DeKalb County deposits.

25. The predominant share of the business banking offices in DeKalb County receive is derived from DeKalb County. DeKalb County is a concentrated banking market. As of June 30, 1970, the four largest banking organizations in DeKalb County held over 65 percent of total county deposits. If C&S Chamblee, C&S Park National, and C&S South DeKalb were merged into the C&S System, it would account for 35 percent of total county deposits, and the four largest banking organizations would account for about 75 percent of total county deposits.

26. C&S East Point operates three banking offices in Fulton County. As of December 31, 1970, it had total assets of $28.4 million, total deposits of $23.3 million, and net loans and discounts of $22.9 million. As of June 30, 1970, C&S National and C&S East Point combined had total deposits of about $732 million and represented the largest banking organization in Fulton County, accounting for approximately 28 percent of total Fulton County deposits.

27. C&S North Fulton operates a single banking office in North Fulton County. As of December 31, 1970, it had total assets of $7.7 million, total deposits of $6.3 million, and net loans and discounts of $5.6 million.

28. C&S Sandy Springs operates a single banking office in North Fulton County. As of December 31, 1970, it had total assets of $22 million, total deposits of $19 million, and net loans and discounts of $11.7 million.

29. The predominant share of the business banking offices in North Fulton County receive is derived from that area. North Fulton County is a concentrated banking market. As of June 30, 1970, five commercial banks operated banking offices there. As of that date, C&S North Fulton and C&S Sandy Springs accounted for about 46 percent of the total deposits held by all banking offices located in North Fulton County. C&S East Point has recently opened a single banking office in North Fulton County.

30. Fulton County is also a concentrated banking market. As of June 30, 1970, the four largest banking organizations accounted for about 85 percent of total Fulton County deposits. C&S National presently holds about 27 per cent; its subsidiary, C&S East Point, holds about 1 percent. Thus, the C&S System holds over 28 percent, the largest share held by any banking organization. Combined, C&S Sandy Springs and C&S North Fulton hold about 1 percent.

31. The Atlanta Area is also a concentrated banking market. As of June 30, 1970, the four largest banking organizations accounted for about 85 percent of total Atlanta Area deposits. The C&S System holds over 29 percent, the largest share held by any organization. Combined, C&S Chamblee, C&S Park National, C&S South DeKalb, C&S North Fulton, and C&S Sandy Springs hold about 2 percent of Atlanta Area deposits.

32. Customers of C&S National, C&S Emory, C&S East Point, C&S Chamblee, C&S Park National, C&S South DeKalb, C&S Tucker, C&S North Fulton, and C&S Sandy Springs regularly utilize interstate communications including the mails, telephone and telegraph, to carry on their business with, and apply for and obtain the services provided by these banks. Each of the defendant banks regularly utilizes interstate communications including the mails, telephone, and telegraph, and conducts business with, and provides services to, customers, institutions, and other banks located in States other than Georgia. Each of the defendant banks is engaged in interstate commerce.

33. Prior to 1971, Georgia law prohibited banks from branching outside the cities in which they were located. This restricted the ability of the major Atlanta banks to open branches in Fulton and DeKalb Counties. Since 1960, Georgia law has prohibited bank holding companies from owning more than 5 percent of the outstanding shares of two or more banks. In response to these prohibitions against geographic expansion, the major Atlanta banks, C&S National among them, developed various relationships with suburban banks in the Atlanta area.

34. The C&S System and each of C&S Chamblee, C&S Park National, C&S South DeKalb, C&S North Fulton, and C&S Sandy Springs have had, among others, the following relationships: (1) C&S National and various persons associated with it contributed to the initial organization of each bank; (2) C&S Holding acquired 5 percent of the outstanding shares of each bank; (3) C&S National and various persons associated with it assisted in the sale of the remainder of the stock; (4) C&S National provided mutually beneficial correspondent services to each bank; (5) C&S National allowed each bank to use the C&S logogram, which resulted in joint identification; (6) the C&S System provided each bank, in varying degrees, with personnel, management and operational assistance; and (7) C&S National and each bank have, in many instances, jointly determined the competitive strategy to be followed in conducting the business of each bank. Consequently, a close working relationship between each bank and the C&S System was established at the time of each bank's formation and has continued to the present time.

35. C&S Tucker was organized in 1919 and was operated as an independent bank until 1965. In February 1965, C&S National acquired 80 percent of the outstanding shares of C&S Tucker. Subsequently, C&S Holding acquired 5 percent of the outstanding shares, and the remaining 75 percent was acquired by other persons. Following these acquisitions, the C&S System and C&S Tucker had, among others, the relationships described in subsections (4), (5), (6), and (7) of paragraph 34, which have continued to the present time.

36. C&S Sandy Springs, C&S Chamblee, C&S North Fulton, C&S Park National, and C&S South DeKalb were organized in 1959, 1960, 1967, and 1969, respectively. These banks were organized at a time when the areas of DeKalb County and North Fulton County were experiencing a period of significant growth and development. DeKalb County's 1970 population of 414,000 represents a 62 percent increase since 1960. This population increase has been accompanied by an even larger growth in the number and size of commercial and industrial firms located in the area. Although the population center of Fulton County remains the City of Atlanta, that portion of the county's population located in North Fulton County has increased from 3.3 percent in 1950 to 9.2 percent in 1970. North Fulton County has also experienced significant growth and development since 1960.

37. As of January 1, 1971, Georgia law was changed to permit banks to branch throughout the counties in which they maintained banking offices. Because the C&S System maintained banking offices in DeKalb and Fulton Counties as of January 1, 1971, it could then legally branch and maintain banking offices throughout both counties. In 1970, C&S Emory applied to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation to merge C&S Chamblee, C&S Park National, C&S South DeKalb and C&S Tucker into it. Excepting the application to merge C&S Tucker, which was denied, these merger proposals received approval on October 4, 1971. Also in 1970, C&S East Point applied to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation to merge C&S Sandy Springs and C&S North Fulton. These merger proposals were also approved on October 4, 1971.

V

Offenses Alleged

38. Beginning in 1959, the exact date being unknown to plaintiff, and continuing thereafter up to and including the date of the filing of this complaint, defendants C&S National, C&S Holding, and various other persons entered into a combination with C&S Sandy Springs and various other persons to do those things described in paragraph 34.

39. Beginning in 1960, the exact date being unknown to plaintiff, and continuing thereafter up to and including the date of the filing of this complaint, defendants C&S National, C&S Holding, and various other persons entered into a combination with C&S Chamblee and various other persons to do those things described in paragraph 34.

40. Beginning in 1965, the exact date being unknown to plaintiff, and continuing thereafter up to and including the date of the filing of this complaint, defendants C&S National, C&S Holding, and various other persons entered into a combination with C&S Tucker and various other persons to do those things described in paragraph 35.

41. Beginning in 1967, the exact date being unknown to plaintiff, and continuing thereafter up to and including the date of filing of this complaint, defendants C&S National, C&S Holding, and various other persons entered into a combination with C&S North Fulton and various other persons to do those things described in paragraph 34.

42. Beginning in 1967, the exact date being unknown to plaintiff, and continuing thereafter up to and including the date of filing of this complaint, defendants C&S National, C&S Holding, and various other persons entered into a combination with C&S Park National and various other persons to do those things described in paragraph 34.

43. Beginning in 1969, the exact date being unknown to plaintiff, and continuing thereafter up to and including the date of the filing of this complaint, defendants C&S National, C&S Holding, and various other persons entered into a combination with C&S South DeKalb and various other persons to do those things described in paragraph 34.

44. The aforesaid combinations described in paragraphs 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, and 43 have been and are jointly and severally, in unreasonable restraint of the above described interstate trade and commerce in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act.

45. Pursuant to the aforesaid unlawful combinations the defendants have done, among others, those things described in paragraph 34 and 35 above.

46. Each of the defendants C&S Chamblee, C&S Park National, and C&S South DeKalb have entered into agreements with C&S Emory which, if carried out, will result in the merger of C&S Chamblee, C&S Park National and C&S South DeKalb into C&S Emory. Each of the defendants C&S Sandy Springs and C&S North Fulton have entered into agreements with C&S East Point, which if carried out, will result in the merger of C&S Sandy Springs and C&S North Fulton into C&S East Point. The Board of Directors of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation approved these proposed mergers on October 4, 1971.

47. The joint and several effects of the aforesaid agreements to merge may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act.

VI

Effects

48. The effects of the offenses alleged in paragraphs 38 through 47 of this complaint are, among others, the following:

(a) Actual competition and the potential for increased competition between and among the defendant commercial banks have been and will be eliminated and unreasonably restrained;

(b) Competition generally in commercial banking in DeKalb County, Fulton County, North Fulton County, and the Atlanta Area has been and will be substantially lessened; and

(c) Concentration in commercial banking in DeKalb County, Fulton County, North Fulton County, and the Atlanta Area will be substantially increased.

PRAYER

Wherefore plaintiff prays

1. That the aforesaid combinations described in paragraphs 38 through 43 of this complaint be adjudged to be unlawful and in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act.

2. That the defendants, their successors, assignees, and transferees, and their officers, directors, agents, and employees thereof, and all other persons acting or claiming to act on behalf thereof, be perpetually enjoined and restrained from, in any manner, directly or indirectly, continuing, maintaining, or renewing the aforesaid offenses, and from engaging in other combinations, conspiracies, contracts, agreements, understandings or concerts of action having similar purposes or effects, and from adopting or following any practices, plans, or programs having similar purposes or effects.

3. That the aforesaid mergers described in paragraph 46 of this complaint, pursuant to the agreements described therein, be adjudged to be unlawful and in violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act.

4. That the defendants and all persons acting on their behalf be enjoined from carrying out the aforesaid mergers, or any similar plans or agreements, the effect of which would be in any way to merge, consolidate, or in any other way combine the businesses of the defendants.

5. That defendants C&S National, C&S Holding, C&S Emory, C&S East Point, and all persons controlled either directly or indirectly by C&S National be enjoined for a period of ten years from the date of judgment in this action from acquiring control over or merging, consolidating, or combining with any other commercial banking organizations operating in the Atlanta Area.

6. That the plaintiff have such other and further relief as the Court may deem just and proper.

7. That the plaintiff recover the costs of this suit.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF GEORGIA
ATLANTA DIVISION

ANSWER OF DEFENDANTS

(Filed May 5, 1972)

Number and Title omitted.

Come now The Citizens and Southern National Bank ("C&S National"), Citizens and Southern Holding Company ("C&S Holding"). The Citizens and Southern Emory Bank ("C&S Emory"). The Citizens and Southern Bank of East Point ("C&S East Point"), The Citizens and Southern Bank of Chamblee ("C&S Chamblee"), The Citizens and Southern Park National Bank ("C&S Park National"), The Citizens and Southern South DeKalb Bank ("C&S South DeKalb"), The Citizens and Southern Bank of Tucker ("C&S Tucker"), The Citizens and Southern Bank of North Fulton ("C&S North Fulton"), and The Citizens and Southern Bank of Sandy Springs ("C&S Sandy Springs"), defendants in the above-styled lawsuit, and file this, their Answer to the Complaint heretofore served upon them.

First Defense

In answer to the numbered paragraphs of the Complaint, defendants show the following:

Defendants admit that this Court has jurisdiction of this action under Section 15 of the Clayton Act, but defendants deny that this Court has jurisdiction of this action under Section 4 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, as amended (15 U.S.C. § 4), commonly known as the Sherman Act. By way of further answer, defendants deny that they or any of them have violated any of the statutes cited in paragraph 1 of the Complaint or that they or any of them would, by consummating the mergers alleged in the Complaint, violate any of those statutes.

Defendants admit the allegations contained in paragraph 2 of the Complaint.

Defendants admit the allegations contained in paragraph 3 of the Complaint, but show that C&S National was established in Savannah, Georgia, in the Southern District of Georgia. Defendants show further that C&S National, as the sole owner of C&S Holding, is a registered bank holding company under the laws of the United States.

Defendants admit the allegations contained in paragraph 4 of the Complaint.

Defendants admit the allegations contained in paragraph 5 of the Complaint.

Defendants admit the allegations contained in paragraph 6 of the Complaint.

Defendants admit the allegations contained in paragraph 7 of the Complaint.

Defendants admit the allegations contained in paragraph 8 of the Complaint.

Defendants admit the allegations contained in paragraph 9 of the Complaint.

10

Defendants admit the allegations contained in paragraph 10 of the Complaint.

11

Defendants admit the allegations contained in paragraph 11 of the Complaint.

12

Defendants admit the allegations contained in paragraph 12 of the Complaint.

13

Defendants deny the allegations contained in paragraph 13 of the Complaint.

14

Defendants admit that paragraph 14 of the Complaint uses the term "Atlanta Area" to mean the area comprising DeKalb and Fulton Counties, Georgia, but defendants deny the relevance of that term to this cause of action.

15

Defendants admit that paragraph 15 of the Complaint uses the term "North Fulton County" to mean that part of Fulton County situated north of the Atlanta city limits, but defendants deny the relevance of that term to this cause of action.

16

Defendants deny the accuracy and completeness of the definition in paragraph 16 of the Complaint but note its use by plaintiff in the Complaint.

17

Answering paragraph 17 of the Complaint, defendants admit that commercial banks play an important role in the nation's economy and that many commercial banks perform some or all of the functions described in paragraph 17 of the Complaint. Defendants deny that all of the functions described in paragraph 17 of the Complaint are performed by all commercial banks, and defendants assert that many financial institutions generally perform the same or similar functions as do commercial banks in the geographic areas relevant in this case and are therefore in direct and actual competition with defendants. Defendants therefore expressly deny the last sentence of paragraph 17 and generally deny any and all other allegations contained in paragraph 17, except for those expressly admitted herein.

18

Defendants admit that the figures alleged in paragraph 18 of the Complaint are roughly accurate, but defendants show that the figures alleged for C&S National's total assets, total deposits, and net loans and discounts as of December 31, 1970, include C&S National's banking offices in six cities in Georgia as well as C&S National's eight majority-owned banking affiliates. By way of further answer, defendants expressly deny any implication to the effect that the "Atlanta Area" constitutes a relevant market area or an appropriate geographical region or section of the country within the purview of either Section 7 of the Clayton Act or Section 1 of the Sherman Act with respect to the business or activities of the defendants or any of them.

19

Defendants admit that the figures alleged in paragraph 19 of the Complaint are roughly accurate, but defendants expressly deny any implication to the effect that DeKalb County constitutes a relevant market area or an appropriate geographic region or section of the country within the purview of either Section 7 of the Clayton Act or Section 1 of the Sherman Act with respect to the business or activities of the defendants or any of them.

20

Defendants admit the figures alleged in paragraph 20 of the Complaint are roughly accurate, but defendants expressly deny any implication to the effect that DeKalb County constitutes a relevant market area or an appropriate geographical region or section of the country within the purview of either Section 7 of the Clayton Act or Section 1 of the Sherman Act with respect to the business or activities of the defendants or any of them.

21

Defendants admit that the figures alleged in paragraph 21 of the Complaint are roughly accurate, but defendants expressly deny any implication to the effect that DeKalb County constitutes a relevant market area or an appropriate geographical region or section of the country within the purview of either Section 7 of the Clayton Act or Section 1 of the Sherman Act with respect to the business or activities of the defendants or any of them.

22

Defendants admit that the figures alleged in paragraph 22 of the Complaint are roughly accurate, but defendants expressly deny any implication to the effect that DeKalb County constitutes a relevant market area or an appropriate geographical region or section of the country within the purview of either Section 7 of the Clayton Act or Section 1 of the Sherman Act with respect to the business or activities of the defendants or any of them.

23

Defendants admit that the figures alleged in paragraph 23 of the Complaint are roughly accurate, but defendants expressly deny any implication to the effect that DeKalb County constitutes a relevant market area or an appropriate geographical region or section of the country within the purview of either Section 7 of the Clayton Act or Section 1 of the Sherman Act with respect to the business or activities of the defendants or any of them.

24

Defendants admit that the figures alleged in paragraph 24 of the Complaint are roughly accurate, but defendants expressly deny any implication to the effect that DeKalb County constitutes a relevant market area or an appropriate geographical region or section of the country within the purview of either Section 7 of the Clayton Act or Section 1 of the Sherman Act with respect to the business or activities of the defendants or any of them.

Answering paragraph 25 of the Complaint, defendants deny that DeKalb County constitutes a concentrated banking market, and deny further that the term "concentrated" as used by plaintiff throughout the Complaint has any meaning whatsoever. Defendants are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the figures alleged in paragraph 25 of the Complaint, but defendants deny that figures such as those alleged in said paragraph 25 give a complete and accurate description of competition in the relevant line of commerce in the relevant geographic market. To the extent not expressly admitted, defendants deny the remaining allegations of paragraph 25 of the Complaint.

26

Defendants admit that the figures alleged in paragraph 26 of the Complaint are roughly accurate, except that defendants expressly deny that "Fulton County" constitutes a relevant market area or an appropriate geographical region or section of the country within the purview of either Section 7 of the Clayton Act or Section 1 of the Sherman Act with respect to the business or activities of the defendants or any of them.

Defendants admit that the figures alleged in paragraph 27 of the Complaint are roughly accurate, except that defendants expressly deny that "North Fulton County" constitutes a relevant market area or an appropriate geographical region or section of the country within the purview of either Section 7 of the Clayton Act or Section 1 of the Sherman Act with respect to the business or activities of the defendants or any of them.

28

Defendants admit that the figures alleged in paragraph 28 of the Complaint are roughly accurate, except that defendants expressly deny that "North Fulton County" constitutes a relevant market area or an appropriate geographical region or section of the country within the purview of either Section 7 of the Clayton Act or Section 1 of the Sherman Act with respect to the business or activities of the defendants or any of them.

29

Answering paragraph 29 of the Complaint, defendants deny that "North Fulton County" constitutes a concentrated banking market. Defendants are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the figures alleged in paragraph 29 of the Complaint, but defendants deny that figures such as those alleged in said paragraph 29 give a complete and accurate description of competition in the relevant line of commerce in the relevant geographic market. To the extent not expressly admitted, defendants deny the remaining allegations of paragraph 29 of the Complaint.

Answering paragraph 30 of the Complaint, defendants deny that Fulton County constitutes a concentrated banking market. Defendants are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the figures alleged in paragraph 30 of the Complaint, but defendants deny that figures such as those alleged in said paragraph 30 give a complete and accurate description of competition in the relevant line of commerce in the relevant geographic market. To the extent not expressly admitted, defendants deny the remaining allegations of paragraph 30 of the Complaint.

Answering paragraph 31 of the Complaint, defendants deny that the "Atlanta Area" constitutes a concentrated banking market. Defendants are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the figures alleged in paragraph 31 of the Complaint, but defendants deny that figures such as those alleged in said paragraph 31 give a complete and accurate description of competition in the relevant line of commerce in the relevant geographic market. To the extent not expressly admitted, defendants deny the remaining allegations of paragraph 31 of the Complaint.

32

Answering paragraph 32 of the Complaint, defendants admit that they are engaged in interstate commerce, but deny the remaining allegations of said paragraph.

The allegations contained in paragraph 33 of the Complaint allege a partial but incomplete history of the anti-competitive Georgia laws which have sought to restrict the growth and expansion of all banks and bank holding companies in the state, including the major banks in Atlanta. Beginning in 1960, C&S sought to, and did, extend the pro-competitive benefits of C&S banking to residents and businesses located in suburban areas surrounding the city limits of Atlanta, Augusta and Savannah, through the vehicle of organizing and establishing the "correspondent Associate" banks, which remained in full compliance with the artificial restrictions of Georgia law. Other banks in Atlanta and throughout the state did likewise. Defendants deny that Georgia law since 1960 has prohibited Bank holding companies from owning more than 5% of the outstanding shares of two or more banks, but show instead that Georgia law has prevented bank holding companies from thereafter acquiring or holding direct or indirect ownership of more than 5% of the voting shares of any bank. [Ga. Code Ann. §13-207]. Defendants deny the inference that C&S National responded to these state law restrictions by developing relationships with existing suburban banks in the Atlanta area. By way of further answer, defendants show that C&S National responded to these state law restrictions by helping establish and organize new banks and, in the case of C&S Tucker, by reorganizing an existing, dormant bank, all with the permission of state and federal bank regulatory agencies.

Answering paragraph 34 of the Complaint, defendants deny the allegations of subparagraph (7) thereof, but admit the remaining allegations contained in said paragraph 34.

35

Answering paragraph 35 of the Complaint, defendants admit the allegations of the first sentence, deny the allegations of the second sentence, and admit the allegations of the third sentence. Defendants admit that after C&S Holding acquired 5% of the outstanding shares of C&S Tucker, the C&S System and C&S Tucker had the relationships described in subsections (4), (5), and (6) of paragraph 34 of the Complaint, but defendants deny that the C&S System and C&S Tucker engaged in the relationships described in subsection (7) of paragraph 34 of the Complaint.

36

Defendants admit the allegations contained in paragraph 36 of the Complaint.

37

Defendants admit the allegations contained in paragraph 37 of the Complaint.

38

Answering paragraph 38 of the Complaint, defendants admit that C&S National, C&S Holding, and C&S Sandy Springs have engaged in the relationships described in subsections (1), (2), (3), (4), (5), and (6) of paragraph 34 of the Complaint, but deny that C&S National, C&S Holding, and C&S Sandy Springs have engaged in the relationships described in subsection (7) of paragraph 34 of the Complaint. Defendants are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations that various other persons, who are not named by the Complaint, have been involved in the relationships described in paragraph 34 of the Complaint.

39

Answering paragraph 39 of the Complaint, defendants admit that C&S National, C&S Holding, and C&S Chamblee have engaged in the relationships described in subsections (1), (2), (3) (4), (5), and (6) of paragraph 34 of the Complaint, but deny that C&S National, C&S Holding, and C&S Chamblee have engaged in the relationships described in subsection (7) of paragraph 34 of the Complaint. Defendants are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the alegations that various other persons, who are not named by the Complaint, have been involved in the relationships described in paragraph 34 of the Complaint.

40

Answering paragraph 40 of the Complaint, defendants admit the C&S National, C&S Holding, and C&S Tucker have engaged in the relationships described in subsections (4), (5), and (6) of paragraph 34 of the Complaint, but deny that C&S National, C&S Holding, and C&S Tucker have engaged in the relationships described in subsection (7) of paragraph 34 of the Complaint. Defendants are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations that various other persons, who are not named by the Complaint, have been involved in the relationships described in paragraph 34 of the Complaint.

41

Answering paragraph 41 of the Complaint, defendants admit that C&S National, C&S Holding, and C&S North Fulton have engaged in the relationships described in subsections (1), (2), (3), (4), (5), and (6) of paragraph 34 of the Complaint, but deny that C&S National, C&S Holding, and C&S North Fulton have engaged in the relationships described in subsection (7) of paragraph 34 of the Complaint. Defendants are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations that various other persons, who are not named by the Complaint, have been involved in the relationships described in paragraph 34 of the Complaint.

Answering paragraph 42 of the Complaint, defendants admit that C&S National, C&S Holding, and C&S Park National have engaged in the relationships described in subsections (1), (2), (3), (4), (5), and (6) of paragraph 34 of the Complaint, but deny that C&S National, C&S Holding, and C&S Park National have engaged in the relationships described in subsection (7) of paragraph 34 of the Complaint. Defendants are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations that various other persons, who are not named by the Complaint, have been involved in the relationships described in paragraph 34 of the Complaint.

Answering paragraph 43 of the Complaint, defendants admit that C&S National, C&S Holding, and C&S South DeKalb have engaged in the relationships described in subsections (1), (2), (3), (4), (5), and (6) of paragraph 34 of the Complaint, but deny that C&S National, C&S Holding, and C&S South DeKalb have engaged in the relationships described in subsection (7) of paragraph 34 of the Complaint. Defendants are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations that various other persons, who are not named by the Complaint, have been involved in the relationships described in paragraph 34 of the Complaint.

Defendants deny the allegations contained in paragraph 44 of the Complaint. By way of further answer, defendants assert that the relationships described in subsections (1), (2), (3), (4), (5), and (6) of paragraph 34 were established with the consent or knowledge of the state and federal bank regulatory agencies and have, from their very initiation, encouraged and enhanced competition and have promoted trade and commerce in the relevant geographic markets by introducing and expanding banking services therein. These relationships, therefore, have met the banking convenience and needs of the communities served by the defendants.

45

Answering paragraph 45 of the Complaint, defendants admit that they have engaged in the relationships described in paragraphs 34 and 35 of the Complaint, with the exception of the relationships described in subsection (7) of paragraph 34 of the Complaint. Defendants deny that these relationships constitute unlawful combinations.

46

Defendants admit the allegations contained in paragraph 46 of the Complaint.

47

Defendants deny the allegations contained in paragraph 47 of the Complaint. Further, defendants deny that the merger transactions can be judged jointly or cumulatively, but show that each transaction must be judged separately and independently of the others. By way of further answer, defendants assert that the consummation of each and every one of the agreements described in paragraph 46 of the Complaint will encourage and enhance competition in the relevant geographic and product markets by expanding banking services therein and will promote the convenience and needs of the communities served by the defendant banks.

48

Answering the subparagraphs of paragraph 48 of the Complaint, the defendants allege as follows:

(a) Defendants deny the allegations contained in subparagraph (a) of paragraph 48 of the Complaint. By way of further answer, defendants show that the banks involved in this lawsuit are not in actual competition with one another and that there is no potential for increased competition between and among them.

(b) Defendants deny the allegations contained in subparagraph (b) of paragraph 48 of the Complaint. By way of further answer, defendants deny that DeKalb County, Fulton County, North Fulton County, and the Atlanta Area are relevant geographic markets in this lawsuit, and, in any event, defendants deny that the consummation of the agreements described in paragraph 46 of the Complaint will substantially lessen competition in those areas.

(c) Defendants deny the allegations contained in subparagraph (c) of paragraph 48 of the Complaint. By way of further answer, defendants deny that DeKalb County, Fulton County, North Fulton County, and the Atlanta Area are relevant geographic markets in this lawsuit. Defendants further deny that commercial banking is concentrated in those areas and that the consummation of the agreements described in paragraph 46 of the Complaint will substantially increase concentration in those areas.

Defendants further deny that commercial banking is the applicable product market by which to judge the allegations of the Complaint and this paragraph 48. By way of further answer, defendants show that they would not be guilty of the offenses alleged in the Complaint even if commercial banking were the applicable product market.

Defendants deny each and every allegation in the Complaint that has not been either expressly admitted or denied heretofore.

Second Defense

The Complaint fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted against defendants or any of them.

Third Defense

The allegations of the Complaint based on Section 1 of the Sherman Act fail to state a claim upon which relief can be granted against defendants or any of them.

Fourth Defense

The allegations of the Complaint based on Section 7 of the Clayton Act fail to state a claim upon which relief can be granted against defendants or any of them.

Fifth Defense

The proposed mergers that resulted in the initiation of this lawsuit constitute what is essentially an internal reorganization. Five of the defendant banks, C&S Chamblee, C&S Park National, C&S South DeKalb, C&S North Fulton, and C&S Sandy Springs, were organized under C&S guidance and direction, and a sixth defendant, C&S Tucker, was reorganized under C&S guidance and direction, all at a time when Georgia law did not permit C&S National or any other Atlanta bank to branch outside the City of Atlanta. [These six defendants are hereafter referred to collectively as "C&S Correspondent Associates"]. A close working relationship has existed ever since, and a majority of the stock in each bank has been held continuously by directors, officers, and employees of C&S National, directors, officers, and employees of subsidiary banks of C&S Holding, and a number of influential customers who maintain significant banking relationships with one or more such banks.

The remaining stock is well dispersed, with no significant blocks held independently of the C&S System. The management of each of the C&S Correspondent Associates has been drawn from the C&S System, C&S National has hired their employees, and these employees participate fully in the various employee benefits provided by the C&S System. C&S National provides credit services, investment advice, and numerous other services to the C&S Correspondent Associates in much the same manner as it does for its own branches and subsidiary banks. Like the other banks in the C&S System, the C&S Correspondent Associates use the C&S name and logo and advertise jointly with C&S. A significant percentage of the loan portfolio of each Correspondent Associate is made up of loans purchased from C&S National. C&S National has subscribed to capital notes of each C&S Correspondent Associate when additional capital has been needed. In short, the C&S Correspondent Associates are recognized by the public and by C&S National as C&S banks. They do not compete today and have not competed in the past. The proposed mergers have been contemplated since the C&S Correspondent Associates were organized by C&S, but the mergers were not possible when Georgia law prevented banks from branching beyond municipal boundaries. The mergers have now been made possible by a change in Georgia's branch banking law which became effective on January 1, 1971. The proposed mergers, if allowed, will not alter the existing competitive structure in any relevant geographic market, and they will not add to the concentration of banking resources in any relevant geographic market. Furthermore, there is no reasonable probability that the C&S Correspondent Associates will become disassociated from the C&S System in the future if the proposed mergers are denied.

Sixth Defense

The Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, not this Court, has jurisdiction under the Bank Holding Company

Act ("BHCA") [12 U.S.C. § 1841, et seq.] to determine the legality of the transactions and relationships existing between and among C&S National, C&S Holding, and their affiliates and subsidiaries.

Seventh Defense

In 1966 and 1968, the Federal Reserve Board in the exercise of its jurisdiction conducted an investigation into the legality of the C&S acquisitions and relationships, and plaintiff participated in a hearing conducted in connection with that investigation, during which the relationships alleged by plaintiff in paragraphs 34 and 35 of the Complaint to violate the Sherman Act were fully explored. The Board did not find that the acquisitions and operating relationships violated the then existing provisions of the BHCA. Plaintiff did not challenge the Board's decision or take any other action, until the filing of the Complaint in this lawsuit, to challenge the legality of the relationships attacked by the Complaint, and is therefore barred, by laches and the statute of limitations, estopped and forever foreclosed from doing so now.

Eighth Defense

Section 11(e) of the BHCA [12 U.S.C. § 1849(e)] requires that the legality of the transactions whereby C&S National and C&S Holding acquired and established continuing operating relationships with the C&S Correspondent Associates be determined by Section 3 of the BHCA rather than by Section 1 of the Sherman Act. The C&S relationships did not violate Section 3 of the BHCA at the time they were initiated, and do not now. The structure, organization and operating relationships between and among defendants are in compliance with the BHCA, sanctioned and exclusively regulated thereby, and are, therefore, not subject to attack under Section 1 of the Sherman Act in this Court.

Ninth Defense

The transactions whereby C&S National and C&S Holding acquired and established continuing operating relationships with C&S Sandy Springs, C&S Chamblee, and C&S Tucker were consummated prior to July 1, 1966, and are therefore conclusively presumed by Section 11(d) of the BHCA [12 U.S.C. § 1849 (d)] not to have been in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act.

Tenth Defense

The C&S Correspondent Associates are "subsidiaries" of C&S National and C&S Holding as defined by Section 2(d)(3) of the BHCA [12 U.S.C. § 1841(d)(3)]. These intra-enterprise relationships, therefore, cannot constitute a "combination . . . or conspiracy" in restraint of trade or commerce in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act.

Eleventh Defense

C&S National and C&S Holding caused the formation of the C&S Correspondent Associates as subsidiary corporations for the actual carrying on of their immediate lawful business, or the natural and legitimate branches or extensions thereof. C&S Holding held part of the stock of such subsidiary corporations. The effect of such formations was not to substantially lessen competition; therefore, said matters (alleged by the complaint to violate the Sherman Act and the Clayton Act) are protected by Section 7 of the Clayton Act.

Twelfth Defense

The plaintiff is not entitled to injunctive relief against the merger agreements described in paragraph 46 of the Complaint because there is no actual competition between and among the defendants, and no competition will be eliminated by the consummation of the merger agreements. The consummation of the agreements will serve only to simplify and reorganize the intra-enterprise relationship between and among the defendants and to permit the defendants to offer better and more competitive banking services. The plaintiff is not entitled to the relief sought on the basis of the potential for future competition between the defendants. The alleged potential competition is speculative, conjectural, and cannot constitute the basis for relief under the antitrust laws.

Thirteenth Defense

As a further defense to the charges of the Complaint, defendants contend that even admitting arguendo that the effect of the proposed mergers would be to substantially lessen competition or to create a tendency towards a monopoly in a line of commerce in a section of the country, the anti-competitive effects are clearly outweighed in the public interest by the probable effect of the transactions in meeting the convenience and needs of the communities to be served.

Fourteenth Defense

The operating relationships between and among the defendants are now and have been since their inception designed to bring sound, safe, innovative, competitive C&S banking to suburban communities which otherwise would not have been so served. The Correspondent Associate form chosen by C&S to accomplish this goal has utilized traditional and accepted forms of correspondent banking relationships which are not and have not been in unreasonable restraint of trade.

PRAYER

Wherefore, having fully answered the Complaint, defendants and each of them pray that this action be dismissed with prejudice against the plaintiff; that they may have such other and further relief as this Court may deem just and proper; and, that they recover the costs of this action from the plaintiff.

This 5th day of May, 1972.

The Court: Call the case of the United States of America against the C&S National Bank, No. 15823. Is everyone ready?

Mr. Kinkaid: Yes, Your Honor.

The Court: C&S?

Mr. Hodgson: Yes, Your Honor.

The Court: Now, have each of you submitted your list of exhibits?

Mr. Hodgson: They are submitted and admitted, I believe, Your Honor.

The Court: All right. If not, the clerk is directed to admit them and prepare an official list of them and you will reserve any objections by submitting a memorandum of objections with respect to the exhibits of the opposite party.

Mr. Kinkaid: Yes, sir.

The Court: Anything further before we proceed?

[3] Mr. Kinkaid: Yes, sir.

The Court: Anything further before we proceed?

Mr. Kinkaid: Yes, Your Honor, before we proceed, Mr. Gladden on behalf of the Trust Company would like to bring a matter to Your Honor's attention.

The Court: All right, sir, you may proceed.

Mr. Gladden: Your Honor, my name is Joe Gladden of the firm of King and Spalding. We represent the Trust Company of Georgia, which has supplied, pursuant to a subpoena duces tecum to the plaintiff in this action, certain information having to do with origin of deposits, which upon motion of the Trust Company of Georgia, as well as several other banks, was made subject to a protective order entered by this court in July. The terms of that protective order did not cover the handling of that information in the event it was utilized at trial, for the reason that at that time neither the parties nor the banks producing the information were aware exactly how the information would be used.

We have been informed by the Government [4] that one of their exhibits incorporates information produced by the Trust Company of Georgia showing origin of demands and certain deposits, which was furnished pursuant to the subpoena and made subject to the protective order. We simply wish to move the Court with respect to that exhibit, and unfortunately I don't know how it has been identified in the memorandum, pre-trial memorandum, but with respect to that exhibit we wish to move the Court to make that exhibit subject to the protective order to be maintained by the Clerk under seal, pursuant to the terms of the order.

[5] The Court: I assume, would the parties have accepted the information that there is no violation of the protective order as of yet?

Mr. Gladden: No, sir.

The Court: Any objections to that direction and can it be handled?

Mr. Kinkaid: Yes, Your Honor, plaintiff would object to placing this material under a protective order for all purposes. The material involved shows the origin by zip code of demand deposits under $1,000 and I may note that we have similar exhibits for other banks which had previously been granted a protective order for pre-trial purposes. All the other banks have also been notified that exhibits similar to Trust Company exhibit will and have been offered in evidence and Trust Company is the only bank which has sought to continue the application of the order to this material at this point.

It's our feeling that the information involved would not in any way prejudice the Trust Company if it becomes a part of the public record. I do believe that the burden would be on the parties seeking the order to demonstrate that disclosure or placing this exhibit in public record would constitute serious prejudice to the parties.

[6] The Court: With respect to the relief you want, is it that the figures not be referred to or used by in respect to witnesses here during the trial or simply that at the close of the trial the exhibit be sealed?

Mr. Gladden: The latter; the latter, Your Honor.

The Court: In this case, why don't we simply defer ruling on the motion until the close of the trial. Please notify counsel when the close of the trial occurs and then we'll take up your motion at that time.

Mr. Gladden: Your Honor, if you prefer, we'll be happy to file a written motion with a brief.

The Court: Please do so. That way I'll certainly remember it better.

All right, is there anything else before we proceed?

Mr. Hodgson: In pre-trial conference in chambers last week, both of us agreed that in view of the rather extensive briefing that has been given to the Court and the number of documents that have been presented to the Court, there'll be no need for opening statements. So far as the defendants are concerned, that is basically still the case. However, the trial briefs that were submitted, it seems to me, make it appropriate for us, when our case comes along, to suggest to the Court certain points of emphasis that may have been raised by virtue [7] of those briefs having been filed. We would like to reserve our right for that purpose.

The Court: Mr. Kinkaid, are you ready?

Mr. Kinkaid: Yes, sir.

The Court: You may proceed.

Mr. Kinkaid: Plaintiff calls Mr. Dave Padgett.

Whereupon,

W. D. PADGETT,

was called as a witness by and on behalf of the Government, and having first been duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination

By Mr. Kinkaid

Q. Would you please state your full name? A. William David Padgett.

Q. Where are you employed, Mr. Padgett? A. Trust Company of Georgia, Atlanta, Georgia.

Q. What is your position with Trust Company? A. Group vice president.

Q. Are you in charge of any department or division of Trust Company? A. The Southeastern Division of the United States Division, which handles all of our business outside the City of Atlanta, and financial institutions inside the City of Atlanta.

[8] The Court: Before you proceed, Mr. Kinkaid, let me inquire, what is the situation with respect to a transcript? It will have some bearing on the extensiveness of my notes I'm going to have to take. Is there going to be a transcript prepared prior to the final briefs or not?

Mr. Kinkaid: My understanding is, sir, that there will be a transcript prepared for each day's proceedings that will be available sometime in the evening.

The Court: But, before I have to make a decision, there will be a complete transcript?

Mr. Kinkaid: Yes, sir.

The Court: All right.

By Mr. Kinkaid

Q. Could you give us a rough idea of just what this particular department does at Trust Company? A. Well, as I said, we handle all of our commercial banking business outside of the City of Atlanta with the exception of national accounts, financial institutions inside the City of Atlanta, deals mainly with commercial, large commercial accounts, domiciled outside the City of Atlanta in the southeast, and correspondent accounts, bank accounts.

Q. Roughly how many correspondent bank accounts does Trust Company presently have? A. As I recall, 452, in that particular division that I supervise.

[9] Q. What geographic area does that division cover? A. Eight southeastern states.

Q. What are your duties and responsibilities insofar as the correspondent bank accounts are concerned? A. Well, to service those that we have and to secure others in the course of new business.

Q. How long have you been group vice president? A. Oh, approximately five years.

Q. What were you before you became group vice president? A. Vice president.

Q. Were you in the correspondent area as well at that time? A. Yes, sir.

Q. As a matter of fact, how long have you been working in the correspondence area? A. Since 1955.

Q. And has it always been with Trust Company? A. Yes.

Q. Are you familiar with the term "correspondent service"? A. Yes.

Q. Is that a term that you use in your business? A. Well, that's a pretty all-encompassing term, but, yes.

Q. Could you give us your definition or understanding [10] of, from your own standpoint, what is encompassed by the term "correspondent service"? A. Well, it's basically any service that they might call on us that we can supply starting from clearing items and collections right on through the latest technical service offered in the computer service and automation.

[11] Q. Is there any definition of correspondent service that, to your knowledge, is accepted generally in the industry or does it vary from bank to bank? A. I think definitely it would vary from bank to bank as to what they would do and when they would do it and how they would do it, and the charge, if any, the fee, acceptance or what.

Q. Could you tell us the basic correspondent services that Trust Company offers? A. You mean you want a list of—you want me to name the——

Q. Yes, name as many as you can think of, offhand. A. Well, of course, your main service would be the clearing of checks and collections, shipment of coin and currency, credit inquiries, over-lines, computer services, demand deposit accounting, savings, CD's accounting, monthly repayment loan, accounting on computer, investment advice, bond services, safekeeping of securities.

The Court: You are going too fast.

A. I am sorry.

The Court: Advice?

A. Advice.

The Court: All right: What else?

A. Safekeeping of securities, services through [12] your various specialty departments, your international department, trust department, corporate trust department.

Q. Let's go back through these. A. Yes, sir.

Q. And take one, each one at a time, and I would ask you to give us some idea of just what each one of these services involves, insofar as Trust Company is concerned. Why don't we start with the check-clearing. A. Well, the correspondent bank will prepare what we refer to as a cash letter, in some cases, depending on the degree of the usage, it may be all of the items outside of the particular city where they are located, and send it to you for collection. You process it and send it—forward it on to the centers on which they are drawn or to the Federal Reserve Bank. It would, on the other hand, you would probably intercept their cash letter, their Fed Cash letter from the Fed Reserve Bank paying those items, or particularly, if you are doing a demand deposit and accounting on computer collection part of it, would simply mean any item that they might have in the way of a draft or bill of lading with documents attached or trade acceptance or what-have-you, that they might forward for collection, which you would, in turn, collect for them and credit their account, et cetera.

[13] The Court: Excuse me. Does your eight Southeastern states coincide with the Atlanta Federal Reserve Bank?

A. I would—rather than answer that, I would prefer to name the states that we do handle, it is North and South Carolina, Tennessee, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana.

Q. You just mentioned a term "intercepting", was it a Fed cash letter? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Could you just explain that briefly? A. Well, if you are doing the demand deposit accounting, in other words, if you are doing the bookkeeping for a bank, then you can pick up their—the Federal Reserve sends them a cash letter each day of all items drawn on them, so you just shortstop it, instead of it going to you and back, you just shortstop it. It saves, in some cases, nearly a day's time.

Q. How are your check-clearing services paid for by the correspondent bank? A. Well, usually you measure their cost on an analysis basis, and it is done by balances, there is no actual charge involved. They maintain sufficient balances with you to pay for this particular service.

Q. The next item you mentioned was coin and [14] currency. Could you just briefly indicate what that means?. A. Well, your banks that are not members of the Federal Reserve system depend on their correspondent banks in the Reserve city to furnish them coin and currency, in most cases. It depends on their particular uses. A lot of banks even generate more coin and currency than it needs, so there's a problem of shipping it to their correspondent. Rather than shipping it to them, suppose, for example, they have a military installation in their town and have a need for a large amount of cash, say once or twice a month, they would order this; if they are not a member of Fed, they do not. They would have to order it from their correspondent bank and pay for it in that manner.

Q. I think the next item on your list was—had to do with credit. Could you explain more of what you had in mind there? A. Well, we refer to it as over-lines or any credit that would normally exceed their legal limit. It does not necessarily have to be the case, but in most instances, it is. It could be a small bank in a small town would have a manufacturer or large customer who might need at a given time during the year credit, say, of a million or two or three million dollars, [15] whereas their legal limit could very well be fifty or a hundred thousand dollars. And, by very well going to a correspondent for an overline, this would enable them to maintain their primary position with their customer, and it would be done through them. And in a lot of cases, the local customer would not even know who the correspondent bank was; as far as they're concerned, their local bank is handling it. And they would handle the participation on a cost basis; it is quite common.

Q. Is there any sort of, I guess we can call it, a time factor involved, in that type of participation between the small correspondent and the large bank? A. It depends on who the bank is and how well you know them, and the relationship you have with them, and how many times you have dealt with them, in credit matters, and so you can give an answer on the telephone.

Others, you want the document sent to you, you want to talk about it and so forth and so on. It is just as quick as a telephone call or it could involve weeks of negotiations, depending on the type loan, how complex and so forth. Really, how well you know the people you are dealing with and how often you have dealt with them.

Q. To your knowledge, would there be any difference other than the differences you just noted in terms of type of loan involved? Would there be any difference [16] between your handling of a participation with a correspondent bank, on the one hand, and the headquarters of Trust Company processing a loan request placed at one of its branch offices that happened to be over the lending limit of the local branch manager? A. Well, I think in all fairness, I would have to say that in dealing internally from the branch to the main office, et cetera and so forth, you are dealing with really a little different level. And if a correspondent who maintains substantial balances with you calls in, usually he is dealing direct with a man who can give a decision then and there, if necessary, whereas the other might go through a sort of a committee or require a little discussion and so forth. I would say that being the same type general credit that they would get the answer about the same time. Generally, within the same day, if at all possible, unless it was a very unusual situation.

Q. Now, insofar as your own willingness to participate on large loans from your correspondent banks, is that willingness on your part in any way affected by the money market conditions, if that—I don't know if that is the right term to use or not, but in other words, what I am getting at, is times of easy credit versus times of hard credit, if I may use those [17] terms. A. You are referring to the credit crunch of '66-'68, when money was tight and so forth?

Q. I would say that is a good example, yes. A. Well, yes. Money is much more readily available at this time than it was during that time, and we would be in position to give an answer a little quicker. During the credit crunches of '66-'68, there was a lot of times when you had to find the money before you could put it out, if that answers your question.

Q. Another item you have mentioned, I think, before the loan participation, if I recall correctly, had something to do with the credit information. Am I correct in that, was that one of the correspondent services you mentioned? A. Credit information.

Q. Credit information. A. As it pertains to companies, corporations and so forth, yes. That is readily available to them, should they have a customer dealing with a party or a company where they are—you know, they are not known to them and so forth, and it involves a contract or a substantial sum of money, they call and want to know if their customer can deal in full confidence with XYZ Company and so forth.

[18] Q. Is that service used frequently by your correspondent banks? A. Yes, it is. It is a service that they can render to their local customer, when they are dealing with companies that are unknown to them, where they have to—where it involves advancing of money or credit.

Q. How was that service paid for by the correspondent bank? A. Well, of course, this service is readily available to any bank, whether they are a correspondent or not. That is just in the general flow of commerce, that this is—you would give this service to any bank, whether they are a correspondent or not. Of course, a correspondent who maintains balances with you would feel a little freer to call maybe more often on things that are not as important to him as he would if he were not a correspondent.

[19] Q. I may not have asked you, is there any fee for the coin and currency service? A. Not generally, no, unless it's excessive. If you had—again, if you had a military payroll in the area that a bank had to have an excessive amount. Generally, the answer to that would be no, generally, other than an analysis charge.

Q. I'd like to go back to the data processing or computer services that you briefly mentioned earlier. Could you go through those a little slower and sort of indicate to us the various types of data processing services available from Trust Company and give us sort of an idea what each one involves? A. Well, your demand deposit, it would be that actually doing the bookkeeping for all of the banks, demand deposits or checking accounts which means that at the end of the day they would send to you all items, all of the checks drawn on that particular bank. By sorting them and running them through the computer, they would be posted to the proper accounts. You also furnish statements for them on a monthly basis which they send out.

Time deposit, it varies from savings accounts to time certificates, certificates of deposit, et cetera, that you keep an accurate record of them and actually doing the accounting and computing of the interest on the computers. All of this is done for a fee.

[20] On the repayment loans or installment loans, accounting is where you do the monthly, you post it, prepare the documents for them, also post the monthly payments also on a monthly basis. That's also for a fee.

The Court: Before you called one of the items a CD item. Is that a counter-demand?

The Witness: Certificate of deposit, time.

By Mr. Kinkaid

Q. Insofar as the installment loan service that you just indicated, does that—maybe I misunderstood what you said. Does that include sending of bills, so to speak, to the installment loan customers of the correspondent banks? A. Well, you send it, you actually prepare them and send them to the bank. The bank itself sends them the monthly payment coupon book. In other words, I think, I would be safe in saying nothing is mailed directly to the bank customer. Everything goes to the bank, the bank and from the correspondent bank to their customers.

Q. Let's see if we have got everything here. We have installment loan and accounting, demand deposit accounting, savings accounts for which you would include certificates of deposit. Does that take care of all the computer services? A. Various different types of time accounts.

Q. Now, you mentioned the term bookkeeping just now. I've seen the term bookkeeping used at least, I think, two [21] different ways in banking. Perhaps you can help me on that. I think I have seen it used one place, something general bookkeeping. A. General ledger

Q. General ledger? A. Part of general ledger bookkeeping, which is a computer service offered to, depending on the size of the bank as to how extensive it would be. Somebody might have 25 general ledger accounts, some might have several hundred general ledger accounts. That is a service at the present time we do not offer so, I could—some banks do. We do not at this time.

Q. Is there any other type of bookkeeping done for banks on the computers? A. You mean that we do not offer; is that what you are asking me?

Q. I was just wondering, I'm trying to clarify my own mind, perhaps. I've seen the same kind of bookkeeping referred to in two different terms. That's why I'm confused. Is there anything other than general ledger bookkeeping in banking? A. Well, now, of course, basically, using the term in its basic form, any kind of accounting or record-keeping would be bookkeeping. You're doing bookkeeping when you're doing demand deposit accounts and go one step further and post [22] general ledger entries, accruals, the entries to be posted and send them back to them. I can't think of anything else, unless you have some specific item.

Q. No, I'm trying to clarify the meaning of these terms in my own mind. A. It's probably the same term, two different terms really meaning the same thing.

Q. Insofar as someone using your computer services, do you at Trust Company supply the form on which information is reported or sent in to the computers? A. Yes.

Q. Is there any—excuse me, go ahead. A. Well, of course, it's less expensive to them to use the regular soft wares, as we know it. In some cases they prefer different type statements and so forth, which we do use when we draw up statements for them.

Q. That would be the statements coming out after the information has been run through the computers? A. Right, that they mail to their customers.

Q. Starting at the, I guess, what you would call maybe the input side of the computer operation, is there any necessity for the forms on which information is reported to your computer to be standardized in any way, to your knowledge? A. You're going to have to restate that. I'm not quite [23] sure what you are asking.

Q. Let me put it a different way. Do the banks which use your computer service, do they report information that's going onto your report, on your computer? Do they all use the same type of forms in making such reports? A. Well, I think you can, in general, yes, most of the time you pick it up off documents that they send to you and inasmuch as a check is a check, then, yes, they would use standard type information. That could be different size or different colors, or different qualities of paper, but it's generally the same type of documents that you pick this information up from. And on your monthly, generally your information can come in any way and you pick it up and put it in the necessary form to get the information on your computer.

Q. I think the next item you mentioned was investment advice. Could you tell us a little bit more about that? A. Well, I am thinking mainly of our bond department that sells Government Bonds, government agencies, municipal bonds of various types and so forth and keep in touch. It depends on how much they use, the bank uses. They may buy all of their bonds from you, may buy some, or they may on occasion buy bonds from you. And in that, other than actually selling, investment advice would come under, we have a computer service called portfolio analysis and accounting which gives them an up-to-date listing, monthly, of all their [24] bonds, the present market price, accruals on it and tells them what coupon, what interest is due and when, so forth. It's a combination advisory service and accounting service, bookkeeping, if you would.

Q. Is there a fee charged for the first type of advice? A. The portfolio, the PWAS service is a computer service, yes, fee involved. Other than that, there is no fee involved other than the margin or mark-up on the bonds, whatever it might be, which would not be a fee itself.

Q. I think you also mentioned safekeeping. A. Safekeeping of securities. Most of our correspondent banks would prefer to have their securities held in one single location or maybe two at the outside. All the securities or the securities that they buy or purchase would be shipped to this particular bank to be placed in safekeeping. Sometimes they have one safekeeping account, sometimes two. Maybe one here and one in New York. These securities are domiciled there and processed through the collection of coupons, et cetera, and so forth, until they are either sold or they mature and this is a service that is rendered free of charge except the analysis charge, balances copy.

Q. I think the last thing you mentioned was, if I recall correctly, specialized services. I think you also mentioned international services. Could you give us an idea of the specialized services that you have in mind? [25] A. Well, it could be through actually any department in the bank, in a department they could have a customer interested in either importing or exporting. It could involve letter of credit, it could involve developing a market in some foreign country, it could be through your corporate trust department. It could be they have a customer who needs somebody to act as a transfer agent or registrar. It could be in the trust department they may have a customer who needs to place funds in escrow or some various fiduciary capacity of the trust department.

Q. Do you have any correspondent banks that do not have trust departments of their own? A. Quite a few. Most of your small banks do not have trust departments.

Q. Do they refer trust customers over there or customers of theirs who are, seeking trust services, are those referred to your department? A. Some of them are, yes.

Q. Do you have any correspondent bank accounts in the general Atlanta area with banks that do not have trust departments? A. Yes, sir, you're speaking of major Atlanta?

Q. Yes. A. Metropolitan?

Q. Yes. [26] A. Yes.

Q. Have any of those correspondent banks referred trust customers to you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. In those cases, have you sent or had someone from your trust department go out and visit with the correspondent bank's customer or is there any policy in that regard? A. Well, it depends. Sometimes they call and set up the meeting and they actually bring their client in that needs this particular service or they might set it up so one of our people might call on them. It depends on the situation. Are you saying would we call on them direct?

Q. No, would you go out to the correspondent bank to meet with his customer who is seeking trust services? A. Sure.

Q. I don't know, you have mentioned this term already, and earlier, but are you familiar with the term fed funds? A. Federal funds, yes.

Q. What does that mean? A. Well, it's really a misnomer now, but in the beginning it was where a bank who had excess reserves on deposit with the Federal Reserve Bank could sell those by the day to another bank. It's now come to mean any bank that has excess funds whether he be a member of Fed or not. They are called correspondent funds, fed funds, but it's a vehicle of [27] where a bank can sell excess funds by the day as compared to investing in some treasury bills for thirty days, sixty days, or two or three days, so forth. You can actually sell funds by the day. If you have $5 million in excess reserves, Federal Reserve Bank, that you do not need today, why, there is a market available where you can sell those and for a stated rate for the one 24-hour period. They are returned to you the following day.

Q. Would your small correspondent banks be able to participate in that operation? A. Yes, sir.

Q. In what way? A. Well, we establish a market, your normal, of course, this is probably gone by the board. At one time your minimum amount was $1 million. A lot of smaller banks never at one time had this amount. So it's now, I think, the accepted minimum is probably a hundred thousand dollars which gives them the privilege of investing this amount by the day.

Q. I'm not sure if I understand just how Trust Company fits into this operation insofar as the small correspondent banks are concerned. Could you explain that? A. Well, we make a market available to the small correspondent banks. We either buy or sell fed funds or correspondent funds whichever the case may be at the going market. In other words, they may, one day sell you [28] $500,000 in fed funds and the next day they might turn around and buy $500,000 in fed funds, depending on their money position as of that day. It's up to us to decide what position we are going to be in. But, we either are net buyers or net sellers, depending on our position as of that day.

[29] Q. Does that mean, then, that the small bank is dealing directly with you, rather than with the Federal Reserve Board or anyone else? A. Well, they have never—the Fed-funds market has never been through the Fed Reserve Bank or the Federal Reserve Board, that is the vehicle by which you move the money from one place to the other. In other words, suppose, as an example, maybe I can explain it this way, suppose the Trust Company of Georgia, when we at noon decided on our money position we might be net sellers of say fifty million dollars in Fed funds or five million dollars in Fed funds, then we would sell it to maybe Chase in New York, and we would wire it through Fed to make it immediately available. And when you are selling money during the day, you must deliver it promptly, and that is the vehicle you use. And you always deal either through a bank or a money broker.

Q. Does Trust Company offer any sort of credit card service to its customers? A. Yes, sir, Master Charge.

Q. Is there any service to correspondent banks which would involve the Master Charge service? A. Well, they can either become a member of the—I believe the correct name is Southeastern Bank Card [30] Group, and be a member, or they can be an agent of a member bank. And we have some correspondents who are agents of the Trust Company of Georgia and Master Charge.

Q. Could you explain what is meant by an agent of Trust Company or Master Charge? A. Well, in other words, they can offer this, they can offer this to their customers without assuming any of the risks, and the credit liability will be assumed by the party they are acting as agent for; in this particular case it would be us.

Q. Do these banks have the option, if they wish, to assume the risk of that operation as well? A. If they wanted to be a member direct, yes, they do.

Q. In the case where a small bank is acting as an agent for Trust Company with respect to Master Charge, what would a credit card obtained from the correspondent bank look like? In other words, would the credit card that a customer of the agent bank receive, would it have the agent bank's name directly on it or would it have Trust Company on it? A. It would have the agent's bank.

Q. Does Trust Company have a lock-box service available? A. Yes.

[31] Q. Could you give us sort of a brief description of just what a lock-box service is? A. Well, probably have a large, generally speaking, they are larger concerns or a concern who has quite a few invoices, which are collected in one central point. For example, if a manufacturing concern in Miami, Florida would enter into an arrangement with an Atlanta bank to have a lock-box, which means that all of their remittances would be sent to a post-office box in Atlanta, Georgia, and it would be picked up numerous times during the day by the bank they entered into the contract with. And these items would be processed immediately, thereby saving the time that it would take to come from Atlanta to Miami and back in to process. In other words, probably cut off two days' flow in the meantime on that. You just intercept checks and put them back into the systems at a more rapid pace.

Q. Would such a service be available in any way to customers of a correspondent bank? A. Well, to the extent, yes, we would—any bank would set up a lock-box plan for a client of the correspondent bank. In that case, of course, you would set one up for anybody, under normal circumstances, but the flow of funds, instead of coming into the correspondent would probably come into the Trust [32] Company of Georgia for the credit and advice of the correspondent bank, where it happened to be located.

Q. In that type of situation, first of all, would there be a fee involved, and second of all, how would it be paid or by whom would it be paid? A. Well, normally there is no fee involved in this. You are paid by balances, but that would depend entirely upon the setup that the correspondent bank wanted to have. In other words, if the company would maintain sufficient balance with them to pay for it, and they, in turn, could maintain sufficient balances with you to pay for it, then it would be just an analysis charge. Then, if the volume built up and it got to cost more, then, maybe you would have to ask for more balances to cover that, both ways, both from the bank and the bank from the corporate client. There could be a fee arrangement there, there could be an arrangement where they would prefer a fee rather than balances. In other words, if they couldn't maintain sufficient balances, they would agree to pay a fee or a maintenance charge on this. It could be either way.

Q. Does Trust Company offer any pension and profit-sharing plans to corporate customers? A. Yes, we do, through our trust department.

Q. Could you, again, give us just a brief idea [33] of just what type of plans would be offered and how they would be offered? A. Well, suppose that a correspondent bank wanted a pension and profit-sharing or retirement plan, a pension plan or maybe a profit-sharing plan; then, our trust department would —with an actuary, would work out a plan for them, and they would have to contribute X number of dollars per year in order to service or fund this particular plan, and it would be a contract arrangement or fee involved in it. And the money would then be invested, in order to assure that as of a certain date, there would be enough money for X number of employees that would be retiring at that time. And your profit-sharing plan would be the same thing, except it would be worked on probably a percentage basis. In that, again, the money would be invested for them. All of this is on a fee basis through the trust department.

Q. Are any of these pension and profit-sharing plans, have any of them been made available to correspondent banks as such? A. Yes, each plan is tailored for that particular bank or that correspondent bank's client.

Q. Excuse me. In other words, when you say client, you mean customer of this—a corporate customer [34] of a correspondent bank? A. Could be anybody.

Q. Does Trust Company have any service which would involve the preparing of payrolls for corporate customers or business customers generally, let's say? A. There is a computer service that does this, and they furnish you the information, either the number of—hourly employees or salaried employees, et cetera and so forth. And you prepare either the checks for them or you credit the account for them, and so forth, prepare their withholding forms, et cetera, that type of thing. Yes, sir, it is done on a fee basis.

Q. Are any of your correspondent banks using that service for their own employees? A. Some for their own employees, some for the employees of clients and customers.

Q. Is Trust Company in the factoring business? A. Yes, sir, we are.

Q. Could you briefly describe what is basically involved in factoring? A. Well, generally, factoring is done in two steps. First, the factor, in this case, as the Trust Company of Georgia, would pre-approve any credit or shipment of goods, and then secondly, would purchase the invoice for cash, assume the credit risk involved. [35] In other words, if it is a manufacturing company, and they say we would like to ship $20,000 worth of whatever they are shipping to ABC Corporation in New York, we say, "Fine, we will accept the credit, ship the goods". And we would, in turn, purchase the invoice for cash and we would wait until the normal business terms, maybe 30, net 10, before we received our money from ABC Corporation.

It is a purchase of accounts receivable is what it amounts to. There are various ways, there's other alternatives you can take on that, but basically it is a purchase of accounts receivable.

Q. Are any customers of your correspondent banks presently using the factoring service that you just described? A. Yes, they are.

Q. I think you just indicated that when you purchased the receivables, you would then pay cash to the factoring client? A. Right.

Q. How would that money be routed back to the factoring customer himself? A. Well, if he is a direct customer of ours, we would just merely credit his account with the Trust Company. If he were a customer of a correspondent bank, [36] then we would credit the correspondent bank's account for the credit and advice of the factoring customer.

Q. Mr. Padgett, I would like to hand you Government's Exhibit 193, the very last one here.

Your Honor, this is the booklet entitled "Trust Company of Georgia Correspondent Banking Services." It is our very last exhibit.

The Court: The amended set?

Mr. Kinkaid: Excuse me, sir.

The Court: In your amended set?

Mr. Kinkaid: Yes, sir.

The Court: All right.

Q. Mr. Padgett, do you have any idea of roughly when this particular booklet was written? A. There's no printer's date on here, but it looks like it was about ten years ago, about 1961 or '62.

Q. Who actually wrote this booklet, can you recall? A. Well, it was prepared by a man in our organization by the name of Luke Fink, who talked to everybody concerned and put it together, and actually it is, in effect, his language, I guess is what you would say.

[37] Q. Were you personally consulted with respect to this? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you had a chance to read this particular booklet recently? A. When I gave it to you, yes.

Q. All right. So far as you are concerned, are the services described in this booklet, are they accurately described? A. All of them are, they have been. The only change has been really, an up-dating as far as automation is concerned, computers involving some of them. There has been one we show here, we show an industrial development department or refer to it. We no longer have a department known as business and industrial development. It's done possibly by the officers in the national division rather than being departmentalized.

Q. What do these officers do today? Would it be the same as described in here for the previous department when it was in existence? A. Originally, yes.

Q. Would those be the only corrections you would be making in this as of today? A. I would think so, other than some of the nomenclature might have changed, but virtually it is the same.

Q. Could you please turn to page 7 of that exhibit? A. Yes, sir.

[38] Q. About the middle of the page there is a notation, "Trustee," under pension, profit sharing, thrift and other employee benefit plans. Could you tell us what the thrift plan would be? A. I'm sorry, I'm afraid I'm not—I think I know, but I would rather—I'm not sure.

Q. Are there any other employee benefit plans that you know of at the moment that would be covered under this particular service? I've got to rephrase that, that's confusing. When you say Trust Company acts as a trustee under pension, profit sharing, thrift and other employee benefit plans, my question really should be, can you give us an example of other employee benefit plans referred to? A. Well, I think one might be the plan which the professional men, doctors and attorneys, use, it's called what, the Keough Bill; is that right? It could be that, where professional people ask to set aside a certain amount of money each year for their own profit sharing or pension, if you will, so forth. It could be a plan like that or specially devised plan for an individual or group rather than corporations, et cetera.

Q. Would that plan you just mentioned, for professional people, would that be available to professional people, customers of your correspondent banks? A. Sure, anybody. It's on a fee basis.

[39] Q. Now, could you turn to page 19. Now, in the first paragraph on that page there are several different things. It emphasized some which I believe we have already covered this morning. I'd like to just go through these and the ones we don't seem to have covered, we would like to ask if you will just sort of spell this particular thing out a little bit more for us.

What would the term "Taxes" mean in this context? A. I think what it means were that our expertise or knowledge, if you will, and any particular change in the tax laws, and so forth. In other words, something new and different comes up, you have some question about it. They probably do not use a distinguished tax firm like we do. We would make this available to them, tell them what we are doing, this type of thing, what ought to be done, what you ought to look at or refer them to a tax expert in their given area that could help.

Q. There is one before that, "Check Processing and Bookkeeping." Would that be something more than just your computer operation? A. Well, of course, back at this time there were not as many banks using computers as there are now. Probably referring to, we would probably send in a team of operation experts to review their bookkeeping system to see if it could be helped. In other words, if they needed to change to a [40] different type of equipment, and so forth.

Q. Would that be necessary today with banks on the computer setup? A. Not really, but it could be very important to a small bank that's still using manual bookkeeping machines if they wanted to upgrade and change, and so forth. I would say you would have fewer calls now than you did then. If that answers your question.

Q. What would be in the context of this paragraph the kind of advice that you would be offering on the next item, namely installment credit? A. Would be anything from how we train people to make installment loans, forms we use, methods we use, collection methods we use or forms we use. How we evaluate credits, the terms, 24, 36 months, et cetera, and so forth.

Q. Are you just—I think you mentioned training. Is there any kind of training available at Trust Company for employees or officers of your correspondent banks? A. Certainly.

Q. What would be some of them? A. We don't conduct formal classes per se. If a correspondent called and asked us to train a teller or someone in the personnel department, credit office, installment lending office, we would do that.

Q. One item in here is called "Audit Systems." What [41] would that involve in terms of offering advice to correspondent banks? A. It could mean that we could, would tell them how to, how they should conduct a director's audit, how they should trace their loans, how they should trace savings accounts, and so forth. Just as in most of your audit systems you do not actually, you know, ask for a direct confirmation on everything. But, ten loans, five, six, depending on the volume and so forth, and what is involved, internal security mainly.

Q. Now, this item, the tellers' procedure, would that be part of what you just mentioned as training tellers, or would that be something else? A. Might, might furnish them with a manual, training manual, how we train them and how we handle them, and so forth.

Q. What would be involved in giving advice on loan collection methods? A. Probably tell them the procedure we use, what we do when a loan is thirty days past due, sixty days past due. How we effect collections, what we find is necessary to convince us, to move against the collateral and so forth, repossess an automobile.

Q. How would you become involved in advising a correspondent on the purchase of new equipment and supplies? To what extent would you be involved in that sort of thing? [42] A. Mostly to do a feasibility study as to what type of equipment they should use, when they should get it, whether they should purchase it or should lease it. Generally, in a full feasibility study, really, as to whether they need it, how much equipment they needed, and so forth. A lot of time there is a tendency to over-buy, when you are buying this type of thing.

Q. Does Trust Company do any leasing of equipment of this type? A. We would arrange—we would arrange to handle a lease contract for somebody. We do not lease, we do not lease the equipment per se.

Q. Right. What would be the sort of thing that would be contemplated by this term personnel assistance? [43] A. Well, it could be anything from helping them train personnel, helping them be sure that they are using the proper procedure in acquiring personnel. In other words, their personnel department is doing the things that is necessary to do nowadays in order to comply with the law or it could be—it could be we would assist them in finding personnel. In other words, if they needed a cashier in the bank or if they needed a lending officer in the bank or president of the bank, et cetera and so forth.

Q. Can you explain the next term, "job evaluation"? A. Oh, it mainly has to do with the classifying of a particular job, how much should you pay a branch manager and how much should you pay a monthly repayment lending officer and how much should you pay a teller, et cetera and so forth. A job, a formal job description showing what has to be done, what should be done at pay scale from the minimum to the maximum.

Q. What would be involved in offering advice on protection and insurance? A. Anything from whether they should use guards, whether they should—what their bond should be, whether they should have cameras, internal security, anything in that line.

Q. Do you have anybody available to actually [44] advise on securities systems? A. Well, that is not his primary job. We have a former FBI agent, who is in charge of our security. It is just like anything else, you know, we don't have a trust man available for a particular job, but we can make him available under these circumstances, if need be. Under that case, we would make our security man available to them for that purpose.

Q. Could you turn to Page 21, please?

The last sentence of the first paragraph on that page states that: "We are always glad to share information on national and sectional accounts, and to aid our correspondents in their relations with them."

Could you expand on that for us, just how does Trust Company aid its correspondents in their relations with national or sectional accounts? A. Well, it could be that a correspondent bank would call in and say we understand that such-and-such a store would be located in our area. If this is true, we would like to have them do business with us and we would attempt to find out, first, if they were going to locate a store there; and second, recommend that they use this particular bank, and to go beyond that we would probably tell them, because we had previous experience, as to just how they go about selecting [45] their local bank, whether the local manager makes the decision, whether the vice-president in charge of finance makes the decision, whether the treasurer makes the decision, whether they are just actually measuring the closest bank, period. That is it. Really what they are looking for in the area and so forth.

Q. In those situations would anybody from Trust Company call on a national or a sectional account with—— A. Sure.

Q. ——someone from the correspondent bank? A. Well, that could be the case if it were important enough, but most times, if they had asked you to call on them for them, that your man would go by himself. If it were important enough, there's a chance that the president of the local bank might want to go. It really depends on what it is. If it were a chain store or a department store, he would not. If it were a manufacturing concern that would employ four or five hundred people, probably the president and the entire bank board would want to go.

Mr. Kinkaid: Your Honor, would this be an appropriate point to take a little break?

The Court: All right. We will take a ten-minute recess.

(Whereupon a recess was had.)

[46] Q. Mr. Padgett, does Trust Company provide any kind of assistance with respect to correspondent banks' lending practices, as such? A. I don't quite—would you rephrase that, I don't quite understand.

Q. Well, does Trust Company help a correspondent bank in making various types of loans or in setting up procedures whereby or under which its loans are granted? A. Oh, you mean, for instance, on real-estate loans, and so forth? Your checklists, your technical procedures, yes we do that.

Q. Could you tell us just a little bit more as to the nature of that assistance, the form it would take? A. Well, generally, when there's been any change in the banking laws or any regulations by the regulatory authorities, that really change any particular receivable financing or construction loans or any technical change, why, most of your Reserve city banks will put out a memo or guideline sheet showing the changes, what should be done, this, that and the other and so on. Of course, on any specific request, we would do that on anything. If a bank had some question about making a term loan, covenants that could go in it and so forth and so on, [47] we would be glad to do that. But, as a general rule, unless it is some technical, drastical change, you wouldn't put out a white paper on it, so to speak.

Q. Have you ever gotten a call from a correspondent bank to the effect that it's gotten into or its loan procedures have sort of gotten into a mess, and could you give us a hand in straightening them out? A. Yes.

Q. Has that happened often, to your recollection? A. Not—no, it would be the exception rather than the rule.

[48] Q. If you can think, I'm not asking you for names of any banks in the situation where that has actually happened, can you recall what Trust Company did to help the correspondent? A. Well, generally, what you do would be send, say, a team of two fairly competent credit analysts to go in and help survey the loans and see what they were doing or see what they were not doing or needed to be done, and so forth.

Q. What do you mean by survey their loans; what would that involve? A. That would depend. You've got one or two loans you're having trouble on, and find you do have one or two, it could be they lost their chief executive officer of the bank and they are, you know, think that maybe he was a little too liberal in his lending policies and so forth, might want you to look at the entire note case, all of their loans, in which you would do that, or maybe just a certain type of loan you have a problem with.

Q. You just mentioned they may have lost their chief executive. Has that happened often during your experience at Trust Company? A. Where they would lose the president of the bank?

Q. (Indicating the affirmative.) A. Sure.

Q. And in those cases have you assisted the bank in any way in replacing the chief executive? [49] A. In some cases, yes, sir, tried to.

Q. Roughly speaking, how would you go about trying to resolve a problem like that? A. Well, most of your major banks sort of act as, I would say clearing house, that wouldn't be correct, they try to stay on top of the situation and know who is available, who is looking for a job of this type, and so forth, try to put the parties in touch or could have somebody that's been in the banking up in the east coming to this section of the country, wanting to move to this section of the country. Local boys that's been off to school located on the west coast that want to come back, this type of thing.

Q. Going down the line somewhat, do you or have you had requests for help in situations where tellers or other employees of correspondent banks are sick or died, for one reason or another are not available, and for one reason or another a replacement is needed on a temporary basis? A. Generally not just one in cases like that. They can get by with one. Where you have a couple on vacation or something happens to a couple, so forth. There have been occasions, yes, where you would have to step in and furnish two, three people in one department.

Q. Have you had any request from correspondent banks to assist them in the financing of any expansion, for example, renovating their bank building or perhaps building a branch [50] building or replacing their equipment? A. Not any equipment. We have had some real estate holding companies who borrowed money to build a building or build a branch, and so forth. I don't recall whether any equipment has been involved.

Q. You mentioned the real estate holding company. How would that, a real estate holding company be involved with one of your correspondent banks? A. Well, it could be that they were up to their brick and mortar maximum as far as their capital was concerned. They were building a new building, new branch and wanted to borrow money. They would form a holding company, real estate holding company who would borrow the money secured by a lease from the bank for a period, given period of time, which would fund the loan.

Q. And again, how does—how would Trust Company enter into that particular situation? A. Either help them place the loan with an insurance company or make it yourself.

Q. To your knowledge, are there any banks headquartered outside Atlanta that are trying to, trying to sell correspondent services of the type we have been talking about this morning to small banks in this area? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, could you identify some of these for us? [51] A. You mean by name?

Q. Yes, sir. A. Wachovia out of Charlotte, North Carolina National out of Charlotte, American National out of Chattanooga, Central Bank out of Birmingham, First National out of Birmingham. The Jacksonville Bank, Barnett, Florida National, Atlantic National. Your New York banks to a lesser extent, they call on small banks in Georgia not as active as the ones I've mentioned, but all of your New York banks call on the banks, Chase, First National City, and so forth.

Q. To your knowledge, do the banks that you refer to as the active sellers, namely the North Carolina and Tennessee, et cetera, banks, to your knowledge, do those banks offer pretty much the same range of correspondent services that your bank offers or do they offer more or less or can you categorize them that way? A. I would think most of them are pretty much the same with the exception, of course, of your computer services. You've got a mileage range in there, mileage factor that enters into it, that banks out of Chattanooga would be restricted as to the surface transportation, really, fifty, sixty miles. Other than that, it would be pretty much the same except maybe the difference could be in some policy as in regards to overlines and something like that. Basically, I would say they are pretty much the same. Some does more, [52] depending on the size, and some are in a position to do more of one thing than another. Basically, they would all attempt to do the same thing, I think I'd be safe in saying.

Q. During the past, say, ten years or so, can you recall any officers at Trust Company who have left Trust Company to become officers of small banks? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have there been any that you can recall? A. Well, I don't know that we have had any more than anybody else.

We have had quite a few back over the years, particularly in the Florida area, back when a lot of banks were being authorized and opening down there. They were offering somebody attractive salaries and situations. Georgia during that period lost a lot of men to Florida.

Q. Generally speaking in those situations, were the people who left the kind of people that Trust Company would have rather had stay; in other words, were they—— A. Yes.

Q. ——caliber people? A. Yes, sir.

Q. During the time that you have been working in the—or in this correspondent area, Trust Company, has Trust Company assisted in the formation of any new banks? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Could you guess as to roughly how many Trust Company [53] has assisted or has helped in the formation? [54] A. Fifteen to twenty.

Q. Where would these banks be located? A. Mostly in Georgia and Florida. A few in other states, but the majority of them in Georgia and Florida.

Q. Just how has Trust Company assisted in the organization of these banks? Now, of course, I'm not trying to suggest that they all have been—follow the same pattern, but could you give us examples as to the type of assistance that Trust Company would provide in connection with the formation of a new bank? A. Well, I think it mainly would be in the form of counseling, really, as to what they should do, when they should do it, et cetera and so forth. That is about all anybody can do at that stage of the game.

Q. Generally speaking, is there any particular stage in the formation of the bank where you folks have become involved? A. Whoever gets in on the ground floor usually would stand the best chance of ending up with the business, once they received their charter and opened for business.

Q. Well, do you or have you become involved with the new bank, for example, at the stage where people are just getting together as organizers or is it at a later [55] stage or—— A. Well, at all stages, but as far as new business is concerned, you prefer to—the sooner the better. In other words, just generally what happens is, you have a town with, say, one bank and a group of local businessmen decide that they want to organize another bank or the community could support another bank or the need was there for another bank then, they generally let it be known that they are of this bent of mind, and those who are in position to help them is maybe the local bank uses two Atlanta banks, and that leaves two or three other Atlanta banks that are not involved, that are in a position to help them, and whoever would really do the most or offer to do the most or be of the most help at that particular stage would probably end up with the business, once they are in business.

Q. When you say business, do you mean correspondent account at that bank? A. Yeah, well, that's all it would amount to.

Q. Do you assist in preparing the application for the charter, for example? A. If need be, yes.

Q. Generally speaking, what would that sort of assistance entail? [56] A. Well, mainly, mostly things of a technical nature, most founding banks will have a local lawyer as the incorporating secretary and they need very little help. Maybe projections, you know, the first two- or three-year figures, this type of thing and so forth. But, it is in the technical sense mainly.

Q. At that particular point, would there be any assistance in terms of finding officers to run the bank or people to work in the bank? A. You have to, in applying for a new charter, either state or national, at some stage of the game, you have to list not only your directors, but your officers, and that is part of the approval. In other words, at that time they approve the chief executive officer and the top two men in the bank, so you must have names to submit to them at that time, and that is a very important part of it.

Q. Have you assisted these to-be-formed banks in finding the chief executive officer at that time? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You mentioned that the directors have to be identified to the regulatory agency. Just how important is that? A. You mean how important——

Q. Or is that something of real importance at [57] that time? A. Oh, yes. Well, that is part of the application originally, the greater part of the application goes into the background of the directors of the bank, and their prior business connections, just general background information on them. It plays a very important part in it.

Q. Has Trust Company or have you on behalf of Trust Company assisted, been involved in any way with that particular matter, namely, the selection of directors for the new bank? A. Well, not to that extent. Most of the time you have, say, a group of ten men, which are your new nucleus, and at that stage they have all decided that they want to be directors of the new bank, and it is pretty well set at that stage. It could possibly involve some advice and counsel as to the type of business that one of them might be involved in, or the background of one of them might not be of the type that ought to be in the thing. Other than that, that would be about all you could do.

Q. Have you been asked by any of the organizers to check out the backgrounds of any of the directors for purposes of identifying them to the regulatory agencies? [58] A. Not really, because they are local—these fellows know more about themselves than you will ever find out about them, and if not really —we are talking about local banks now in small communities. Most of them know each other pretty well over a long period of time, thus the reason for the close association.

Q. Would that also be true for suburban areas of metropolitan Atlanta? A. I would think so, because to begin with, you have to—they have to be a right close-knit group and usually over an extended period of time, and they have to be able to get along. And organizing a bank is just like anything else, you turn to those who you know and those who think like you think, and so usually they are pretty well known to each other.

Q. Have you had occasion to assist any of these new banks in selling their first stock issue? A. Well, really, selling it is no problem. They are usually over-subscribed. So you might offer to—usually they restricted it to a set amount. In other words, no one person will have over X number of shares, X number of dollars and so forth. You might offer to finance it for them over a given period of time, if necessary, but really not much of that is required, and selling it is really—hadn't been a problem. They are [59] usually over-subscribed, a man subscribed to a thousand shares probably ends up with maybe three or four hundred, maybe five hundred shares.

Q. Now, once the bank has its charter, what have you done or have you done anything to further assist the new bank in terms of actually opening up for business and conducting a banking business? A. Well, a lot of times you would help them pick their location. Of course, when the charter application goes in they must have the location, not picked, but under some option, so that it can be acquired. Help them decide what would be the best location, traffic patternwise, et cetera. Help them acquire and train personnel to run it, other than the top two people. Might send a man down to help them decide what they needed in the way of forms and pre-opening advertising, this type of thing and so forth. Just anything that needs to be done, really, and there's a lot to be done in opening a new bank.

Q. Have you had any of these new banks that you have assisted in forming request that you sell them any loan participations in their early days? A. Yes, because in the beginning, of course, they have deposits coming in and the loan demand is rather slow. Did you ask me—you said had we had requests?

[60] Q. Yes. A. My answer was yes.

Q. Okay. Have you had any requests from a correspondent bank that is in existence in terms of their wanting to seek approval for an additional branch office? A. About the only—well, that's really a rather simple procedure. About the only thing that they might ask, there again, would be of a technical nature. The application is pretty simple. And, if they are properly capitalized and can build the building and so forth, really, there's no great problem there other than just filling the need, or that would be about the extent of that.

Q. Incidentally, have any of the banks that you have helped get started, once they have actually started to operating, have any of them written or called you and reported on generally how they are doing? A. Well, not really. You are in pretty close contact with them, and of course, as you know, the regulatory authorities require call statements at least twice a year and more, depending on where the bank is located, the site of the bank and so forth. This is routine, that these are sent out to all of your banking friends; you are in pretty close contact with [61] them. They tell you, you know, what their deposits are and how they are doing, this, that and the other. And of course, they are right anxious to get out of the red and in the black at that stage. They keep you posted on profits, but it is an informal thing. If you don't call them they might—if you don't call them about some other matter, they might not take the trouble to inform you.

[62] Q. Generally speaking, were you at that time, in the bank's history, would you be in more frequent contact than later on when it's running smoothly, well established? A. No, in the beginning we are a little closer in contact because of the day-to-day problems. Everything is new and different, they get hit with an awful lot at one time. So, the older they are and more experience they have had, really, probably the less contact you would have with them in that respect.

Q. Have you ever had occasion to purchase any capital notes from any of your correspondent banks? A. On occasion, yes.

Q. What type of institution generally speaking, purchases such capital notes? A. Well, an institution could be insurance companies or other banks, or, of course, a lot of them sell them to individuals on the local scene.

Q. Is it difficult or has it appeared difficult for you from your experience for small banks to place capital notes of this type? A. I wouldn't say it was difficult. It depends on how hard a bargain they're trying to drive, what sort of rate they want to get. It's available. Now, as to how readily available, I would have to say as compared to what, but it is available.

[63] Q. Once the bank is in operation, have you ever gotten any requests for assisting in a promotion like trying to increase the bank's savings accounts or perhaps trying to get its demand accounts up higher? Have you been asked for any assistance with respect to those types of promotions? A. Yes, on occasion we have. It would depend on the nature of the request as to how we would comply with it, what we would do. Maybe if it was advertising, we would furnish them the mats that we would use for radio transcript and ads, so forth. If it were a new business, office call problem we would tell them how we do, what we do under the circumstances and suggest they plan on that.

Q. I guess going back to something that we discussed quite a while ago, about how many banks does Trust Company—for about how many banks does Trust Company administer pensions and profit sharing plans, if you happen to know? A. Probably more than I can recall rather hurriedly, eighteen or twenty.

Q. Is this something that has been done for banks for over a long period of time or is this something that is a more recent development? A. Some of them have been in existence for a good while. But, I think that to answer your question, I think this has become more popular, more in general use in recent years as a tool or measure of not only paying people better [64] but holding them. True, with all fringe benefits. It's more popular now than it was ten years ago.

Q. Do Trust Company officers or other personnel ever meet with the directors of correspondent banks? A. On occasion, yes, sir.

Q. Could you give us an example of the type of occasions on which that would happen or has happened? A. Well, generally, it's when you are involved in some type of new undertaking. Portfolio accounting and advisory service, for instance, usually in smaller banks involves your directors. They might ask that you present this to the Board of Directors or might have to do with an investment program or might have to do with pension and profit sharing program that affects all of it. In other words, the Board would have to pass on it and then they will ask you to present it to the Board of Directors. It is an opportunity we welcome but we do not have very often.

Q. I'd like to go back to one area that we covered a while ago, namely, the seeking of advice by correspondent banks. I believe you did give us some examples. Could you just sort of, if you could, give us sort of a—just a general picture of the various types or the range of things on which your correspondent banks seek advice from you? A. You mean outside of the normal routine banking inquiries?

[65] Q. Well, even just taking that, what do you mean by routine? You mean that's routine? A. Well, of course, what we would consider routine a layman wouldn't consider routine. It could be anything from an overline or some question about a particular loan or problem they were having locally, locating a business or could be a tax problem, could be an investment problem, could be something entirely personal that he would ask you to do because of where you were located. It could be he'd ask you to get him hotel accommodations for the Georgia-

Georgia Tech week-end, could be anything. Some friend, his daughter is in town, needs a job. Some kid finishing school needs to be interviewed. They ask of us the same favors you would ask of your associate colleagues if you needed something in another town with some firm you were associated with and doing business with.

Q. So far as advice being sought by correspondent banks from Trust Company, is this advice always sought by the correspondents, or does the Trust Company have any type of program of proffering advice to its correspondent banks? A. We don't proffer advice nor do we advise on a continuing basis except in maybe an investment area or the Trust investment area; whereas, you enter into a contract to oversee a loan portfolio, you review them monthly, quarterly, daily, maybe daily, depending on what they are. Other than [66] that, why, I think, the answer to your question would be, no. We love to give advice but you can only give it when you are asked.

Q. Do you, for example, have a program for keeping your correspondent posted with respect to your own policies or practices? A. Well, we are not—our policies and practices are not a secret but we have no permanent or on-going way to put them before these people at all times. We have a correspondent-conference that used to be every year, now it's every other year, at which time we very frankly state our policies, how we feel about what is going to happen. If asked, we would tell, but you just don't pick up the telephone and say, "Joe, let me tell you what wonderful things we are doing today."

Q. Even getting more specific than just general practices and policies, how about Trust Company loan policies or loan practices? Is there any continuing program of any kind to keep your correspondents advised as to what you are doing in the lending area? A. Not really, because this is not even—what we like to do and what we want to do is not germane as far as they are concerned. When they want something and need something, that is the most important thing to them. They are neither interested nor inclined to listen to our policies at a time like that. It's really—I mean, if they ask, "What [67] are you doing about so and so," we'd be glad to tell them but they don't call up and say, "What is your policy with regard to a ten-year term loan to a textile concern?" If that is what they want, they just say, "Look, here's what we need." So, we have no way of, you know, letting our policy be known on any given thing.

Q. Incidentally, is there any difference in—I can't think of the word—is there any difference among your correspondent customers in terms of the number of or types of services they take from you? For example, I've seen the term primary correspondent used, what is a primary correspondent? A. Well, most banks have at least two or more relationships. They are the one where they give their first loyalty and percentage, why, most of their balances to and so forth would be the primary correspondent. The one they use most frequently, the one they would think of calling when anything comes up, would be their primary correspondent.

The secondary would be where they maintain an account and maybe use it for investment purposes, so forth, on occasion call on you, and so forth. But, generally, they have a primary correspondent and secondary correspondent.

Q. Well, looking at just your primary correspondent, who would maintain the good balances with you that you referred to and take a great many of your services, does that relationship you have with them in any way enable Trust Company [68] to exercise any control over the primary correspondent? A. No, sir.

Mr. Hodgson: If Your Honor please, Mr. Kinkaid has been leading Mr. Padgett all morning. We don't have any objection to him asking what would he do, when he asked him about control, but we insist that the word be defined before the witness answers. I'd like to pose an objection.

The Court: Yes, I think the objection is well taken.

Mr. Kinkaid: Pardon, Your Honor?

The Court: I think the objection is well taken. As I understood Mr. Padgett's definition, the definition worked in the different direction from that in which you are using it. A large bank might be the primary correspondent or secondary correspondent of the smaller bank. He didn't use the term in the sense that there is a group of smaller banks which are primary correspondents of the larger or of the Trust Company. I understood his definition was the primary correspondent is the bank which the smaller bank turns to most frequently for advice. The secondary bank or correspondent is the one to which they may have an investment account and then if it needs some other advice or something, it may turn to it. It wasn't in the sense of the flow from a big bank to the little bank.

[69] Mr. Kinkaid: Right. Now, I see exactly what—yes. I had it turned around in the question.

By Mr. Kinkaid

Q. So far as those correspondents which consider you their primary—use you as their primary correspondent account, does that relationship between you and those particular banks in any way put you in a position or give you any ability to influence what those banks do in their own banking business? A. None whatsoever.

The Court: I think that is a real conclusion, if they value—if they valued the advice of the Trust Company and take it, obviously that is a method of influencing their conduct, because they asked for advice and presumably they intend their conduct to be governed by it. So, I'm not sure that you and the witness are on the same wave length on this question.

Mr. Kinkaid: Well, in terms of the advice they seek, I think you are perfectly right; they wouldn't be seeking advice if they didn't want to listen to it.

The Court: If they didn't want to [70] follow it and be influenced by it. What you are asking him, if they asked advice, do they have to take it, and I think the answer is obvious: no, they don't have to take it.

By Mr. Kinkaid

Q. Mr. Padgett, was that what you had in mind when I asked the question and you gave the answer? A. Well, in strictly referring to banking matters, financial matters, then most of the time they will—if they didn't want your advice, they wouldn't ask for it. When they do ask for it, they do take it. Now, as I understood the other part of your question, what influence I would have over them in any matter outside of banking, it is absolutely none. Because, as we all know, and whether you know or not, most of your correspondent bankers are right independent, influential, well-to-do, knowledgeable people, and they make up their own mind about whatever they want to. And, so in banking, I mean in matters pertaining to banking, usually they do accept your advice, but on other matters, they may ask your advice and then not accept it.

The Court: All the things you have been talking about this morning are banking matters, aren't they?

A. Yes, sir.

[71] Mr. Kinkaid: Your Honor, excuse me just one minute, please.

By Mr. Kinkaid

Q. Let me try, if I can, to set up a definition of control. Let me define it as the ability to dictate the policies and practices of a bank. Now, using that as the definition, would your relationship with those banks that treat you and consider you their primary correspondent, would that relationship put you in a position to exercise control, as I have just defined it?

Mr. Hodgson: If Your Honor please, I have no objection to this question if this answer is responsive only to that question, so long as Mr. Kinkaid's definition of control is recognized as having had no substance created for it in this case, or, indeed, in any other area I know of. But, if he just wants to ask that hypothetical question, I have no objection.

The Court: All right. With that understanding, you may answer.

A. Would you repeat it now?

By Mr. Kinkaid

Q. Okay. We have got a definition of control as meaning the ability to dictate policies or practices of a bank, and the question is, using that definition, does [72] your relationship with those banks that use you as their primary correspondent put you in the position to exercise that kind of control? A. No.

Q. Mr. Padgett, are you familiar with recent amendments to the Bank Holding Company Act that were passed, as I recall, in late 1970? A. You would have to be more specific than that, and name them. There have been some changes.

Q. Well, for example, are you aware that there was an amendment to the Bank Holding Company Act in late 1970, which added the so-called controlling influence test to definition of subsidiary? Is that familiar to you at all? A. I have read it. If you want to ask me a question about it, ask me, and I will tell you.

Q. Only if you are aware, if you are aware of that particular amendment. A. Are you talking about Regulation Y, the look-through?

Q. I can't keep these numbers and letters straight; that does sound familiar. Well, this would be the amendment which states now that if Bank A has the power to exercise a controlling influence over the management or policies of another bank, then the second bank is or [73] can be found to be a subsidiary of the first bank.

Are you familiar with that? A. I am not familiar enough with it that I would want to testify under oath, I am afraid. I am sorry.

Mr. Kinkaid: Your Honor, I have no further questions.

Thank you very much, Mr. Padgett.

The Court: Are you all ready for cross-examination?

Mr. Hodgson: Sir?

The Court: Are you all going to have any cross-examination?

Mr. Hodgson: Yes, sir, indeed we are. I don't know what Your Honor's lunch plans are.

The Court: I am going to have to suspend in about two or three minutes for a three-judge hearing and I expect, in view of the time, we had better not allow you to commence at this time.

We will suspend until 2:00 p.m.

(Whereupon luncheon recess was had.)

[74] After Lunch

The Clerk: Mr. Padgett.

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Hodgson

Q. Mr. Padgett, in Trust Company's way of doing things, I believe that your branch operations are in a department or division separate from you; is this not right? A. Right.

Q. Sir? A. That's right, yes.

Q. What do you call it over there? A. Branch administration.

Q. And I believe that Trust Company Associates is your holding company; is that right? A. That's right.

Q. And its administration is likewise separate from your department or division? A. Right.

Q. And who runs that? A. Who runs which one?

Q. Who runs Trust Company Associates? A. The chairman is Bill Bowden.

Q. Who actually administers it? [75] A. Bill Bowden and the executive vice president, Evans Bruner.

Q. Evans Bruner is executive vice president? A. Right.

Q. He handles it daily, on a daily basis? A. Well, to the extent that the chairman delegates that, yes.

Q. With respect to correspondent banks with which you enjoy relationships, I believe you said there were about 452 of them; is this right? A. Yes.

[76] Q. Do you and your department routinely and systematically receive any kinds of reports from them? A. (Witness shakes head negatively.)

Q. You have to speak up, because the reporter can't take down—— A. No, sir. Can you hear that?

Q. I didn't mean to be rude, Mr. Padgett. A. No, I——

Q. You nodded your head and he can't pick that up. A. I am sorry. Somebody else complained about not being able to hear back there while ago, I will speak up.

Q. Do you get any kind of management performance reports from them routinely? A. Get any——

Q. From your correspondents? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you get any kind of reports on credit situations and past dues from them? A. Not unless we are involved in it with them. You talking about routinely?

Q. Routinely and systematically. A. Not unless we have money in it, no.

Q. You do not. Do you receive the same sorts of [77] reports then, that, I presume, your branch supervision division receives from its branches? A. Would you restate the question?

Q. You do not receive the same sorts of reports from your correspondents as your branch supervision division receives from its branches; is this right? A. That is correct. No, we do not.

Q. You don't give your correspondents, then, routinely and systematically any analyses of information comparing deposits, earnings and expense ratios, and other indices of effective performance, do you? A. Would you restate the question, please?

Q. You do not furnish to your correspondents, routinely, analyses of data and statistical information comparing deposits, earnings and expense ratios and other performance measurements, do you? A. No.

Q. Do you routinely distribute to your correspondents any operating and credit guidelines as are done for branches? A. No.

Q. Do you have any advisers who regularly sit on their boards of directors? A. On whose boards of directors?

Q. Correspondents' boards of directors. [78] A. No.

Q. Excuse me. Mr. Padgett, in these instances, I am talking about those for which you are responsible. A. I want to be sure to answer——

Q. Righto, your 452 babies. A. Right, I understand you, and the answer is no.

Q. Do you offer to your 452 correspondents or any numbers of them blanket insurance coverage for their group, this to include such things as fidelity insurance, safety-deposit insurance, extended coverage and liability insurance? A. No.

Q. Do you offer participation to your correspondents, officers and employees in your Trust Company's own pension and profit-sharing and other incentive plans? A. In our plan?

Q. Yes, sir. A. No, we do not.

Q. Do you offer to them any other variety of portable benefits to enable them to take those benefits with them when they move from one place of employment to another? A. No.

Q. Do you maintain any pool of personnel to meet your correspondents' problems caused by absences, peak [79] periods, illnesses, vacations and the like? A. No.

Q. Do you routinely and systematically furnish to your correspondents permanent personnel, such as presidents, cashiers and the like, to replace losses and to supply their growth needs? A. State the question there——

Q. All right, sir. Do you routinely and systematically undertake to furnish to your correspondents personnel managers, presidents and cashiers and the like, to replace their losses and to supply their growth needs from your own personnel? A. Well, now, yeah. Well, you didn't say that before. No, we do not.

Q. Do you ever provide to your correspondents a service of periodic and surprise continuing internal audits of their operating procedures to disclose fraud, to ensure that they are complying with legal requirements and the like? A. No.

Q. Do you receive from them routinely and systematically any of their budget and performance projections or goals? A. Not routinely, no.

Q. How do you ever receive such? [80] A. Well, there may be an occasion where someone presents this to you, or tells you about it, or hands it to you, or mails it to you, or it might be in the annual report or in general correspondence, but by routinely, do you mean do they all do this?

Q. Right. A. The answer is no.

Q. With respect to those which you do receive casually, as I suggest you answer it, do you provide a performance review of those goals against actual performance? Let me put in a little easier and less formal terms, Mr. Padgett.

Suppose you receive casually budget and performance projections of a correspondent bank. Do you then, routinely and systematically, review their performance against those goals at a later date? A. Not routinely, no.

Q. Do you provide for your correspondents any standardized general-ledger accounting systems? A. Not at the present time, no.

Q. Do you provide routinely the same complete advices of the changes in law as, for example, let's say changes in Regulation Z in the same way as you do for your branches? A. Not routinely, no.

[81] Q. Do you prepare income-tax returns for your correspondents, their own income-tax returns? A. If asked, we would help with them; we do not——

Q. Do you allow any of your correspondents to use the name Trust Company or Trust Company Bank? A. No.

Q. Do you allow any of your correspondents to use your logogram, the blue, hollow 'T'? A. No.

Q. Do you allow any of them, in their general advertising, to advise the public that they are affiliated or connected with the Trust Company system? A. Restate that, please, sir.

Q. Do you ever allow any of them, in their general advertising, to hold themselves out as being a part of Trust Company's system? A. I don't know if it is a matter of allowing, if they wanted to run an ad and say they are a correspondent of the Trust Company of Georgia, we would have no objections to it. Is that what you are trying——

Q. Anything more than that, have you ever allowed them to do? A. Well, there is nothing more than that we could do, really.

Q. Did you allow the little bank at Sandy Springs to use your name? [82] A. Yes, it was a Trust Company of—I believe it was a Trust Company Bank of Sandy Springs; was that it?

Q. Yes, sir. Did that bank—was that not the bank that was subsequently merged into Trust Company? A. Right.

Q. In which this Trust Company associates—— A. Now, you asked the question while ago, you said correspondents; you didn't say anything—we were not talking about affiliate at that time.

Q. Yes, sir. If you are going—you considered Trust Company of Sandy Springs to be an affiliate? A. I believe at that time they were—we owned, I believe we owned 5% of the bank, did we not, prior to the merger?

Q. Yes, sir, I believe so.

And that was the bank which was subsequently merged into Trust Company of Georgia? A. It is now a branch, right.

Q. And is now a branch? A. Right.

Q. Do you routinely and systematically have or offer to, or even offer to staffs of your correspondent banks, the opportunity to attend training schools and programs such as officer trainee programs, credit programs, law programs, these sorts of things? [83] A. Other than through the—what might be conducted at the correspondent conference, no, not routinely.

Q. In other words, in the sixteen particulars I have mentioned, at least, you do not furnish the same management and assistance as you do for your branches; is this not right? A. Correct.

Q. Have you ever tried to sell your correspondent services to the Citizens and Southern National Bank or any of its branches or affiliates? A. I can't say that I have ever tried to sell our services to any C & S branch or affiliate. I have been honored to have accounts from C & S banks by virtue of merger acquisitions over an extended period of time. I can remember two. For instance, Newnan, Georgia; for instance, Austell, Georgia, for, you know, over a period of time there after it was —became part of the system. I can't say that I have ever solicited any business from them, no, sir.

Q. Have you ever solicited any business from the Citizens and Southern Bank of Chamblee? A. No.

Q. Even when its name was the Chamblee National Bank? [84] A. No.

Q. Why not? A. Well, I just had better things to do. I don't mean to be facetious; I didn't think I would get any business there, and I didn't quite know how to answer that.

Q. I wish it were a facetious question, but it is not, and it is because it was a C & S bank; was it not? A. Pure and simple.

Mr. Hodgson: No further questions, Your Honor.

The Court: Redirect?

Mr. Kinkaid: Your Honor, we have no further questions for Mr. Padgett.

The Court: All right. You may come down.

Mr. Hodgson: Judge, may I express a concern at this time about duration of testimony? I hope things will go faster thus far we are through one witness in two hours and twenty minutes. I simply wish to make my position on it, because we have a good bit ourselves.

The Court: Mr. Kinkaid said he could [85] finish in three days, so I am not worried.

Mr. Hodgson: All right, sir.

Mr. Stern: Your Honor, at this time we would like to call William Farr, III.

WILLIAM FARR, III,
having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Direct Examination

By Mr. Stern

Q. Would you state your name, please. A. William Farr, III.

Q. Where are you employed, Mr. Farr? A. First National Bank of Atlanta.

Q. What is your present position? A. I am manager—excuse me, manager of what we call our Southeastern Division.

Q. And what does that division entail? A. This is the division of the bank that is responsible for our bank's business in the nine Southeastern states, with the exception of the city of Atlanta.

Q. When you say your bank's business, what did you mean by that? A. Well, account relationships, loan relationships, general banking services.

[86] Q. What is an account relationship? A. Well, let's say a checking account.

Q. All right. Now, you say except in the city of Atlanta; you do nothing then that involves anything within the city limits? A. Well, with one exception. Any correspondent banking relationships we would have in the city of Atlanta.

Q. All right. What is your—— A. Or let's say in the general Atlanta area.

Q. Okay. And your department oversees all of that within the Atlanta area? A. Yes.

Q. All right. Are you the head of that department? A. Yes.

Q. So what is your relationship then to the correspondent services provided by your bank in the Atlanta area? A. Well, they all fall in my division.

Q. All right. And you are primarily responsible for that? A. Yes.

Q. Okay. Did you mention the phrase "corporate business"? Did I hear you say that? [87] A. Not today.

Q. I am going to ask you whether the phrase means anything to you. A. Corporate business?

Q. Yes. A. Yes.

Q. What does it mean? A. It means business from corporations, really, we use it in the framework of corporations, partnerships, any commercial enterprise, other than individual accounts.

Q. Okay. When you use it in reference to what your department does, what does the meaning of that phrase have for you? A. Well, I would say any account relationship, loan or so forth, from a commercial enterprise, something other than a corporate bank or an individual, personal account.

[88] Q. These are dealings between your bank and corporations which are technically customers of yours? A. Yes.

Q. What types of services are primarily involved in this? A. In the corporate end, we can start with checking accounts, loan relationships, services from our trust department which we may assist in the sale of data processing services, corporate type services, registrar, transferee.

Q. And these are primary services in the corporate end? A. I think so.

Q. In regard to correspondent services, what territory did you say you cover with that? A. We have nine states, Virginia, the Carolinas, Florida, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi and Tennessee.

Q. Now, does your bank furnish correspondent services outside this area? A. Yes.

Q. The number of accounts or total volume of business, let's say, even if a dollar volume, in terms of that, what percentage of your bank's total sales of correspondent services is done in the region you oversee? A. I really can't truthfully give you an honest percentage. Let's say the great majority.

[89] Q. All right. A. By far.

Q. Do you have a rough idea as to how many banks in Georgia you furnish correspondent services to? A. Let's say several hundred.

Q. Okay. Now, what do you do? What does your department do with respect to correspondent services in general; do you simply solicit the sale of them? Do you manage the furnishing of them, or what? A. We—as I say, we do both. We do have certain departments that do support us. In other words, we have some eleven offices in our southeastern region that are responsible for various territories. They are drawn geographically. They are responsible for the solicitation of new accounts, the solicitation of existing business. We use other staff departments such as data processing. We don't physically do data processing in our department. A separate department does that under our direction.

Q. With regard to data processing, is that a correspondent service? A. Yes.

Q. Another department of your bank would assist in the furnishing of that service? A. That's right, the same holds true in the trust department, we don't—we assist our trust department in, [90] say, selling trust services in the correspondent bank market as well as any other market. We don't actually, in our department, give advice on wills or corporate trust matters, things such as this.

Q. Would your bank give such advice as those? A. Yes, I think it would.

Q. Are you then personally familiar with the correspondent services which are offered and provided by your bank to other banks in the Atlanta area? By that, I mean Fulton and DeKalb Counties? A. Yes.

Q. All right. Am I correct in assuming, let me change that for Mr. Hodgson's benefit, are you personally familiar with the correspondent banking needs of small banks in the Atlanta area? A. I think generally so.

Q. And you oversee the solicitation of sales of correspondent services to those banks? A. Yes.

Q. Then, is it the nature of your job to be familiar with their correspondent needs? A. Yes, sir.

Q. To your knowledge, do you offer the basic range of all the major and basic correspondent services that other Atlanta banks offer? [91] A. I would presume so, we think so.

Q. All right. Now, to the best of your recollection, I don't know that you have brought anything with you, could you list as many of the major services, correspondent services as you can? A. Well, clearance of checks, loan participation, both purchase and sale. Data processing work, investment services, financing services for the bank itself, various forms of, let's say, operational and management assistance. I don't know—it's a little hard to—really, get out a list.

Q. Do you recall that I've spoken to you on a number of occasions and asked you about your operations? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, if I were simply to suggest that certain phrases that I believe you have stated, would you tell me whether I'm correct or incorrect in my assumptions that you provide these services, Federal funds? A. Yes, we have a Federal funds service.

Q. Okay. Financing of the small bank's expansion? A. Yes, in various ways.

Q. Pension and profit sharing plan administration? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Personnel assistance of any type? A. Yes.

Q. Portfolio management or some other phrase that [92] might—— A. Yes, we do some work with—if you're talking about investment portfolios of banks.

Q. Yes. A. Yes, we have a service on a fee basis.

Q. Does the phrase "Credit information" mean anything? A. Yes.

Q. In what sense? A. We exchange credit information with customers as well as competitors.

Q. Do you furnish credit information as a correspondent service? A. I suppose you could call it that. As I say, we would exchange credit information with someone who's a customer or non-customer. I think that's sort of a function of our business.

Q. Do you furnish a factoring service? A. Yes.

Q. Briefly stated, what is a factoring service? A. I think I heard Mr. Padgett cover this pretty well this morning.

Q. It's his definition, as you heard it—— A. Essentially, the purchase of receivables on a non-recourse basis for cash.

Q. Do you handle payrolls for anyone other than your [93] own bank? A. Yes.

Q. Do you handle them for other banks? A. You're speaking of payroll accounting, preparation of them? Yes, we do.

Q. Under a correspondent relationship? A. Yes.

Q. What mechanically do you do in the handling of somebody's payroll? A. Well, they will give us a list of their employees, the pay scale, time records, whatever we would need as far as input. We will prepare the payroll checks for everyone or entries to use to credit someone's account, withhold the proper tax information, keep all the records where at the end of the year we would file the employee's end of the year withholding from those records. It's the same thing as a payroll department would do in any company or bank.

Q. You serve as an internal payroll department for another bank? A. In effect that's what it amounts to.

Q. Do you ever furnish payroll preparation to customers of other banks? A. We have on occasion.

Q. When requested to do so by the bank? A. Yes, sir.

[94] Q. Would you say this pretty well covers the major correspondent services? A. I think we have touched on them all.

Q. You talked about financing services for the bank itself, what did you mean by that, sir? A. Well, several things are involved here. You mentioned Federal funds, this is one form of financing for your small bank. We maintain a market in Federal funds. We purchase funds in a case where a bank has excess funds over and above their reserve requirement, we might purchase these on an overnight basis. Where a bank may need funds, they are in a short position with regard to their reserves, we would sell them overnight funds.

Q. All right. I believe Mr. Padgett described that pretty clearly. I assume there is a basic uniformity in check clearing functions as sold as a correspondent service among all major banks in Atlanta; would I be right? A. I didn't hear his testimony. I would think there is a uniformity.

Q. Could you briefly describe what check clearing involves? A. Well, first let's take a small bank in middle Georgia somewhere, deposits from all of its customers may be drawn on his bank, competitor across the street, our bank, a New York bank, anywhere in the country. He would bundle [95] this up into a deposit and send them to us. We would credit his account and undertake to present those checks for payment to the Federal Reserve Bank in various places.

Q. You talked about the loan participation, could you briefly describe what that is? A. Well, this would be one bank purchasing an interest in a loan originated by another bank.

Q. And you said you involved yourself in terms of correspondent services with both the purchase and the sale of loan participation; is that correct? A. Yes.

Q. Could you first describe what is involved or under what circumstances you would normally purchase a loan? A. I think the most common circumstance would be where a small bank is entering into a loan arrangement with one of its customers and the loan is over and above his legal limits to any one customer. The bank can only lend a certain percentage of their capital structure to any one customer. We may be asked to take everything in excess of his legal limits.

Q. Do you often do that? A. Yes.

Q. Is this generally done with regard to banks that maintain a correspondent account with you? A. Yes.

Q. You rarely—would you ever do it with a bank [96] that does not? A. Possibly, but I would have to say rarely.

Q. Now, you say you are familiar with the selling of the correspondent services, How, to your knowledge, then does the purchase by you or your bank of a loan participation from a smaller bank that can't meet the loan, how does this benefit that small bank? What are the burdens that the small bank has to assume? What are the ones you assume? A. How do the fact that we participate in the loan, how does it benefit him?

Q. Let me withdraw that. It's pretty long. Would the bank in the absence of a participating purchaser such as your own bank, be able to make the loan at all? A. Well, you can't legally handle the loan for the amount requested if it's more than his legal limit. The law specifies what he can lend to any one customer.

Q. This increases his lending capacity? A. In effect, yes.

Q. Now, if a small bank does—I'm sorry—when a small bank does sell you a loan participation, who handles the servicing of that loan account? A. Normally the small bank.

Q. Do you ever deal directly with the customer involved? A. On occasion we have.

Q. Generally,—— [97] A. In some cases our bank, for instance, might originate the loan and sell back a participation up to his legal limits, that's done.

Q. When you purchase, it is generally the originating bank that deals with the customers? A. As I say, generally that's true. In some cases where it's his customer, we may for one reason or another, originate the loan at his request and give him back whatever share he wanted to take in the loan.

Q. If a bank comes down to you under the normal circumstances, and asks you to participate in those cases when you chose to do so, do you go in these cases and deal with the customer? A. I'm not sure I understand what you are asking.

Q. Let me rephrase the question. A. Go in and deal with the customer?

Q. When a small bank originates a loan in which you buy a participation, do you try to interfere with the bank's relationship with that customer? A. No.

Q. In other words, you permit the bank to do all its direct dealings to satisfy the customer's needs with respect to that loan? A. In some cases we do have some direct dealings with the customer, for instance a small bank customer and the small [98] bank wants us involved.

Q. If the small bank wants you involved? A. Yes, that would be the most common case. I mean, we do, on occasion, deal with those people under certain circumstances. You are talking about negotiation of the loan, terms, payment schedules, this sort of thing?

Q. I see what you are getting at. All right, fine. In terms of the general servicing of the loan, once everything is established, the collateral made, the manner of the loan being paid, would you participate? Does the original bank nonetheless do the participating with the customer? A. Normally speaking.

Q. Did you ever refuse to purchase a loan participation? A. Yes.

Q. What are some of the reasons you might refuse? A. If the loan isn't any good.

Q. It would be normal? A. That's one.

Q. What else? A. The rate doesn't appear to be attractive, I would say pretty much the same reasons you normally turn down a loan in your own bank.

Q. I see. What about a situation where the economy is such, I don't know if you heard Mr. Padgett discuss the situation around 1968, I believe there was a tight money [99] market. Did this lead you to refuse to buy any participation from your correspondents? A. We would like to think not but I am sure that probably influenced some of our decisions.

Q. Some of your decisions. You didn't cut off all of your correspondents? A. No.

Q. Why, under the circumstances, especially in tight money, but generally do you buy the participation? A. Excuse me; restate that question.

Q. What do you gain from buying a participation? A. Well, this is what we gain, is largely dependent on the state of the money market, I would say. In some cases, if we are looking for places to invest our funds and looking for loans, the fact that someone presents such a loan and that is an attractive medium for an investment, it's a good deal in itself, or if the correspondent bank were to bring you a loan and it's a customer you wanted to serve, you'd be serving your correspondent by allowing him to take care of the customer by buying the loan. I think at least in our bank we look at it from both angles. The loan for its own sake and what you're really rendering to your correspondent as a service.

Q. Okay. A. I would say in 1960, for instance, we felt we were [100] rendering a heck of a lot of service. Maybe over the past year somebody might have been rendering us a service by selling us some loans.

Q. Under what circumstances would you sell participation to a small bank? A. Well, there again, that's a function of the money market. We were just tickled to death to sell a loan participation about three years ago. Looks like you could make all the loans you wanted to make. We might sell them for liquidity reasons in our own bank. We might sell them as, again, an investment medium for the small bank.

Q. Would you explain that? A. Let's say a small bank has various low loan portfolios looking to build loans. He might request we sell him a participation in loans we have on the books, too, as an investment on his part.

Q. And upon such a request, have you ever done so? A. Yes, we have.

Q. Have these ever been or are these generally in regard to loans that you weren't looking to sell off? A. There again, I would have to say it depends on the market, a very tight money period we might aggressively try to sell off loans. In another money market we might have that as a service.

Q. So, a sale under those circumstances might be as an [101] accommodation to a small bank? A. That's rght.

Q. Now, when an officer of a small correspondent bank of yours wants to make a loan in excess of his own lending limits and he knows that he will have to sell your bank a participation before he can commit himself for the loan, how does he know whether to commit himself at all? A. Say, if he—I'd better get you again.

Q. Let me restate it this way. Let's say I'm president of a small bank and have a correspondent relationship with you. A man comes in—I'd like you to think of specific instances where this is true, not as a hypothetical—a man comes in, wants to borrow "X" dollars from me. I can lend him only forty percent of that. I call your bank to ask that you participate as you have in the past with other loans. I want to commit myself to this man as quickly as I can. How do I know whether I can? How do I know he won't walk out the door?

Mr. Doyle: I'm going to object to that question as to what's in Mr. Farr's mind as to what's in somebody else's mind as a hypothetical.

Q. (By Mr. Stern) I will withdraw the question.

How does a man, a small bank president, find out whether he can commit himself on a loan beyond his lending limits? [102] A. He picks up the phone and calls one of our people and asks him.

Q. Asks him what? A. He might say, I have so and so here that needs to borrow "X" dollars on this basis. Would you be interested? If one of our lending officers feels he has sufficient information to make a decision, he might say, "Yes, go ahead. We will go with you on that basis."

Q. Is this sometimes done over the phone? A. This is sometimes done, there are various ways of handling it. This might be one.

Q. If the situation is sound enough, is it possible then for the bank president of the small bank to get over-the-phone approval? A. That's done in some cases.

Q. Okay. And data processing, could you just quickly list some of the fields in which you perform this service with regard to what banking functions? A. In other words, what would be included under our data processing services in general?

Q. Right. A. Demand deposit accounting, savings accounting, installment loan accounting, certificates of deposit, payroll.

Q. Okay. Do you do accrual accounting? A. I'm not sure I know what you mean, accrual. If [103] you're talking about incoming expense.

Q. That sort of thing or investment accrual. A. Not at the present time.

Q. What is demand deposit accounting? A. This is, I guess, what you would say, the maintenance of the bookkeeping department for customer banking.

Q. What is involved? A. Posting of checks and deposits to each individual customer.

Q. How about savings accounts? A. The same thing except for savings customers.

Q. What about installment loan, what do you do on those? A. This would—the record keeping on installment loans, preparation of coupon booklets for the borrower, recording his payments as they are mailed in. If he doesn't mail them in, it's generated as a past-due journal, simply the bookkeeping end of the installment loan lending.

Q. You do these things with regard to customers of correspondent banks as well as your own? In other words, on an installment loan are you talking about doing the data processing with regard to installment loans of correspondent bank customers? [104] (Page number 104, inadvertently omitted in typing.)

[105] A. Well, that's right, we are doing the service for the correspondent bank. We are keeping his records for him.

Q. Okay. A. In other words, we don't deal with the correspondent's customer in any way.

Q. Right. You are doing the service for the bank in regards to his customer. A. Right.

Q. Okay. Do you do anything at all with regard to helping to finance the expansion, physical expansion of a small bank? A. Yes, we have.

Q. What types of things have you done? A. Well, when you say physical expansion, I think about brick and mortar. We have financed buildings, equipment and so forth for banks.

Q. Do you ever purchase capital notes and debentures? A. We have done so on several occasions, yes.

Q. All right. With specific reference to a small correspondent bank that wants to use capital notes or debentures for its own financing, do you purchase their notes and debentures? A. Yes.

[106] Q. Okay. What is involved in investment services? A. Well, primarily, the purchase and sale of securities which would be securities in the bank's own account, anything it would own for itself, Treasury bills, municipal bonds, federal fund transactions, commercial paper, repos, just the—most any money-market instrument.

Q. All right. Very briefly, what are federal funds? A. Well, it is a—I would define them as excess reserves of banks purchased by other banks, and vice versa. Each bank has a reserve requirement that it must maintain under either federal or state regulations, and when it has more excess cash than it needs, it would sell this and get paid a fee or an interest rate to a bank that may be in a short position.

Q. I see. A. And vice versa.

Q. Okay. What do you do with respect to the administration of pension and profit-sharing plans in terms of correspondent services? A. Our trust department is in the business of administration of pensions, as well as profit-sharing plans, and we have correspondent banks among our [107] customers.

Q. I see. What do you do for the correspondent banks with regard to pension and profit-sharing plans? A. Well, it is primarily an investment-type function, whereby they maybe have a plan that they have approved, and we happen to be the investment medium for them, invest those funds, hopefully, in some securities that would appreciate in value and administer the portfolio for them. We have some standard funds, too, an individual or a correspondent bank or company might want to use just like a mutual fund of investments.

Q. A mutual fund? A. Well, not—that's a bad word. We are not in the mutual funds business, but let's say we call it our common trust fund. Let's say each individual trust account doesn't have a separate set of securities.

Q. Like any internal trust department operation? A. That's right.

Q. Now, have you been talking with regard to the pension and profit-sharing plan of a bank for its own employees? A. Are you saying, does our trust department have a pension and profit-sharing plan for a bank, for its employees?

Q. No, you have said you have done these things [108] as a correspondent service in terms of pension and profit-sharing plans when you administer pension and profit-sharing plans. Are you talking about the plan of another bank? A. Yes, I thought that is what we were talking about.

Q. Okay, fine, I just wanted to make that clear. A. Oh.

Q. Do you ever administer the pension or profit-sharing plan of the customer of another bank, say a corporate customer? A. Yes, we have.

Q. On request? A. I don't know how it would arise. We would do it, we would do it on request, yes, sir.

Q. Okay. All right. Now, when you administer the pension and profit-sharing plan of a small correspondent bank itself, do you determine how much their employees will get in terms of rate of return or are such things determined by the bank setting up the plan? A. You mean what their contribution would be and this sort of thing?

Q. Among other things, yes. A. No.

Q. Are the terms of contribution in terms of [109] return determined by that bank or by you? A. I think that is generally done by the customer, the bank.

Q. Okay. Now, do you ever give any assistance to a small correspondent bank that needs to fill some personnel positions? A. Yes.

Q. Could you describe how this comes up and what you do? A. Well, we deal with, as I mentioned, several hundred banks, and we come into contact with a lot of bankers and we know a lot of them that are looking for jobs, and we know a lot of them that have needs for people. So, I would like to think of ourselves as being a clearing house for personnel in some respects. In other words, we might know Bank A needs a good president, and Bank B in another area, the president might be a little unhappy with his situation and looking for an advancement or change in location. So, we might put the two together.

Q. I see. And you have done so? A. Yes.

Q. Have you done anything other than help to refer people back and forth to permanent positions? Have you ever assisted a correspondent bank that had a [110] temporary vacancy of some sort? A. On occasion we have. As far as letting someone help out down there for a day or two, if they had a death in the family or we have on, let's say, rare occasions; that would be an exception more than a rule.

Q. Okay. You mentioned the phrase "management assistance". Could you tell us what that means? A. Well, this would be sort of a hodge-podge category, as far as I am concerned. We run across all sorts of problems that are presented to us really every day, and when a correspondent bank might call and say, "Well, I have got an organization problem; I don't know what to do to solve it", we might send one or two folks down there to spend the day to really look at his whole bank, see what is doing and draw him up a little report, and make some recommendations to him, which he may or may not follow.

Q. You mean the bank's whole organization, if they requested it that way? A. Yes, it is nothing on a formal basis, but we just sort of do it as requested.

Q. Okay. A. That is also done, I guess, in the operational field, if someone has a teller procedure that seems to be a little cumbersome, we might come down and say we [111] know of so-and-so over in Town A that is doing this way; it has been quite successful, or another branch another way. You might want to consider that. It is very informal.

Q. I see. Would you ever have occasion to scrutinize, let's say, a salary plan that they have and give suggestions on that? A. We may. I can't think of an instance where we have.

Q. All right. If requested to do so, would you give—— A. We give opinions on anything.

Q. With regard to loan policy, do you ever examine or scrutinize the loan policy of your small correspondent banks? A. Again, on request, I can think of one or two instances where people have asked us about various types of loans, and maybe they were considering going into, that they didn't handle before and needed some assistance on, what is involved in handling a particular type of credit.

Q. I see. And did you give advice on that? A. Yes.

Q. All right. Is operational assistance substantially different from managerial assistance? [112] A. Well, I think they overlap. As I mentioned, sometimes a bank will have operating problems of some sort, machinery problems. They will call on us to make a little survey and we will draw upon our expertise and experience with small banks or our own bank, competitor banks, and make a recommendation to them.

Q. All right. Now, how would managerial assistance be different from this, even though—— A. Well, I think the occasion we have used this would get off into really organization of personnel. Someone may ask the question, as you suggested on salary administration.

Q. I see. Higher-level problems. A. We had a question one time of a request to do a little study on a bank's board of directors. People thought it was a little too old, and what ideas we had on speeding up the retirement of elderly directors. I mean you can get all questions; you will think you have got them all, and I betcha' we have already had a new one today.

Q. Are there services that you would not normally call correspondent services in the normal, everyday use of the term, which you tend, nonetheless, to provide with frequency to correspondent customers on request? A. No. Just about anything we do that seems to [113] please our customer, we want to put that in the correspondent services. I don't really know what you're getting at there.

Q. Okay, fine. A. Maybe if you can give me a for instance.

Q. All right. Let's suppose that a small bank president calls you up and says that he has got a very fine customer of considerable means, with whom he has enjoyed a long relationship as customer and bank. But, the customer would now like to have some trust services performed, and he can't handle it; he doesn't have a trust department. Would you handle that? A. We would probably be glad to get a referral like that.

Q. Okay. Is it common for you to do so? A. We have done that on a number of occasions.

Q. All right. A. You are talking about where a bank doesn't have trust powers, doesn't choose to exercise trust powers?

Q. Uh-huh. A. Yes, we have done that.

Q. Do you, then, respect the existing bank's customer relationship or do you try to get all of his other business away or what? [114] A. No, we have a philosophy of respecting our correspondent's territory, so to speak. We don't make it a practice of soliciting behind his back. If he opens his door to us and refers us a piece of trust business, no, we wouldn't do that.

Q. All right. Now, generally, how are these correspondents' services financed? A. Balances; they maintain an account with them. Some of them are done on a fee basis. Let's say fees and checking-account balances.

Q. Okay. Do you ever provide any correspondent services that you don't charge for? A. Well, if you are saying don't collect a fee for, yes. In other words, we feel that we are paid in other ways.

Q. All right. Do small banks ever maintain correspondent accounts with more than one bank? A. Yes.

Q. Is it possible that a small bank in the Atlanta—let me rephrase that. Do any national banks in the Atlanta area maintain accounts with you, and at least one other bank in the Atlanta area? A. Yes.

Q. How do you know what large banks a small bank has accounts with? [115] A. Sometimes they will tell you. A lot of times, well, I think it is reasonably accurate to look in the Southern Banker. Most small banks there list all their primary correspondents.

Q. This is public information as a rule? A. I consider it such.

Q. Okay. Regarding this solicitation and sale of correspondent services to small banks in the Atlanta area, what other banks would you say are your major competition for the sale of those services? A. In the Atlanta area?

Q. Yes. A. Well, I would just—let's say C&S, Trust Company, Fulton National and National Bank of Georgia.

Q. Do you call this your basic grouping? A. This is it. These are the banks that purport to be in the correspondent banking business.

Q. And you regard yourself as the competitor of each of these banks? A. We hope so.

Q. What effect does this competition have on any national bank in the Atlanta area that wants to switch from one bank to another for correspondent services? A. What effect? I am not sure I understand what you are getting at there.

[116] Q. Is it easy for a small bank in the Atlanta area to switch primary correspondent sources? A. Yes, I think so.

Q. Okay. Do you provide correspondent services to any banks with which you are in direct competition? A. Yes.

Q. Does this competitive situation have any cooling effect on your correspondent relationship? Does it inhibit you or are you perfectly willing to provide a general range of services for such a bank? A. Well, we are willing to provide, from our standpoint, I think, when you get into a market area where you both have locations, if that is what you are saying, we will have an understanding with the bank that we are not going to section off an area for him to be protected in by any means.

Q. Okay. A. No, we don't do that.

Q. Delighted to hear it. A. We will go after him. We will try to do business with him at the same time. If we are not successful, that is our general attitude.

Q. To your personal knowledge, do you know whether officers of smaller banks in any significant number used to work for larger banks? [117] A. Excuse me, officers of smaller banks now that used to work for larger banks? Yes.

Q. All right. Are there some in the Atlanta area? A. You mean are there some——

Q. Small bank—— A. Some bank officials in a small bank that used to be with a large Atlanta bank?

Q. Right. A. Yeah.

Q. Do you know whether personnel from your bank have ever been hired away by smaller banks? A. Yeah.

Q. Did these people hold responsible supervisory positions? A. In our bank?

Q. Yes. A. Yes.

Q. All right. Now, how do you go about establishing a correspondent relationship with a small bank? A. Well, you go out there and just figure out any way you can do it, figure out something you can do for them, cultivate him. It is, I guess, much the same as soliciting any sort of business relationship. [118] You have a product to sell, you have to go out and prove in his mind that you can do it better than anyone else.

[119] Q. Okay. Do you ever solicit the business of a small bank and get only one or two services perhaps when it still retains another bank for the other services? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then do you try to cross-sell them additional services beyond that point? A. Yes, we like to have it all if we could.

Q. Have you ever assisted in the organization of a new bank? A. Yes.

Q. Would you have a rough idea as to how many times over the past, let's say, year your bank has helped? A. I would say in the past year I can think of two occasions.

Q. When that happens, who runs the new bank? Do you run it, does your bank run it? A. No. Who runs it?

Q. Yes. A. The people who organize it and the president, whoever it is that they are.

Q. What, specifically, do you do to assist in the organization of a new bank? A. I'd have to say we do pretty much what Mr. Padgett testified this morning. We'll start off, offer any assistance in the preparation of applications based on what we have [120] learned from previous experience, branch applications and the like. We may help in offering suggestions on the location. Pretty much anything we are asked to do, financing for stockholders, directors, who want to buy stock and don't have the full amount of the purchase price. We do a lot of financing, possibly financing of the bank's building.

Q. Okay. Why do you go to all this trouble to help a bank that is going to be independent? A. To get his account.

Q. What account? A. The correspondent account. It's going to keep you, pay for that.

Q. When one of your correspondent banks, existing banks want to open a branch office, do you ever assist in preparing a branch application? A. Yes.

Q. Do you ever assist in the construction of buildings for a branch? A. Yes.

Q. Do you ever loan out a trailer unit for the trailer unit to be used for a while? A. We have on one occasion.

Q. Do these small banks, correspondent banks that are involved in existing relationships with you ever send you any kind of continuing report, periodic reports on the performance? [121] A. We get whatever everybody else does.

Q. What is that? A. Usually a statement of condition which is published quarterly and semi-annually.

Q. Do they account to you in any way? Do they have to meet your approval in any other regard? A. No, this is pretty much a courtesy thing. I think most banks exchange reports, its public information. You can pick it up in a bank lobby. I think most banks have a habit of sending what is published to correspondents.

Q. Do you require anything above that to be sent to you to account to you? A. No.

Q. Do you ever do audits, perform audits of correspondent banks? A. Yes.

Q. On what occasions? A. At the moment, upon request.

Q. What type of things would you audit, what part of the operations? A. This audit service we provide is much the same as FDIC or State Banking Department would provide. It's a supplement to that.

Q. A supplement to it? A. I think so.

[122] Q. It's generally on the request of the small bank? A. Yes, we have a department that handles this for us.

Q. Okay. Do you ever provide the smaller banks with advice? A. When asked.

Q. On any particular thing, or on just about anything? A. Just about anything.

Q. Okay. Can you think of some instances other than what we have discussed where, you know, maybe with regard to the services we have discussed, where they have called in and asked your specific advice? A. You mean on the full range of correspondent services or just by an NCR Burroughs Teller Machine?

Q. Yes. A. Yes, we are asked this quite often.

Q. Do you give advice on a continuing program or generally when requested or when something comes up? A. Generally when it comes up, with the exception of one thing that we offer in the investment department, which is a continuing procedure that we sell, the investment advisory service, we report on a periodic basis where he stands with a bond portfolio, make recommendations for purchases and sales. There again he is under no obligation to take the advice. That's part of a service we sell.

Q. You say there again, am I correct, he is never under [123] an obligation to take your advice? A. No, you're correct in assuming he has no obligation.

Q. Okay. One moment. That's all the questions on direct we have.

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Hodgson

Q. Mr. Farr, don't be surprised if you hear the same questions that you may have heard me asking Dave Padgett. A. Okay.

Q. Because that's what I'm going to ask you. With respect to your correspondent division, do you routinely and systematically receive from your correspondents any forms or reports with respect to management performance, credit past due, or any other performance information? A. No, with the possible exception if we are participating in a loan. You are talking about just management?

Q. Right, but go ahead and expound. A. If we are participating in a loan, say, secured by accounts receivable or something, we would get reports on the status of the collateral, things like this.

Q. Of course. Do you furnish to any of your correspondents any regular analyses or statistical compilations comparing deposit performance, earnings and expense ratios, recommendations for improvement of their operations? A. No, I don't think so.

[124] Q. Do you distribute routinely to your correspondents any of your own operating credit guides, the same that you afford to your branches? A. No.

Q. Do you ever have advisors sitting to advise what their Board of Directors as a routine matter? A. Not as a routine matter, no.

Q. Do you offer blanket insurance coverage to any groups of your correspondents affording them fidelity insurance, safe deposit, extended coverage liability and the like? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you offer to their officers or employees or any of them participation in your own pension and profit sharing and other incentive plans? A. No, we don't.

Q. Do you ever regularly recommend—do you ever recommend salary and wage changes in accordance with service and performance records of their officers and employees? A. The question is, do we ever?

Q. Yes, sir. A. If we have, I'm not aware of an instance.

Q. Do you routinely provide a pool of personnel to meet absences in peak periods, illnesses, vacations and other personnel needs? A. No.

[125] Q. Do you voluntarily furnish their new presidents or other managing officers? A. Well, if we can find someone.

Q. From your own staff, I mean. A. From our own staff, no, we don't.

Q. Do you provide periodic surprise continuing internal audits of these banks, any of them? A. Yes, we do, within the framework of our audit service we provide with correspondent banks.

Q. This may be a surprise audit correspondent thing? A. In all cases, it is. It would be saying that they would agree to be with us and, of course, by nature of audit, it has to be a surprise.

Q. How many of your correspondents have the service? A. Right now, off the top of my head, very few, like four, five, something fairly new for us.

Q. Do you receive from your correspondents regularly any sort of budgets or performance projections for your own analyses and comment? A. Performance of budgets at their own banks, no.

Q. Projections? A. No.

Q. Do you ever review their performance against any such projections? A. Well, no.

[126] Q. Do you provide any standardized general ledger accounting system for your correspondents? A. No.

Q. Do you routinely provide them with advice on the multitude of changes in the law, say, under the wage price freeze truth in lending? A. Now, back up to that last question.

Q. All right, sir. Do you provide a standardized general ledger accounting system for your correspondents? A. No, the only possible exception under this, under one of our investment programs we do, say, attritions on bond discounts which may be a small portion of it.

Q. That would be it? A. That is under the investment portfolio. We do some investment accounting which involves general ledger entries, they would put on their general ledgers.

Q. This would relate only to performance of their investment? [127] A. That's right.

Q. Do you provide continually and regularly advice on substantial changes in the laws, such as in the wage-price guidelines and freeze, truth-in-lending and the like? A. We have no regular program, but we have advised on occasion.

Q. On request? A. Yes. I was thinking particularly with Phase I and Phase II. We were inundated with requests on that.

Q. You didn't try to answer them, did you? A. Well, we just kind of blew a little smoke up there and told them we would read it. But, no, we were called upon for services when this came out, and I guess, due to our—as I say, we had done some research on it; I don't know whether it was the right research, but we had done our best.

Q. Do you routinely prepare income-tax returns for your correspondents? A. No.

Q. Do you allow any of them to use your logogram or to otherwise identify with you generally as being anything other than a mere correspondent bank? A. Well, there's quite a few First National Banks, but as far as our logo and design of our print and so [128] forth, no, whatever we would have trademarked we do not allow to be used.

Q. Did you allow anything to be used by the little banks in Doraville and DeKalb which subsequently merged into your bank? A. Yes, but I didn't consider that a normal correspondent. That was not serviced under our department.

Q. That was serviced by another department? A. Yes.

Q. How was it different? A. How was what different?

Q. How was the relationship as between those two banks and your correspondent banks? A. Well, as I say, I was not privy to all the negotiations on that. That was handled in a different area, but I think, obviously, that bank merged with us, as long as the law enabled it to do so, I think the organizers of that bank probably had good intent to merge with the First National Bank of Atlanta.

Q. At the time they organized? A. Yes, they had one of our people out there managing the bank as president, one of our former officers, who is now back with us, a branch manager. That was not what I would call the normal correspondent.

[129] Q. Fine. Do you routinely or do you ever have staffs of your correspondents, as distinguished from these last two banks, Doraville and South DeKalb, have them attend any of your training programs and schools, say for officer training, credit law and that sort of thing? A. Excuse me, you are saying any of our correspondents that might——

Q. Staffs from your correspondent banks themselves attending your training programs. A. We have had people in on occasion, but as a continuing practice, no.

Q. Do any of your correspondents have a significant number of their shareholders who are officers, directors or employees of the First National Bank of Atlanta, that you know of? A. How about asking you to go over that one more time.

Q. All right, sir. Because this asks you to know more than you may know, so far as you may know. A. Are you saying any officer or employees of any one of our correspondents?

Q. No, sir, let me rephrase the question, because I don't want to confuse you. A. I misunderstood you.

[130] Q. Do you know of any shareholder list of your correspondents which include significant—a significant percentage of their shareholders of the correspondent banks, of men and women who are officers, directors or employees of the First National Bank of Atlanta? A. No. Well, there is one circumstance that I can think of. We have a bank that is, let's see, I call it an affiliate-type operation in Savannah, but——

Q. Beyond that? A. We do, let's say, bring this up, because we do wait on this bank through our correspondent banking department. In other words, when they have a need for a currency shipment or credit information or what-have-you, they will call our department and we will ship it. Although it is not the normal correspondent bank relationship.

Q. Have you ever tried to sell your correspondent services to any C&S office or affiliate? A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Or to any of the six little banks that are involved in this litigation, say the Citizens & Southern Bank of Chamblee, et cetera? A. No, sir.

Q. Why not? A. Well, we didn't think they were good prospects.

[131] Mr. Hodgson: We have no further questions, Your Honor.

The Court: Redirect?

Mr. Kinkaid: Your Honor, would you mind if we took a short break before redirect? We have a little problem that has come up and I would like to solve it to keep it from being a big problem.

The Court: We will take a recess for ten minutes.

Mr. Kinkaid: Thank you, Your Honor.

By Mr. Stern

Q. Mr. Farr, when Mr. Hodgson was asking you some questions, he went through a list of items and asked whether you regularly and routinely provide various things to correspondents. Are there any of these things, such as sending somebody out to advise the board of directors or making salary recommendations, reviewing personnel plans or anything else that Mr. Hodgson mentioned that you don't provide routinely, but will provide on request? A. Well, I don't know if you want to take specific ones. It might be a little easier for me to answer it. You mentioned—what was the first one?

[132] Q. All right. Sending somebody out to advise their board of directors on something. A. Well, I can think of one occasion or maybe twice, and it's about that many times, one of our people has been invited to attend a board meeting of a bank to make whatever comments he saw fit.

Q. You mean in general terms? A. Yeah.

Q. Without there being a specific problem necessarily? A. Yes, sir, I can think of one occasion, one of the correspondents invited our man to come down and sort of critique their board meeting, and he was invited to make some remarks on how he thought they might do a better job.

Q. As a board? A. Well, they were speaking of the bank, in that case. That is one of the instances I can think of.

Q. Can you think of any others, offhand? A. I can remember another instance where another bank invited us to a board meeting, but I don't remember whether we were asked to comment or otherwise.

Q. Are you willing to do so, if requested? A. Yes, as I say, we are willing to do most anything that is legal, moral and can get us some [133] business.

Q. All right, sir. Take another specific. How about making recommendations to a small bank's board as to what it ought to pay its officers or employees? A. I can't think of any instances where we have made recommendations of this sort. I may have hesitated here. I think when, you know, upon occasion, if somebody is looking for someone to hire, like a new president, a new cashier, a new loan man, they might say what do you think it will take to hire a good one like that? We might say, you are going to need to pay him X number of dollars, based on what we have seen. That's the only semblance of salary recommendations that I can ever remember any of our people making.

Q. Would you, on request, or have you, on request, ever reviewed the performance of a bank or its officials? [134] A. Again, I can think of an instance where we were asked to make a general study on a bank where we were asked to critique their performance, private-wise, not individual officers in the bank, just how this particular bank racked up with their competitors as we saw it.

Q. In terms of all the accounting and record keeping and other things that you have already said you do for a small correspondent, if you were asked to make out a tax return for a small bank, might you do so? A. I don't know that we have ever been asked. If we were, I would assume if we had the capability to do that and legally so, we would do it.

Q. Mr. Hodgson was questioning you with regard to First National Bank of Doraville, I believe? A. Yes.

Q. And First National Bank of South DeKalb? A. Yes.

Q. You said something to the effect, as I recall it, that these really weren't the normal correspondent relationships; is that correct? A. That's right.

Q. In what way were they different? A. Well, there again, in my opinion these things were organized with the, really, the hopes that we could become affiliated as a branch in one point of time, as it turned out, [135] we were. I can't really speak a whole lot of authority there as I was not in the position at the bank that handled that.

Q. Are there any other banks in the DeKalb-Fulton County area that were organized the same way which at any time enjoyed that kind of relationship? A. Not that I can think of.

Q. Any other banks—— A. Excuse me, you're talking about that we were party to?

Q. Let me restate it. Are there any other banks in DeKalb or Fulton County which at any time in the past have had a relationship with First National Bank of Atlanta which went beyond the normal correspondent relationship such as the South DeKalb and Doraville banks did? A. I can't think of any.

Q. You mentioned the use of the name of the bank. Are there any banks in the area—you mentioned Fulton and DeKalb Counties—that also use the name First National? A. Yes.

Q. What are they? A. First National Bank, I think it's called, used to be Glenwood National, became, let's say, affiliated with that, and then unaffiliated. I think they call themselves First National Bank of DeKalb County now, I'm not sure.

Q. Were they ever First National Bank of Glenwood? [136] A. Yes.

Q. Is that after you were affiliated with them? A. Yes.

Q. They were known by another name before that? A. Yes.

Q. Glenwood National Bank after your affiliation and after they changed their name to First National Bank of Glenwood, did you enjoy a relationship of any sort between the two banks? A. You're saying——

Mr. Doyle: There comes a point, if the Court please, to the leading questions which require an objection. We object to him leading.

Q. All right, Mr. Doyle. Could you describe to us whatever relationship existed between First National Bank of Atlanta and First National Bank of Glenwood after it became that bank, by that name? A. I really can't since this was handled outside of my territory. We did not handle this one in our own division.

Q. Do you today furnish any services to the First National Bank of Glenwood or by whatever name it's now known? A. Yes, we do.

Q. In what capacity do you furnish services? A. As a correspondent bank.

Q. They enjoy the correspondent relationship with you? [137] A. Yes.

Q. To your knowledge, was it ever the intention to merge First National of Glenwood into First National Bank of Atlanta? A. Yes, I think it was probably the intent.

Q. All right. A. I'd like to have seen that happen.

Q. Was it not the—do you know whether it was the intention of the officials at First National Bank of Atlanta that this be so? A. Yes, I think we formally made petition to do so and were objected to.

Q. Are there any other banks in DeKalb or Fulton Counties where this was the case? A. First National Bank of Tucker.

Q. Do you enjoy any kind of relationship today with First National Bank of Tucker? A. Yes, we do.

Q. How would you describe that relationship? A. Correspondent bank relationship.

Q. Would you classify the correspondent bank relationship, as you call it, with the First National Bank of Tucker and First National Bank of Glenwood, whatever name it has now, as being typical of the correspondent relationship you have with other banks? A. Well, as far as we would offer them service-wise, [138] yes. I don't consider them, well, typical, because of the market they serve. In other words, a bank in metropolitan Atlanta is going to operate a lot different than a bank in south Georgia.

Q. Because they're in metropolitan Atlanta, they may differ from other correspondent relationships? A. Yes.

Q. Is the relationship you enjoy with those two banks in metropolitan Atlanta similar to correspondent relationships you have with your other ordinary correspondent relationships elsewhere in metro Atlanta? A. Yes.

Q. Do you know who the president of First National Bank of Tucker now is? A. Yes.

Q. Do you know what his name is? A. Yes.

Q. Would you state it? A. Warren Jackson.

Q. Did he come to that bank from First National Bank of Atlanta? A. No.

Q. Do you know where he came from? A. Yes.

Q. Where? [139] A. Trust Company of Georgia.

Q. Do you know the president of First National Bank of Glenwood? A. Yes.

Q. Do you know what his name is? A. Yes.

Q. Will you state it? A. C. B. Harris.

Q. Did he come from First National Bank of Atlanta? A. No.

Q. Do you know where he came from? A. Yes.

Q. Where? A. Gainesville National, Gainesville, Georgia.

Q. To your knowledge, your own personal knowledge, has First National Bank of Tucker drawn personnel from First National Bank of Atlanta since Mr. Jackson came out there? A. Since he came? If he has, I don't know of anyone.

Q. Do you know whether it drew from First National Bank of Atlanta before he came? A. I'm not certain. We had some people formerly on our payroll who are out there. Whether or not these all returned to us or whether some remained, some people formerly our employees were in the employ of First National Bank of Tucker. I believe all of these were offered re-employment [140] with our bank. Whether or not all of them were re-employed, I don't know.

Q. I want to make sure I understood your answer there. You said some people who had been employed with First National Bank of Atlanta went to become employed by First National Bank of Tucker? A. That's right.

Q. Was this during the time you still hoped to merge them in? A. That's right.

Q. And you don't know whether they have all returned or not? A. No, I don't.

Q. Was a similar situation in effect out at the Glenwood Branch? A. Yes.

Q. Do you know whether they have all returned? A. I can't answer that with any authority either.

Q. Okay. Now, I just want to make this clear again. You say that the relationship you have with these two banks is substantially the same as the correspondent relationship of the other banks in metropolitan Atlanta?

Mr. Doyle: Object. It's repetitive, it's been asked and answered and it's leading.

Q. I wasn't leading. I'm asking if that's what he'd [141] said. All right. Do you happen to have any personal knowledge of where they obtained, these two banks I mentioned, obtained their other personnel from such as new presidents come in? A. Do you mean, for instance, who Warren Jackson has hired since he was president of First National Bank of Tucker?

Q. What his resources were. A. He brought one lady from Trust Company of Georgia to be cashier, a girl named Penny Jones. I have met her. I have not met anyone else out there. I don't know whether he has other staff.

Q. Would you consider it a sound correspondent relationship you have with his bank? A. We hope so right now.

Q. One minute, please. No further questions.

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Hodgson

Q. Was either the First National Bank of Glenwood as it has been known or First National Bank of Tucker, as it has been known, formed with the assistance of First National Bank of Atlanta? A. I'm sorry—I didn't——

Q. Was either the Glenwood or Tucker bank—— A. Were they formed with our assistance?

[142] Q. Yes. A. I think so, in the case of Tucker. Just offhand, I believe that bank must be eight, ten years. It may be a little bit older than that. I think when the people organized the First of Tucker, we were correspondent at that time. It was organized as an independent bank.

[143] Q. Was either one of them organized like the Doraville and South DeKalb banks? A. No, sir.

Q. We were talking about, as you say, with the purpose of being acquired by First National of Atlanta. A. No, sir, they were not, or Tucker was not. Glenwood, that's an old, old bank; I don't know what the history of Glenwood was.

The Court: Let me ask you a couple of questions. Correspondent services are paid for either by the maintenance of the correspondent account and the balances it had or by fees?

A. Yes, sir.

The Court: Can you give me an idea as to what the breakdown is?

A. Well, maybe I can give you an example of some of the things that we charge for when we charge fees. Pension and profit-sharing administration, our trust department has a fee schedule it charges on that. There's nothing magic about a bank; we do this for all sorts of enterprises; data-processing services, we charge fees for all of ours. This would be primarily what we charge fees for.

The Court: I take it the trust department, [144] for example, of either of the two banks, Glenwood or the Tucker bank that you just discussed, have trust departments?

A. I don't believe they operate actually trust departments. I am not even certain, in the case of Glenwood, I am pretty sure Tucker does not.

The Court: If they have trust business, do you handle it for them, or do they just refer you a customer who becomes a customer of the First National Bank?

A. Well, if you are saying if one of their customers comes into their bank requesting trust service——

The Court: That's right.

A. The case would be, if they desire, they might refer that to our bank.

The Court: What does happen?

A. That customer of the Glenwood Bank, say, as far as trust services are concerned, becomes a customer of our trust department.

The Court: Now, what was the situation with these two others, the Doraville and the other bank, how were they handled there?

A. I really can't answer that. I don't know how that was administered, but I can just guess it was [145] the same way.

The Court: I get the impression that as far as correspondent services are concerned, what you are saying is that you can, if there is enough demand and pay for it, perform for a correspondent any service that you can perform, that the First National Bank itself can perform; is that right, absent, say, some legal impediment, such as practicing law or something like that?

A. Well, I would say that we would perform anything we felt would be profitable to our correspondent bank endeavor.

The Court: Well, that must mean that there is a substantial profit then in the maintenance of correspondent balances; is that right?

A. I would say so.

The Court: Now, why is it that a correspondent bank would let you have its balances?

A. Well, they will let you have them if you are providing these services for them.

The Court: Apart from these services, would it be more profitable for the correspondent [146] bank itself to handle its own collections? I take it that is the primary reason for the correspondent account.

A. Well, of course, in most of the cases he has to have someone perform these for him.

The Court: Why?

A. Loan limitations. For instance, the First National Bank of Tucker has a $60,000 lending limit. That means he can't lend any more than $60,000 to any one particular customer; anyone who needs more than that doesn't obtain it from them.

The Court: If he doesn't have an account with the First, in order to handle the excess limitation, he keeps an account at the First in order to handle his check clearances, doesn't he, and collections?

A. No, Your Honor, I think you would find that——

The Court: Tell me why he does have that.

A. We would not be so receptive to buying his loans if it were not for the correspondent balance he has with us.

The Court: I understand that, but what is the mechanical reason for the account?

A. Well, mechanically, as far as the transfer of [147] funds, you need to have a correspondent relationship. But, when we make a loan to a customer, no matter who it is, it is sort of based on what sort of checking account balances he is going to keep with you, versus the rate on your loan, and if you are buying a——

The Court: Let me ask you why would another bank have a checking-account balance with you anyway, apart from the buying of correspondent services?

A. Okay. In some cases where you have a non-member of the Federal Reserve Bank, he has to have an account somewhere for a reserve account. And in that case——

The Court: Is that a typical situation?

A. Yes, there are many, I would say probably most of the small banks in the state of Georgia are non-members of the Federal Reserve system.

The Court: Is that true of the situation around Atlanta?

A. I would have to stop and count. We were talking about two national banks, and they are, by definition, members of the Fed system, if they are national-chartered. But, there are a number of banks in what I would call the metro area that are non-members [148] of the Federal Reserve system. Theoretically, a national bank could operate with only its Fed account, I presume.

The Court: So, then, the real purpose then of keeping the account at the big correspondent bank is simply a means of providing payment for these other services; the larger the account, the more service they can get?

A. I would say that is true.

The Court: Is there anything in the word "correspondent" that excludes the idea of an ownership or equity interest? I am not sure that I am—we have used words, "affiliated banks", "correspondent banks", "associate banks". If you use the word "correspondent" alone, that doesn't imply any ownership in it?

A. No, sir.

The Court: If you use the word "affiliate", what does that mean?

A. To me, that implies some ownership interest or intent to own.

The Court: How about "associate"?

A. Same thing really.

The Court: Same as affiliate?

A. In my mind that implies ownership or intent [149] to own.

The Court: Now, what is the money which is included in the correspondent bank account, is that simply money in transit, that is, they put in checks; they deposit it into their account in your bank, and it stays there until the money is collected, and then until the correspondent bank has some need to pay out money; is that what we call it?

A. I would say generally that is true. You have situations such as this, at the end of each business day a bank has checks drawn on any number of banks that it must collect, so he would bundle these into one deposit and send them to us for deposit, and we would credit his account. By the same token, he has activity the other way; the Federal Reserve Bank sends each day what we call a cash letter. In other words, the First National Bank of Tucker every day sends it to the First National Bank of Atlanta; the First National Bank of Atlanta every day receives a batch of items from the Federal Reserve drawn on our banks, and we must pay the Federal Reserve for that. So, we are talking about the flow of funds in a correspondent account. I would define it that way. The correspondent is depositing checks drawn on other banks for clearance, [150] and generally, drawing on that account to pay for what is presented to him by the Federal Reserve Bank.

The Court: Well, then, if that is the case, then that would indicate that all the free funds from the correspondent bank are in the correspondent bank account; is that right?

A. If you are describing "free funds" as, say, operating till or whatever, that plus what he has on hand in his vault. And in the case of a national bank, what he has on deposit in the Fed.

The Court: Well, now, do you have any system to require a minimum balance with respect to correspondent accounts?

A. Yes, we have an analysis system where we look at each correspondent bank account. We analyze the activity as far as numbers of items produced for the bank each month, number of checks paid, a resume of the loan participations that we worked for him, both ways, really a summary of all services and determine what those balances are worth to us, as far as investment, and then calculate whether or not we are earning a profit or creating a loss on the account. Communicate with the correspondent what balance level we would expect him to maintain in order for us to maintain the level of [151] services we are providing.

The Court: Thank you. You may step down.

Mr. Kinkaid: Your Honor, the plaintiff now calls Mr. Megar.

HERBERT LEONARD MEGAR,

being first duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Direct Examination

By Mr. Kinkaid

Q. Would you please state your full name. A. Herbert Leonard Megar.

Q. Where are you employed, Mr. Megar? A. Fulton National Bank.

Q. What is your position there? A. I am senior vice-president.

Q. How long have you been senior vice-president at Fulton? A. Approximately three years.

Q. Where were you employed before becoming senior vice-president? A. I was with the Fulton National Bank for eleven years. You want prior employment?

Q. Just very briefly, yes. A. Well, prior to that I was with the Curtis [152] National Bank in Miami Springs, Florida for three years. Prior to that, the Anniston National Bank in Anniston, Alabama for approximately five years; and, the Citizens & Southern National Bank in Atlanta for approximately thirteen years.

Q. Could you give us a brief idea of just what is involved in your particular area at Fulton National? A. Well, I have just recently taken over the supervision of our loan division, which generally covers all of the lending activities of our bank in all the departments that are engaged in lending.

Q. Mr. Megar, are you generally familiar with the correspondent services offered by Fulton National? A. Yes, I am.

Q. Do you know how Fulton National defines correspondent services? A. You mean—are you referring to this list that we have of various services?

Q. Well, first of all, I would just like to ask you if you, yourself, have any particular definition of what you mean by correspondent services. A. I don't know that I have got a well-thought-out definition, but I think, as a general statement, we do practically anything they ask us to do if they carry enough balances to pay for it, that is legal.

[153] Q. Could you list what you consider the major correspondent services offered by your bank? A. I think heading the list of major services would be check-clearing.

Q. Excuse me just a moment. You have a list up there? A. Yes.

Q. Let me show this to you; would this be a copy of the list that you have? A. Yes, this is a Xerox of it.

Mr. Kinkaid: Does Your Honor have any objection to this, sir?

The Court: Why don't you put it in as an exhibit; then we have got that much behind us.

The Clerk: This would be Government Exhibit 194.

By Mr. Kinkaid

Q. All right. Since we now have this as an exhibit, why don't we just go through and perhaps you could just tell us briefly something about each one of these. You want to make sure that if whatever——

The Court: Why don't you get him to say period. Have you heard the previous two witnesses?

[154] A. I have only heard a part of the two, Your Honor.

The Court: Well, it would be more helpful, rather than confusing the Court, rather than getting slight differences between the same services, where I'm sure I can't recall the differences, if there are any substantial differences in what the Fulton considers under these headings, I would like to have that. Rather than going back over, you know, substantially the same identification or definition.

With respect to the items before that, do the services which the Fulton performs under those various headings correspond very closely or very generally to what the First National performs with respect to the same services?

A. I would assume so, but I would be glad to expand on any of them.

Mr. Kinkaid: Your Honor, may I suggest I think that some of these—the terms look very similar to the terms we have already heard from Mr. Padgett and Mr. Farr.

The Court: We have got transfer of [155] funds; I have heard that twice; coins and currency shipments; I understand that. Handling of collection items, participation in excess loans, investment counseling, safekeeping. I have heard that from the Trust Company, exchange of credit information, data processing, personnel training, consultation.

[156] Q. Now, some of these, Your Honor, I think——

The Court: Why don't we do this, I don't think this is an area where we need leading questions, I don't think it's critical. If you know of some differences, I don't mean substantial or big, but of some that would be significant differences, why don't you bring them out with respect to these items rather than let's going through the list again.

Mr. Kinkaid: I wasn't proposing to go through the entire list. I think you're right, but I haven't exactly sat down and analyzed the three banks to see if there were any significant differences.

The Court: Go ahead.

Mr. Kinkaid: Why don't we go through a few of these that could be more judgment things than something like a check collection, which we have pretty well cleared up, I hope.

Why don't you just tell us briefly what exchange of credit information means to Fulton National to see if there's any difference than what we have already here.

The Witness: This is a service in the context here, of service offered to the correspondent banks. They may have occasion to inquire about an out-of-town business and they may call on us as their correspondent to develop that ground information for them, which we do [157] as a part of our service to them. This would occur in cases of new plants and new businesses moving into an area where our correspondent serves people that they don't know and haven't dealt with before.

Q. In those situations, would anyone from Fulton call on the account with someone from the correspondent bank? A. This has been done, but generally it's more of an inquiry arrangement.

Q. Now, the item that's marked personnel training in specialized areas and placement of personnel, could you tell us what that involves from the standpoint of Fulton National? A. Well, from time to time, some of our correspondents may ask us to teach their personnel how we handle a particular type of loan or how we handle a particular type of transaction. In those instances we have actually brought them, allowed them to come into our bank and visit, spend time in the departments in which they have an interest. The placement of personnel is generally about the same as, I believe, the previous witness testified. If we hear about a job opening, we hear it from someone who is looking for a job, and we sort of tell one about the other.

Q. Now, would you go over with us the next item, the consultation on operation, procedures and forms? A. We are frequently, in performing data processing services, particularly we are frequently asked by our [158] correspondents to give them advice on how to handle this type of transaction or that type, and we in the data processing end of it actually send personnel to their bank to help install systems and to help monitor systems and to see that proper procedures are being carried out to make the system effective and useful, too.

Q. So far as trust services are concerned, if a customer of a correspondent bank of yours wishes to obtain trust services, would he remain a customer of the correspondent bank as to other things while becoming a trust customer of your bank? A. Yes, this would be in the correspondent's area where the correspondent bank did not have trust powers and wanted to accommodate this customer and asks us to get into the picture to assist them.

Q. Where does the referral of account fit in here, is that what you described just a few moments ago on the National? A. This would probably be a situation where perhaps an Atlanta account was opening a branch in a town where one of our correspondent banks was located and we would recommend our correspondent and put them in touch with the proper people to enable them to solicit the account.

Q. Have you heard the discussion of the Federal funds position taken by Trust Company and/or First National? [159] A. I heard some reference to it in the last witness' testimony.

Q. Does Fulton National take a position, if that's the right word, in the Federal funds market? A. Yes, we make a market in Federal funds daily for our correspondent banks. We buy from them any funds which they wish to sell us and we either use the funds in our own possession or we sell them in the national market.

Q. With respect to Master Charge, you have here, in parens, agent. First of all, would you tell us what that means? In other words, the term, agent. A. The Master Charge program is set up so that a bank can issue a Master Charge card and it can own and retain the receivables that were generated by the card and all the profits and revenues from that, and the losses from that that may accrue to that operation, or they may become an agent bank in which case the correspondent bank would issue its card with its name on it. But, there the Fulton would buy the receivables and run the credit risk and maintain those as their own accounts. This would be an option of the correspondent bank. In the case of an agent bank, the correspondent would only get a certain portion of these fees and not the total interest accruing from those, the charge card usage.

Q. Does your bank perform any payroll accounting for any of its correspondent banks or any of their customers? [160] A. Yes, we do, some of both.

Q. Now, to your knowledge, what banks, other than banks headquartered in Atlanta, are presently offering correspondent services to banks located in Atlanta? A. I think banks in Birmingham are offering services to some Georgia metropolitan area banks, perhaps some in Chattanooga, Tennessee. Those are the only two, well, that I can specifically recall.

The Court: What kind of services do they offer, I mean, a full gamut of the services?

The Witness: No, sir, it would not be quite as extensive because of the distance involved.

The Court: What is it, loan override?

The Witness: Loan override. One of the banks in Birmingham is offering a program to buy supplies at a discount, some data processing, but they couldn't offer——

The Court: Would it be principally fee services?

The Witness: Yes, sir, I think that's right, except that in many cases they can interchange fees from balances.

The Court: Is it feasible for a bank to have a principal correspondent bank at a distance of 120, 150 miles?

The Witness: Well, now, in this context, are we speaking of small banks in metropolitan Atlanta?

[161] The Court: Yes, start with them.

The Witness: Yes, sir, it's possible, but it's not very practical to do a full service job that far away because, especially in check clearing, checks that are generated in this area have to wind up in the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta if they are Georgia checks.

The Court: That was the point I was getting at, paying through, it through balances generally, it would seem to me that you're sort of going around the horn to maintain your account in Birmingham or Chattanooga.

The Witness: That's correct, sir.

Mr. Kinkaid: We have no further questions.

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Doyle

Q. How frequently would you say that Fulton is asked to help a correspondent find new management, say, president? A. This is a real difficult thing to answer, three or four times a year, two or three times a year, something. We may go six months and not even be asked. It's not a daily or weekly occurrence.

Q. And on those occasions, do you actively go out and beat the bushes looking for somebody at that bank? A. Usually, no.

Q. You cross-reference these, if you have them in your file? [162] A. That's correct.

Q. On those occasions, do you look inside Fulton in the management ranks for a bright young man who is on the go to supply to them? A. No, sir.

Q. Now, when a correspondent bank which is being organized, do you offer, or when a new bank is being organized and they come to you for advice and the rest, do you offer advice to them on the selection of stockholders, who they should sell their stock to? A. No.

Q. Do you sell a significant amount of the stock, or place a significant amount of this stock of this correspondent, say, a majority of the stock with your officers and employees? A. No.

Q. In the normal instance, do the directors come to those banks because of the relationship that is going to exist with the Fulton? A. No.

[163] Q. Do you, as a correspondent banker at Fulton, at your initiative, provide continuous management review and advice to the correspondent bank? A. No.

Q. When Fulton is taking a large participation in dollar amount on a loan that is originated by the correspondent, do you generally want to take an active part in setting the terms and conditions of the loan? A. It would depend on the size of the loan in relationship to the size of the bank that is offering the loan to us, in their own expertise in the field and——

Q. Would it generally follow that the larger the loan, the greater your interest in terms and conditions of repayment, collateral and that sort of thing? A. Right, that's correct.

Q. Do you presently sell any umbrella pension and profit-sharing plan to correspondent banks? A. No.

Q. Now, you have had experience in the Atlanta areas as a banker for some time, Mr. Megar. Are you familiar with the C&S five-percenter correspondent associate that is involved in this lawsuit? A. Generally, yes.

Q. In your view, is that relationship the same [164] as the normal correspondent relationship? A. No.

Q. Would you liken it more to a franchise situation, where they have our name? A. Yes.

Q. And there is a certain amount of responsibility that follows that name? A. That's right.

Q. Do you look at a five-percenter, C&S five-percenter from a competitive standpoint any differently from your vantage point over at the Fulton, than if it were a C&S branch? A. No. In fact, we have to stop and think, I suppose, which is which.

Q. In your experience, is that the public impression as well? A. Yes.

Q. So long as the banks have the C&S name and the C&S people, do you see, from your vantage point at the Fulton, that there will be any competitive effects from merging those banks? A. No, not at the present structure of it.

Q. Do you see any benefit to the public if these banks were required to be independent of C&S? A. No, I cannot.

[165] Q. Do you have any views about problems of management or capital that independent banks will have in this area?

Mr. Kinkaid: Your Honor, this I have to question, this line. It's already gone about 3,000 miles beyond any of the subject matter which we briefly covered with Mr. Megar. I think pretty soon—I think we have already even had a touch of psychological examination here as to what Mr. Megar knows about the public view of the C&S five-percent banks. This is about as far as we can really go here.

Mr. Doyle: Well, if the Court please, Mr. Megar is talking about types and kinds of correspondent relationships.

The Court: I know, but you are talking about competitive effects.

Mr. Doyle: Beg your pardon, sir?

The Court: You were talking about competitive effects of merger, I thought. That was the significance of the last answer I got.

Mr. Doyle: Well, sir, I think competitive effects come from normal correspondent relationships, and of course, our point, that [166] different competitive effects come from these and——

Mr. Kinkaid: Mr. Megar didn't talk about correspondent relationships. All he talked about were the correspondent services that his bank sells to correspondent banks, period.

The Court: Well, I will direct counsel to remain—keep the cross within the scope of the direct. If he wants to go into a new area, you may recall this witness at the time of your direct case.

Mr. Doyle: If the Court please, on the plaintiff's summary of the witnesses it was going to call and subject matters they were going to testify to, Mr. Megar was also generally suggested for the subject matter of the geographic areas in which banks compete, and I think there was something akin to that on the—I will read it precisely.

The Court: I still maintain that you must keep your cross within the direct. If there is an area that counsel does not cover with this witness, and it is essential to your case, you would have the privilege of recalling this witness at the proper time.

[167] By Mr. Doyle

Q. Mr. Megar, have you, at Fulton, taken on any new correspondent banks in Fulton and DeKalb Counties since 1970, when the branching law changed? A. I am not sure that we have. The latest one that I can recall we took on was the Stone Mountain situation, and I don't know exactly whether that fell within '70 or prior, before or after.

Q. With branch banking countywide at this time in the state of Georgia, what effect on the Fulton does location of a correspondent bank have on Fulton's decision as to the location of the branch? A. Would you mind rephrasing that, please?

Q. Yes, sir.

What effect does the location of the correspondent of Fulton have on Fulton's decision as to the location of a branch? Does it have an effect? Does it enter into your decision-making at all? A. Yes, sir, it is bound to sooner or later. Until the banking law changed, permitting countywide branch banking, Fulton had its branches solely within the city of Atlanta and the city of Decatur. With this change in the banking law, we now can branch into Fulton and DeKalb Counties and the outlying areas where we have correspondent banks. Thus far, we have not [168] chosen to put branches in direct competition with correspondents, and this decision, sooner or later, may need to be made. And it, of course, would not be an easy one to make.

Q. I suppose the difficulty is obvious, but would you just elaborate on it enough so that it is on the record and we know what we are talking about? A. Well, we have correspondent banks where we do data processing. We maintain account balances, we have access to the confidential information generated by those banks and serving their customers. And if we would put a branch directly across the street from those banks, which we might be permitted to do under the law, then, we would have a possible ethical problem of do we continue to be their correspondent and at the same time compete with them for their own customers?

Q. In your business as a corporate banker, does the Fulton provide periodic internal audit for its banks? A. No, sir.

Q. For its correspondent banks? A. No, we do not.

Q. Does the Fulton appoint a senior officer of the Fulton to serve in a regular capacity as an advisory director on the boards of the banks? [169] A. No.

Q. Do you offer blanket insurance coverage to the group of your correspondent banks, that would include fidelity coverage, safety-deposit coverage, liability? A. No.

Q. Do you offer your correspondent banks participation in the Fulton's own pension and profit-sharing plans? A. No.

Q. Do you provide at Fulton a pool of personnel which is available to meet the demands caused by peak periods of work or illnesses and the like of your bank correspondent? A. No, we don't.

Q. Do you receive, on a regular sort of basis from your correspondent banks, budget and performance projections, where they are going and where they expect to go? A. No, not on a regular basis.

Q. Do you on a regular basis—then, it follows that you do not on a regular basis sit down and review performance against the projections? A. That's correct.

Q. Do you provide standardized general-ledger accounting systems to your correspondent banks? [170] A. No, not on—no.

Q. On a regular sort of basis, do you provide advices as to changes in law, such as wage-price, Regs. Z and that sort of thing, in the same way as you do for your branch managers? A. No.

Q. Do you prepare income-tax returns for your correspondents? A. No.

Q. Do any of your correspondents—do you allow them to use your name or corporate identification or logo? A. No.

Q. On a regular basis, do the correspondent employees and officers come to Fulton's training schools and programs which you run internally for your own employees and officers? A. Not on a regular basis, no.

Q. I suppose it goes without saying, Mr. Megar, but am I correct in assuming that as to all of the services that you offer, not all of them are accepted by all of your correspondents? A. That's correct.

Q. And it is at their initiative as to which ones they take? [171] A. That's correct.

Q. Very rarely do you offer them advice independent of what is asked of you? A. That's correct.

Mr. Doyle: All right, sir. That's all I have on cross.

Mr. Kinkaid: Your Honor, I would first sort of like to do a little house-cleaning, and by a motion to strike, get rid of the dialog prior to my objection that went beyond the scope. I guess we would have to go back when the transcript is available and see what portions——

The Court: I would overrule it anyway, so go ahead.

Redirect Examination

By Mr. Kinkaid

Q. In connection with competing directly with your correspondent banks, if I understood your discussion of that correctly, it seems to come primarily in the data-processing field; am I correct on that? A. Well, that's correct, and yet it comes—really covers the whole scope. It is hard to be a competitor of your customer and still maintain the customer relationship that is sort of fundamental.

[172] The Court: The intensity of that problem varies in proportion to the magnitude of the balance?

A. Yes, sir, that's correct, absolutely.

Q. Have you, with any of your correspondents, or did you indicate that you do not compete directly with any of your correspondents? A. We have not yet chosen to put new branches in close proximity to our correspondent banks, except in one particular instance. We have a branch in the Stone Mountain industrial area, which we had applied for prior to the C&S, Stone Mountain, becoming a correspondent of ours. They knew that.

Q. I think you indicated that in answer to a question about being routinely presented with projections or budgets from correspondent banks, and I think, if I recall correctly, your answer was not on a regular basis. Does that mean that you get such projections on an irregular basis or less than a regular basis? A. When we finance the controlling stock of a small bank, we sometimes, in evaluating our collateral, we ask for operating statements and earnings projections. But, it is usually in every instance only when a loan is involved on the stock of that bank.

Q. By that, do you mean that you have lent money [173] to individuals to purchase the stock and the stock is pledged as collateral; is that it? A. Right.

Q. Likewise, in reference to the training classes or seminars, I think the question may have been, that you indicated they were not attended by correspondent people on a regular basis. Does that, again, indicate that these are attended on an irregular basis? A. Well, I was trying to—what I was really thinking of is my previous testimony where we had personnel come in for specialized instruction on a particular thing. This would not necessarily be a training class, although it might, in a given area. But, more generally, it is individualized-type instruction. But, this is only when the correspondent asks us to do it for a specific person or a specific group of people.

Mr. Kinkaid: No further questions, Your Honor. Thank you very much, Mr. Megar.

The Court: All right, you may step down.

Mr. Hodgson: May we have just two minutes, excuse me, Your Honor; before the witness is excused, may we have just two minutes?

[174] The Court: Oh, sure. Mr. Megar, would you wait just a minute?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Doyle: No further questions, Your Honor.

The Court: All right, you may step down.

[175] Mr. Kinkaid: Your Honor, I have just a slight problem. It's not really a problem. This witness Mr. Meager will conclude sort of a section of our presentation. The next witness will be an entirely different, quite a different area and it's going to take, certainly a lot more time. I believe, both on direct and on cross than we have between now and 5 o'clock.

The Court: I will leave it up to you. All I'm going to keep you to, is a Wednesday, 5:00 P. M. closing.

Mr. Kinkaid: We will keep to that.

The Court: We will stand and recess, then, until 10 o'clock tomorrow.

(Whereupon, court was recessed at 4:15 o'clock P. M. to reconvene at 10:00 o'clock A. M. Tuesday, September 26, 1972.)

[177] The Court: Is everyone ready to proceed?

Mr. Kinkaid: Good morning, Your Honor. Before we start with our first witness, there was a couple of remarks we would like to address with respect to some of our exhibits.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Kinkaid: Mr. Frisbie will make those remarks because he is more familiar with the mechanical things than I am.

Mr. Frisbie: Your Honor, the defendants filed their objections to our documents yesterday, and the plaintiff has done likewise, and both are skeletal objections giving the basic grounds for objection. There has been some discussion between the plaintiff and the defendant as to plaintiff's Exhibits 42 through 75, and 76 through 101.

Now, the first are worksheets used by Dr. Scogstad, our economic expert, wherein he transferred some data from the printouts, which were submitted by the various banks in Fulton and DeKalb Counties in response to our subpoena.

These worksheets were submitted mainly to allow defendants the opportunity to check the accuracy of his figures. Now, these have not been objected to as far as the admissibility is [178] concerned, but defendants have noted in their statements of objections that the charts compare the IPC demand deposits for all the other banks in the Atlanta area with total demand deposits for the C&S National Bank and each of the defendants, and C&S DeKalb.

And, to that extent, they have noted that they are inaccurate. Okay. The same thought would have to apply to Government Exhibits 76 through 101, since these figures were also taken from the same printouts. Now, the parties have now agreed that the figures for C&S and each of the defendants and C&S DeKalb are reasonable approximations of the IPC demand deposits for the defendant banks, and for C&S DeKalb for mid-year 1972. And, I bring this up now just to remove any cloud that might have appeared or might have been raised as to the accuracy of those figures, and whether they tend to show what the title of each chart states that they purport to show.

The Court: Is that a correct statement?

Mr. Doyle: Yes, sir, I think so.

The Court: Thank you.

Mr. Frisbie: The Government would like to call as its first witness for today [179] Mr. J. Angus Parker.

[180] Whereupon,

JAMES A. PARKER,

was called as a witness by and on behalf of the Government, and having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination

By Mr. Frisbie

Q. Good morning.

Mr. Parker, would you state your full name, please? A. James Angus Parker.

Q. And what is your present occupation? A. Vice President, Peoples Bank, Lithonia.

Q. How long have you been employed in that position? A. Eleven months.

Q. Where did you receive your initial training in banking? A. It would be with C&S, LaGrange.

Q. And when did you start employment with the C&S Bank in LaGrange? A. 1952.

Q. Where did you go from that position? A. From LaGrange, I came to C&S DeKalb, Avondale.

[181] Q. And what position did you hold at Avondale? A. Assistant Cashier-Assistant Vice President.

Q. How long did you stay at C&S DeKalb? A. Four and a half years.

Q. When you left C&S DeKalb, where did you go? A. I went to Stone Mountain.

Q. What was the name of the bank when you started your employment? A. Bank of Stone Mountain.

Q. Could you tell us when the name of the bank changed? A. It changed March 15th, 1966.

Q. So that would have been one month after you came to Stone Mountain? A. Right.

Q. And what was your position at the C&S Bank of Stone Mountain? A. President.

Q. How did you learn that there was to be an opening at the C&S Bank of Stone Mountain? A. Mr. Starks and Mr. Hall talked with me in the fall of 1965 in regards to going to Stone Mountain for a month while Mr. Gibson was in the hospital and then to check further, further about the possibility of going there permanent.

[182] Q. Would you identify Mr. Gibson, please? A. Mr. Gibson was the President of the bank at that time. He came with the bank in 1959.

Q. And who was Mr. Starks that you referred to? A. Mr. Howard Starks was with the C&S branch supervision.

Q. And who was Mr. Hall that you referred to? A. Mr. Hall was with C&S as the Comptroller and maybe later first Vice President.

Q. And you went out there for this temporary period while the President was ill. When did you next learn that there was an opening for the Presidency of that bank? A. February, first of February.

Q. And who contacted you at that time? A. Mr. Starks and Mr. Hall had a meeting with the Board in my presence.

Q. Which board? A. The Board of the Bank of Stone Mountain.

Q. Did Mr. Hall and Mr. Starks tell you anything at that time about the relationship of the Bank of Stone Mountain and C&S Bank? A. Not really, it was a known factor that it was a five per cent bank.

Q. Are you aware of the term correspondent [183] associate? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was the Bank of Stone Mountain referred to as a correspondent associate? A. Yes.

Q. When you went to—prior to the time you assumed the job as President of the Bank of Stone Mountain, were you given any instructions by anyone at C&S as to what your functions would be at that bank? A. It seemed that the earnings of the bank were not sufficient to pay the cost of the new building that they had just gotten into, maybe in the middle of '65, and my job was to go out and see if we couldn't get the earnings up.

Q. Were you given verbally any instructions on what you should do? A. Nothing other than just that statement.

Q. Who made that statement to you? A. Mr. Hall and Mr. Starks.

Q. Both of them did? A. Right.

Q. And this was all the instructions you were given; is that correct? A. Uh huh (indicating the affirmative).

[184] Q. You identified that Mr. Walt Gibson was the president before you? A. Yes.

Q. Did you personally know Mr. Gibson? A. Yes.

Q. Do you know what his prior banking experience was, his immediate prior banking experience? A. I got acquainted with Mr. Gibson after he went to Stone Mountain; I didn't know him when he was supposed to work at C&S, maybe at Tenth Street.

Q. Do you know who was the president before Mr. Gibson? A. Mr. Arthur Drew.

Q. Are you personally acquainted with Mr. Arthur Drew? A. Yes.

Q. Do you know what his prior banking experience was? A. Not really, just that he had worked for C&S and was retired.

Q. Do you know when the Bank of Stone Mountain opened for business? A. In July of '57.

Q. And was it Mr. Drew that was the first president at that time? [185] A. Yes.

Q. Did Mr. Drew keep any position in the bank when he stepped down from the presidency? A. He stayed on the board.

Q. Was he a full director? A. Yes.

Q. Or an advisory director? A. Full director.

Q. When you arrived at the bank, how many officers were at the bank? A. Two.

Q. Two officers. Who were these officers? A. Bob Maughon and myself.

Q. Do you know Mr. Maughon's prior banking experience? A. Yes.

Q. What was it? A. With C&S, also with the Bank America and Valley National, Phoenix.

Q. Do you know what his immediate prior banking experience was prior to going to Stone Mountain? A. In the area of maybe trust department.

Q. I mean for which bank? A. For the C&S.

Q. Mr. Parker, did you ever have occasion to [186] hire any new personnel while you were president of that bank? A. Yes.

Q. Did any of these personnel subsequently become officers? A. Eventually.

Q. Who were these persons? A. The one that—the only one that became an officer was Gene Lockeridge.

Q. And what was his prior banking experience? A. With the C&S.

Q. Was Mr. Lockeridge employed by the Bank of Stone Mountain at the time you came? A. No.

Q. How did you acquire Mr. Lockeridge in your employment? A. From the C&S.

Q. From the C&S Bank. Did you ever have occasion to hire employees for full time replacements? A. Yes.

Q. Where did you get replacements for your emplc ees or additions to your employees? A. From most any source that was available.

Q. Where did you usually go to, was there any particular place that you usually went to to seek [187] replacements for your personnel? A. In the area of female, it was more or less hired from the local area. Men, we tried to go to C&S.

Q. And who did you contact at C&S about this? A. It would be the ones that would be in supervision, branch supervision.

Q. Do you have any idea how many men personnel you obtained from C&S? A. Two.

Q. Two. How many men did you hire total? A. Three.

Q. Now, would this have been during the period of time that you were associated with the C&S National Bank that you hired three personnel, three men personnel? A. No, two, and then the third one came after the association.

Q. All right. So you hired two men personnel and both came from C&S during the period you were associated with C&S. A. Right.

Q. Then did you ever have occasion to have a need for temporary help, personnel help? A. Yes.

Q. Where did you obtain any temporary help? [188] A. Mostly local.

Q. Mostly local. Did you ever get any temporary help from the C&S National Bank? A. Not until after the association, and that was in the area of maybe retired C&S folks that would maybe be working part time.

Q. Did you go to C&S National Bank? A. No, they came to us.

Q. Mr. Parker, did your officers, or your employees, any of them, receive any training to develop any of their particular skills in banking while they were employed at your bank? A. Yes.

Q. Where did they receive this training? A. It would be training through C&S or schools that would be provided.

Q. Did the C&S holding company own any of your bank's stock? A. Yes.

Q. Do you know when this was bought? A. In '59.

Q. Who were your correspondents, did you have any correspondent banks while you were at the C&S Bank of Stone Mountain? A. C&S National.

[189] Q. Were they your sole correspondent? A. They were until C&S DeKalb became a correspondent in maybe 1970, latter part of '69.

Q. And what function did C&S DeKalb play in your correspondent relationship? A. It was maybe—I don't—I don't fully know.

Q. Does the term depository bank have any particular meaning to you? A. Yes.

Q. Would you explain to the court what a depository bank is. A. It would be the bank that—our bank or the bank that we would be the correspondent bank that would be using to clear our items through their system using their processing sources.

Q. Who were your depository banks? A. It would be C&S National.

Q. Was that your sole depository bank? A. Yes.

Q. Does the term depository bank have anything to do with keeping money on hand at that bank? A. Yes.

[190] Q. Could you explain that? A. It would be in the work that they do for us. There should be a compensating balance carried with the bank to enable them to process and at least break even on the job that they would be doing for you.

Q. Did the Bank of Stone Mountain or did the C&S Bank of Stone Mountain have a pension and profit sharing plan while you were President? A. Yes.

Q. Who administered this plan? A. The C&S National.

Q. Did you have any health, accident or disability plans for your employees? A. Yes.

Q. And who administered these plans? A. C&S National.

Q. Did your bank receive any publications from C&S National? A. Yes.

Q. What publications would these be? A. Be operating guides, bulletins and such.

Q. Okay. In terms of employee publications, did you receive any of these? A. Meaning personal?

Q. Did you receive any form of newspapers or—— [191] A. Oh, it would be—it would be the monthly newspaper that we would circulate among the system.

Q. Did you regularly and systematically receive this newspaper? A. Right.

Q. Did your employees have access to Camp C-S-ta? A. Yes.

Q. Do your employees have C&S check cashing privileges? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did your employees have that C&S Bank Club privileges? A. Right.

Q. Was your bank ever given any manuals or guides that were published or were published by C&S? A. Yes.

Q. I would like to show you a copy of what has been marked Defendants' Exhibit 270 and ask if you can identify this? A. Yes.

Q. What is that, Mr. Parker? A. Consumer Credit operating guide.

Q. Would you look at that one more time and see if that is the correct title for those volumes?

Now, I must say that the covers on there are [192] not the original covers as we understand it. They are covers that we have put on there, they are copies, they are our copies, the plaintiff's copies. A. This is Consumer Credit operating guide and this one is the general operating guide.

Q. Mr. Parker, I would like to show you what has been marked as Defendants' Exhibit 311 and see if you can identify that? A. Yes.

Q. Could you tell the Court what that is? A. It would be Operating Bulletins that would be circulated among the banks.

Q. Okay. You can put those down for a moment. Now since I do not have the original of the general operating guides there, I must ask you to explain it in a little bit—was the general operating guide a loose-leaf type manual that you could add pages to and take pages out of as changes occurred? A. Yes.

Q. Did you regularly and systematically receive changes or additions to these manuals in front of you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was correspondence in the form of changes or additions to these manuals addressed to your bank by name? A. Yes.

[193] Q. In the addressee portion of the correspondence, did it say——

Mr. Hodgson: If Your Honor please, he's leading the witness very precisely. I object to the form of the question.

The Court: All right, sustained.

Q. Could you explain how these were addressed to you? A. It would be addressed in the envelope that would come in, but it would be addressed to the President affiliates and President of the correspondent associates.

Q. Now the letter that you described, was that on the envelope that came in or on the document itself? A. On the document.

Q. Was this correspondence that came to you always addressed to you the way you described it, the latter part? A. Mostly, most of the time.

Q. When it was not most of the time, how did it—how did you receive it? A. It would maybe have President of associate correspondent left off.

Q. Would there be anything added to the document to show that you should be on the distribution list? A. No.

Q. Why would you get a copy of this document, [194] then? A. I don't know.

Q. Mr. Parker, did your bank, when it was a C&S Bank of Stone Mountain, do any of its advertising on its own? A. Not too much.

Q. Why did you not advertise your bank? A. We were part of an advertising program that would be C&S Banks in Georgia. We would use the type advertising material in the statement and such that would indicate C&S Banks in Georgia.

Q. All right. Did you feel while you were President of that bank, that your bank benefited from the use of this name? A. Yes.

Q. Did C&S National Bank do any of your work on their computers? A. Yes.

Q. What were some of the things that were on the computer that your bank had? A. It would be the DDA or savings installment loans, payroll processing.

Q. Any others? A. We handled the C&S charge card.

Q. Could you explain what DDA stands for? [195] A. It would be the demand deposits that they would process for us, checking accounts.

Q. Are you familiar with the term proof and transit work, the terms? A. Yes.

Q. What is proof and transit work? A. It would be work that would be between say our bank and C&S National in the processing of our work for us that would be run through our proof machines and then would come back from them the following morning, the work that they would do for us.

[196] Q. So who did your proof and transit work for your bank? A. We handled it, as far as the proof operator on the scene, but it was sent downtown for proof. Well, not for proof, but for finalization of the process.

Q. Did your bank ever have any general liability insurance? A. Yes.

Q. Did your bank ever have any fire insurance? A. Yes.

Q. Did your bank—was it a participant in a blanket bond? A. Right.

Q. Who did you contact about paying for each of these services? A. It handled through the comptroller department; that would be a blanket or umbrella type coverage.

Q. When you say the comptroller's department, which comptroller's department are you referring to? A. C&S.

Q. Mr. Parker, can you tell me, in the context of banking, what is a racehorse sheet? A. That was referred to on a sheet that would have each branch or each bank listed, and in that would [197] include the participation of loans that each one had, as far as for this particular month. Then, the ratio that they arrived at investments on the deposits that you had available to how you invested them in loans and return on them, would have a ratio there as to how each bank was doing.

Q. How many banks were listed on this racehorse sheet? A. Oh, it could be maybe seventy banks.

Q. And you stated that they were banks and—— A. Branches.

Q. Banks and branches. Are banks and branches—first of all, branches of what bank? A. Of the C&S.

Q. And when you say banks, can you give me an idea of what banks were covered on that list? A. It would be banks throughout the state that would be listed, the five-percenters as well as the affiliates.

Q. Was the Chamblee National Bank on that list? A. Yes.

Q. Was the Citizens National Bank of Sandy Springs on that list? A. Right.

Q. Was the C&S Bank of Tucker on that list? [198] A. Yes.

Q. And the Bank of Stone Mountain was on that list? A. Yes.

Q. C&S Bank of Stone Mountain. Did you say approximately how many banks were on that list? A. Oh, around seventy.

Q. Seventy. Did you say that this was a statewide listing? A. Yes.

Q. When you spoke about a ratio, can you tell me what the ratio was your bank enjoyed at the time you became president? A. Ratio was around .80.

Q. .80. And what would be—what was generally considered as an acceptable or an average ratio? A. One Hundred, 1.0 should be the minimum.

Q. I see. On the average for the period from 1966 to 1970, can you tell this Court how your bank compared with the other banks on that list? A. Down through the years there it would be maybe 1.20, 1.40, but the last—in the middle of '70 it was 2.58.

Q. Is 2.58 high or unusual? A. One of the, I say, within the top five.

Q. Did your bank ever attain the top listing, [199] the top bank? A. At times.

Q. At times. Would you say generally that your bank was usually in the top quarter, or bottom quarter, or middle, or half or where? A. It would be in the—usually in the first five.

Q. Usually in the first five? A. First five.

Q. Places out of seventy? A. Uh-huh, right.

Q. Were there any other banks located in Fulton or DeKalb County that also ranked high on this list? A. Yes, Chamblee, Tucker, they would usually be, one or the other, in first. I remembered them because of their position that they would usually take.

Q. Had you ever had occasion for your bank to consider opening a branch office? A. Yes.

Q. Your board of directors ever vote on this? A. This was before the countywide branch banking bill was passed. I noticed that the city limit of Stone Mountain Bank maybe twenty-five years ago had an addition to the city, and in checking this portion that had been annexed, was near Memorial Drive, and in [200] acquiring a piece of property maybe that would touch this newly annexed portion could be further annexed to the city, and then maybe have a branch out on Memorial Drive that would give us some access to the public. Because we were back behind the city, and at the foot of the mountain, not in view of any traffic that would be—maybe a thoroughfare. In finding this piece of property, it was for sale, and I talked to my board about purchasing it. And they agreed after a couple of chats with them to go ahead and purchase this piece of property. And that was in—maybe in the latter part of '68, I think it was. The property was closed in May of the following year.

Q. Okay. I think my question was, did your board vote on whether to—I think the question was open a branch. Okay, I will rephrase it. Did your board vote on acquiring property for a branch? A. Yes.

Q. And what was the result of that vote? A. The property was acquired. It took a few months because Adair's was mixed in with the property, so we worked on it for maybe three or four months and got it to a point of closing in May of that year.

Q. Did your bank subsequently buy this property? A. The C&S National bought the property for [201] us, for it to be used as a future branch site.

Q. Can you explain how this happened to come about that your bank selected a piece of property and C&S National bought it? A. C&S offered to buy this piece of property and hold it for us, to keep us from having to use the money from what the bank there was operating on, which would be separate.

[202] Q. When you say C&S offered, who was this at C&S that you talked to about this? A. Mr. McIntyre.

Q. Who is Mr. McIntyre? A. He was in branch supervision.

Q. Do you know his first name? A. John.

Q. John McIntyre. Did you ever attend any meetings that were held at the C&S National Bank, Mr. Parker? A. Yes.

Q. Can you tell me what type of meetings you attended? A. It would be Wednesday morning meetings, would be Mr. Lane's meeting and then a credit meeting or credit review meeting afterwards.

Q. Was this held every Wednesday? A. Yes.

Q. Wasn't this your day off? A. Yes.

Q. Did any of the other correspondent associate Presidents attend these meetings? A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember seeing Mr. Hazelrig at any time at these meetings? [203] A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember seeing Mr. Connally? A. Yes.

Q. Or Mr. Hugh Lane? A. Yes.

Q. Or Mr. Fortuna? A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Harris? A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Berry? A. Yes.

Q. Did you attend any other meetings at C&S? A. I would be subject to attending other meetings, sometimes we would have a Saturday meeting which would be maybe not regularly, but called, maybe.

Q. Mr. Parker, do you know of any meetings that were sponsored or called by C&S that other correspondent associates were invited to that you weren't? A. No.

Q. Did you participate in the Goal Post Review Program? A. Yes.

Q. Can you explain to the Court briefly what the Goal Post Review Program is? A. This would be a performance maybe that you would [204] project yourself for the bank in deposits, loan volume, wills, just a number of things that you would project for a quarter at a time. This would be for the year. It would be reviewed quarterly.

Q. These projections that you made, did you write them down on a piece of paper? A. Yes.

Q. Where did you get this paper from? A. From branch supervision.

Q. And you said that this was reviewed. Who did you review these projections with? A. Branch supervision.

Q. Did the review program continue not only to your projections, but an analysis of your projections? A. Yes.

Q. And were these reviews held with the same people? A. Right.

Q. Did you ever have any persons on your Board of Directors that were also officers at C&S National or one of the affiliate banks? A. Yes.

Q. Were any of these persons full Directors in the sense that they had voting powers? A. They were at one time.

[205] Q. Do you know approximately when the time was that there ceased being full voting members on your Board of Directors, those who were also C&S officers? A. I don't remember exactly what time, but maybe in '68.

Q. After that period of time, then, did you subsequently have any C&S officers on your Board of Directors in any capacity? A. In the advisory capacity.

Q. Did they have to be elected by your Board of Directors in this capacity? A. It would be appointed, maybe.

Q. Did you ever have any other C&S personnel, excluding these other people, who were advisory Directors attend any of your Board meetings on occasions? A. Yes.

Q. What would they be coming for, for example? A. It would be maybe for any information that they could impart that would help in the operation of the bank.

Q. What did you consider was the function of the advisors on your Board of Directors? A. It would be a person that I could talk with that would help in the day-by-day operations of the bank in the system that we were using.

[206] Q. What kind of help were you looking for? A. It would be supervisory, any help that they could impart.

Q. Did you, you and your Board want these advisors on your Board? A. It wasn't any sign there about wanting them or rejecting them.

Q. Are you implying that you did not want them there? A. There never was any discussion had on it.

Q. Did any of the advisory Directors or persons who were full Directors that were also C&S officers at the time, did they ever make any suggestions or advice at these Board meetings? A. Yes.

Q. Did your Board adopt any of these suggestions or advice? A. They did.

Q. Could you estimate as to whether they accepted or how much advice that your Board accepted? A. From a standpoint o the number of things that they accepted or——

Q. Correct. A. I can think of maybe the profit sharing, the pension plan.

[207] Q. Without detailing the types of things that advice was given on, just considering the advice and suggestions that they made at the meetings, could you give us an idea of what the percentage of times that their advice was accepted?

Mr. Hodgson: I object to the form of his question because the answer could only lead to conjecture because you have got to know the sort of things, exact things. Now if Mr. Frisbie wants to ask him what was rejected and what was accepted, that is an acceptable question. Otherwise, I object.

Mr. Frisbie: I don't believe that's the case. He testified they gave regular advice and suggestions to the Board meetings. We are not concerned at this point about the specifics of the thing.

The Court: I will overrule the objection. A. I would think that up to a point, more things were accepted than at a time when more things were looked at and not really acceptable.

The Court: Was that time a geographical time, or what? A. It would be that, I think that.

The Court: Chronological or just what kind of a division?

[208] A. It would be, the years that I was there, would be maybe the first three or four years, more things were accepted than they were later.

Q. And why were—do you have any idea why at this later period of time more things were not accepted? A. Not no explanation as to why they would not accept certain things.

The Court: Who is they?

A. The Board of——

The Court: Are you part of the Board? Are you a part of one who is doing the accepting or not accepting? A. Yes.

The Court: You don't know why?

A. Like this, Your Honor, the statement would be in presenting to them quarterly dividends rather than annual, would be the fact that we don't want to pay quarterly, we want it all in one lump sum, and the Board would vote to continue on the annual dividend basis. That would be the action that would be taken on that particular issue.

[209] The Court: But you have no explanation for the change in attitude?

A. Not really.

By Mr. Frisbie

Q. Mr. Parker, did your bank lease any equipment from C&S? A. Yes.

Q. What types of equipment did it lease from C&S? A. I know one particular piece was the proof machine.

Q. Did your bank utilize the central purchasing facilities of C&S? A. Yes.

Q. Did your bank utilize any of the C&S mangament training? A. Yes.

Q. In what regards? A. It would be programs that they would offer for management.

Q. Would these be held at—where would these be held? A. They would be held at CSTA mostly.

Q. At Camp CSTA? A. Yes.

[210] Q. Did your bank ever receive any audits by C&S? A. Yes.

Q. What kind of audits were these? A. It would be a full audit, credit-review audit that would be maybe held quarterly; different portions of the bank would be audited at different times, and in the course of a year it would be considered a full audit.

Q. Did you ever have any surprise audits on areas that you were not anticipating audits? A. It would always be surprise.

Q. Did your bank, the C&S Bank of Stone Mountain, ever send any information on its loans to C&S? A. Yes.

Q. How often was this done? A. Monthly, a debtors list.

Q. You sent a debtors list to C&S? A. Yes.

Q. Did you send any other loan information to C&S? A. If there was a loan, that would be maybe large enough that the bank would not want to maybe—or could not handle it, it could be reviewed at the credit review meeting and maybe participation of other [211] banks with you on it.

Q. So this would be a loan that your bank could not handle by itself? A. Yes.

Q. Okay. Was there any other information on your loans that were sent to C&S? A. Could be a list that we would maybe get the credit department at C&S National to help us in credit investigation on a particular loan or a customer.

Q. Were any of your loans ever reviewed by C&S? A. Yes.

Q. How often was this done? A. Could be reviewed—well, they were reviewed every month at the directors' meeting, the debtors list of, say, ten thousand or fifteen thousand and above, would be circulated to the C&S National on a monthly basis.

Q. When you say they were reviewed at the directors' meeting, which directors' meeting are you referring to? A. The Stone Mountain directors' meeting.

Q. Okay. And my question was, were any of your loans reviewed by C&S? A. Not—not really, not before commitment, prior commitment.

[212] Q. Either way? A. No.

Q. Did you ever make any joint calls with representatives of C&S to solicit new business? A. I did.

Q. Do you know, Mr. Parker, of any services at all that were provided to other correspondent associate banks in the Atlanta area, in Fulton and DeKalb Counties, that you didn't get or have access to? A. If we didn't have it, it was maybe available for us through C&S.

Q. Can you think of any specific things that you didn't have that the other correspondent associates were receiving? A. It could be the company-account analysis program that we did not have.

Q. Why did you not have a company-account analysis program at your bank? A. The board at Stone Mountain didn't want to charge the small merchant that would be maybe processing a lot of checks, and not have too much deposit money with the bank; therefore, they could pay the larger fee for their monthly processing of their account, because it was based on so many items, I mean checks that would be cleared through their account, and as opposed to [213] their balance that they would keep, average balance.

Q. Did your board ever consider adopting this company-account analysis? A. No.

Q. Was it ever brought up at any of your board meetings? A. Yes, right.

Q. Who brought it up at your board meeting? A. I did.

Q. Was it your idea and suggestion to institute a company-account analysis at your bank? A. No, it was the—the C&S system that would be using this type of assessment on the checking accounts.

Q. Did anyone from C&S National Bank contact you relative to suggesting or bringing up this program at your board meeting? A. Yes.

Q. Who was this? A. I got literature from branch supervision and it was Don Ingram, Joe Hall.

Q. And about what time was this, Mr. Parker? A. In the fall of '69.

Q. And you stated that you did present this to your board? [214] A. Yes.

Q. And what was the reason for rejecting it? A. They did not want to charge a small merchant that would be subject to a greater charge than the regular cost that was being assessed.

Q. Fine. Mr. Parker, did you ever discuss your plans for branching with C&S National Bank? A. Yes, the local board wanted to acquire this or put in this branch out on Memorial Drive, or any other site that they could have at the time that —at this time they talked with Mr. Hall, the one from my board that did talk with Mr. Hall was Joe—I mean, excuse me, was Hugh Jordan, talked with Joe Hall. And at that time it was a matter of wanting to check with him to see whether or not we could get the help through them on this branching, and at that time Mr. Hall wanted to chat about maybe acquiring Stone Mountain as a branch. This was in 1970, in the first quarter of '70, I guess.

Q. And what was—did you subsequently have a meeting with Mr. Hall concerning this conversation? A. Yes.

Q. Who was in attendance at this meeting? A. It was Hugh Jordan, Kingsley Weatherley, myself, Dan Handley, Don Ingram, Joe Hall and Mr. Lane.

Q. Where was this meeting held? [215] A. At C&S National Bank.

Q. And do you remember the date of that meeting? A. It was the first week, week or two in May, 1970.

Q. Was there discussions held at that meeting relative to your plans for a branch? A. Yes.

Q. And what was the reaction of the representatives from C&S? A. They were wanting to acquire the bank at a later date under the plans that it would become a branch, since the countrywide branch banking had passed.

Q. Had your board ever discussed, prior to this time, a possible acquisition by C&S? A. No, not seriously.

Q. Did these statements—who made the statement that it was thought about, about making you a branch? A. Mr. Hall.

Q. Did Mr. Hall's statement come as a surprise to you at that time? A. Not to me.

Q. What was your reaction during that meeting to this plan, to their idea of making you a branch at some time in the future? A. Would be—maybe at that time I was in a [216] position to maybe feel like that I would either stay with Stone Mountain, if it was a disassociation, or else go somewhere else for employment. I didn't feel at that time close enough to C&S to be one that would go back with C&S from actions that had preceded this time.

Mr. Frisbie: Your Honor, with the permission of the Court, it has been about an hour. I would like to take a recess for ten minutes.

The Court: All right. We will take a ten-minute recess.

[217] Q. Mr. Parker, the meeting we were referring to before we took the recess, in that meeting—after that meeting was over, did anyone take any notes concerning what went on at that meeting? A. Yes.

Q. Have you seen these notes or a transcription of what went on at that meeting? A. I have.

Q. Did you sign those notes? A. Yes, sir.

Q. I would like to have you take a look at this document and see if these are the minutes.

Mr. Hodgson: If Your Honor please, I trust we will be allowed to see before he examines.

The Court: I am sure you will.

Q. Mr. Parker, do you agree that that is a true copy of the minutes that were transcribed after that meeting was over? A. Yes.

Q. Okay.

Your Honor, I'm not offering these in evidence at this time.

The Court: Give me some identification so I can put my notes a date or some description. All I have is the minutes of some meeting.

[218] Mr. Frisbie: These purport to be the minutes of an April 21st, 1970 meeting.

The Court: Of who?

Mr. Frisbie: That was attended by—as Mr. Parker has testified, Mr. Weatherly, Mr. Jordan, Mr. Parker and representatives from C&S, Mr. Mills Lane, Mr. Joe Hall, Mr. Don Ingram and Mr. Dan Handley.

Mr. Hodgson: I would like to help my colleague, it was a May 11th meeting, it wasn't April. It's a little unclear, it was simply notes of a meeting, not minutes of any formal body.

The Court: May the 11th and not April 21st.

Mr. Frisbie: That's correct, I stand corrected.

The Court: All right, and it involves the desire of Stone Mountain to acquire property in the name of C&S and that they want Stone Mountain to be a branch.

Mr. Frisbie: Not that they want to acquire property. I think Mr. Parker testified they wanted some advice as far as their branching plans and C&S's response.

Mr. Hodgson: I would make one or two other observations, if Your Honor please. First, we are familiar with this document from earlier proceedings [219] among the parties. Second, this document reflects the recollection of those who wrote it. I believe it was Mr. Weatherly and Mr. Jordan and not representatives from C&S, that is to say, it was written unilaterally and not approved by anyone from Citizens and Southern. I wish that point made clear.

The Court: You say you are not offering it?

Mr. Frisbie: No, sir.

The Court: At this time or ever?

Mr. Frisbie: We do not intend to offer this.

The Court: Why all the problem of identifying it?

Mr. Frisbie: Because we want to ask Mr. Parker some questions about this document, about a meeting that happened quite some time ago about which some detail is desired as to his memory of this.

The Court: Or maybe——

Mr. Frisbie: Refresh his recollection.

The Court: Maybe if you would ask him some questions, it would tie it in as to how it's relevant to this proceeding. It would be helpful.

Q. (By Mr. Frisbie) Mr. Parker, did you agree that this was a true copy of the notes that were transcribed after that meeting? A. Yes.

[220] Q. And do you agree at this time that all statements contained therein are your views on this matter as to what you remember? A. Right.

Q. During this meeting, did anyone from C&S make any representation to you and your group as to what would happen to your bank if you did not merge, if you did not agree to this merger? A. That we would be cut loose from the C&S system, naturally, and be subject to losing benefits that we would be enjoying at that time.

Q. What specific benefits were referred to, if any? A. Oh, I guess maybe it would be the tenure that some of us would have that would be interrupted.

Q. Tenure in what regards? A. With the C&S Bank.

Q. Were there any representations made as to the status of your employees? A. It would be a matter of them deciding whether or not they would come back to C&S or stay with Stone Mountain.

Q. Did anyone at that meeting state in one way or another that they believed one of those things you just mentioned would occur? [221] A. Could occur, yes.

[222] Q. Were there any representations made at that time as to the growth of your bank, the future growth of your bank if you did not merge? A. Possibility of the growth of the bank not enjoying in the future what we had enjoyed in the past by being an independent bank.

Q. Were there any representations made as to your personal status and how it would be affected? A. Naturally, I would—would be subject to losing tenure or benefits that I had enjoyed.

Q. Were any statements made regarding the branching of C&S National, if you did not merge? A. Could be a possibility of branches from C&S being out in that area in the future.

Q. What was the opinion of your—what was your personal opinion during this meeting as to the feasibility of going through with this merger, the possibility of a merger? A. With the board at Stone Mountain, with their feeling, I didn't think there would be a strong possibility of it being merged.

Q. Was there ever made any representations as to the obligation of your bank towards C&S because of your relationship? A. In that we had enjoyed growth and earnings [223] maybe because of being a part of C&S.

Q. Did you feel obligated in any way to continue through with any possibility of merger, of seeing it through? A. I felt like that under the conditions that existed between my board and C&S, that it wasn't very probable.

Q. Did you feel like you were running a C&S Bank at that time? A. I felt like that I had—I had been running a bank that was more C&S than it had ever been.

Q. Well, did you feel like you were running a C&S Bank at that time? A. I felt like that—that my board at Stone Mountain was affecting the efficiency of it being run like a C&S Bank.

Q. You stated earlier that all of your prior banking experience had been with C&S. A. Yes.

Q. Did you deviate from any of the C&S policies, to your knowledge, while you were running that bank? A. I had to at times, because of the board not agreeing with certain policies of C&S.

Q. What was the result of this meeting, this May meeting we were previously discussing? [224] A. A meeting by the board at Stone Mountain was held within a week of this time, in the month of May, and it was determined at that time that there would be a disassociation.

Q. Did your bank buy the stock back? A. Yes.

Q. When did this happen? A. It happened about mid-year, June, maybe.

Q. Did C&S National Bank remain your correspondent bank? A. No.

Q. Who became the next correspondent, primary correspondent for you? A. Fulton National.

Q. Did any of your officers leave your bank to go back to C&S National or any of its affiliates? A. No.

Q. For the year following your disassociation, how did your bank do in terms of growth? A. We grew approximately two and a half million in total assets, about two million in deposits.

Q. Was this a growth commensurate with the years when you were associated with C&S? A. It was.

Q. Was it higher or lower or about the same? [225] A. Each year seemed to be a little more growth in deposits and in total assets.

Q. Could you, then, when you had Fulton National Bank as your correspondent, get all the services that you needed from Fulton? A. Could not get the services from Fulton that we were getting from C&S.

Q. Such as? A. The audit review.

Q. Could you have gotten the audit review from any other bank in town? A. Not just as a correspondent bank.

[226] Q. Mr. Parker, the question I asked you was whether you could get all the services that you needed from Fulton National Bank? Does your bank—and then you said you could not get credit or did you say audits? A. The audit that we were getting from C&S.

Q. All right. Are audits available through private firms? A. Yes.

Q. Is this something that a bank needs on a regular basis, an audit? A. Yes.

Q. Were there any other services that you needed that you could not get from Fulton National Bank? A. It would be the services of maybe that only a bank that you are connected with in the fashion that we were connected with C&S, that maybe would not be available to any other bank that would be just a correspondent bank.

Q. Such as? A. Just any bank that we, at this point, as a correspondent of Fulton and First National Bank of Georgia, all of these banks, they are not in a position to give us the service that we were getting from C&S.

Q. But do you know of any specific services that you needed that you could not get from Fulton? A. The one service that we were getting that, [227] maybe of a major consequence, would be the audits review.

Mr. Frisbie: I have no further questions.

Mr. Hodgson: Could we have just a moment, Your Honor, only about two minutes.

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Hodgson

Q. Angus, I believe you testified at one point that the ratio of operating earnings to total assets in your bank increased from .8% to 2.58% while you were there? A. Yes.

Q. Don't you attribute a good bit of this to the fact that you brought C&S management to that bank? A. I feel like it was a matter of management that caused it because I put in a system there that would allow me to grow and at the same time, the only system I had enjoyed was C&S.

Q. You felt that this overall relationship was then necessarily beneficial to that bank, don't you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Don't you feel then that this bank would have done better following June of 1970 had it continued as C&S Bank, than it actually did? A. I can only say that the growth hasn't continued on the same relationship that it had in the previous years as an independent bank.

[228] Q. Don't you feel it would have done better had it remained a C&S Bank? A. From the standpoint of being with the C&S name, that would maybe attract people, that would not ordinarily come to the bank, there could be an area there that could be an increase.

Q. And Angus, as we have discussed, I guess the continuing of C&S management would have been of help, too; would it not?

Mr. Frisbie: Your Honor, we are getting into a pretty big area of speculation of what might have happened if all these things happened.

Mr. Hodgson: I believe the Government opened this up.

The Court: Let me find out if they did.

What was the purpose of putting this witness on the stand?

Mr. Frisbie: The purpose of putting the witness on the stand was to show that in all substantial respects the C&S Bank of Stone Mountain was no different than the other bank associates.

The Court: Wasn't it for the purpose of showing after this affiliation, they could get along without this affiliation with C&S?

Mr. Frisbie: That is part of it.

[229] Mr. Hodgson: I believe my question was, don't you agree then that the continued supply of C&S management and services would have been beneficial and would have increased its growth more than as an independent bank? A. Being a part of a network in the metropolitan area with C&S's name and system could be.

Q. You agree? A. Yes.

Q. And the more the Atlanta metropolitan area grows out to Stone Mountain and encompasses more of this would be so; isn't that right? A. I think so.

Q. Angus, I believe you said you came in February of 1966 to the Stone Mountain Bank? A. Yes.

Q. And soon after that, it changed its name to the Citizens and Southern Stone Mountain Bank? A. Yes.

Q. You stayed as President until October of 1971? A. Yes.

Q. And in fact, you stayed at that bank until the time of disassociation in June of 1970? A. Yes.

Q. Is that right? [230] A. Yes, right.

Q. Thinking back, Angus, when you went out there, you had a little difficulty even getting your qualifying shares; didn't you? A. Yes.

Q. You got criticized for this by the regulatory authorities? A. Yes.

Q. Why was it hard to get the stock? A. There wasn't any available.

Q. No one of the Directors or shareholders would make it available? A. Right, I repeatedly at each Board meeting asked for stock to, for qualifying shares.

Q. So that you could sit on the Board of Directors? A. Right.

Q. And you didn't ever get as much as the other five per-center Presidents were getting as an incentive to run those banks; did you? A. I only got qualifying shares.

Q. Yes. Angus, there were no C&S related people—by that, I mean, officers, Directors, employees of C&S, to any extent or friends of theirs, who had any shares of stock in this bank; were there? [231] A. Not to any great extent.

Q. Mr. Hall and Handley had their qualifying shares subsequently, I guess? A. Mr. Hall and Mr. Starks.

Q. Mr. Starks had their qualifying shares? A. Yes.

Q. Do you know of any others? A. It would be maybe Miss—the telephone supervisor at C&S had a few shares, Mr. Drew had some in his family.

Q. Incidentally, talking about Mr. Drew, he had been retired from the C&S before he went out there in the beginning; hadn't he? A. That's what I understand.

Q. And this bank began in 1967; didn't it? A. '57.

Q. I beg your pardon. In 1957, and it didn't have the assistance in its organization that Chamblee and Sandy Springs, and North Fulton and South DeKalb had; did it?

Mr. Frisbie: I object to that question. That is going back to a period of time when this bank was formed, a period of time before Mr. Parker came out there. He would have no direct knowledge of this fact.

Q. If you don't know, you can sure answer, I don't [232] know.

The Court: That's right.

A. I only know that the bank was organized in 1957 and C&S became a part of it in '59.

Q. Not until 1959? A. From the records of the bank.

Q. Yes, sir, and is it not true that the C&S came in at that time to help with a bad credit problem that had been discovered by the FDIC? A. Yes.

[233] Q. So these shares were all the shares that the C&S holding—and that was what the C&S holding company got, it is five percent; right? A. Yes.

Q. 1959, and that's all it or any of its friends ever got; is that not right? A. Right.

Q. And I believe that there was—you have told me that some twenty-five to thirty percent of the shares were held by the McCurdy family? A. Could be twenty-five or thirty with the relatives of the McCurdy family.

Q. Yes, sir. Now, turning from stock ownership to yourself as a manager, didn't you have some difficulty in asserting yourself as the president or chief executive officer of that bank? A. More in the area when I first went there in day-to-day operation of getting a system installed that would allow us to grow.

Q. What sort of trouble did you experience? A. The operation that was at the time, I guess, had been in existence since the bank was organized.

Q. Yes, sir. A. But, in changing the system and putting in the C&S system, I would find that it had been changed [234] back when I would recheck from having someone gone behind me and change it, see.

Q. So you had difficulty as a manager in installing the system that you wanted to install? A. Yes.

Q. Which is a system that was recommended by your training? A. Yes.

Q. And advice from the C&S. A. Right.

Q. And which would make C&S more able to help you; is this right? A. Yes.

Q. I believe—who was the chief executive officer of your board of directors? A. At the time that I went there, there was no chairman, but later it was Kingsley Weatherley.

Q. How did this come about? A. Oh, came about in maybe '69, by a recommendation from Mr. Hugh Jordan that he nominate him as chairman of the board, and he was elected at that meeting.

Q. Didn't Mr. Jordan tell you after disaffiliation, when you stayed with that bank, that if he had known you were one of us, that is, that group in Stone [235] Mountain, he would never have voted to elect Mr. Weatherley as chairman of the board of directors? A. Yes.

Q. He told you that? A. Right.

Q. So, when you said in your earlier testimony they, that board, never felt that you were really with them, it meant that they were somewhat suspicious of what it was you were doing; did it not? A. Yes.

Q. And Mr. Bobby Maughon, who is still with them, was the gentleman who you had some difficulty with in getting your systems installed, isn't it? A. Yes.

Q. I believe you said that Mr. Maughon had been at C&S; hadn't he earlier quit the C&S before he went to Stone Mountain? A. No, he left C&S to go with Stone Mountain in '57.

Q. In '57. You talked about some things you couldn't get done earlier, Angus, like payment of quarterly dividends, and I believe a program to analyze company accounts in order to determine what charges would be made. A. Yes.

[236] Q. There was some testimony that this was not installed because it would be contrary to the best interest of some small business customers. A. Yes.

Q. Now, Angus, that program only set up a system by which you could analyze the cost of handling the account, didn't it? A. Yes.

Q. So that if a customer with relatively small balances had many transactions in his deposit account with you, each of which cost your bank money, you could determine whether or not this was a profitable account, a break-even account, or a loss account, couldn't you? A. Yes.

Q. And the system didn't say you had to charge that small merchant anything, did it? A. They just outlined a charge basis.

Q. A managerial tool which would allow you to know how well you are doing with that particular account that was being analyzed; right? A. Right.

Q. So you didn't have to make the charge to the small business customer if you didn't want to later, did you? [237] A. It was determined by the board that we would not.

Q. It was determined by the board you wouldn't even put in the system, I believe you said. A. Yes, right.

Q. So the board decided you simply wouldn't have the information available better to manage your bank; right? A. Right.

Q. Were you there at the time there was some difference of opinion as to whether the bank would be—the new building, as distinguished from the original, temporary quarters, would be located on Main Street, as you say, back behind the town, between the town and the mountain or, that is, behind there or out on Main Street? Were you there when that went along? A. No.

Q. So you weren't a part of that discussion.

You referred to these general operating guides and consumer credit guides this morning, those large volumes over there, which you regularly got. Didn't you tell me that those weren't out there when you went? A. They were not being——

Q. Kept up? [238] A. They were not being kept up, were not being used to their advantage.

Q. Did you get them to use them to their advantage after you got there? A. To a degree.

Q. To a degree. You were unsuccessful, I gather, in getting them to use those guides as much as you wanted them to? A. Right.

Q. I believe you told me, also, that pre-approval was required of credits or loans over $1,000 unsecured, and $3,000 secured; is that correct? A. That was the policy that was in effect before I went there.

Q. At Stone Mountain? A. Or maybe at the time I went to Stone Mountain, yes.

Q. At the time, did you change this? A. I did.

Q. And did you put it on the C&S system of review the credit after the fact? A. Yes.

Q. Now, your difficulty in installing and following the C&S systems that you have talked about, didn't you get criticized for not being able to get the [239] board to go along with you by branch management at C&S? A. Yes.

Q. What was your response to this criticism? A. It would be that I had been there maybe, at this time, a couple of years——

Q. Yes, sir. A. ——and the question was asked, "How are you doing?" And I said, "Slowly, but surely; just can't go in and knock everything off the desk and start anew. You have to kind of gradually move it." But, was successful in doing so to this point by gradually turning it around, so to speak.

Q. To whom were you telling this? A. Mr. Handley.

Q. And what was Mr. Handley's response? A. If you don't do the job, we will get somebody else that will, see.

Q. As a result of this, did you feel that you had lost some of the confidence of Mr. Handley and those others in branch supervision in how you could do a job? A. That was a start.

Q. Yes. What else affected your feelings this way? [240] A. Well, other things that would exist from the standpoint of company-account analysis program, the quarterly dividend, some other day-to-day operational——

Q. I believe you testified earlier this morning that you didn't feel close enough to C&S to go back when there was the disaffiliation; is that right? A. Right.

Q. Now, why didn't you? A. Because of what had happened in the previous three—three years.

Q. Why did you finally leave the Stone Mountain Bank? A. I found out that from the standpoint of working with the board there, that our philosophy didn't run parallel. It was just more or less something that didn't—we didn't seem to see eye to eye on anything, that that would be maybe my suggestions or actions that I wanted to put in.

Q. Can you give me some specifics as to that? A. It would be in the area maybe of growth-wise. We were maybe getting to the point at that time that they felt like they were not able to review everything that would be going on, even on a monthly basis, at the meetings.

Q. Angus, is it a fair conclusion that the board [241] at Stone Mountain, comprised of Mr. Weatherley and Mr. Jordan and others, McCurdy interests, never really accepted the C&S as their management or their leadership; is this not right? A. They would accept it to a degree.

Q. But they never really accepted it in full? A. No—not fully.

Q. As you put it one time, I think, they said they are there and we are here. A. (Nodding affirmatively.)

Q. These occasions when you met with C&S management and included were people like Mr. Harris from the C&S, Chamblee Bank; Mr. Fortuna from the C&S, Sandy Springs Bank; and Mr. Hugh Lane, from the C&S North Fulton Bank; Mr. Warren Berry from the C&S South DeKalb Bank, on these occasions and others, Mr. Hazelrig and Mr. Connelly, did you all compare notes as to how you were getting along with your various boards? [242] A. It was kind of a—some chit chat to a degree on how you would be fairing with your Board because it would be to, it was to my concern, more so than maybe the others because of what position I was in at Stone Mountain.

Q. And your relationship was not nearly so comfortable as theirs from those discussions? A. I felt like it wasn't.

Q. Now the discussion of May 11, if it was as you described it, the Board at Stone Mountain had never seriously considered favorably merging with C&S at any time, had it? A. Had not ever discussed it seriously.

Q. And had never considered it as a result in your mind; had they? A. Not as far as I'm concerned.

Q. Angus, what growth have you observed in the Stone Mountain bank since you have left it? A. I saw a statement, call statement that was printed June 30th or thereafter and the growth was relatively the same as it was about the year or the fall of '71.

Q. And they have a new branch; don't they? A. Yes.

Q. So even with that new branch, their growth has [243] levelled off? A. Right.

Q. Do you know of any direct competition that's entered that area by way of branches or new banks? A. It would be several branches.

Q. Would you name them, please? A. And maybe in a five mile radius?

Q. Yes, and give us general—your general notion of how far away each one is. A. National Bank of Georgia would be approximately five miles. The Trust Company and First National would be within four miles; another Fulton and a Trust would be about three miles.

Q. That's the crop? A. Clarkston would be, I would say, four miles, four or five miles.

Q. Clarkston being what? A. Citizens Bank of Clarkston.

Q. Is it affiliated with any other bank? A. It would be affiliated with a group of banks that is referred to as the Robinson group.

Q. This is Mr. Mac Robinson? A. Yes.

Q. Sometimes called a chain banking relationship? A. Yes.

[244] Q. Any others? A. Snellville Bank, about seven miles away.

Q. One moment, please, Your Honor. My colleague is not real sure about what you may have testified at one point and that was on this pre-approval of loans where you and I were talking about, pre-approval of loans by the Board of Directors at Stone Mountain and C&S. I think you were talking about Stone Mountain, were you not? A. Yes, that would be on the limits at the time I went there to Stone Mountain.

Q. Right, that's right. A. Yes.

Q. What has been the rate of growth of Stone Mountain deposits since disaffiliation, as compared to the growth before disaffiliation? A. It would be——

Mr. Frisbie: Your Honor, could we get a time period involved in here in this. Mr. Parker was only at that bank for some time. He testified he has seen some statement for the bank for some time between the time he left and now.

The Court: Pin it down as best you can.

A. When I left the Stone Mountain Bank in October, latter part of October, the size of the bank at that time and compared to the statement that I saw, the [245] call statement and the paper in June or first week in July, was within a few thousand in deposit as well as in total assets.

Q. So the rate of growth from October of '71 to June 30, 1972, you are saying is basically none at all? A. Right.

Mr. Hodgson: No further questions.

Redirect Examination

By Mr. Frisbie

Q. Mr. Parker, could you state again the exact time that you started to work for the bank? A. At Stone Mountain?

Q. Stone Mountain. A. February 15, 1966.

Q. And when, again, could you tell us when the name was changed on that bank? A. March 15, 1966.

Q. That was one month later? A. Yes.

Q. And did you have any hand in this process of changing the name? A. No.

Q. Were you aware that this was in the process? A. Yes.

Q. Were you aware of this prior to going to the [246] bank? A. I don't recall whether it was before or after because it was something that was, I guess, just happening at that time.

Q. You testified that the C&S Bank of Stone Mountain was not as much a part of the C&S system when you came there as it was at a later date. Is that not correct? A. Right.

Q. Is there any way you can explain why there was this wide disparity there, why it was allowed to use the C&S name? A. You mean before, this is after I went there that the name was changed.

Q. All right. A. It was a matter of putting the system in, going forward from what it was.

Q. Mr. Parker, do you keep the stock books of your bank? A. Yes.

Q. Of the Stone Mountain Bank during that time, did you keep the stock records and everything? A. Yes.

Q. You testified that the stock held by yourself, the two Directors and the five per cent held by C&S [247] Holding Company was, to your knowledge, all it, and it referring to C&S or its friends, ever got? A. Yes.

Q. That is right. Do you know who all the employees of C&S National Bank or its affiliates are? A. No.

Q. Are you familiar with all the customers of C&S National Bank or its affiliates? A. No.

Q. Are you familiar with all the officers of C&S National Bank or its affiliates? A. No.

Q. Could some of the names on the stock list have been customers, officers or employees of C&S National Bank or any of its affiliates and you not recognize them? A. Could be.

Q. You testified also that C&S Stone Mountain became a part, those are words you used, became a part of the C&S system in 1959? A. Yes.

Q. How did it become a part in 1959? A. To the extent of a five per cent correspondent associate.

Q. Is that all you meant by that? A. Yes.

[248] Q. Mr. Hodgson brought out the fact that you were criticized by some of the persons at C&S National about your relationship with your Board; is that correct? A. Yes.

Q. Okay. In that respect, did any of the—any officers of the C&S system ever talk to you about your relationship with the Board, specifically referring to your relationship with the Board? A. From the standpoint of not working with the Board or the Board working with me.

Q. That's right. A. In January of '70, 1970, we had an incentive program that was 11%, 5½ was guaranteed and 5½% was incentive based on performance. If you didn't do the job that was expected of you, you would get 50%. If you did the job, you got 100. If you did over and above what was required of you or the usual would be 150. I was given 50% of the incentive for the year 1969 and it was based on not handling the Board like I should the previous year.

Q. Who votes the incentive bonus plan for you as to how much you can get? A. My Board voted on the 11%.

Q. How much did you receive? A. I received 8 point something.

Q. Did you ever inquire as to why you got the [249] lesser amount? A. Yes, I asked at the time why, it was because I didn't handle the Board like I should.

Q. Who did you ask? A. Don Ingram.

Q. Don Ingram. What did Mr. Ingram say to you when you inquired? A. I don't know whether it was a little bit of a statement that sounded like frustration to me, when he said, "Well, your problem is, do you know what your problem is?" I said, "I wish I only knew I had a problem because I figure I had more than one problem." Then with that, he says, "Your problem is that you walk too slow, you talk too slow, you move like an old man." He says, "You just don't cut it." With that, I said, "I'm sorry, I'm doing what I have done all these many, many years. I will have to continue to do the way I am doing or else it will be insincere, fictitious and can't live with that." That was the extent of the conversation.

Q. Did Mr. Ingram say anything to you about your relationship with the Board at that time? A. Only to the extent that I had not handled the Board like I should.

[250] Q. Were those the words he used, you did not handle the board like you should? A. Yes, right.

Q. What is the function of the board of directors of any bank? A. It would be for direction of the bank, many aspects of it.

Q. So the board's responsibility is to direct the operation of the bank; is that your testimony?

Mr. Hodgson: If Your Honor please, I object to the testimony as being leading. It is his witness; he is trying to impeach him and I object to it.

Mr. Frisbie: No, I don't believe I am trying to impeach the witness, Your Honor. My question was: was that the correct characterization of what you said? A. Yes.

Q. And, as a consequence, you have also testified that your board did not operate like the other C&S banks; is that correct. A. Yes.

Mr. Hodgson: If Your Honor please, I really do object. He is leading the witness if ever I have heard it. This is his witness, he is on direct examination. I object to the [251] form of the question and the answer.

The Court: Sustained.

By Mr. Frisbie

Q. Compared to the other banks in the C&S system, according to the racehorse sheet, could you clarify for us, again, your position in respect to the other banks on that sheet? A. Well, it was a gradual climb to the position that we held at the time that—of the disassociation. Through the five-year period there it would be a matter of continual growth from the standpoint of the ratio.

Q. Can you estimate for us, Mr. Parker, what your earnings were on your bank, your monthly earnings on your bank at the time you went there? A. For the year '65, I noticed in a statement through September, that is, when I was out there, the cumulative earnings at that time was fifteen thousand for the nine months.

Q. And what were they for 1966 year-end? A. They were sixty some-odd, sixty some-odd thousand.

Q. And for 1967? A. I believe they were eighty, eighty some-odd.

Q. And for 1968? A. I believe they were over a hundred that year.

[252] Q. And for '69? A. Maybe a hundred and fifty-five or a hundred and sixty-five. I am a little bit hazy. At the time I left I remember it on a monthly basis more so than an annual.

But, it had increased upward to where it provided a dividend that we could pay from zero to $3.00 a share at one time there.

Q. Mr. Parker, do you ever lose any money on the checking accounts maintained by the customers out at the bank during that period of time, the service of providing a checking account; do you ever lose any money on this? A. Lose in which way now?

Q. As far as the cost of doing business on a checking account, providing the service; is this a profitable or a loss situation, or a marginal or what direction is it? A. It can be a profitable or a loss situation.

Q. Was it ever on a loss situation at your bank? A. I feel like that the loss situation, as compared to the system that C&S was using, would be a loss. For instance, the company-account analysis program, our charges would be subject to loss more than that program.

Q. What I am talking—speaking of, is your [253] demand deposit accounts, your checking, persons who have a checking account there. Is this normally a losing situation, a marginal operation, a profitable operation? How would you characterize it? A. We considered it a profitable operation.

Q. Has it ever been a loss or a marginal operation? A. It could be, if you didn't charge for the service according to the cost of operation.

Q. If it got to be a loss situation or a marginal situation, why wouldn't you or would you raise the prices you would charge?

Mr. Hodgson: If Your Honor please, the question is entirely conjecture now. He is not talking about what happened or what he did, and I object to it.

The Court: I think in away, he was, in a hypothetical sort of way. He may answer.

A. Restate your question, please.

By Mr. Frisbie

Q. If your checking accounts, cost of maintaining your checking accounts, this service for your customers, got to be a marginal or a loss situation, why wouldn't you or would you raise the cost of this service to your customers? [254] A. Yes, you would if you wanted to provide an earning situation from handling their accounts.

Q. Would you have to consider in that type of situation what the other banks in town were charging? A. Yes.

Q. Would this same—did this same situation hold true as far as your company-account analysis at your bank? A. Would be subject to a loss if the analysis would not be the same as far as the cost provided in this system that they were wanting us to put in. If the cost, per operation cost, that is, if that is not increased according to the work that is being done, there would be a loss. It would have to be remedied from somewhere, from additional charges or from balances of so much.

Q. You also, on cross-examination, gave some testimony concerning the leveling off, I believe you called it, of the Stone Mountain Bank after you left. According to the information you have seen on statements, would you attribute any of this leveling off that bank has done to your leaving the bank, management capability and the difference in management capability between then and now? A. I would like to think that I contributed to [255] some of it, since I am operating a short mileage away from the bank, and the business that has shifted from Stone Mountain to Lithonia during that time.

Q. Since this has been brought up, you testified that—I will rephrase that.

Would you think, if you had stayed on at the bank instead of leaving during that—instead of leaving, that you probably would have grown more, your growth would have been greater in that sense? A. Might sound egotistical, but I think if I caused

X number of dollars to leave that bank to come to me at Lithonia, that they would have stayed if I stayed.

Mr. Hodgson: No questions, Your Honor.

Mr. Frisbie: Wait just a second.

The Court: I don't think he's quite through.

Mr. Hodgson: I thought he was. Excuse me.

Mr. Frisbie: No further questions, Your Honor.

The Court: All right. We will recess until 1:45.

(Whereupon a luncheon recess was had.)

[256] AFTERNOON SESSION

Mr. Kinkaid: The plaintiff calls Charles Ginden.

Whereupon,

CHARLES B. GINDEN

was called as a witness by and on behalf of the Government, and having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination

By Mr. Kinkaid

Q. Would you please state your full name for the record? A. Charles B. Ginden.

Q. What is your occupation? A. Banker.

Q. And where do you operate as a banker? A. President of the Peachtree Bank and Trust Company, Chamblee, Georgia.

Q. And do you happen to know when Peachtree Bank was chartered or first opened for business? A. 1960.

Q. How long have you been employed at the Peachtree Bank? A. Since October of 1964.

Q. Have you always been President of Peachtree? A. No.

[257] Q. What previous positions have you held there? A. I was Vice President and Branch Manager when I came to the bank in 1964.

Q. Prior to going to work at Peachtree, where were you working? A. I was employed by The Trust Company of Georgia in Atlanta.

Q. What was your position with Trust Company? A. I was Assistant Treasurer and acting Branch Manager of the Chattahoochee office of the Trust Company.

Q. How long had you been with Trust Company? A. About six years.

Q. Did you have any prior banking experience prior to working for Trust Company? A. None.

Q. Do you have any idea as to how many Presidents there were at Peachtree before you became President? A. I believe I was the fourth.

Q. Do you happen to know who the first President of Peachtree was? A. Davis Fitzgerald, I think he was the first President.

Q. Do you happen to know what Mr. Fitzgerald's prior employment was, that is prior to becoming the first President of Peachtree? [258] A. Yes, I think he was with the Trust Company of Georgia.

Q. Would you happen to have any idea of where Mr. Fitzgerald works today? A. He is presently with the Trust Company of Georgia.

Q. Do you know who the second President was? A. Mr. James Williams.

Q. Again, do you have any idea or do you happen to know of your own knowledge what Mr. Williams' employment prior to being President of Peachtree was? A. Yes, he was with Trust Company prior to that time.

Q. And do you know where Mr. Williams is working today? A. My latest knowledge of him is he is Chairman of the Board, First National Bank in Augusta.

Q. Is First National Bank in Augusta, to your knowledge, in any way associated with Trust Company? A. Yes, an affiliated bank of Trust Company.

Q. Who was the President when you first went to Peachtree? A. Claude Booker, Jr.

Q. Do you know his employment prior to being President at Peachtree? [259] A. I believe he came to Peachtree from the Liberty Bank in Savannah, Liberty National Bank and Trust Company.

Q. Did that bank, to your knowledge, have any association with Trust Company? A. Yes, it was also a full affiliated bank of the Trust Company.

Q. Do you know where Mr. Booker is working today? A. Yes, he is at, my last knowledge of him, is that he is President of the First National Bank of Augusta.

Q. When you first started to work at Peachtree in 1964, in addition to Mr. Booker, was there any other officers? A. Well, Mr. Warren Jackson, I believe was an officer. Well, I am not sure he was an officer. He was Branch Manager at that time and Mr. W. R. Watkins, I think, was an Assistant Cashier.

Q. Would you know what Mr. Jackson's employment prior to working for Peachtree was? A. Yes, Mr. Jackson had also been with the Trust Company of Georgia.

Q. How long was Mr. Jackson at Peachtree, if you know? A. I don't recall his total time there.

Q. How about Mr. Watkins, do you know his employment [260] before working for Peachtree? A. Yes, sir, he was with the Trust Company of Georgia for a short period of time before Peachtree, prior to that, the National Biscuit Company.

Q. Mr. Ginden, who are your correspondent banks today? A. Correspondent relationships with the Trust Company of Georgia, First National Bank of Atlanta, Manufacturers Hanover Trust Company in New York City, National Bank of Detroit, Detroit, Michigan.

[261] Q. Have you, since being president of Peachtree, have you always had all of these four banks as correspondents? A. No, the Trust Company of Georgia was the only bank, the only correspondent bank we had when I became president.

Q. For how long was Trust Company the only correspondent of Peachtree? A. I don't recall the exact dates. Our first account relationship outside that was with Manufacturers-Hanover in New York City, and that relationship is probably right now two and a half or three years old.

Q. What is the nature of the correspondent relationship you have with Manufacturers-Hanover? A. Well, it is principally a —it is basically a semi-active account. We write all of the checks for closed accounts on that particular bank account, and we use the account for any other miscellaneous new business assistance that they—that that bank might be able to give us. But, basically, the account itself is used for the issuance of checks for people who have closed their accounts for one reason or the other.

Q. Could you give us just a bit of an idea as to how Manufacturers-Hanover has assisted your bank in connection with the new business that you mentioned? [262] A. Well, at this point, in a negligible way.

Q. Have you had occasion to use Manufacturers-Hanover for any other services besides the ones you have mentioned? A. We have called upon them for participation in credits over our limit, but to date we have not used any of their services in this area, although they have agreed to participate with us on more than one loan.

Q. What is the nature of the services that you obtain from First National of Atlanta? A. Our account there basically an inactive account.

Q. How long has that account been open? A. About four months.

Q. I think you also mentioned a bank in Detroit, if I recall correctly. A. Yes.

Q. When was that account opened? A. I don't recall exactly; it's been open probably a year and a half.

Q. What basically—what basic services would you get from that bank in Detroit? A. It is also an inactive account, and while we have discussed with them some credit participations and over-the-limit loans, we have asked them for some help [263] in contacting new customers moving into our area, that sort of thing.

Q. Do you know whether any bank or banking organization owned any of the stock of Peachtree when you went out there? A. Yes, the Trust Company of Georgia Associates owned five percent of the stock of the bank.

Q. Would you know when that five-percent stock interest was purchased by Trust Company of Georgia Associates? A. Not specifically. I assume it was in—at the beginning stages of the bank.

Q. Do Trust Company of Georgia Associates own any of Peachtree stock today? A. No.

Q. Can you tell us the circumstances surrounding the change in that five-percent stock ownership by Trust Company? A. In 1970, in the early part of 19—well, in 1969, legislative action was taken to change the banking laws from citywide to basically countywide branch banking, and permitting the Atlanta banks with offices already established in DeKalb County to branch into DeKalb. That was to take effect, I believe, on January 1 of 1970. In the spring or late spring or [264] early summer of 1970, we negotiated a merger with the Trust Company of Georgia, for which we were to receive a cash payment for our stock. The merger application was submitted to the regulatory board, which governed the merger, and that was the Federal Reserve Board, and was approved.

Following that, your department, the United States Department of Justice, asked the Federal Reserve Board to reconsider, asked them to stay the merger and to reconsider the merger application for a variety of reasons, and this was done. The exact chronology, I don't remember. The Federal Reserve Board again reconsidered the merger and again approved it, and shortly or immediately thereafter, your department filed suit to enjoin the two banks from merging.

As a part of the merger agreement, either of the two banks, the Peachtree Bank or the Trust Company, could withdraw from the merger if the Justice Department were to bring suit to block the merger. For a number of reasons, we weighed the future events very, very carefully and decided to withdraw from the merger. Following that, we sold the new stock in our bank; this was approximately one year ago in August, and at that time the Trust Company of Georgia stock was also sold.

Q. Now, when you say about a year ago, could [265] you get it down—— A. In August, in August of 1971, August or September, we had our stock issue.

Q. Incidentally, can you recall when the Peachtree Bank decided to withdraw from the merger agreement? A. Well, I don't recall specifically. It was at a board meeting in May, June or July, one of those months in there; I'm not sure.

Q. Prior to last August when the five-percent stock held by Trust Company Associates was sold by it, was your bank in any way identified with the Trust Company of Georgia? A. Well, of course, it had the Trust Company name in its—as the last part of our own name; in that sense I suppose some customers identified us with the Trust Company and some didn't.

Q. What would have led a customer to identify you with Trust Company, what specific thing? A. Well, there was, on some occasions we had appeared as a part of the Trust Company advertising. This was particularly in connection with the issuance of Master Charge cards, which I think was in early 1969.

In addition, we were carried on the Trust Company statement as a five-percent bank, and along with their other five-percent banks in Augusta and Sandy [266] Springs. We were also listed in the local Trust Company maps that were distributed to their customers.

Those are some of the ways. Of course, when we solicited business from national customers or people that we thought might know something about the Trust Company, we didn't attempt to hide our affiliation with the Trust Company in any way. As a matter of fact, we promoted it.

Q. Did your bank ever consider, that is, since the time you have been president, ever consider changing its name in any way? [267] A. Yes, at one time they agreed to change our name to Trust Company of Georgia, Bank of Chamblee.

Q. Can you recall roughly when you made that decision? A. The matter was discussed sometime in mid-1969 and I think —I believe there was actually a vote taken at a Board meeting sometime in 19—in the fall of 1969.

Q. Can you recall the reason the bank did decide to take this particular action? A. Well, we felt that it would be, at that time, we felt it would be helpful to us in obtaining new business where we could capitalize on the advertising of the Trust Company; that it would more closely identify us with the Trust Company which, in our idea, in our estimation, was not a bad thing.

Q. Do you know whether or not Trust Company was approached for permission to use its name in this way? A. Well, I don't know that the bank was approached. I think we discussed it with the Trust Company lawyers, one of whom was on our Board at the time, and at least, the counsel representing the Trust Company and then they were going to take the matter up, I think, with their trademark lawyers in Washington, and subsequent to that, the banking laws changed and so we never pursued the matter. There—it was just dropped, really, at that time.

[268] Q. Did that have anything to do with the merger plans that you just described a few minutes ago? A. Well, I think that we just—that both parties really felt we had come to some type of merger decision, there wasn't any sense in going through an expensive change of name and all of the legal ramifications that might be involved if we were going to merge. But, I don't know that at that time, we dropped it at that time. I can't recall that the actual discussions of the merger had come up.

Q. Can you recall any discussions with anyone at Trust Company about the change of name? A. Not specifically.

Q. Do you have any recollection at all of talking to anyone at Trust Company about it? A. Well, all I can say is I may have discussed it with Evans Bruner who was Executive Vice President of Associates at that time. Matters of that sort, I would usually talk with him about. So—but I don't specifically recall having conversation with him about it.

Q. Do you have any recollection as to what his reaction was at all? A. Well, not recalling any specific conversation, I don't recall his reaction to it.

Q. You just mentioned, if I recall correctly, [269] something about discussing this with your lawyers. Could you explain what you meant by that? Were the lawyers you are referring to your own lawyers or somebody else's lawyers? A. Well, we were—we were represented by the law firm of King & Spalding and they also presently act and did act then as General Counsel for the Trust Company of Georgia. And one of their lawyers was on our Board at that time basically representing the Trust Company's interest in the bank on our Board.

Q. Prior to the time last—well, let's say last summer when the merger plans were abandoned, can you tell us what sort of services or assistance you were receiving from Trust Company? A. Well, we had, prior to the merger, we were using their computer operations department for all of our demand deposit accounting, installment loan accounting, and savings accounting. Their bond department was also used to analyze our securities portfolio and also to keep track of it, furnish us with a periodic reporting of it. We used their safekeeping services, which involves the holding and safekeeping of negotiable securities for which, which our bank would have in some accounts.

We would refer customers seeking trust services to the Trust Company because we had no trust [270] department of our own and customers seeking factoring services to the Trust Company.

The Trust Company, local Trust Company group of banks, when they first went into this Master Charge, it was a group called the Atlanta Plan, and they were servicing our Master Charge accounts for us. When we first went into the Master Charge, we owned our own Master Charge accounts and they were servicing them for us. Really, I suppose we used the whole range of correspondent services. We also were audited once a year, internal audit by Trust Company's auditing department.

Q. Could you explain what you mean by the servicing of Master Charge for you? A. Well, basically at that time, as we owned our own accounts, the Trust Company was handling the collection of those and was doing the administrative work with it necessary to coordinate their processing with the Southeastern Bank Card Association.

Q. Well, are you today offering Master Charge? A. Yes, but offering it as an agent bank wherein the Trust Company owns the account. The cards are still issued in our name, but payments are routed to the Trust Company for processing and all interest accumulated on accounts accrues to the Trust Company. We derive some benefit by offering the Master Charge services to our [271] merchants and we get some—on high discount merchants, we get some portion of the discount rate and as well as the opportunity to have a deposit relationship with some merchants.

Q. What was the difference in the relationship that you were indicating earlier? A. Well, we bore, under the Master Charge arrangement, initially, we bore our prorata share based on activity in the account of the expense in the accounts. Under the current relationship, all expenses of the account is borne by the, the owning bank. Not by the agent bank.

Q. How long were you bearing the accounts yourself? A. Well, we inaugurated the thing in early 1969 and the Trust Company carried the expense most of the time until about June when the program reached sort of high gear, then the expenses from our bank's standpoint became very, very heavy and then in December of 1969, the Trust Company came out and volunteered to buy it back, which they did. And it was sold back to them in January of 1970. We had actually asked the Trust Company to talk to us about setting up our own plan for administering it for not going through the Atlanta plans I described earlier or determining some way to cut expenses in the Atlanta plan.

The third alternative they came forth with, [272] and we, without much hesitation, decided to settle back to it.

Q. When you say they bought it back, would that include any of your losses that you had been incurring on it? A. Yes, they reimbursed us for the operating losses that we had experienced in the plan, less operating expenses we would have incurred as an agent bank for the same period of time.

Q. Of the items that you mentioned before we got involved with the Master Charge, that of processing, bond department, etc. those services that you were receiving from Trust Company before the merger was abandoned, are you still receiving the same services today? A. Well, we are not getting an independent—an internal audit from the Trust Company any longer. Prior to the disassociation with the Trust Company, we periodically had credit surveys made of our loans by the associate office, that is not available to us any longer for competitive reasons, obviously. Basically, most of the rest of the services are, are similar or are the same. There may be some that I have forgotten that are different.

[273] Q. From whom do you obtain your credit audits now? A. We don't have credit audits now, only through——

Q. Did you ever—excuse me. A. Only through examination of the F.D.I.C. and the state banking department.

Q. Does anyone perform any other types of audits for you? A. Yes, we have an independent audit performed by Arthur Anderson & Company.

Q. Just give us a brief description of what an independent audit would be. A. Well, it is an independent directors' audit, which is basically concerned with the internal controls of the bank, the balancing of the cash, the operations procedures, just about everything in the bank, except a review of the credit policy and the loans of the bank. Those are reviewed twice by outside examiners, as I mentioned, and so they do not—they do not perform that service for us.

Q. Before the merger was abandoned, did you receive any sort of advice from Trust Company with respect to your loan policies or lending procedures? A. You mean prior to the negotiation or the——

Q. Well, prior to the time the merger was actually abandoned last summer? [274] A. Well, I mentioned earlier the periodic credit survey which was usually done once every six months, and if there were any judgment of the survey on loan deficiencies, the chief operating officer at that time had—it was requested that he reply toward the corrective action, that type of thing, to the Associates' office. In addition, we furnished copies of all of our credit memoranda to the Associates' office, and would receive some back periodically with comments, one sort or the other, depending upon the type of credit they felt we were extending.

In addition, we did consult with the Associates' office periodically on large credits, when we felt that we needed the advice of some outside expertise.

Q. What was the purpose of sending copies of the credit memos to Trust Company? A. Well, I assume that it was for their observation, and, basically, to keep them informed as to, first of all, if we were or were not writing the memos, and then secondly, whether it would tell us something about the nature of the credit.

Q. Was that something that was being done when you first went to Peachtree or—— A. Yes.

Q. While we are on the subject of credit, did you [275] have access to Trust Company credit files before the merger was abandoned? A. Well, in a very limited way. We didn't have, as I recall, we didn't have much common business in terms of lending to their customers. Now, one or two customers we had in common, and they would, with the customer's permission, furnish us with the financial statements that had already been spread, and that type of thing.

The credit department of the Trust Company was available to us for the spreading or outlining of statements, and for credit-analysis work.

Q. Is the credit department still available in that sense? A. In a limited way, yes.

Q. Do you receive any advice from Trust Company with respect to any operational procedures? A. Well, as I mentioned earlier, we were audited by them and upon receipt of the write-up of the audit, it was usually the chief executive officer of the bank, whoever it might be, would, again, reply in writing to the Trust Company about the deficiencies or comment, if comment was necessary, in writing. And we would have conversation periodically with Mr. Bruner or others about ways to improve operating procedures, that type of [276] thing.

Q. Now, did you receive any assistance from the Trust Company with respect to any personnel problems that might have arisen? A. Well, could you give me an example of the personnel problem that they might——

Q. Right. For example, while you were the president of Peachtree and before the merger was abandoned, did you have occasion or need to hire additional employees? A. Yes. And we did request that the Trust Company assist us in this area, and we were permitted to talk with several of their people to ask them to come to work at Peachtree.

Q. Did a similar situation ever arise with respect to officers of the bank? A. Well, most of the people who came with the Trust—came from the Trust Company to us, would not come as officers. They were not officers at the Trust Company; at least this is during my relationship with the bank as president. And in this particular area we are discussing, most of them came maybe as administrative assistants, and then were later promoted to officers.

Q. Did you ever have occasion to seek advice [277] from the Trust Company on salaries to be paid any employees? A. Yes, we did discuss salaries with—or I discussed them with Mr. Bruner on occasions, and found him quite—found him very helpful in providing comparative information about salaries of the other affiliated banks, and this type of thing.

Q. Was there any particular reason for seeking such advice from Mr. Bruner? A. Well, Mr. Bruner was executive vice-president of the Associates, and also a close personal friend, at least, I felt he was a close personal friend and always had an interest in the bank, and so he was the one we would go to for this kind of information, basically, and he would be the one in the Associates' organization that could furnish it.

Q. I think you used, if I heard you right, I think you used the word "compared" or "comparative" with respect to salaries; am I correct in that? A. Right.

Q. If I understood your answer correctly. I would like to ask you why were you seeking information from Trust Company as to comparative salaries among Trust Company and Trust Company affiliated banks? A. Well, it is for the same reason that most any [278] business seeks in its area comparable or comparative salaries for clerical personnel, is to make an evaluation of the salary program, our benefits, and that type of thing. Are we in the market with our officers or are we out of it? That sort of thing, and the first place for us to go for that information, where it would be most readily available, would be Trust Company Associates.

Q. Did you receive any sort of assistance in what we might call advertising and public relations area? A. Trust Company was helpful to us in our public-relations program. They assisted us with people when we had our—the opening of our Industrial Boulevard office, and they assisted us again with personnel when we had an open house after construction of the addition to our main office.

Q. Do you receive such assistance today? A. No.

Q. Was there ever a time while you have been president of Peachtree, now this would be before—again, before the merger was abandoned, when you had a need to raise additional money or you needed more money than you had, and you had to do something to get some more money? A. Well, we raised capital in 1964, I think, we [279] sold additional stock shortly after I came there. Of course, one of the reasons—one of the indirect reasons we abandoned the merger was because of our inability to disturb the merger agreement and raise additional capital.

Q. Let's see now. Will you please go back, it was '64, I think you indicated? A. Right.

Q. Now, that was a stock issue in '64? A. Yes, that's right.

Q. Were there any additions at any times after '64 that you had to issue any kind of, I believe, either new stock or any kind of debt instruments in order to raise additional money? A. I don't believe so.

Q. Are you familiar with the—— A. Now, you are referring between that time——

Q. ——with the term "investment note"? A. Right. You are referring to that time between 1964 and the un-merger?

Q. Yes. A. Yes. You are also referring basically to the capital instruments, like additional stock or capital notes?

Q. No, I asked either a capital note or a debt [280] note. Of course, if that is a proper term, I don't know. A. Well, we did offer at the same time the Trust Company offered 7½% investment notes, which are basically simply borrowed funds. This instrument came into being somewhere in the early part of 1969, and we sold—these were 30-month investment notes, and we sold $1,000,000 worth.

Q. Was that the amount that you were trying to raise, $1,000,000? A. Well, we just started and quit when we thought we had enough, so——

Q. Now, did you receive any assistance from Trust Company in connection with the sale of these 7½% notes? A.

Yes, we did. We sold to our own customers, basically, about $350,000 in investment notes. And then, basically, our sales efforts really tapered off. Our effort was there, but we didn't sell any, and the Trust Company sold in the vicinity of $12,000,000 worth of these notes. And after their sale was curtailed, they referred their customers directly to us, and we sold their customers the remainder of the $1,000,000.

[281] Q. So far as you are aware, have the salaries of Peachtree officers always been paid by Peachtree directly? A. When I first went to the bank, I believe Mr. Jackson's salary was reimbursed to Peachtree from the Associate office. And I think the same was—the same procedure had been in effect for Mr. Williams' salary. Now as to the rest, would be an assumption before that time.

Q. I'm not sure I understand what you meant when you said reimbursed. A. Well, the Peachtree would pay their salaries, but then be reimbursed from the Trust Company or the Associate's office. After Mr. Jackson left, that was no longer the case. So, I am not intimately familiar with the procedure.

Q. Are you aware of whether or not a demand deposit was ever maintained at Peachtree by Trust Company? A. Yes, I think there was a deposit there by the Associates, by the Trust Company's associates, but it was withdrawn over a period of a year and several months after, shortly after I came or during the time I came, sometime in that period of time.

Q. Can you recall today in what amount the deposit was? A. I don't remember exactly.

Q. At the time last August, I believe you indicated, [282] when you sold additional stock and Trust Company Associates sold back its five per cent, to your knowledge, did any, was any stock sold back to the bank by any individuals connected with Trust Company, either as officers, employees or Directors, or anything of that sort? A. Yes, several of the employee officer groups sold their stock at that time, but some still retained their stock.

Q. Would you have any idea at all who, as to the number of shares that were sold back by people like that? A. I really wouldn't.

Q. Incidentally, do you happen to know offhand how many stockholders you had prior to that recent, or prior to the sale of stock in August of last year, how many stockholders you had just prior to that and how many you have today? A. Yes, we had about 200, 210 roughly. Today, we have roughly 466.

Q. Does Peachtree have any group health and accident insurance policies? A. Yes, we do.

Q. By whom are they administered? A. We administer them ourselves.

Q. And where are they, where are the policies placed if that is the proper term? [283] A. The insurance carrier?

Q. Yes. A. The Provident Life & Accident Company of Chattanooga.

Q. How long has this firm in Chattanooga been the carrier for the policies? A. About four months, five months.

Q. Who was the carrier before then? A. New York Life and Prudential Life Insurance Companies.

Q. And have they been the carriers since you have been President of Peachtree? A. Yes, there was a change of one for hospitalization and one for life, but basically, the insurance was carried through the group carriers of the Trust Company Associates' office and our insurance was handled by the same, same companies that handled the affiliated banks.

Q. Are you indicating that those were some sort of group policies? A. Yes, yes, always.

Q. Who belonged to the group? A. All of the affiliated banks.

Q. What other sorts of insurance does your bank carry that—this would be insurance not on its employees, but on its banking operations or banking premises? [284] A. We carry, of course, a whole range of extended coverage and liability insurance on our building, and on our bank property, and we also carry banker's blanket bond insurance which carries the rest of the internal protections of the bank.

Q. Have you ever had any arrangements with respect to those types of insurance similar to what you had with your group health and accident policies? A. Well, at one time our bank was carried under the Trust Company's plan, almost as a branch, and then in 1969, because of some regulatory ruling, we had to purchase our own banker's blanket bond. This had nothing to do with the merger or un-merger. It was just a new regulatory ruling of some sort and the premiums were considerably higher, of course, by that time as opposed to what they were as sort of a branch operation.

Q. Does Peachtree have a profit sharing plan? A. Yes.

Q. Who administers your plan? A. It is administered by the Trust Company of Georgia, Trust Department, under our direction.

Q. Has it always been administered by Trust Company since it was first instituted? A. Yes.

Q. Prior to the merger plans being abandoned, did [285] you or any of your officers attend any instructional classes, meetings, seminars, etc. held by Trust Company? A. Well, in the fall of every year for, I guess four years or so, I was invited to attend the Trust Company affiliate meetings at Sea Island, Georgia, which was a Directors meeting at that time. And usually, I went by myself and the last couple of years, I took either a Director or associate with me. The Trust Company, for a couple or three years, had an evaluation session, sort of let's look where we are going session at Callaway Gardens for a weekend in the spring. I went, and I believe I took an associate with me, I believe I took an associate with me two years, if it were held three years, I don't recall.

Q. Did you ever have occasion to seek assistance from Trust Company in terms of training any of your employees for a particular job? A. Yes, we had one of our employees farmed out in the affiliate organization doing the same credit survey in other banks I had reference to earlier that was done in our bank periodically. We also had this particular employee spend more time in Trust Company's credit department learning something about spreading statements and that type thing, basic credit department policy. We had an employee in the collection department for a while being trained in collections and I also attended the Master Charge [286] meetings as part of being the Atlanta plan and we had a lot of those back during the early days of Master Charge.

Q. Have you ever purchased any of your bank supplies from or through Trust Company? A. We have had a very modest amount of supplies, standard cards, that type of thing, from the supply department of Trust Company

Q. Have you made any of these purchases since last summer? A. No, we have not.

Q. Were the salaries of the officers of Peachtree ever reviewed in any way by Trust Company to your recollection? A. Well, only insofar as discussion might have been held with Bruner about those particular salaries as they compared with salaries in the affiliate system, that type thing.

Q. Since you have been President of Peachtree, have any vacancies in your Board of Directors occurred? A. Yes, we had one of our charter Board members died, I guess maybe a year after I became President, 1968, maybe '69.

Q. Did you seek any advice or assistance from Trust Company in connection with replacing that Director? A. Well, we—yes, I did. I talked with [287] Mr. Bruner about possible candidates which we had in mind.

Q. And what were you hoping Mr. Bruner would do in that regard? A. Well, it was generally my policy to discuss any major change in the Board of Directors or any additional Directors with all of the significant stockholders of the bank; and I felt that somebody that owned five per cent of the bank ought to have a comment about it regardless and in the case of the particular replacement that we added to the Board, the Trust Company was in total agreement.

Q. Would you know how many of your Directors, now this would be after you became President at Peachtree, how many of the Directors on your Board at that time had any association with Trust Company, particularly in terms of being customers of Trust Company? A. Let's see, five or six.

Q. At that time, how about—what was the size of the Board? A. I believe we had nine Board members, I'm not sure. I think there were nine Board members.

Q. You were a Director, weren't you? A. Yes, that's right.

Q. Did you indicate earlier that a lawyer from King & Spalding was on the Board of Directors? A. Yes.

[288] Q. Was he on the Board when you became President? A. Yes.

Q. Now, after the merger plans with the Trust Company were abandoned, did any of your officers or employees leave Peachtree? A. No, not after that time.

Q. Have you hired any additional officers or employees since last summer? A. Yes, we have hired—basically, we have hired —we have hired a number of employees and we have hired one other officer.

Q. How have you gone about, first of all, acquiring the additional employees? A. Well, by word of mouth or by advertising locally. In some cases, we have asked the Trust Company to refer people to us that might be in a clerical position that were leaving the Trust Company and lived in our direction and wanted to work out closer to us. We have also interviewed a number of the other prospective employees of the Trust Company. They sent several people out and we hired a couple of them.

[289] Q. Did I understand you correctly to say you have hired one officer? A. That's correct.

Q. Since last September. How did you find him? A. Well, he came to us; he came to us from the Trust Company. And knowing something of our bank and our plans, asked if there might be an opportunity for him. And we subsequently talked with the Trust Company people and then with him.

Q. Prior to the merger plans being abandoned last summer, how would you have characterized your relationship with Trust Company? A. Well, I think we were considered as a part of the family, so to speak, a very close relationship.

Q. Do you, by any chance, offer what we have heard referred to as a lock-box program? A. Yes, we do.

Q. How do you offer that? Do you offer that through the use of any correspondent? A. No, we have several lock-box accounts and we offer it by going directly to the customer and calling on them and offering it. It is a very simple sort of system that we use, but the checks are mailed to the post-office box, and we go pick up the checks and deposit them and make some record of the deposit, and send that along to the customer.

[290] Q. Do you use the services of another bank in any way in performing that service? A. No.

Q. Do you do any accounts receivable financing at Peachtree? A. A modest amount.

Q. There again, do you use the services of or assistance of another bank in performing that type of financing? A. No, that doesn't lend itself to an outside correspondent or another bank being involved.

Q. Last summer, before the merger was dropped, how many offices did Peachtree operate? A. We had two offices.

Q. How many are you operating today? A. Four.

Q. When were these additional offices opened? A. One was opened in, I believe it was in April; it was our Embry Hills office—I'm sorry, it was before that time. It was in a temporary facility, in a trailer, in February, I believe. And the other office was opened in June or July at another location, also in a temporary facility, in a trailer.

Q. Were the applications seeking regulatory approval of those two branches, were those applications [291] filed before or after the merger plans were dropped? A. After the merger plans were—after the un-merger.

Q. I think you may have already, in effect, indicated the answer to this question when you were telling us about the sale of stock last August. Was there any connection between that sale of stock and these two additional offices that you have opened? A. Well, we felt we knew that we had to raise additional capital in order to expand the bank, and so after examining several courses of action, we determined that the best thing to do was to raise additional equity capital, and that was the reason for the sale of the stock.

Q. Do you have any further applications pending for branch approval? A. Yes, we have one pending now.

Q. Since the un-merger, have you raised money in any other way besides the stock issue last August? A. Yes, we sold a $1,000,000 capital note; that was completed in June of this year.

Q. Could you give us a sort of running account of the deposits, the loans and assets of Peachtree over the past two years? A. Well, I can tell you basically where we are [292] now and where we were a year ago, roughly. Our total assets are presently, or as of June 30th of this year, are about $31,000,000 maybe thirty-one and a half million as opposed to twenty-one and a half million one year ago. Deposits account for about eight million of that increase. The remainder in capital and retention of earnings. The new $1,000,000 note I just mentioned, the other new capital. Loans are up also, correspondingly, increased correspondingly.

Q. I would like to find out what the deposits, loans and assets were from mid-year '70; can you tell us that of your own memory or would you need some assistance? A. I would have to go back and look at a statement, I think, to give you the specifics of it. It seems to me that about year-end last year—well, that wouldn't be applicable; that is not what you asked for. I would have to refer to this statement to give you a specific.

Q. I have here—these are the statements you are referring to, the consolidated report of condition? A. The year-end and mid-year statements of condition, right.

Q. Yeah, I have these from mid-year '70 through [293] mid-year of '72. A. Okay. Mid-year of 1970, total assets were $17,556,000, and the total deposits at that time were fourteen million eight, total loans were approximately $10,349,000. 12-31-1970, total assets were $19,683,000; total deposits $16,-464,000; total loans $10,443,000.

Mid-year '71, just referred to, total assets $21,283,000; total deposits $17,772,000; loans $12,600,000.

Year-end '71, total assets $24,615,000; total deposits $20,-251,000; total loans $15,200,000—220,000.

In mid-year this year, total assets $31,484,000; total deposits $25,695,000; total loans $19,504,000.

Q. Could you give us an idea of how your earnings as of mid-year '72 compared with earnings for mid-year of '71? A. They are up about twenty, about 22% over 1971.

Q. Now, do you presently have any plans for additional branch offices? A. Well, we have no specific sites outside the application which we have pending, which you referred to earlier. We do have plans for additional branch [294] offices in DeKalb County.

Q. Do you presently have enough capitalization to cover the pending branch application, assuming that it receives regulatory approval? A. Well, I hope we do. I think we do, yes. I don't know what the regulatory people think.

Q. Could you categorize for us the types of customers that your bank primarily serves? A. Well, I guess I would divide the—I would divide them generally into commercial, retail and individual customers. The commercial would be customers engaged, maybe, in manufacturing and distributing, that type of thing. Retail would be just as the name implies, local merchants of one sort or the other, discount stores and that sort of customer. And individuals, as the name im—the name is self-explanatory.

Q. Are you able to serve these three classes of customers adequately, from your own standpoint? A. Well, we would like to offer them some more services in terms of offering them some trust services, for example, directly. But, we don't have any intention of doing that right away. We are not able to extend large lines of credit to significant commercial customers who might be seeking—so our ability to attract that [295] type of deposit is limited.

Q. Other than the large-line-of-credit problem, are you able to—that is, your own bank, are you able to serve the needs of large commercial customers? A. Well, we have been up to this point. We have been able to obtain for them services that we didn't have generally, either through a correspondent or we have just had to innovate, like this lock-box thing, and start servicing it ourselves.

Mr. Kinkaid: Excuse me one moment, Your Honor.

Would this be an appropriate time for a little break, sir?

The Court: All right. We will take a ten-minute recess.

[296] Mr. Kinkaid: We have no further questions.

The Court: Mr. Doyle?

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Doyle

Q. Mr. Ginden, when you first went to Peachtree Bank and Trust Company, you received your profit sharing plan from the Trust Company of Georgia; did you not? A. That's correct.

Q. At that time, Peachtree Bank did not have a profit sharing plan? A. That's correct.

Q. Subsequently one was put in? A. Yes.

Q. When it was put in, it was not an integrated plan with the Trust Company's plan; was it? A. No, it was a separate plan.

Q. Does the same hold true for profit sharing?

First, had you qualified for the profit sharing plan while you were at—we were just talking about profit sharing. I'm sorry, I'm going to talk about pensions.

You hadn't qualified for a pension when you were at Trust Company? A. No.

Q. You did subsequently qualify for a pension at Peachtree? [297] A. No, we have no plan.

Q. Does the Trust Company have a pension plan? A. Yes.

Q. While you were President and before that Branch Manager at Peachtree Bank, did you regularly attend staff and officers meetings that were held on a monthly or weekly basis with Trust Company? A. No, other than the meetings I have described earlier.

Q. Yes, sir. When you were President of Peachtree Bank and Trust Company, did the senior officers of the Trust Company Bank or Trust Company associates regularly and continuously sit as advisory directors with your Board of Directors? A. You mean at the Board meetings?

Q. Yes, sir. A. No, they did not. They were invited to do so.

Q. And as a matter of fact, their attendance was more on a sporadic perhaps once or twice a year kind of basis? A. That's correct.

Q. Did you in the normal course of regularly—on a weekly or monthly basis, monthly I suppose, receive from Trust Company performance charts and tables showing operating ratios, earnings on assets, that sort of thing? [298] A. We received periodic information from the affiliate banks, and my memory as to exactly what we got is really hazy.

Q. Do you remember receiving those performance charts and tables on your bank? A. You mean, how we stacked up generally?

Q. Yes, showing how your performing ratio was and the rest. A. Yes, periodically we get those things from the affiliate offices after a comparison is made with our bank, banks in DeKalb and the banks in the North DeKalb area.

[299] Q. Right. Then, did you make periodic budget projections of earnings, and where you wanted loans to be in the next quarter or next year? A. We did that on an annual basis and furnished them to Trust Company affiliates. Well, that was very informal. We usually furnished them—we usually discussed it with the board, and if they requested a budget from us, we would send it to them.

Q. But, this was not a regularized procedure? A. I don't recall sending any of our budgets to the affiliate banks, to the Associates' office.

Q. Right. And with regard to your budgets and projections then, it follows that you didn't receive any sort of goalposts or reviews that you heard discussed this morning? A. No.

Q. Or anything of that nature. You mentioned that you discussed with Trust Company officers salary scales to see if you were in line, that sort of thing? A. Right.

Q. Did the Trust Company affiliates or associates make recommendations to your board or your officers as it tied into performance? A. Not while I was president.

Q. Was there—were the salaries of the Trust Company officers and employees, [300] including your own, coordinated with the Trust Company system salaries? A. I don't—what? I don't understand what you mean coordinated.

Q. Well, you have told me that you had a separate profit-sharing plan. What I am wondering is, was an officer or employee portable with his package of benefits within the system? Was a conscious effort made to keep him coordinated within the system, so far as the benefits and salaries at your bank were concerned? A. Well, I think I testified earlier that we only took one officer from the Trust Company and the others that came were employees and——

Q. Right. A. Insurance would be transferrable, that type of benefit.

Q. Right. A. You have already alluded to profit-sharing.

Q. Right, that was—— A. Which was not transferrable.

Q. Right. All right, sir. Did you receive at Peachtree Bank something in the nature of this general operating guide? Did you see that this morning? A. I didn't—— [301] Q. A general operating guide or anything of this nature from the Trust Company, which would have been distributed to Trust Company branches, which would also have been distributed to you for guidance in running your bank. A. No, we received an installment-loan operating guide, but nothing of that magnitude.

Q. All right, sir. Now, you earlier mentioned, I think, on direct examination, that you used your Detroit correspondent, I think, to help you with new business coming into your area? A. That's correct.

Q. You earlier discussed the bank in North DeKalb. Is it fair to characterize your fairly competitive area as being the North DeKalb area? A. At the present time that is true.

Q. Your name, identification, localizes you in an area going out Peachtree Road and in the northeast quadrant, I suppose, of the metropolitan area? A. That is basically where our business is, that is true.

Q. Do you presently consider yourself to be an effective competitor in that part of DeKalb County south of Decatur, South DeKalb area? A. No.

[302] Q. You discussed your capital, your capital in connection with your expansion. Do you presently anticipate or do you foresee any difficulties with regard to a continuation of expansion by branching on your present capital? A. Well, a great deal depends upon the adequacy of our earnings, whether we continue to leave them in the bank or not, and the attitude of the regulatory people. We would hope that we would not have to raise any additional capital for a reasonable period of time, another two or three years. That is, any additional equity capital.

Q. As a result of the change in the branch banking law, has the location of new branches from banks in Atlanta out in DeKalb County posed any difficulty or do you see that it poses any difficulty with regard to free expansion of branches by your bank? A. Well, there aren't as many spots to go as there used to be, and, basically, the total market has been diluted by the addition of other offices in the county. We still plan to expand.

Q. After your bank and the Trust Company were sued by the Anti-Trust Division with regard to the merger, you told us on direct examination that for a number of reasons you decided to withdraw from the merger agreement. [303] Was one of those reasons related to your capital situation? A. Yes, it was.

Q. You had a cash transaction with the Trust Company; is that not correct? A. That's correct.

Q. And during the period that it would take to litigate, your stockholders would have received only an interest payment on their equity? A. That's correct, providing the litigation was successful. They would not receive anything if the litigation were not successful.

Q. Did that play a substantial or major part in the determination of your bank not to fight, not to litigate? A. That was a significant part of the decision.

Q. All right, sir. With regard to your stockholders, you told us that you discussed major changes with all of your major stockholders. A. Yes.

Q. Generally. Would you identify the stockholder or stockholder group which has the largest percentage of shares in your bank? A. Mostly the board of directors.

Q. And does one family, the Embry family, control [304] a significant block of stock in your bank? A. Yes, approximately 20%.

Q. And is that the largest block? A. Yes.

Q. Do you have any other families or individuals who own a share of stock in excess of, say, 5%? A. I don't believe so.

Q. Do you own in excess of 5% A. No.

Q. Did you then? A. No.

Q. You told us that your board considered changing the name, and I believe it was your testimony that they voted to change the name? A. Right.

Q. To the Trust Company, Trust Company of Georgia Bank of Chamblee? A. That's correct.

Q. Now, before the name was changed, was it your view that all of your customers identified your bank with the Trust Company? A. No, I think I said some did and some didn't really.

Q. And part of the reason or consideration of the name change was for those who didn't give them that [305] identification; is that correct? A. That's correct, particularly the new customers.

Q. Was any part of the consideration whether or not to change the name in response to the name change at C&S Chamblee? A. I don't recall when the name change took place at C&S, Chamblee, and I can't say how much it influenced our thinking.

Q. All right, sir. You have told us that presently you do not receive any credit surveys from Trust Company. A. That's correct.

Q. Although you did receive them before. A. Yes.

Q. And you stated for competitive reasons. A. Well, we have not requested them, don't know whether they would be provided if we requested them. We don't really want them for competitive reasons.

Q. All right, sir. You had them before? A. Yes.

Q. And that is why you were part of the family? A. That's correct.

Q. Now, before that time, was your bank competing against the Trust Company? [306] A. Well, we felt more as if we were an arm of the Trust Company in that area, and I suppose we were competing against them but not on a—on a head-to-head basis. Our—— [307] Q. You didn't have any formal agreements with the Trust Company that you were not going to compete against them, did you? A. No, we did not.

Q. You compete now against C&S Banks, don't you? A Among others, yes.

Q. You have a branch of the C&S Chamblee Bank across the street from you, down the street from you? A. In both our locations and in the Chamblee location, that's correct, right.

Q. And you compete against that C&S Chamblee branch as if you were competing against C&S? A. Right.

Q. You wouldn't compete against it any different if it were a branch of C&S Emory, would you? A. That's really a difficult question to answer, but I don't know what it would be like if it were a branch of C&S Emory. If C&S Emory and C&S systems are the same, then the answer is true. If there is some difference in C&S Emory, then the answer is not true.

Q. And did you tell us on direct examination that because of the need for capital and expansion from the time of its organization until the present, your bank has not paid a cash dividend? A. I did not say that in direct examination, but [308] that is true.

Mr. Doyle: If it please the Court, may I have just a couple of minutes.

Q. Mr. Ginden, going back to the question of your ownership of your bank's stock, and consulting with major stockholders, who beyond Mr. Embry would be constituted a major stockholder in your bank? A. Well, most of the Board members with two exceptions own from three to five per cent of the stock.

Q. Of the major stockholders in your bank, are any Trust Company officers, Directors or employees included within that? A. Yes, one is a Trust Company officer now.

Q. And who is that now? A. Mr. Fitzgerald.

Q. And are there any others, major stockholders who you consider significant that you consult with before a major change? A. No, there are no other Trust Company employees, there are other major stockholders.

Q. No other major stockholders who are Trust Company employees? A. That is correct.

Q. And you've told us that you have less than five per cent stock ownership in your bank? [309] A. Myself, personally?

Q. Yes. A. That's correct.

Q. What per cent do you have, Mr. Ginden? A. About one per cent.

Q. Has the Trust Company of Georgia placed any of its branches in your primary trade area? A. Not yet.

Mr. Doyle: Those are all the questions I have of Mr. Ginden.

Mr. Kinkaid: May I have just one moment, Your Honor?

Redirect Examination

By Mr. Kinkaid

Q. Mr. Ginden, you were asked a while ago about those rather large volumes over there, various manuals that circulated around C&S and I believe you indicated that, if I understood you correctly, that you had never gotten anything quite that voluminous from Trust Company. Did I understand you correctly in that? A. That is what I was saying, yes.

Q. Did you as a matter of fact receive, from time to time correspondence of any kind, bulletins, memoranda, letters from Trust Company about any kind of banking procedures or banking operations? [310] A. Well, we periodically receive information about new services they were offering. We used to get their little internal newspaper that they had all the time. I referred to, I think, the installment loan manual that we had. We, of course, receive all their quarterly earnings information, as well as an occasional packet of their full services, including maybe a new account sheet that had been developed or maybe something like that.

Q. You were, I think, a Branch Manager at one time for Trust Company? A. Yes, I was acting Branch Manager. I was not a Branch Manager.

Q. Does Trust Company distribute manuals of that kind, operating manuals around among its branches? A. Well, I can't answer your question very well because I recall having some type of basic manual. But it's been so many years ago, I don't really remember what was in it. But it seems to me when I went from one branch to the other, I carried something with me that had some operating information in it, but I don't——

Q. Did you by chance carry the manual with you when you went to Peachtree? A. I think I took it with me, but I didn't refer to it.

Q. If you had needed information on operating, [311] any information out of the operating bulletins that Trust Company had distributed among its branches, would you have been able to obtain that information from Trust Company? A. Yes, I think so.

Q. The gentleman that was referred to, Mr. Embry I believe it was, what is his business? A. He is in the mortgage business, real estate mortgage and development business.

Q. Was he one of the, or is he one of the Directors that you indicated earlier was, to your knowledge, a Trust Company customer? A. Yes, he is.

Q. The question that you were asked about, whether you compete with, when you compete with C&S Chamblee, are you competing with the C&S Banks. Would your answer have been any different a few years ago, before Chamblee National Bank changed its name to C&S Bank of Chamblee? A. Well, of course, at that time, we were the only two banks in the area. I think the answer would have been that we were competing with C&S Bank or Chamblee National Bank, which we have always considered our major competition out there.

Mr. Kinkaid: No further questions, Your Honor.

The Court: You may step down.

[312] Mr. Stern: We wish to call Warren Jackson.

Whereupon,

WARREN JACKSON

was called as a witness by and on behalf of the Government, and having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination

By Mr. Stern

Q. Would you state your name, please. A. Warren T. Jackson, Jr.

Q. Where are you employed, Mr. Jackson? A. First National Bank of Tucker.

Q. What is your title there? A. President.

Q. How long have you held that position? A. Just about three months.

Q. Could you give us a precise date? A. July 10th was my date of—first date on the job.

Q. And you, again, as President? A. I was elected on July 12th.

Q. By whom? A. By the Board of Directors.

Q. Of? A. First National Bank of Tucker.

Q. Where were you employed previously? [313] A. Trust Company of Georgia.

Q. And what was your title there? A. I was Vice President and Branch Manager.

Q. Where? A. Northside Parkway.

Q. And could you tell us briefly where that is? A. That's at West Paces Ferry Road and Expressway, Northside Parkway.

Q. How long did you hold that position? A. Four years.

Q. Could you start at the beginning of your involvement with banking, when you first entered the banking field and just chronologically take us up to the present? A. I graduated from Emory in 1957, June of '57. I began credit training programs in June, was on the credit training program for about two years, was promoted and moved into the commercial accounts section, main office. Stayed there about six months and then became an employee of the Peachtree Bank and Trust Company where I was Branch Manager for about eighteen months.

I came back to the Trust Company and became Assistant Manager of the Buckhead office of the Trust Company and was there for about three years and then became Manager of the Northside Parkway office in June of '68.

[314] Q. Could you briefly describe the events which led up to your becoming president of First National Bank of Tucker?

A. I was contacted by Larry Morris, and he had acquired the bank in April of this year, and he was seeking someone to lead his bank. He made an offer to me in early June. I did some investigation and sought, having completed fifteen years with the Trust Company, to determine if it was proper to make such a move. I did determine it would be an extremely advantageous move, and I did resign from the Trust Company or tender my resignation on June 24th and left on the 7th of July.

Q. Now, you said you had completed fifteen years with the Trust Company. You did say that you had been working in Peachtree? A. Right.

Q. Do you include that with your employment with the Trust Company? A. Right.

Q. When you say you determined that it would be advantageous for you to leave a long career where you had advanced to quite a good position with Trust Company to go with First National Bank of Tucker, what did you mean by advantageous? A. Well, financially it was an extremely interesting [315] situation. It was an opportunity to broaden my experience in banking, and, thirdly, I wanted the opportunity to run the show. I wanted to be the red tape rather than be a victim of it.

Q. Now, when you say to be the red tape, allowing for the humor inherent in that, what else does your present position mean to you as a part from what would have been your career with a large bank? A. Well, I am definitely part of the decision-making force in the First National Bank of Tucker. And, I was very far removed from that area at the Trust Company by virtue of the size.

Q. When you say you are a part of the decision-making force at the Tucker bank, how do you mean that force? What else is a part of that force besides yourself? A. Obviously the board of directors to whom I am obligated to perform the work.

Q. That is the board of directors of the First—— A. Right.

Q. ——of the First National Bank of Tucker. A. Right.

Q. Are there any other elements in the decision-making process? A. No.

[316] Q. Just yourself and the board? A. Right.

Q. You also stated that you made an investigation into Tucker before deciding whether to take the job there. Could you describe, briefly, what that investigation involved? A. Well, Trust Company represents people of high integrity, the management, ownership and the leaders, and I wanted to be certain that I was not going into any less circumstances. Secondly, I wanted to be sure that the ownership did not plan to play games with the bank, that there was, in fact, an opportunity there to grow. And I was assured of that, and I contacted numerous people who had met the primary stockholder, Mr. Larry Morris, and knew him personally. And I obtained enough confidence that he was a man of his word, and I did have a contract to clarify a number of items that would help me make the decision.

Q. And have your experiences since that time borne out your impressions? A. Right.

Q. At the time you became president of the First National Bank of Tucker, was there any existing relationship between that bank and the First National Bank of Atlanta? [317] A. There was a relationship.

Q. How would you describe that relationship? A. Perhaps best as a branch, a quasi-branch.

Q. Could you elaborate on that? A. Well, there were a number of functions that were performed by the First National Bank for this independent bank, and the transition would be made at such time as the First National Bank of Tucker acquired the management.

Q. Now, has that transition been made? A. Yes, it has.

Q. Have you then acquired all the necessary management? A. Yes, right.

Q. Now, you said that there were certain functions being performed, and that this was why you regarded it as a branch. A. Right.

Q. Could you tell us what those functions were? A. Very broadly, the bookkeeping operations were transferred to the First National of Tucker. Secondly, the bank fund management had been handled by the bank. Thirdly, the bank accounting had been handled by the First National. We acquired that. And then, lastly, some very minute areas in the loan operations.

[318] Q. Are there specific functions within these general areas that are involved? A. Yes, there are.

Q. Could you tell us what they are? A. To give you some sequence, I did bring a list here.

Q. Do you have copies of that? A. Yes, I do.

Q. May I have the copies?

Mr. Stern: Would Your Honor wish to see this, or he is going to just talk about them.

A. This is basically the sequence in which these things came back. First, the bookkeeping operation was brought to the premises. This includes the proof transit operation, cancelling of checks, filing of cancelled checks, the mailing of statements and cancelled checks, and then all the miscellaneous things, such as insufficient funds checks, stop-payments and overdrafts are handled. In the general bank accounting, we assume the loan-ledger posting, the property-ledger posting, income and expense accounting, all regulatory reports and bill-paying. In the management of bank funds, we now determine our liquidity need, and we invest the surplus fund and finally, in the loan area, [319] we prepare our own commercial-loan ticklers. It was necessary to establish loan policy, and we have now assumed the installment-loan collection procedure, and we also seek to recover any lost loans. We probably have left out some minor things, but these are the larger items that have come back, and basically in this sequence.

Q. Do you handle your own payroll system? A. Yes, well, we have a correspondent service with First National Bank. They prepare the forms and send us the checks.

Q. They even make out your own checks? A. Right.

Q. These are the checks that pay your employees? A. Right.

Q. Are there any functions in connection with the payroll system that you do handle now? A. The posting throughout the proper accounts in the bank.

Q. Okay. Could you briefly go down this list once more, and explain, first of all, what is proof transit. A. This is simply the processing of checks for clearance on other banks, and it is handled through the First National Bank.

[320] Q. These are checks that are brought to your bank but are drawn on other banks? A. Right.

Q. Now, what mechanically do you do in proof transit operations? A. We actually proof totals and submit them in a cash letter.

Q. Does this involve the stamping of the magnetic numbers on those checks, or is that done by First National of Atlanta? A. It is necessary to encode some. We have a great number of our checks are encoded previously so——

Q. Who codes those, your bank? A. Well, in any exceptions we would.

Q. What does bill-paying mean? A. Simply the paying of the obligations of the bank.

Q. Its own internal problems? A. Right, right.

Q. On management of bank funds, what does this involve? A. Well, previously the First National had looked at the surplus funds of the bank and decided when investments would be appropriate, and now it is our position to determine the liquidity needs and invest [321] according to those needs.

Q. Do you do all of this by yourself? A. Yes, we do.

Q. Without anybody's advice? A. We do have a correspondent service with First National and feel free to call on them for advice in making any purchases or sales of securities.

Q. You feel free to call on them? A. Right.

Q. Do you, in fact, call on them? A. We do occasionally.

Q. You described this advice as a correspondent service? A. Right.

Q. You do regard it as such? A. Yes.

Q. Do you pay them in some way for it? A. Yes, we do.

Q. How? A. On a fee basis.

Q. Could you describe what is involved with the accounting function at your bank, the mechanical functions which you have taken over since you have come there? A. This is simply maintaining all income and [322] expense ledgers, so we might come up with a statement of condition and also a statement of income for a given period of time, of course, the daily-statement condition.

Q. All right. Do you handle accruals? A. Yes.

Q. What does that involve? A. Simply accruing either income or expenses, and, again, it is a procedure of—an accounting procedure.

Q. What does it mean to accrue income? A. To take a loan for a given period of time, over ninety days, and then for each thirty day period, you would accrue certain or, actually on a daily basis, you would accrue earnings through that date.

Q. If a loan had been made by the branch prior to the time this relationship changed, as you described it, and I assume that the—I am sorry, and if the loan had been credited to that branch, would not this accrual have happened anyway? A. Yes.

Q. What was the change that was involved with regard to accruals? A. The First National Bank of Atlanta maintained the records.

Q. There was a record-keeping function? [323] A. Yes, right.

Q. What is write-offs? A. Write-offs, depreciation, and that type of thing, item.

Q. So that record-keeping function was also—— A. Yes, right.

Q. Could you describe what type of loan functions have been turned back, what you have had to assume? A. Well, they computerize loan ticklers, commercial loan ticklers, and during the transition they terminated that, and we found it more advantageous for us to prepare our own ticklers. We had the personnel to do it. They had done our installment-loan collection work through August 1st; we now do this on our own, based on our personnel. And we do pursue any loans that have been charged off for possible recovery. Those are the basic collection functions.

Q. You do your own collection functions? A. Yes.

Q. What does it mean to prepare a commercial-loan tickler? A. This is simply a record of a given loan coming into a bank, information that is sent both to the customer and kept internally as a reminder for maturity dates and so forth.

[324] Q. And it sent to the customer, you say? A. Yes.

Q. Does this involve such things as coupons on loans? A. It cannot on commercial loans, but on installment loans, it does.

Q. Now, with regard to coupon books, do you make out your own coupons? A. No, we have a service through First National that does this for us, computer service.

Q. What about the mechanical handling of such coupons when they are sent in by the payer of the loan? A. That is done by our tellers, and then our bookkeeping department.

[325] Q. Are they sent directly to your bank? A. Yes, right.

Q. Are these coupons in some way geared to be run through a computer? A. No.

Q. So that all the bookkeeping involved would be payment of a loan is done at your bank? A. Right.

Q. Was this the case prior to the time the relationship changed? A. No.

Q. Do you handle savings certificates? A. Yes.

Q. Do you do all the necessary functions involved with them? A. Yes, we do.

Q. Have you always? A. No.

Q. What was involved in that transfer? A. Primarily on certificates where checks were issued on some sequent basis, quarterly or annually, First National Bank had that set up on a computer and we handled it physically.

Q. Without any computer being involved? A. Right.

[326] Q. How would you break out the mechanical functions involved in your overall loan operations? Would you say a majority is handled at your own premises or a majority through a correspondent relationship? A. The majority is handled on our premises.

Q. On your premises? A. Right.

Q. Does the phrase corporate trust function have any meaning to you? A. Yes.

Q. What does it mean? A. It can mean a number of things. I have occasion to think of stock transfer, handling any type of—well, First National Bank has up until recently handled our stock registry.

Q. When you say First National? A. First National Bank of Atlanta, right.

Q. Up until recently, has handled your stock registry? A. Right.

Q. What is your stock registry? A. Simply a record of all stockholders updated.

Q. So that if a stockholder in your bank were to sell stock to someone else, that transfer would be handled by First National of Atlanta? [327] A. Correct.

Q. But not now? A. That's correct.

Q. Who handles it now? A. We do.

Q. Was there any particular reason, to your knowledge, why this was handled by First National of Atlanta? A. A matter of convenience and personnel to handle it.

Q. Is this a difficult function to perform? A. Not necessarily.

Q. The First National Bank of Tucker, to your knowledge, was previously incapable of even posting the sale of stock in the bank? A. I don't know prior to First National's acquisition of the bank. I do not know.

Q. But the time First National Bank of Atlanta gained its interest in First National Bank of Tucker on the basis of what knowledge you gained personally through your own investigation, was even such a function as this something which First National of Tucker could not perform? A. Probably the personnel, they could not have, due to the numbers of transfers and so forth and the time it takes to properly keep such a record.

[328] Q. Is that—is there that much transfer of the stock? A. There was at the time First National acquired the bank.

Q. Now, you say you now do this yourself? A. Yes.

Q. And all registration that's involved with it? A. Correct.

Q. Has the assumption of these additional functions created any need for additional personnel? A. Yes.

Q. Could you describe to us in what way additional personnel has been needed over, let me make it a little more precise. Have you had to create additional positions or have you had simply to fill vacancies? A. We have had to create positions to fill these jobs.

Q. Would you tell me which positions have had actually to be created new? A. All right. In the bookkeeping area, we added a proof operator, head bookkeeper, one full-time bookkeeper and one part-time bookkeeper. In the accounting end of the bank, we added an Assistant Cashier, general bookkeeper. Those are the additions.

Q. All right. Now could you tell me, first of all, [329] what a proof operator does? A. She proofs checks, lists items, totals them and submits them in a cash letter for clearance.

Q. Does she do any of this stamping on checks that sometimes has to be made? A. No.

Q. Someone else does it at your bank? A. Yes.

Q. Who does it? A. One of the assistant bookkeepers.

Q. When you looked around for a proof operator, did you have any difficulty finding someone with the requisite experience? A. No.

Q. Are you satisfied with the quality of the individual you hired? A. Yes.

Q. What does a head bookkeeper do? A. She supervises the bookkeeping department.

Q. Is this the internal function of the bank? A. Yes.

Q. Now is there a difference between bookkeeping and general bookkeeping? A. Yes.

Q. Describe that difference. [330] A. Bookkeeping is really the processing of checks. The general bank accounting is in operation only for compiling records and again accruing income.

Q. The general bookkeeping would be an internal business accounting like any business would have? A. Correct.

Q. And bookkeeping means the actual banking? A. Right, right, the processing of checks, handling of checks and items.

Q. Now you also hired a head bookkeeper you said? A. Yes.

Q. You are satisfied with that individual? A. Yes.

Q. Where did your head bookkeeper come from? A. From the Government.

Q. Where did your proof operator come from? A. Off the street, pardon me, off the street.

Q. Somebody who was looking for a job? A. Yes, she had banking experience.

Q. Your full-time bookkeeper, where did he or she come from? A. She was a housewife and came back to the bank. She had been a bookkeeper prior.

Q. She had prior experience? A. Yes.

[331] Q. Do you have a part-time bookkeeper? A. Yes.

Q. Do all of these bookkeepers satisfy you with the quality of their performance? A. Right.

Q. Your Assistant Cashier, what does the Assistant Cashier do? A. It's a backup from the Cashier, but she handles many, many of the operations in the bank.

Q. What about your Cashier, you didn't have to fill that position? A. Yes, I did.

Q. You did? A. Yes.

Q. And your Assistant Cashier as well? A. Right, but there was a Cashier in the bank. That was not a new position.

Q. But the functions made you set up the position of Assistant Cashier? A. Right.

Q. You also gained a general bookkeeper, as well as for the accounting department? A. Right.

Q. That was a new position? A. Right.

[332] Q. As to your Cashier, why was there a vacancy there? A. I did not choose to keep the existing Cashier.

Q. Did you have any difficulty in obtaining a new Cashier? A. No.

Q. From what type of institution, if any, did you hire her away, was it a bank for your Cashier? A. Right.

Q. How about your Assistant Cashier? A. A bank.

Q. And your general bookkeeper? A. She came from a bank.

Q. Based on the experience you have had with looking for personnel in these specific fields, do you feel you would have any difficulty filling the same positions if vacancies occurred? A. Hopefully no.

Q. Regardless of hopefully? A. I think we could fill the positions.

Q. If you should have need of more managerial personnel, for example a Branch Manager in the foreseeable future, is it your experience and belief you would be able to get suitable personnel? A. Yes.

[333] Q. Does the organizational structure that exists at the bank briefly approximate what existed before or would you consider this a complete internal restructuring? A. I would say generally a restructuring.

Q. Does this compare somewhat with the operations you knew when you were a Branch Manager for the Trust Company? A. To some degree, yes.

Q. How would it differ? A. Well, we have, we are a unit bank. It differs in that way.

Q. Now with regard to hiring away an employee from a large bank, what can you offer to him to persuade him to leave? A. Well, financial opportunities, I think. Also, authority with responsibility.

Q. Is it your feeling, based on your own personal experience and what you personally know of the individual in banking, that there might be a fairly good market for you when you look for other people to hire? A. Yes, I think so.

Q. Do you feel you would be able to find these people in the Atlanta area? A. Perhaps so, I believe I could.

Q. You do believe you could. Is it possible that [334] you could go elsewhere also to find them? A. I could, yes.

Q. What typically would you say in your own judgment would be the types of positions that prospective new managerial employees of yours would have? What types of people would you look for? A. I would be looking probably initially for Branch Manager types, people with lending experience, some operational experience and new business development experience.

Q. Are you talking about looking for Branch Managers with all these qualities or different types of people? A. No, looking for individuals with all these qualities.

Q. So a Branch Manager, you say, with lending experience? A. Right.

Q. Do you feel that you gained a good deal of that when you were a Branch Manager? A. Yes.

Q. And what were the other things you said you got? A. Operational experience.

Q. What does that basically involve, briefly? [335] A. Just understanding a little bit about what goes on behind the teller's line, where you seek operational help within a bank when problems exist, procedures.

Q. You would want him to be familiar with the workings of the bank unit that's on the street, the office branch, internal operations as well? A. Right.

Q. This would require, I will rephrase that.

Would this require someone with many years of experience in banking? A. Perhaps two to five.

Q. So that relatively young men would be available for that? A. Right.

Q. What about hiring from small banks, unit banks? A. It depends on the experience he gained in a unit bank.

Q. Is it possible that people in some unit banks might very well be qualified from your standpoint to be hired? A. Could very well be, right.

Q. Do you feel that it's difficult to recruit in the Atlanta area? A. So far it has not been.

[336] Q. Why not? A. Well, it's a new bank site, new ownership, a lot of opportunities presently.

Q. Do you regard this as a new bank then? A. Yes.

[337] Q. How long has the facility been in existence? A. Since 1965.

Q. Do you feel that you are completely capable of offering a package to a young, promising bank executive sufficient to lure him away? A. Yes.

Q. Mechanically, what do you do or what would a small bank generally do to go about recruiting in the Atlanta area?

A. I might have, just based on my fifteen years' knowledge, a young man who is looking for a position, the normal procedure would be to contact a bank, if you were, in fact, seeking him, and ask permission to speak with that individual about a job. That is the etiquette, I think, involved, depending on whether they grant it or not, then you begin your conversations.

Q. Have you had occasion to follow this policy? A. Yes.

Q. And you have been given permission to speak with the people you were interested in? A. Yes, right.

Q. And have, at least, some of these approaches been successful from your standpoint? A. Yes.

[338] Q. Are there any other things you can do besides contacting a bank where a specific individual that you are after is working? A. Simply by word of mouth, letting it be known that you have a vacancy or people are aware that there's some growth or branch expansion, and, on occasion, people will seek you out.

Q. People do seek you out? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Could you tell us some of that, have you had any personal experience in that regard? A. Yes, we have had, I guess, about eight applicants from either small banks or the major banks seeking employment with us. By and large, from the metropolitan Atlanta area.

Q. Is that right? A. Because we frequently get resumes, too, from personnel recruiters, saying here is Joe Doake's resume; would you like to talk to him?

Q. Now, these eight that you mentioned, did some of them come from personnel recruiters? A. Yes, three.

Q. Did you hire any of them? A. No.

Q. Have you interviewed any of them? [339] A. No.

Q. Why not? A. They wanted to be president.

Q. Where did the other five come from? A. Locally.

Q. They just approached you? A. Yes.

Q. Do they directly contact you or just come into the bank? A. They directly contacted me.

Q. How do you put out the word in the industry, just generally speaking? A. Well, I would probably call First National Bank of Atlanta and say I am looking for a young man; do you know of anybody? And they may make someone available within their own organization. I would probably do the same things for my friends at the Trust Company. And we use Arthur Andersen as our accountants, and I would probably call them and say, you know, be on the lookout for a young man; I need this type of a person with these qualifications.

Q. You say your accountants? A. Yes.

Q. So you might even look in other areas of the financial world? [340] A. Right.

Q. Have you hired individuals other than from banks yet? A. No.

Q. All of the people you have hired since you came there have come from some bank? A. Well, financial institutions. I hired a man from a savings and loan association.

Q. Okay. Can you offer—well, let me ask this. Do you offer any pension program at this time? A. No.

Q. Do you offer a profit-sharing plan? A. We don't, but we are working on one to be effective next year.

Q. You are currently working on it? A. Yes.

Q. Did you have a pension or profit-sharing plan at the Trust Company? A. Yes.

Q. You left that? A. Yes.

Q. How do you plan to have the pension—it is only a profit-sharing plan that you are working up? A. Yes.

Q. How do you plan to have that administered? A. By a major bank.

[341] Q. All right. And are the banks in the area, the major banks in the area all capable of doing so? A. Yes.

Q. Is this generally offered as a correspondent service? A. Not necessarily, but it is a service.

Q. Okay. Do you have any concern that allowing another bank to administer such a program might, in any way, infringe upon your own ability to control the actions of your employees? A. No.

Q. Do you feel that having another bank administer that program might affect the decision-making within your bank? A. No.

Q. Do you foresee the possibility of your establishing any branches in the foreseeable future? A. Yes.

Q. Is it possible for a small bank to branch on its own or does it need the help of a large bank? A. We can branch on our own.

Q. You can? A. Yes.

Q. Would you feel that—well, I will withdraw that.
[342] Are there any particular financial requirements involved in branching? A. No.

Q. None at all? A. Just adequate capital, and we have adequate capital presently.

Q. You would not have to raise additional funds? A. No.

Q. Don't you need a certain amount of money to back up the operation of another bank in terms of what the regulatory people require? A. They are more concerned with market areas, as I understand.

Q. I see. Are there substantial financial requirements in branching other than the cost of the physical plant itself and the hiring of personnel? A. No, that would be it, approximately.

Q. All right. Do you plan to—I am sorry, did you say you have enough for your physical plant? A. Yes.

Q. You will be constructing and owning your own? A. We very likely will not, because we would like to expand just beyond one branch, and feel like we can better use the bank's resources by a lease arrangement.

Q. Where do you—how would you go about choosing [343] a site? Would you look for an existing physical facility of some sort? A. We do.

Q. But, you have other alternatives? A. Yes, we do.

Q. Taking raw land and developing that? A. Right.

Q. But, are you reluctant in some way to tie up the funds of your bank? A. Yes.

Mr. Doyle: If the Court please, these questions are putting theoretical on top of hypothetical. I think for all of those reasons, this exploration is objectionable, and I make it.

Q. From what you envision, how would you basically describe the mechanics of going about setting up the facility you have in mind? A. Well, we have one little thing to do. We have got to prove to the comptroller that we are a capable manager of a bank, and until such—until they are convinced in that way, they will not allow or entertain overtures. And we are still being proved, so although we dream about branches, that is not my main concern at this point.

[344] Q. You have only been there now for three months; is that right? A. Right.

Q. Is the option of owning your own branch available to you if you want it? A. Yes.

Q. How would you describe the types of customers whom you serve? A. Probably two broad categories, a very broad assortment of individuals and a great number of small companies.

Q. An assortment of individuals? A. Right.

Q. Would you break that down, that assortment, in any way? A. I would say within both the individual and the small business, we have a high ratio of people relating to real estate, either contractors, subcontractors or real-estate sales-oriented people.

Within the individual category we have a good percentage of professional people, doctors, dentists, lawyers, accountants. We have a high percentage of management personnel. By management personnel, medium, middle and upper, middle-income individuals, and then in our area we also have a great number of laborer-types of [345] customers.

Q. Do the needs of these people differ in any respect, the banking needs? A. I don't believe so. I think they have two real needs. They are users of funds and they need a depository for depositing checks and paying of obligations.

Q. As users of funds, you mean borrowers, loan users? A. Correct.

Q. How would you describe the span of loan size involved here, small, large, what, from the smallest to the largest that your customers need? A. Well, our lending limit is $60,000, so we can accommodate people to that. And any credit request above that, we would hopefully find someone to buy excess loans, and we would go to one of our correspondent relationships.

Q. How many correspondent relationships do you have? A. Two.

Q. With whom? A. First National Bank and the Trust Company of Georgia.

Q. When you were at the Trust Company branch, [346] were you serving, basically, the same types of customers? A. Similar.

Q. The same categories that you mentioned? A. Yes.

Q. Do you regard yourself now in your position as the president of a unit bank as being just as capable, or less capable, or more capable, as the case may be, of serving all these classes? A. Ego would suggest at least as capable.

Q. Do you have any reason to feel that you are less capable? A. Only the limitation on our lending limits, and we do have availability for selling excess loans.

Q. Are there any other services that you can think of that you need assistance in providing? A. We don't provide trust services, and I would direct them to the bank of my choice for those.

Q. You can refer them to another bank? A. Yes.

Q. Would you feel any concern over directing of a customer of yours to another bank for a service you didn't provide? A. Concern, but not fear.

Q. Given the correspondent services that are available, and which you are availing yourself of, do [347] you feel that you can say that you are fully competitive for serving these customers? A. Yes.

Q. Who are the banks with which you feel you are competitive? A. The C&S of Tucker, the branches of the major Atlanta banks in our area which are located at Northlake, Gwinnett Bank & Trust Company, Brand Banking Company.

Q. Where is Gwinnett Bank and Trust located? A. In Lilburn Square?

Q. Lilburn Square. A. Right. It's about three and a half miles from us.

Q. Please go on. A. Brand Banking Company, First National Bank of Lawrenceville and Peachtree Bank and Trust Company. And I may have left out someone, but they are all competitors and good ones.

Q. You said the branches of the major banks? A. Yes.

Q. Is there any reason why you would just talk about a branch? A. I am not seeking the same market that perhaps a major Atlanta bank would be, such as national accounts.

Q. Do you feel yourself capable of successfully [348] serving a national account? A. Perhaps so, but their interest in us, I think, would be minimal.

Q. Aside from them, do you feel you are competitive? A. Yes.

Q. With the branch of the largest bank? A. Yes.

Q. Do you feel that these customers—I will withdraw that. You mentioned that the national accounts go downtown? A. Basically.

Q. I think that was your phrase. Do you then feel—would this preclude the branches from being substantial competitors for this business?

Mr. Doyle: I object to the question. I don't know what he means "branches being substantial competitors for this business." The question is ambiguous.

Q. All right. When a large bank serves a large national account, to your knowledge, does it serve it through a branch? [349] A. I have to judge on my previous experience, it would not at the Trust Company of Georgia.

Q. Now you also state that it is your opinion that you are not competing with the branches of the major banks for large national accounts? A. Correct.

Q. Then is it your opinion, based upon whatever experience you have had, that generally branches don't compete for such accounts? In other words, you had a reservation when you were talking about your own experience, which is fine. I am wondering what is the basis of your opinion that you are only competing with the branches? A. I'm just surmising that most of the branches would operate very much in the manner that Trust Company does.

Q. This would be true of any unit bank? A. Unit banks would be different.

Q. Do you feel yourself fully competitive for all other classes of customers with the branches? A. Yes.

Q. If you were to become dissatisfied with the correspondent relationships you are now enjoying with the two banks you mentioned, would you feel capable of switching readily to other banks and sources? A. Yes.

[350] Q. In the Atlanta area? A. Yes.

Q. Would you tell us what correspondent services you would like to have, but which are unavailable to you? A. There are none I desire at the present.

Q. Does your correspondent, or do your correspondent banks ever provide you with advice? A. If I call on them.

Q. Only if you call on them? A. Right.

Q. Is this true also of First National Bank of Atlanta? A. Yes.

Q. Are there any particular others where you generally will call? A. I had occasion to call regarding branch banking. I simply got a very brief answer which satisfied my question.

Q. Do you have frequent need to call for advice? A. No.

Q. When you have, you have been satisfied? A. Yes.

Q. Who makes the competitive decisions for your bank? A. I would, with the approval of the Board of [351] Directors.

Q. And you and the Board together constitute the complete decision making apparatus in your organization? A. Right, right.

Q. Could you tell us something about the size of First National Bank of Tucker? A. As of the call date, June 30th, we were about seven million five.

Q. How does this contrast with the size of the branch that you used to administer? A. That's smaller.

Q. This is smaller than the branch you used to have? A. Right.

Q. Do you have any personal knowledge about the growth of the bank prior to your coming there? A. It had been very slow, really a stagnant situation.

Q. Has the brief period you have been there given you any experience that would serve as an indication of how your growth rate is growing now? A. We are growing, we are alive, I think.

Q. You found a noticeable increase? A. There has been an increase, right.

Mr. Stern: We have no further questions.

[352] Mr. Doyle: May we take five minutes to consult?

The Court: All right, we will take a five minute recess.

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Hodgson

Q. Mr. Jackson, I think I want to ask you just about two or three questions. When the First National Bank of Atlanta went out to Tucker and acquired whatever interest it did in this bank, what sort of shape was it in? A. As I understand it, it was in rather grim shape.

Q. And the First National Bank of Atlanta had not started that bank; had it? A. No, sir, it had not.

Q. So, what happened was it was a small unit bank in bad shape out there? A. Yes.

Q. First National went in and tried to acquire it fully and was unable to because of the Justice Department's suit; isn't that right? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then turned it loose to you and Mr. Morris and your associates, right? [353] A. That's correct.

Q. So the real change that's been effected is the new ownership of Mr. Morris and the new management of yours? A. Yes, correct.

Q. What sort of incentive did Mr Morris offer you by way of proprietorship in this bank when you came? A. I had an opportunity to own five per cent of the bank.

Q. Now you said you thought you had an attractive package to offer other people to come to that bank.

What is that attractive package? A. We would pay perhaps more than the going rate in the banking industry here locally.

Q. In salary? A. Yes, sir, in salary.

Q. How about the opportunity to buy stock in the bank? A. Yes, we would make that available also, right.

Mr. Hodgson: That's all we have.

Mr. Stern: We have no questions.

The Court: You may step down.

Mr. Kinkaid: Your Honor, I notice it's twenty till five. We have one more witness for direct and cross to be followed by our expert witness who we will be making available under our understanding of [354] your earlier instructions for cross-examination I would like to request that if it's all right with Your Honor, that we suspend for today and we will have the next witness at ten and put our expert on.

The Court: That concludes your case?

Mr. Kinkaid: Yes, sir.

In other words, we have just one witness.

The Court: How long do you and Mr. Hodgson anticipate this next witness is going to take? How long do you anticipate that the next witness is going to take?

Mr. Kinkaid: I would say it would be something like an hour for direct.

Mr. Hodgson: We would hope it wouldn't be much more than five minutes on cross. We can't tell for sure until he has testified.

The Court: You have the expert's testimony, and the only thing, there will be no direct, I take it, for the expert, only cross?

Mr. Kinkaid: Yes, I think as you recall, he put his direct testimony in the form of affidavits which we will ask him to authenticate and that will be it.

The Court: How long is cross going to take of the expert?

[355] Mr. Hodgson: We honestly can't anticipate. It depends on how well we do, how easy we do it. If he is hard to crack, it may take longer.

The Court: At any rate, assuming the schedule that we have here, you should be through with him by tomorrow afternoon?

Mr. Hodgson: Yes, sir, if we can't crack the nut by tomorrow afternoon, we'll go home and start on our own.

The Court: We're rapidly approaching my place of no return for the week after next. I tentatively plan that you would then get the next five days. Then I start counting witnesses and came up with nearly forty. Have you and Mr. Kinkaid made any estimate on the time? I notice in several cases you would list several witnesses for one category, then when I start reading the categories, I notice that there was a substantial duplication of categories as between witnesses, and then I came to the one where it said, "These people will give their views," and that seemed to me to be awfully general.

Mr. Hodgson: I have every reason to believe you are going to make your schedule. I have one similar to yours. I anticipate, frankly, if we put our witnesses on to the extent that the next witness [356] has knowledge of what the prior witness has testified to, we are going to make the point that he has been in this room and does not duplicate, but simply add to the area in which the prior witness has testified. This makes him available to the Department for cross-examination for the whole thing. But, of course, I think we can make our schedule.

The Court: All right, Mr. Kinkaid, knowing what you do with respect to the defendant's case, do you anticipate any rebuttal at this time?

Mr. Kinkaid: I would anticipate some rebuttal at this point. At this time, I really can't say how extensive it would be, but I really don't think it would be very extensive. But I would, if possible, if we could sort of have the better part of a day at the end, I think that would probably take care of it.

The Court: I was trying to divide the time equally. You've taken three days, I was leaving you two days for rebuttal and five days for the defendant which is giving five days each. Do you think you can manage within that schedule?

Mr. Hodgson: We'll have more difficulty than they, Your Honor, simply because the elements of the defense are more extensive than are the elements of [357] the charge. But, I can assure you that we will make every effort, we'll be as brief as possible. We are willing if Your Honor doesn't mind the imposition to meet any sort of hours that the Court may set.

The Court: I don't want to get drastic at this early date, but I guess we can make the immediate decision, which is to adjourn until tomorrow at ten.

Mr. Kinkaid: May I bring up one point while we have a couple of minutes, more or less a formality. As you know, we have offered in evidence, I think twenty—I believe twenty depositions that we took during the pretrial stage and we have offered virtually all of these with the, I think, the exception of one or two pages from about three of them. I believe the defendants have themselves offered in evidence whatever we didn't. So, in effect——

The Court: Are they on the exhibit list?

Mr. Kinkaid: Excuse me.

The Court: Are they on the exhibit list?

Mr. Kinkaid: They have not been marked exhibits. Shall we mark them as exhibits and put them in the record that way?

The Court: As far as I'm concerned, I'm willing to receive in evidence all the testimony by [358] deposition which has been taken subject to some identification at some point with the right of the parties to object to the parts they deem inadmissible just as you objected to their exhibits.

I assure you I'm not going to sit down and read through all the depositions. I'm going to assume that you will call the pertinent portions there to my attention in the briefs. Can you handle it in that fashion?

Mr. Kinkaid: Yes, sir.

Mr. Doyle: One other housekeeping matter, Judge, the plaintiff objected to the admission into evidence of a certain document. We had some discussion as to the precise wording in one part of it. If I can read a correction, which I think is the correction presently stated or objection presently stated, we won't have any more problem on that. It's on the fourth page of the document entitled "Plaintiff's Objections to Admit Into Evidence Certain Documents Offered by the Defendant," page four, dealing with defendant's exhibits 41 through 44 in the second paragraph, the first sentence should read, "The defendants have not met the burden of showing that those who responded were without bias, that the questions were unambiguous or that [359] the results were reliable."

The Court: Is that correct, Mr. Kinkaid?

Mr. Kinkaid: Yes, sir.

The Court: It will be so noted and be so received. I gather we may not have received a copy of that document; is that right, Mr. Edmondson?

The Clerk: I don't have it.

The Court: Make sure we have it.

Mr. Kinkaid: I believe we've filed that with the Clerk of the Court.

The Court: Make sure we have a copy.
We will stand in recess until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

(Whereupon, Court was recessed at 4:50 o'clock P.M., to reconvene at 10 o'clock A.M., Wednesday, September 27, 1972.)

[360] Volume III

(Title Omitted in Printing)

Transcript of proceedings had before The Honorable Charles A. Moye, Jr., Judge, United States District Court, on the 27th day of September, 1972, commencing at 10:00 o'clock, A.M., in Atlanta, Fulton County, Georgia.

[361] The Court: Ready?

Mr. Lehman: Yes, Your Honor. The Government will call as its witness Mr. Warren Woolsey.

WARREN WOOLSEY,

being first duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Direct Examination

By Mr. Lehman

Q. Would you please state your name. A. W. Warren Woolsey.

Q. Where are you presently employed, Mr. Woolsey? A. I am president and chairman of the board of the Citizens Bank of Hapeville.

Q. How long have you been the president and chairman of the board? A. Since August 1, 1971.

Q. Prior to coming to the Citizens Bank of Hapeville, what was your employment? A. For twenty-one years I was with the First National Bank of Atlanta; the last five years I was with the First National, I was vice-president and manager of the Decatur branch of the First National. And I resigned from First National in 1969, in February of '69. I went with Robinson-Humphrey [362] Company as an account executive in the Decatur office of Robinson-Humphrey for about seven months and then went with Reynolds Securities as an account executive, specializing in the pension-profit-sharing area. And then, on August 1 of '71, I came with the Citizens Bank of Hapeville.

Q. When did you first learn about the vacancy of the presidency at the Citizens Bank of Hapeville? A. I learned about it about the first week of July of '71.

Q. How did you learn about it, sir? A. I learned about it through my contacts with the Independent Bankers Association. In my work in the pension and profit-sharing area, I conceived and put together a master pension and profit-sharing plan for the Independent Bankers Association of Georgia, and we got this approved by the Internal Revenue Service, and through this approval of this plan by the Board of directors of the Association and my solicitation of this type of plan, I got to know many of the bankers, and, particularly, the officers of the Association on the other side. The chairman and the vice-chairman of the board of the Citizens Bank of Hapeville were looking for a president, because the man who had been the president had resigned, and he knew Charley Maddox, [363] who is the president of the Peoples Bank of Winder, who at that time was president of the Association. So they went to the president of the Association and asked him for help to find a president, and he gave them a list of ten prospects, and my name was at the top of the list.

[364] Q. When did you formally assume your position as president of Citizens Bank of Hapeville? A. August 1 of '71.

Q. And was this when you first arrived at Hapeville? A. No, I actually was there a week earlier. It was the last week in July that I actually came to the bank, but not to assume my duties, but to get a feel for what the problems were.

Q. When you first arrived at the Citizens Bank of Hapeville, who was operating the bank? A. Ken Ingram, who is the cashier at the C&S Bank, Sandy Springs, was there as the acting cashier. Bobby G. Morris was the acting president of the bank and he was one of the C&S branch managers out on the north side. Of course, he is now president of C&S Chamblee.

Q. These were not employees of Hapeville Bank? A. No, they were not, and we were reimbursing C&S for their salaries.

Q. And do you know why they were there operating the bank? A. Yes, they were there at the request of Mr. Howard Jackson, who at that time was Chairman of the Board.

[365] Q. Do you know how long that they had been in that capacity operating the bank? A. I would say they were there about three months.

Q. Do you know by whom their salaries were being paid? A. Well, the C&S was paying their salaries, I knew that, and we were sending—their salaries were being sent to the C&S. In other words, they knew what their salaries were. We were reimbursing the Citizens and Southern National Bank.

Q. Do you know if these gentlemen were utilizing a C&S operational publication at Hapeville at that time? A. Yes, I saw the C&S manuals they had out there and from which they were operating.

Q. Does the bank still utilize the C&S operating guides? A. No, no, sir.

Q. When did they discontinue doing this? A. The day that I was elected president and they left the bank, they took their manuals with them.

Q. Could you please characterize for us the condition of the Citizens Bank of Hapeville when you arrived? [366] A. Well, when I—do you want me to take each area of the bank and go into it, or just——

Q. Could you give us just the general, overall picture of the condition of the bank? A. Okay. The bank, of course, was being run by these two C&S men, and I think the morale of the bank was low because the personnel did not know what was going to happen to the bank. A lot of customers of the bank were very unhappy with the way the bank was being, the loan policies were being handled because the C&S people were really, you know, running it on a lame duck basis. They knew they were just going to be there temporarily.

There were a lot of things that needed to be done, the credit files were in a deplorable condition. I think many of the officers that were there were incapable, not the C&S, but other loan officers that were there were incapable people and incompetent people.

The interior of the lobby was, nothing had been done to the lobby since, I think, they moved into that building, I think, in 1969. The parking lot was too small. It was in a generally run-down condition. There were no—there were no bylaws, no loan policies. There was no chain of command in the bank.

Q. Perhaps—what did you consider to be the [367] major areas of concern there at the bank? A. Obviously the most important area of concern to me was the loans, the quality of the loan portfolio and the loan policies.

Q. Were there other paramount problems that you considered to be paramount? A. Oh, yes, personnel, I thought was a paramount problem, controls on operations, control on expenses was another big thing.

Q. Let's deal with the loan administration problems. Just specifically, what did you find there? A. Well, I found that—well, let's take the credit files and start with that. The credit files were completely devoid of adequate information to justify many of the loans. The loans were being made without proper documentation, title certificates to cars were in the credit files instead of being in the vault and deeds were in the credit files instead of being in the vault.

So, there was really no adequate credit investigation being made. There were no adequate credit files being maintained as far as the credit administration was concerned. There was no analysis being made on the financial statements and so that we knew right away that there was going to be some substantial losses in the loan portfolio.

[368] Q. What steps did you take to try and alleviate these problems? A. That would take some time to answer. Well, first thing I did was to start hiring adequate and competent management personnel. I got the executive vice president of the Bank of Forest Park, a fellow named Mr. Gaddy, who had been in that position for eight years at the Bank of Forest Park. He also had ten year's experience in the auditing department of

First National Bank. I brought him in as the operations manager and cashier of the bank. His title was vice president and cashier.

I brought in Richard M. Churchill, who had experience in First National. He was in charge of all credit for Bankamericard at First National and also was manager of the credit department at Peoples American and administrative assistant to the senior vice president, and he is now vice president in charge of our loan department. We took one of the loan officers, Frank M. Castello, who was on our loan desk, I took him off the loan desk and made a collection man out of him. I took the branch manager who had worked as a salesman for Pet Milk Company for twenty years and had no training as a loan officer and I am now using him as an auditor. I took one of the other young men we had in the bank and [369] made him the branch manager.

[370] I hired a man from—who had been at First National Bank and had been through the training program, two-year executive training program, and hired him as a loan officer. One of the vice-presidents there, who I thought was incompetent, resigned within two weeks after I got there because I was questioning the documentation or the missing documentation on many of the loans he had made.

Q. When you had to go out and hire these new employees, did you have any difficulty in finding them? A. No, sir. No, sir, I have friends and contacts in the employment area where they specialize in hiring credit officers and loan officers in banks; I had no trouble at all.

Of course, Mr. Gaddy had known me previously, and he was unhappy in his position, so he came to me looking for a job. In fact, I probably had ten men to come to me and apply for jobs when they found out I had been made president of the bank. Some of them knew me directly, and some of them had heard of me, and they were unhappy in their jobs and were looking for jobs.

Q. Overall, approximately how many people did you have to replace of the original staff, do you recall? A. I would say, we replaced officers and employees, [371] eleven people were replaced.

Q. And what was the total number of your staff at that time? A. I would say we had about thirty-six people.

Q. How long has it taken you to replace these people? A. Well, this was done—this has been done over a year's time. We have gradually replaced these people. I didn't want it to be too much of a shock to go in and just start replacing people, so we had to find adequate, trained, competent people to replace them. So we just did it on a gradual basis over a period of time. So there wouldn't be too much of a shock to the personnel. So I would say it has taken us a year, but I think we have got all the incompetents eliminated now.

Q. Did you have any difficulty with the procedural aspect of the loan administration program as you found it? A. Any difficulties in trying to change it or any difficulties in what was there when I got there?

Q. All right. Any difficulties in trying to change it? A. No, sir. All I did was tell them, "This is the way it is going to be," and we started immediately [372] changing. We had difficulties in trying to train people on execution of investigations, analysis of financial statements, all of the various aspects of loan administration that are just absolutely necessary to operate a bank on a sound basis. And, so the educational aspects of how to run a first-class bank were my biggest problem, and this took some time, some doing. But, it was done through writing operational manuals, loan policy manuals on how things were to be done, what the loan policies were going to be. And, of course, we had an executive committee; an executive committee, though, had not really been operating as a loan committee the way I wanted it to be done, and now we have this set up.

Q. Were these manuals that were written, were they written within your bank? A. Yes, we did not require or request any outside help in the preparation of these manuals.

Q. You earlier mentioned, I think, another problem area happened to be in operations. What did you find wrong in operations? A. About everything you can imagine. The main thing was, there was no control on expenses. I think in the first three months I lopped off something like $45,000 in unnecessary expenses on an annual basis. I [373] can give you a number of examples, but this was—this is one of the main things.

But, control on income was another thing. For instance, safe deposit box rentals were just coming in, and the clerk was just posting this to a book instead of doing like you are supposed to do and set up a rents receivable account. When the bills go out, and then when the income comes in, you wash out the receivables account. The general bookkeeper was originating many of her own entries without an officer's okay. Well, if she had been dishonest, she could have taken us for a million dollars.

So we immediately said no entries are to go to general books without an officer's okay. This is just standard banking procedure.

Q. Have the problems in this area been eliminated? A. Yes, sir. Yes, sir, I think they have been eliminated.

Q. In your earlier discussion as to the hiring of new management personnel, what does your bank have to offer to attract qualified management people? A. I think we can compete through any area, as far as salaries are concerned. I think our salary scale is comparable to any of the large Atlanta banks. I think, as far as fringe benefits, we have just put in [374] a hospitalization and major medical plan that I think is—I know it is as good as what First National had, because that, of course, is the only one I have direct experience with. But, we are putting in a plan where we will have surgical, hospital and accidental expenses will be taken care of 100%. Any medical care expenses will have $100 deductible, and the major medical will carry it on up to $50,000. And we are going to have this at no additional cost over the other major medical plan that we had.

We have a fixed benefit pension plan, and this plan will guarantee any employee 35% of their salary, up to Social Security and 65% of whatever they make over their Social Security base, which averages out, you know, somewhere around 60 to 65% of their total salary for the last five years.

We have a group insurance plan which starts with me at $50,000, and goes on down to a minimum of $7,000 for each employee. That's about it.

Q. These benefits, these fringe benefits that you have just mentioned, are they made available to you through a correspondent relationship with a larger bank? A. No, sir, they are not. We got these on our own, and it has no connection with a correspondent bank [375] on any of these services.

Q. With reference to the pension plan you earlier mentioned, was there a pension plan in existence at the Citizens Bank of Hapeville when you arrived? A. Yes, there was.

Q. By whom was it administered? A. Canada Life Assurance Company, I think was the name of it.

Q. Is it still in effect now? A. Yes, but not by them. We cancelled out their plan. They had a split-funded plan, part of it going for insurance and the other part going into an equity fund.

There had been no contract with the bank since its origination about two years before I got there, so there had been some changes in the Internal Revenue code that had made the plan really—I don't think really eligible as a tax-deductible plan, as a qualified plan because of the changes in the code. So it had not been updated, and so we just cancelled the whole thing and started all over again.

Q. So this plan is not in effect today? A. No, the original plan is not in effect; that is right.

Q. You earlier mentioned, though, you—— [376] A. Let me say this, we are just amending—let me qualify that. We are amending our plan, as far as the benefits and the formula, vesting schedules and so forth, so as far as Internal Revenue is concerned, it is, in fact, the same plan, and we will file an amendment with Internal Revenue.

But, as far as the administration of the plan is concerned, we have changed administrators and we have changed it from a split-funded plan to a non-insured equity plan, 100% equity plan. In other words, we pulled out of the plan disability benefits and death benefits and insurance benefits out of the pension plan and made these separate benefits.

Q. Who now is administering the plan then? A. A firm called Richard Grenell & Associates, which is an experienced insurance—not an insurance, but an employee benefit firm. They handled the administration and file all the papers that are necessary with Internal Revenue.

[377] Q. Just out of curiosity, is this the earlier plan you were referring to with your association with the IBA of Georgia? A. Yes, it is. The plan that I was working on when I was with Reynolds Securities, this master prototype pension and profit sharing plan is the plan that we are now switching over to.

Q. Is this plan made available to other banks? A. Yes, it is. This plan is available to any independent bank in the State of Georgia if they will become a member of the Independent Bankers Association of Georgia and the solicitation of these banks is going on on a fulltime basis. As far as the response right now is concerned, we have been in this about a year on a solicitation basis and I would say we have got six banks committed before the end of this year. They will transfer whatever funds they have over into this plan. We will have—we have got forty-seven additional banks in Georgia that have submitted their payrolls to us and we will make a decision between now and the end of the year. We know of at least sixty-five other banks that have plans with insurance companies or with banks, large metropolitan banks, and we are working on them, too.

Q. You mentioned we; who is we? A. We is, as far as who the calling is being [378] done by.

Q. Who are you referring to as we? A. We is the people that the Independent Bankers Association have delegated to do this work. We have this broken down, we have put together a team of experts to handle this plan. We have the investment counselling firm of Thorndike, Thorn, Payne & Lewis who happens to manage about three and a half billion dollars. They are the investment counselling firm for Wellington, Family Mutual Fund. They have an office here managing about $350 million right here in Atlanta. They will be the investment counselling firm for this plan.

Richard Grinnell and Associates will handle the administration and actuarial certifications on an annual basis on revising of the data, the payroll data that is necessary every year. The calling is being done by Richard Grinnell and two men at Reynolds Securities. They are calling on all of the banks to make them aware of this plan and then, of course, we have attorneys. We have Wesley Warren, who is with Smith, Parker, Scott, Pick & Simmons. He's a specialist in employee benefits, he has rapport with the Internal Revenue. He has gotten plans approved. These plans are what we call now a master plan where the association sponsors the plan and gets it qualified in a shell form. The individual [379] aspects of the plan are left up to the president of the management of each individual bank, such as investing schedules, manageability requirements, retirement dates, entry dates, when they come in. Whether there is a minimum age, all of the individual aspects of a plan are designed by the local management. Only the shell is submitted to Internal Revenue. It's a joinder agreement that each bank signs to come into the plan. There's one master trust set-up for the pension plan, the six benefits pension plan. There's another master trust that will be set up for profit sharing plan. There's another trust that will be set up for first pension plan because there is slightly different handling.

Q. As to the pension plan, would this also be available to the customers of the bank if they wanted to establish it? A. Yes, they will. We are in the process of receiving a no action letter from the Securities and Exchange Commission to be sure we would not in any way infringe upon the rules and regulations of the Securities and Exchange Commission and our attorney feels that there will be no problem about getting this letter. If there is any problem, we will name a bank with trust powers as a corporate trustee. This plan is now an individually trusted plan with three of the officers and directors of [380] the association as the trustees, and I am one of them.

Q. Are the member banks of the IBA utilizing this plan; are they charged? A. Oh, yes, they are charged. They are charged a fee for the administration, for the investment counselling services, and we are charging one and one-fourth per cent of the corpus that is accumulated on an annual basis to take care of all expenses.

Q. Does the Citizens Bank of Hapeville have a profit sharing plan in effect? A. No, sir, we don't. There was no plan when we got there. We had to take first things first. We are just now in the process of turning the bank around and making a profit and until I can show a record of several years of consistent earnings, I don't feel that a profit sharing plan is justified. The pension plan, I felt, was the main thing that needed to be done to get that set up correctly. If we can do this and be within Internal Revenue rulings, and their regulations, and then we will put in a profit sharing plan. One of the rules Internal Revenue has, you can't put more than twenty-five percent of your payroll in a pension plan and profit sharing plan when you have both. And so, the question is, after I have funded my pension plan, is there really enough money available that could be put into a pension, a profit [381] sharing plan and make it a real good thing for the employees. There may not be enough money left over, but there is a limitation of twenty-five percent.

Q. As to the IBA investment profit sharing plan, this is available to small member banks also? A. Yes, if they are members of the association. They have to become a member of the IBA to join.

Q. I assume this is operated on the same basis as a pension plan? A. You're talking about profit sharing and pensions?

Q. Yes. A. That's right, they are both the same.

Q. Again, would this profit sharing plan, this master profit sharing plan be available to customers of independent banks? A. Yes, they are, and we have gotten a number of payroll data sheets and got a couple of them right on the verge of signing up. Most of the customers don't have existing plans. Most of the customers, they have been wanting something in employee benefits area and just haven't had anybody approach them to do it.

Q. For those earlier fringe benefits you mentioned, such as insurance policies, et cetera, are these made available to you through services of [382] correspondents? A. No, sir—you mean insurance policies for my group, group insurance?

Q. Yes. A. No, sir.

Q. When you first arrived at the bank in Hapeville, who was providing your bank correspondent services? A. Citizens and Southern National Bank.

Q. Were there any other banks providing any services? A. We had accounts with other Atlanta banks but they were small accounts. The main account was with the C&S.

Q. Did you consider at that time then C&S to be a primary correspondent? A. Yes, I do.

Q. What services was C&S, were C&S furnishing you? A. Everything in the book, DDA, that's demand deposit accounting, savings certificates, savings accounts, clearance of checks, investment portfolio, Government bonds, municipal bonds, payroll preparation, they were preparing our payrolls, just about everything that they can do.

[383] Q. Is C&S still your primary correspondent bank? A. No, they are not.

Q. Do you have a primary correspondent bank now? A. Yes, I do.

Q. Who is that? A. Central Bank & Trust Company at Birmingham.

Q. Was the Central Bank & Trust Company a correspondent of your bank when you first arrived? A. No, they were not.

Q. Then, I assume you had to set up, establish a new correspondent relationship? A. That's right.

Q. And first of all, was it difficult in finding a correspondent, a new one? A. No, sir. No, sir, in fact I had all the other banks come out and solicited my business. Fulton, First and Trust. There was no trouble. In effect, I was solicited by Central & Trust of Birmingham, too, and of course, the man who called on me used to be one of my junior officers at the Decatur Branch of First National. So I knew him from that connection.

Q. In the banks that you listed as soliciting your correspondent services, were there any other banks, other than Central that were out-of-state banks? [384] A. Indirectly, through one of my Board members, the Hamilton National in Chattanooga have indicated an interest in being our correspondent, too.

Q. Is this relatively unusual to have an out-of-state bank solicit correspondent services? A. I would think so. I was surprised.

Q. Do you know of other banks now that are utilizing out-of-state correspondents? A. Yes, sir, there are lots of them, lots of them in Georgia. Central Bank has got at least eighteen in Georgia, I've been told, where their bank is, where Central is their primary correspondent and they have got, there must be sixty other banks or something like that, I'm not sure of the exact figures, where Central is their secondary account. I'm not real sure of that number, of course.

Q. Based on the number of banks that solicited your correspondent services, would you characterize the market, correspondent market as the buyer's market? A. Yes, I would. Yes, I would. I think all of the Atlanta banks and all the main metropolitan banks have to solicit this kind of business.

Q. What problems did you have in setting up a new correspondent relationship? A. Well, there is always a conversion time for [385] getting things converted when you're pulling out of one bank and going into another bank to make sure that the systems are capable, to make sure you are not sacrificing some services.

Q. By converting, what do you—— A. Well, the conversion, that is, you go from one computer system to another. The data that is printed out may not be compatible. So, there may be a conversion of data that are magnetic tapes or with computer tapes before you can put it on a new system. We are still in the process of converting. Central Bank has got our demand deposit accounts and now have got our savings certificates and savings accounts. We are right in the middle of installment loans. This is a highly complicated process and we are trying to get—we have got half our loans on Central and half on C&S systems. We are trying to get the other half off of C&S and get it on Central. So we have one instead of two.

[386] Q. Are most of these services provided you, are they linked with a computer? A. Yes, they are.

Q. From your last answer, I assume that you are still utilizing C&S National as a correspondent, also? A. Yes, we still—yes, we are, for the residue that they still have.

Q. What is this residue? A. Half of the installment loan portfolio and payroll preparation. That's about it. Everything else is converted, I think.

Q. Earlier you stated that the Central was located in Birmingham, Alabama. Does this distance present any problem for you, as far as the correspondent relationship? A. No, sir, it does not. They pick up our checks about 7:00 o'clock at night, and I understand they are back in Atlanta the next morning to be presented to the Federal Reserve. They have already been processed, sorted, and ready for presentation at the Fed.

Q. Would this be the major area in a correspondent-type relationship, where you probably would run into a time problem? A. Yes, normally you would, because of the [387] distance from Atlanta. The way they are handling it, taking our checks to Birmingham and bringing them back, really early the next morning so that they are here when the Federal Reserve opens up, there is no problem about time.

Q. What mode of transportation are you utilizing? A. Air, by plane.

Q. Since the initiation of your correspondent relationship with Central, have you had an occasion to participate in loans above your legal limit? A. Oh, yes, I surely have, quite a number of times, and they have given me excellent service.

Q. The time factor involved, because of the distance, does not play a part? A. No.

Q. Why not? A. I guess because we communicate with them. We get on the phone and we outline what the credit situation is, what the net worth is, what the borrowing experience has been with the customer, what our collateral is going to be, what our repayment terms are going to be, what kind of rate we are charging. And their answer usually is, we will credit your account today for sixty thousand, a hundred thousand, or whatever it is, and you go ahead and send us the papers. So we have [388] had no problem on cooperation on participation on loans.

Q. Since your arrival at Hapeville, have you had occasion to participate with any other banks in loans? A. Yes, I have. I have participated with the Farmers Bank of Monroe on some loans, where in that case they were participating with us. They had a problem on a loan and wanted us to take a participation, so we took $160,000 participation. This is kind of a two-way street, but we have not sold participations to any other bank, except one, and that is the First Bank of Morrow—no, wait a minute, First State Bank of Clayton County in Morrow. We have sold participations with that bank, have handled participations with that bank, but it has been a relatively small amount, you know, $40,000, $50,000.

Q. From your banking experience, are you aware whether a large correspondent bank would provide its smaller correspondent bank with temporary personnel? A. Yes, I think anytime a small bank gets into trouble, personnelwise, and desperately needs some temporary management talent, I think a large bank would provide this.

Q. Would this be a usual service? A. Well, I think it has to be an emergency-type thing, like it was in Hapeville. I think that was an [389] emergency-type situation, where the president was asked to resign, and they had to have somebody run the bank until they found a new president. So the president—the chairman of the board went to Mills Lane, and said, "I have to have—I need somebody, and I would like for you to provide me some temporary management help." So I don't think this is—I think it has to be usually a crisis situation before they do ask for that, but it is not a routine thing to ask for officer personnel.

Q. Who would pay for the temporary personnel then? A. I think the bank, the small bank that needs the personnel usually pays, I would think.

Q. Would this temporary personnel, would this apply both to managerial and employees? A. I don't think it would pertain to employees usually. Unless there is a—I don't know what the circumstances—if the management of the local bank has staffed his bank adequately, and I have never heard of a city bank providing employee personnel for a small, country bank.

Q. Does the Citizens Bank of Hapeville provide a credit card service for its customers? A. Yes, it does, the Master Charge.

[390] Q. Do you utilize a correspondent bank for this service? A. No, sir, we are hooked directly onto SEBA for this we are on our bank, we are not going through any other bank.

Q. You are locked directly onto what? A. The SEBA.

Q. Which is—— A. Which is the Southeastern—it is the unit that handles Master Charge; I don't know exactly what SEBA stands for, but it is the unit that has computer capability for providing us direct service. In other words, if we went through a correspondent, the correspondent would handle all of the credit investigations, as well as the issuance of the cards. We are doing our own credit investigations and we have our own plan to originate the customers that come in, and we send that data to the computer center, the SEBA computer center.

Q. So you are a type of agent for the card; would that be the proper term? A. Yes, we are an independent agent for the card, right.

Q. I take it from your last answer that a correspondent, a large correspondent would also—could [391] also provide this for a smaller bank? A. Yes, they can.

Q. And does, in fact? A. Yes, they do.

Q. Why don't you utilize a correspondent for this service? A. Because we just want to be independent. We wanted to, also, because we were sensitive to the credit, the lack of credit standards that were in the bank prior to my coming there. I wanted to make absolutely sure that we had a control on high credit standards that we would maintain on anybody that we gave a Master Charge card to. Because, as you know, this is unsecured credit, so I wanted to control on the Master Charge. business. Not that I had any doubts that the Atlanta banks couldn't pass on the credit, but I just wanted to have control on that.

Q. Excluding the computer services offered by the large correspondent banks, are there any other sources of computer services a small bank can turn to? A. Oh, yes. The independent banks are forming, in Georgia, are forming regional computer centers. There's one in Cordele, Georgia that has twelve independent banks in it. They not only have gone in together on computer services for the EDA savings [392] accounts, all of the accounting aspects of the bank, but they have also centralized their purchases of supplies, their software, all the paperwork that is involved in the bank is being centralized.

I know there's twelve banks in Cordele. The other bank, the other group that is in existence and in operation is up near Winder, Georgia, and there are eight banks in that group. There are two more regional computer centers that are on the verge of coming into existence, and I think within the next year they will be in existence. These are computer centers sponsored by and originated by the independent bankers in Georgia. They have nothing to do with the Atlanta banks.

Q. So these computer centers are not computer centers of larger banks; is that correct? A. That's right, that's right. They have nothing to do with the larger banks.

Q. In mentioning the purchase of software, did you mean for the computer centers, these banks are grouping for the computer centers? A. No, not for the computer centers, for the individual banks, cash tickets for the tellers, stationery, all of the envelopes, all of the things that are used in mailing statements out, they have centralized their purchases of these supplies.

[393] Q. Where do you purchase the supplies for your bank, Mr. Woolsey? A. Murphy & McWhirter is where we get some of them. Also, we have—the Central Bank & Trust has an outlet where we purchase our supplies, and we get them at fifty percent of cost. Apparently, they are picking up the other fifty percent of the cost of our supplies, so we are using them to some extent.

Q. Prior to the establishment of Central as your correspondent bank, did you utilize any other banks, the purchasing departments of banks? A. No, we are not utilizing their purchasing department, as such. We are purchasing our own supplies and I don't know the name of the other firm; they are just—as far as the billing is concerned, we are only getting billed for half the cost, so we don't actually use their purchasing department, as such.

Q. Since your arrival at the Citizens Bank of Hapeville, have you had an occasion to have an audit performed? A. Yes. It has been done by the Central Bank & Trust of Birmingham.

Q. From your banking experience, do small banks like yours normally utilize a correspondent, larger [394] correspondent banks for this auditing service? [395] A. Yes, I think this is the normal thing. They can be done or they can use a CPA firm. Their own private accounting firm can do this audit. I don't—since I'm not in a correspondent area, I can't name what proportion of the small banks use independent CPA firms and what proportions use the Atlanta banks or some large metropolitan bank.

Q. Is there any reason that you know as to why—excuse me—a smaller bank would use a CPA firm rather than a large correspondent bank? A. Yes, I think one of the big reasons would be that when an Atlanta bank comes in and makes an audit they know all of the intimate details about the operations of that bank and they could put a yardstick as to whether this would be a desirable bank to buy later on, try to get control of. I think would be—this would be an objection I'd have to having an Atlanta bank making an audit on my bank.

Q. Does that answer, in a sense, state the reason why Central Bank is running your audit? A. That's exactly right.

Q. This is one time when distance is a factor? A. That's right, distance is an advantage.

Q. Now, Mr. Woolsey, are you aware of any services that a large bank provides that you cannot provide [396] your customers? A. Yes, I think one area would probably be the trust services. We have no trust powers in our bank. So, any customer that came in that wanted to have the bank named as a executor of his will, something like this, we would not be able to provide that service.

Q. What would you do with a customer such as that? A. If he wanted to have a corporate trustee or corporate executor, we would probably send it to a large bank, if we did not have that power.

Q. When you send a customer, such as this, to a larger bank, is there any type of referral fee involved? A. I really don't know because since I have been at Hapeville we have really not gotten into this. I have not had a customer coming in and asking for this service in the one year I've been there. But, I think this is something that is negotiated with a big bank. There might be a splitting of the fee. I'm not really sure.

Mr. Doyle: I move that the last answer be stricken. He stated he didn't have a basis for his knowledge. It was more of an estimate than what he knows.

The Court: I agree. That's the kind of answer—there's no need to strike it.

[397] Q. Are you aware of any other services, other than trust services, that a large bank provides that you cannot provide? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you feel that the inability of your bank to provide a trust service for one of your customers puts you at any particular disadvantage? A. No, sir.

Q. Why? A. Because I think if a customer of our bank wants that service, we can refer him to someone that's competent, like a bank that has a corporate trustee, trust department and get him taken care of and still not lose a customer. I don't think that would in itself cause that customer to move his account to another bank.

Q. It appears from our previous discussion you faced quite a problem when you went to the Bank of Hapeville. Have you succeeded in eliminating it? A. I hope so because we did have monstrous problems with the loans particularly. That was the most critical area because this is the area in which you can lose the most amount of money in a short time. And we were trying to do everything simultaneously, shore up operations, get adequate personnel, charge off the bad loans and generate good new loans at the same time. And [398] when you're trying to do all of this at one time, you have got your work cut out for you, and we had quite a time getting this turned around. I think we have got it done. Our loan ratio, when I walked into the bank, was about fifty-nine percent over deposits. After we got through charging off the bad loans, it got down to forty-one percent. It's now back up to sixty-one percent. We have registered loans which in six to nine months will run that up to sixty-five percent of our total profit. I think we have got the good loans coming on strong. There has only been two loans charged off since I've come on the scene. One is for $900 and one is for $600. Every loan which has been charged off was made prior to August the 1st of 1971.

Q. As far as those loans charged off, other than the two you mentioned, since you had arrived there, do you know in dollar amounts how much was charged off? A. Yes, I know how much.

Q. Could you tell us, approximately? A. I could, but I prefer not to.

Q. Fine, I withdraw the question. Could I have a moment, Your Honor?

The Court: How high can you safely run the ratio of loans?

The Witness: This is an arbitrary thing in [399] the large bank, of course, as C&S people well know it can go up to eighty percent or higher.

The Court: You are getting to my question. I'm asking you with respect to yourself.

The Witness: To my bank, I have asked both the FDIC and State Banking Department for guidelines on this point and they have given me no guidelines at all. I think the quality of the loan portfolio has a lot to do with it. If you've got a solid portfolio, I think they will allow it to go higher. They will not give me guidelines. I would say seventy to seventy-five percent would be the top I would want to go. I think that would be a real good loan portfolio to be that high. It really is a gray area, and really——

The Court: With respect to your bank's income, how much of it is attributable to loans?

The Witness: I don't mind giving you the profitability figure.

The Court: I mean, relatively.

The Witness: Relatively, I would say—I would say right now it's about sixty percent, sixty-five percent is loans. When I get all the loans on a string I want, I think it will be seventy-five percent.

[400] The Court: What type of income constitutes the other thirty-five percent?

The Witness: Most of it, I would say ninety percent of the other income is municipal bonds and interest on Government bonds.

The Court: Which you are holding as investments?

The Witness: Right, this is all the monies, our depositors' monies, capital of the bank that's not invested in monies either in Federal funds, municipal bonds or Government bonds.

The Court: What kind of loans, if you can generalize, constitute that sixty-five percent, sixty percent that you now have?

The Witness: What kind of loans? They constitute installment loans. They are handled on a monthly payment basis. They constitute construction loans, land acquisitions, land development and construction loans. These are not apartment projects. We are about—we concentrate just on residential homes. We concentrate only on builders who have a prior record of performance. For instance, I put John Spencer, who is president of Roy D. Warren on the Board so I could funnel the people he is making personal loans to, he is a [401] mortgage broker originating mortgagee, he wants the permanent loans. We are handling the construction loans and feeding him the permanent loans. So, this generates a good volume of constructions loans. Many of them are business loans to the people in the Hapeville area and East Point, College Park, Riverdale, Union City, Fairburn, that whole area down there. And we are finding that we can regenerate the good quality of loans by being highly selective and remain high on our credit.

[402] The Court: Have you taken construction loans and funneled them? Does that or not mean that you are not being in competition with the savings and loan?

A. Right, as far as the loan side.

The Court: Which does it mean?

A. It means we are not in competition with them as far as those loans are concerned. As far as the loans, sir. We are in competition with them as far as savings are concerned, on the deposit side. As long as we are not handling the permanent loans, that's right; I have to say we have made a very few highly selective long-term loans, and when I say long-term. I am talking about not more than ten years on real estate, but it is usually a most unusual situation and is not real estate. I mean not residential loans; it is usually a commercial situation.

Mr. Lehman: If I may just have a moment.

The Court: Well, we have gone for an hour; let's take a ten-minute recess.

(Whereupon a ten-minute recess was had.)

Q. I have just a few more questions, Mr. Woolsey. Could you tell us the size of your bank, as far as [403] assets, deposits? A. Total assets about $20,000,000, and total deposits about $18,000,000.

Q. Do you recall the size when you first arrived there? A. It was about the same size, as far as deposits were concerned. We lost probably a million and a half dollars in CD's, certificates of deposit, because the bank was paying 7½% on some of those, and I just let them run off. I didn't want to pay this kind of rate. But, I think the bank just came down just a little bit and it has come back up to about where it was when I took it over.

Q. Since your arrival in Hapeville, have you had an occasion to or where your loan deposit ratio has reached what you would consider to be maximum? A. No, no, I feel like we still have some room to increase our loan portfolio.

Q. Do you know what you would do when that occasion occurred, if it occurs, as far as if you have continued loans coming in? A. Well, we'd just have to turn them down. Once we reach the point where we have reached what we consider to be a prudent percentage of our loans to our deposits, then we will just have to cut off the loans. [404] Or as loans mature, in order to make new loans as the ones mature and are paid off.

Q. Now, to perhaps clarify a point—— A. Let me, let me say one other thing. If a real good customer comes in, instead of just turning him down, which would make him move his account, we might talk to Birmingham about taking a 100% participation in a loan. So we would try to serve our customers and not just let them go to another bank. We try to keep our account relationship fine and place the loan for them.

Q. By 100% participation, what do you mean? A. They would take the whole loan, they would take the whole loan. We would not participate in any part of that loan.

Q. Would this operate any differently in procedure than your normal participation with Central? A. Well, it might be that we would handle the paperwork. We would close the loan, but we would not put any money into the loan. The money, the proceeds would be advanced by our city correspondent.

Q. Would you still receive a percentage for handling that loan? A. It might be, uh-huh, we might get a percentage of the rate as a servicing fee for handling the paperwork.

[405] Q. Now, to clarify a point that we had earlier discussed as to what services your bank does not provide that a large bank does, you have mentioned trust services. Does your bank provide a lock-box service? A. No, that's right; it does not. We do not have a lock-box.

Q. Why is that? A. I think because the nature of our customers are such that we don't have but very few national concerns who are worried about the availability of funds. This is the purpose of a lock-box. The customer of the banks has his customers mail his check to the mailbox, and then the bank periodically during the day picks up these remittances that are coming in, and does the depositing of the checks for the customer. And lots of times when money is deposited and the balance in the account exceeds X dollars, the money is wired to the home office of that company, so that the home office has the availability of the money, and it reduces the flow. We just don't have that kind of customer. We have what I think is a very strong penetration in the local market, and we are a local bank, and we just don't have that kind of national concern doing business with us.

[406] Q. How would you categorize your customers? A. I would say most of them are local, local customers. But, we have got excellent penetration, so we are doing the business that we think we can do the best.

Q. Does your bank offer letters of credit? A. Not directly, no. No, I think that this could be done with a correspondent.

Q. Have you had occasion to do it? A. Not in the year I've been there.

Q. Does your bank also handle any type of international transactions? A. No, we just don't have the type of customers that would do that, either.

Q. If you were to have such a customer come in, would you be able to handle it through a correspondent? A. Through a correspondent, yes, yes.

Q. Earlier when we were discussing the recruiting and going out and getting new personnel, are you aware, are there any specialized agencies for bank personnel? A. Yes.

Q. Did you utilize this? A. Yes, I did.

Q. Do you recall for how many of your personnel? A. One. My loan officer was the one that—my vice president in charge of the loan department is the one [407] I got from the employment agency. The others came to me, like I say, I picked out the ones that came to me when they heard when I had been made president of the bank. They either knew me directly or had heard about me. I had no problem getting the people I needed.

Q. Now, as we also discussed earlier, Central is your primary correspondent. Now, perhaps I may not have this term correctly. Do they handle your municipal bond portfolio? A. No, they do not.

Q. Who handles that? A. Trust Company of Georgia handles that. And the reason they do that, first, is because no one in Alabama can know as much about Georgia municipals as a bank in Georgia. You have to have someone who is knowledgeable and makes a market in Georgia bonds. I'm using Trust Company of Georgia just for that one service.

Q. Does your bank have a blanket bond? A. Yes, we do.

Q. By whom was it provided? A. Saint Paul Fire & Indemnity Company and for $1 million, bankers blanket bond.

Q. You are not using a correspondent for the provisions of this? A. No.

[408] Q. Does your bank also have a disability insurance program? A. Yes.

Q. By whom is this provided? A. This is provided by the—it's sponsored by the Georgia Bankers Association and it's through Georgia International.

Q. Again, I assume you are not utilizing a correspondent for this service? A. No, no.

Q. One final question, when you arrived at the Citizens Bank of Hapeville, did C&S own stock in that bank? A. Yes, they did. They owned five percent.

Q. Do they now? A. No, sir, I bought them out.

Mr. Lehman: I have no further questions, Your Honor.

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Doyle

Q. Mr. Woolsey, in your testimony about the bad shape your bank was in when you found it, I believe you also told us that C&S management had been in the bank, Ken Ingram and Bobby Morris, for only three months? A. That's right.

[409] Q. The bad shape that you have described, then, originated and began before that three month's period; did it not? A. Right, it certainly did.

Q. You testified, I believe, that C&S had been asked to provide management by the owner of the bank, the then owner of the bank? A. That's right.

Q. Do you know that that request was also a request that was made by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation? A. No, I had no knowledge of that.

Q. Do you know that Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation had in effect required the prior president to resign? A. Oh, yes, I knew that.

Q. And that was the man who was president before this three month's caretaker period? A. That's right.

Q. And during that caretaker period, wouldn't you agree that C&S had no opportunity during that period of time, because of the caretaker relationship the incentive to put in its own systems? A. Operational systems you are talking about?

Q. Yes, sir, I mean to change the bank over and [410] put in its total operational system for a three-month period? A. Right, they didn't know how long it was going to be that they were going to have to do this when they went out there. You are right, they knew it was a temporary situation so they did not change the system in any way.

Q. Right. And during that three-month period, an effort, of course, was being made to sell the bank and bring in new management for the bank? A. Not sell the bank, not that I know of.

Q. To bring in new management for the bank? A. Bring in new management.

Q. You did, in fact, purchase a substantial amount of stock in the bank; did you not? A. Yes, I did.

Q. Better than fifty percent? A. Yes.

Q. You had no difficulty in purchasing that five percent stock which had been owned by C&S holding? A. No, they were most cooperative.

Q. And the purchase of that bank and in the purchase of that stock, we agree that you bought more than fifty percent? A. Yes, fifty-seven percent.

Q. You financed your stock purchase with Central [411] Bank in Birmingham; did you not? A. Right.

Q. Can you tell us what your interest rate was on that loan? A. Prime.

Q. Were there any compensating balances discussed at the time? A. No, sir.

Q. Did that factor have anything to do with your choice of Central Bank as your principal correspondent? A. It surely did.

Q. Was another factor that entered into your choice of the Birmingham bank as your primary correspondent your concern about turning your demand deposit accounting and your participations over to the downtown banks who were your competitors? A. Yes, it was my concern, when I went in, that C&S had my demand deposits and have a branch down the street from me and were my competition.

Q. And the point was you simply didn't want that kind of information on your bank available in the hands of any competitor in Atlanta? A. Exactly.

Q. C&S, all the rest of the downtown banks? A. That's right.

[412] Q. And could you, in your estimation, use a Birmingham bank as a correspondent with the one-day delay in handling if you had major business accounts who were concerned about the need or money and availability? A. You made a presumption that is not correct, that there's a one-day delay.

Q. You don't offer lock box services? A. That's correct.

Q. You don't have concentration accounts? A. No, sir.

Q. Now, do you, in the management of your bank today, Mr. Woolsey, receive any regular management reviews on a continuing basis from any other source? [413] A. No, I have invited Central Bank to come to our board meetings, if they wanted to, because—particularly in the beginning. Of course, they had the stock that I had bought as collateral to their loans, so to assure them that the bank is being run correctly, I invited them to attend our board meetings if they wanted to, and they attended one meeting and that was the first meeting, and they have not ever come to another meeting.

Q. That was the first and only meeting? A. The first and only meeting. They were convinced, apparently, that the bank was going to be run sound.

Q. Do you ever furnish them with statistical data on your bank? A. No, sir, no, sir.

Q. Do you regularly receive back from them any sort of suggestions as to what you ought to do about it? A. No, sir, I never contact them unless it is on a participation on a loan. That is the only contact.

Q. You clearly, from your direct testimony, have not received from them general operating guides or any such as that? A. No, sir; no, sir.

[414] Q. You told us that you had one audit provided by them—— A. Right.

Q. To this point? A. At my request.

Q. Yes, sir. And that is not available to you, according to your understanding with them, on a regular continuing kind of basis? A. They have offered it to me on an annual basis.

Q. Once a year basis? A. Once a year basis with no charge.

Q. Right. You don't use Central Bank of Birmingham as a regular source of personnel assistance? A. Right.

Q. They don't provide any pool of personnel for you to meet your absences or demands or any such as that? A. No, sir.

Q. Do they provide to you any surprise audits so that no one in your bank knows when the audit is coming? A. This operational audit is a surprise audit.

Q. Is it a surprise to you? A. Yes.

Q. You request it, though, don't you? [415] A. I request it, but I don't know when it is coming. An audit is not a good audit unless it is a surprise audit.

Q. Do you receive credit audits from them? A. No, this is operational audits.

Q. Do they provide you with any standardized general ledger accounting system? A. No.

Q. Do they regularly include your staff or your employees in any schools or training programs that they have? A. I am the only one that has ever gone to Birmingham. (Witness shakes head negatively)

Q. All right, sir. Now, you told us about the development of the master pension and profit-sharing plan of the Independent Bankers Association, and you told us, I think, five or six banks presently have that. How many independent banks are there in the IBA and in the state of Georgia today? A. As far as members of the association, 206.

Q. I see. A. There are actually, of course, many more independent banks that are not members of the Association. probably closer to 300 in Georgia.

Q. And at this point, five are members of the [416] master pension and profit-sharing plan. You told us that each bank has its own qualifications and its own—— A. Its own joinder agreement that has to be signed.

Q. Yes, sir. Therefore the employees in Bank A can be on a different schedule of contributions and benefits and the rest? A. Right.

Q. Is that right? A. It has complete flexibility.

Q. The employees in Bank A, therefore, are not able to transfer their benefits on an equal basis if they moved to Bank B, are they? Because they have different schedules and that sort of thing. A. Right, right, I don't know of any portability to the benefits.

Q. All right, sir. And basically, I understand from your direct testimony that the Citizens Bank of Hapeville does not compete for the large corporate customer? A. Oh, we would like to have it, but we are not set up like they are.

Q. Yes, sir. And you are competing primarily for the small customer, the small personal customer and the small business customer? A. Right.

[417] Q. And you find that that competition is in a localized area, as I believe you testified? A. Right.

Q. In that part of South Fulton, I suppose Hapeville, East Point, College Park, and the communities in that area, do you also—— A. (Nodding affirmatively.)

Q. Can you tell us what percentage of your personal customers, individual customers, live or work in Hapeville? A. Right in the city of Hapeville?

Q. Yes, sir, or in the surrounding, in the immediate adjoining area. A. I would say probably fifty percent, forty to fifty percent.

Q. Is that either live or work or both? A. No, no, no. As far as—if it is live or work, it is probably ninety percent.

Q. Yes, sir. And forty percent live, you would figure something like that? A. I would say would live there, right. In other words, we have got—we have got 17,000 people at the airport. Got 6,000 people at the Ford Motor Plant; we got probably 2,000 people at Owens-Illinois Glass Plant.

[418] Q. Right. A. Those people don't all live in Hapeville.

Q. Correct. A. They live all over Atlanta, and they come to Hapeville for their employment and, for that reason, we are getting many of their accounts.

Q. Right. So perhaps ninety percent of the people, of the individual accounts that you have, originate from customers who live or work in that immediate surrounding area? A. Right.

Q. What percentage of your commercial business customers are located in Hapeville, Forest Park, East Point, and the Palmetto area, would you estimate? A. You talking about loan customers or deposit customers?

Q. Well, talking about both of them. A. I would say ninety percent again.

Q. All right, sir. So, then, the area where your bank is, your bank is a localized bank, I believe you told us, and is the area in which you compete effectively for business then in that area that you have just described to us? A. Uh-huh, that's right.

Q. All right, sir. [419] A. Of course, numbers are misleading, though. One customer can borrow $1,000,000 and make up for a lot of small customers, and we have some substantial customers that are not in Hapeville that are doing business with us, because they think we are giving them a good deal.

Q. Yes, sir. Do you have any customer presently who are borrowing that $1,000,000? A. Yes, sir, sure do.

Q. You do. Based on your competition from the Citizens Bank of Hapeville, then, has it been your experience that all of Fulton County constitutes one market? A. Yes, sir.

Q. In which your bank competes. A. Yes, sir, DeKalb County, Clayton County, Cobb County and Fayette County. We are getting business from all those places.

Q. Now, when you were with First National Bank in Decatur, that branch was then located in the city limits of Decatur? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did the majority of your business while you were there come from? A. I would say from DeKalb County, all over the [420] county.

Q. While you were there, did you attempt to create a local image while you were at that bank? A. I guess I did.

Q. You had been born and raised in Decatur? A. No, I wasn't born there, but I was raised there.

Q. Raised there and gone to high school there? A. Right.

Q. All right, sir. Did you regard the First National Bank of Decatur as an effective competitor in the Chamblee area? Was it as effective there as it was in the city limits of Decatur? A. Did I? Wait a minute; say the question again, please, sir.

Q. All right, sir. Was the First National Bank of Decatur your branch? A. Yeah.

Q. Was it as effective a competitor in the Chamblee area of DeKalb County as it was in the Decatur area of DeKalb County? A. No, it was not as effective.

Q. Did you find that, say, C&S Bank of Chamblee was as effective a competitor in the city limits of Decatur? [421] A. No, it was not.

Q. As a matter of fact, C&S Emory was between you and Chamblee; was it not? A. That's right, Fulton National and a few others.

Q. Yes, sir. Now, while you were at Decatur, did you compete against C&S Emory? A. Yes, I did.

Q. Did you compete against them the same way you competed against C&S National? A. Yes.

Q. Did you compete against C&S Chamblee the same way you competed against C&S Emory? A. Yes.

Q. Do you believe that there would be any difference in your competition then if C&S Chamblee became a branch of C&S Emory? A. I do not think there would be any difference in the amount of competition.

Q. Now, part of the ability of a small bank to compete depends on the availability of capital for expansion, does it not? A. (Nodding affirmatively.) Well, wait a minute now, ability to compete, you mean for loans?

Q. Well, let me come at it this way. The initial [422] purchase of the majority interest of the stock in your bank by you, you subsequently redistribute it to your friends, people you knew; is that right? A. Right, that is right.

Q. And you didn't have any trouble selling the stock, did you? A. Had no trouble at all, and I did not sell it all.

Q. Yes, sir, you now have about ten percent of it? A. Fifteen percent.

Q. And right now today, you are the person who is running your bank, aren't you? A. This is right.

Q. And is it your opinion that what counts in the management of a bank is how well that management manages it? A. That is right.

Q. And in your situation right now, do you believe that if you didn't own any stock in your bank, you would be running the bank because of your management of it? A. I would hope so.

Q. Yes, sir. Mr. Woolsey, you are presently an officer of the Independent Bankers Association of [423] Georgia? A. Yes, I am.

Q. And you are aware of the fact that the Independent Bankers Association brought a suit against the State Superintendent of Banks and the C&S Bank in the Superior Court of DeKalb County? A. Yes, I am.

Mr. Doyle: All right, sir. Those are all the questions.

Mr. Lehman: May we have a moment, Your Honor?

[424] The Court: Where is your bank located?

A. South Central Avenue, just two blocks from the Fulton National Bank. We are the only bank in the city limits.

The Court: You have only one bank?

The Witness: We have a branch over at the International Plaza which is a short distance from the airport, just off Virginia Avenue.

Redirect Examination

By Mr. Lehman

Q. Just a few short questions, Mr. Woolsey. These various services that Mr. Doyle mentioned that you indicated you were not receiving, such as periodic credit audits, furnishing temporary personnel, operating guides, why don't you receive these? A. Because I don't think we need them.

Q. If you needed them, could you get them? A. Yes, I think we could get them.

Q. Now, while you were at Decatur, did you compete differently against those C&S Banks located close to you than you did any other bank located close to you? A. Yes.

Q. Do you compete differently against any other C&S Bank now than you do other banks? [425] A. No.

The Court: You may step down.

Mr. Sims: Plaintiff calls Dr. Samuel Skogstad.

Whereupon,

SAMUEL L. SKOGSTAD,

was called as a witness, by and on behalf of the Government, and having first been duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination

By Mr. Sims

Q. Would you state your full name, please? A. My name is Samuel L. Skogstad.

Q. Dr. Skogstad, I'm going to show you two documents which the plaintiff has marked Plaintiff's Exhibits 104 and 105. Can you identify those documents? A. Yes, those are affidavits I prepared at the request of the plaintiff.

Q. Do you have copies of those documents up there with you? A. I have, yes.

Q. Referring to the first document, No. 104, titled, "Affidavit of Dr. Samuel L. Skogstad," does this document contain your analyses and conclusions as to the appropriate geographic area in which to analyze the [462] competitive effects of the proposed merger which are the subject of this litigation? A. Yes, it does.

Q. Does the second document reflect, 105, the second affidavit of Dr. Samuel L. Skogstad, does the second affidavit contain your assessment of economic reports submitted by defendant? A. Yes.

Mr. Sims: Your Honor, these documents which we have marked 104 and 105, plaintiff's exhibits, have been submitted to the Court per our understanding of the direct testimony of plaintiff's economic expert. We now leave him open for cross-examination.

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Doyle

Q. Dr. Skogstad, I'd like to begin by asking you a few questions which relate to general positions regarding the issue of branch banking and independent unit banking, since these are germane to the views you express here.

Do you agree that most economists subscribe to the position that principal consequences of anti-branching laws at this point in American history are to restrain bank competition below the optimum level and hinder the free flow of resources in response to market forces? [427] A. I'm afraid I could not agree with that statement that those ecoonmists have conducted a survey. I've seen some literature, recently in which conclusions to the contrary are reached.

Q. Would you agree with that statement or not, sir? A. Would you repeat the statement? It's a little broad.

Q. The principle consequences of anti-branching laws at this point in American history are to restrain bank competition below the optimum level and hinder the free flow of resources in response to signals sent out by market forces? A. That seems like a reasonable statement, yes, sir.

Q. You agree with that? A. Yes.

Q. Could you further agree that both theory and statistical data give economists a bias in favor of branch banking? A. That would certainly be a true statement of my view.

Q. All right. Isn't it true that unit banks have insufficiencies in allocating funds to areas of heavy loan demands from deposit supply areas? A. I'm afraid I couldn't confirm that. That's [428] an empirical declaration I'd be reticient to confirm.

Q. Do you accept the hypothesis that cost savings or economies of size can be realized by larger banks after some relatively high level of output is reached? A. That's a question that has been investigated rather extensively in literature recently. The most recent results, I would say, raised some question as to the validity of that statement. However, again, it's an empirical question. You'd be trying to ascertain veracity for years into the future.

Q. You have no position on it at this point; is that correct, one way or the other? A. No, I have seen evidence on both sides in recent years.

Q. Do you regard that the recent change in the Georgia branch banking laws as to county-wide branch banking is pro-competitive or anti-competitive? A. I consider the recent change procompetitive.

Q. And the location of numerous branches by downtown Atlanta banks in suburban and DeKalb-Fulton counties as being pro-competitive? A. Yes, generally, yes.

Q. Now you state in your affidavit, your second affidavit that it is not within your competence to assess the past or present relationships among the various banks. By that [429] I assume you mean the defendant banks? A. Defendant banks, or any other banks in this [430] area or any other area.

Q. Do you include the defendant banks within that statement? A. Yes, I do.

Q. Now, you say you're only asked by the plaintiff to determine what geographic areas would be appropriate within which to analyze the competitive effect of the proposed merger? A. I'm sorry. Is that a quote? You're quoting there. I don't remember that as an exact quote.

Q. You were asked by plaintiff to determine what geographic areas would be appropriate within which to analyze the competitive effects of the proposed merger? A. Yes, I was asked to do that.

Q. Tell me yes or no, did you determine that there would be a competitive effect from the proposed merger? A. That there would be a competitive effect?

Q. Yes or no, did you determine that there would be a competitive effect? A. I determined that it was likely that there would be.

Q. Yes or no, Doctor, did you determine that there would be a competitive effect from the proposed mergers? [431] A. I believe that——

Q. Yes or no, Doctor, did you determine that there would be a competitive effect from the proposed mergers?

The Court: Doctor, you can explain your answer.

The Witness: Must I say yes or no?

The Court: Well, on page two of your first affidavit at the beginning of the first full paragraph, you say that was what you were hired to do and then he is asking you, did you or didn't you. Then, you can explain to any extent you want to.

By Mr. Doyle

Q. I think I'm entitled to a yes or no before he explains; am I not?

The Court: You are entitled to it. I don't know how much value a yes or no has.

The Witness: Yes, it's my judgment that there are competitive implications of the proposed mergers.

The Court: Now, explain to your heart's content.

The Witness: I am willing to go with that.

By Mr. Doyle

Q. Doctor, I want to ask you about competition [432] between banks in terms of the products or services that are offered by banks. First off, would you agree that there are various theories about the market for commercial banks, for instance, Hodgman, are you familiar with his theory, Hodgman, he argues for a composite market in which the basic product is safekeeping and transferring as a means of payment. Are you familiar with that? A. Oh, yes.

Q. On the other hand, there is a theory of banking as a multiple product industry with separate markets for different services; are you familiar with that? A. I am familiar with that. I characterize that as a hypothesis. I think the theory more or less is common in all these approaches.

Q. And this latter theory argues as well that it may be appropriate to group some of the services such as deposit granting services, credit granting services—— A. Right.

Q. ——and that essentially is the kind of analysis used by Clifton Krepts, which you cited in your affidavit; is it not? A. That's right.

Q. In this case you have chosen only the small [433] deposit customers to assess the competitive effect of the merger here proposed? A. Yes.

Q. Your testimony on direct, your affidavit, therefore, does not consider at all the effects on banking competition for the large deposit type customers, the large business customers; is that correct? A. That's correct. I did not include any of those data in my study.

Q. And your affidavits simply do not treat at all banking competition in that area? A. That's correct.

Q. The effect of these mergers on banking competition so far as it relates to competition for the large business, then you simply have not treated in your affidavit? A. That's correct. I believe I point out in my first affidavit that I confine my attention to the small demand deposit customers under $1,000.

Q. You chose under $1,000 for the small customers that you were looking to. Would you agree with me that it would be a conservative dividing line between the small regional customer or small localized customer on the one hand and national-regional customer on the other would be deposit accounts in excess of $10,000? [434] A. I'm sorry, I don't think I understand the question. Conservative dividing line?

Q. Yes. You say that the small, that the average customer has a very localized competition for banking services; is that correct? A. Yes, localized market, I believe I said.

Q. And on the other hand, the larger customer producing deposits in excess of $100,000, $10,000, the competition for his banking services is much wider; isn't it, with the geographic area? A. Yes.

Q. Would you agree with me that a dividing line which is reasonably conservative one between the customers we are talking about and this other customer, would be a $10,000 account? A. Well——

Q. An account in excess of $10,000? A. I would think that you could probably make more than two classifications and certainly I would think the characteristics of response of customers of $10,000 on the average would be different than those customers below $10,000.

Q. Now, is it true that—it's true, isn't it, that seventy-five percent of all demand deposits in all banks in Fulton and DeKalb are accounts in excess of [435] $10,000? A. I'm not sure of that. That seems like a reasonable estimate.

Q. That figure sounds about right to you. Now, you also say in your second affidavit that unit banks above a certain minimum size which I think you put as about $5 million deposits? A. Yes, now, that's not actually my finding. I'm reporting there what the literature appeared—appears to report.

Q. This is as to how well a bank can manage a small independent bank? A. That's correct. I haven't—I'm sorry. You're talking——

Q. I'm talking now about unit banks above a certain minimum size. A. Yes.

Q. Which, according to your second affidavit you put at $5 million of deposits, if it's well managed, can compete with management of big banks? A. Yes, that's a summary of findings. There's a fairly substantial amount of literature on the subject of cost information for various size banks. I haven't conducted myself empirical research on the economics of scale or relationship between cost and output. Therefore, [436] I have to say that this, what you characterize as my statement about the size class is really my summary of the literature on the area.

Q. That's not your statement one way or another? You don't know? A. It's my statement of what the literature has told me, yes.

[437] Q. But, you, as an economist, on your own empirical investigation, don't know that; is that what you are—— A. That's correct.

Q. What you are distinguishing for us? A. I have conducted no studies.

Q. That literature then, well, you in your study have been focusing primarily on the competition for the localized business of the small customer with accounts under a thousand dollars? A. Yes, that's correct.

Q. Now, don't the limitations imposed by your own analysis necessarily lead to the conclusion that, including large accounts, in excess of $10,000, is irrelevant to a determination of the appropriate concentration ratio, so far as it affects this small customer you defined? A. Appropriate concentration ratios for what purpose?

Q. So far as it affects the small customer. A. Certainly. If you include deposits of customers over $10,000, that wouldn't give you an accurate concentration ratio for customers with deposits under $1,000.

Q. Now, talking about the small localized [438] customer, one element of banking competition for that customer is the competition between banks to afford the most convenient banking to that customer; correct? A. That's correct.

Q. Convenience is one of the most significant elements in where a customer chooses to bank, isn't it? A. I believe that is a very significant element, yes.

Q. And the most significant element for convenience in banking is the geographic location where the banking office is physically set, right? A. Its location and its parking facilities, whether it does or does not have drive-in window; its hours of operation in some locations are very important.

Q. Presence or absence of twenty-four hour banking? A. That could possibly be a convenience factor in areas where that is important to the customers.

Q. Do you know of any non-C&S Bank in the Atlanta area, however defined, that does have twenty-four hour banking? A. I do not know. I didn't even know, in fact, that C&S had it.

Q. I see. Is it fair to conclude, Doctor, that the basis and the expertise which you bring to these [439] affidavits is that of an economist as opposed to a bank consultant? A. I am not sure what the distinction is. I am sorry; I am not trying to pick nits, but I don't know the distinction between the economist who is a non-bank consultant and an economist who is a bank consultant. An economist, I am an economist, yes.

Q. All right. Another factor beyond the convenience factor that goes into the competition between banks is the personal equation, isn't it? A. The personal equation?

Q. Yes, sir, that is the very personal nature of the banker-customer relationship. A. I can testify about my own experience. That is certainly important to me, and I would presume that is important to other bank customers as well.

Q. But you don't presume to testify on any basis of expertise as to the importance in bank competition of that personal relationship between the banker and the customer? A. Well, the bankers that I have discussed this with tell me that this is important, and so I have that view from the banker's side. Then, from my own side, I recognize that as important. So, I consider it a reason, a very plausible hypothesis.

[440] Q. And you are testifying on that now as a basis of an individual who has dealt with bankers or as an expert? A. Well, both as an individual——

Q. All right, sir. A. ——who has dealt with banks, who has a banking account, and as an economist who has interviewed bankers and as an individual that has had conversation with bankers and who has a number of friends in the banking business.

Q. I see. So, based on that basis, you are not surprised to find that a good banker who moves from one location to another will have many customers who will follow him, even if it requires them to drive past two or three banks to get—stay with him. A. I would expect some customers to follow some bankers as they move from one office to another.

Q. All right, sir. Don't you also find that different banks have different loan policies? Have you noticed that? A. Different loan policies?

Q. Yes, sir, have you determined that in your discussions with bankers? For instance, one will gravitate heavily to consumer lending, and another will place greater emphasis on business lending. [441] A. Oh, yes, yes.

Q. Banks also compete in terms of the public image they advertise and project; is that not correct? A. I think that advertising is certainly part of their competitive strategy.

Q. Right. And some banks work to establish a very local image? A. Yes, I believe there is some specific advertising aimed at that.

Q. The front-yard bank? A. Right.

Q. Other banks tend to emphasize stability or solidity, safety? A. I think all banks advertise, for example, that they are members of the F.D.I.C., which is, I presume——

Q. Right. And banks generally try to create or differentiate their images in their advertising; do they not, as part of their competitive strategy? A. I am sorry, I really can't—to differentiate there their image?

Q. The front-yard bank on the one hand, or the big bank on the other hand, that sort of thing. Have you observed that? A. Well, I have heard a number of advertisements for banks. I hadn't really thought about that.

[442] Q. You hadn't thought about that in terms of competition between banks or as an element? A. No, I think that the location of the banking office probably is the most important element of the determination in the type of customers that bank sought.

Q. Now, banks also compete with each other in terms of the products and services they offer, so that in addition to what you might expect as the normal range of services for a small customer, you will find one bank has credit cards, another bank will offer loans against the credit card, and that sort of thing? A. Yes.

Q. Banks compete as to their products. Now, we have identified significant areas and elements where banks compete in offering convenience in products or services that they offer, and the kinds of people who work in the bank to supply that personal equation and the kinds of loan policies of the bank in the creation and advertising of an image or identification of the bank; right? A. Yes.

Q. And these are all essential ingredients of competition between banks? A. They are certainly—they seem a very reasonable list; I am sure there are others as well.

[443] Q. Yes, sir. Now, in your affidavit and earlier in your direct testimony, you said it is not within your competence to assess the nature of the past or present relationships among the various C&S Banks? A. Yes, that's right.

Q. So, you, therefore, have failed to consider whether or not the defendant banks compete against each other as to all of these essential ingredients of competition we have just discussed; isn't that right? A. Now, what I—I am sorry. Would you repeat that?

Q. Yes, sir. You have failed to consider whether or not the defendant C&S Banks compete against each other with regard to each and every one of these essential elements of competition we have just discussed; isn't that right? A. I have not examined the advertising of each C&S banking office. Is that part of the question?

Q. You told us—— A. The advertising——

Q. You told us that you had not examined the relationships among the banks? A. That's correct.

Q. So, as to all of these things that we have just talked about, you haven't examined the relationships [444] among them as to the various C&S Banks, have you? A. No, the relationship as I—my intention there was simply to disclaim any expertise in understanding of the way that management has moved between one bank and another, the extent of control that may or may not be exercised between one bank or another, the extent to which the management of one banking office meets with management of another banking office to discuss policies. Those are the managerial-level relationships that I feel that I indicated in that testimony that I couldn't evaluate.

Q. Well, as to all of the factors we have just discussed, did you or did you not determine that the defendant C&S Banks compete as to those things? A. I collected no data on the relative advertising campaigns.

Q. No, I mean all of the factors we have been talking about as ingredients of competition. You did not evaluate whether or not these banks compete against each other with regard to these elements, did you? A. I did not collect any data on those elements.

Q. Don't you believe that those elements of competition are relevant to this case? A. I would say marginally, if at all.

Q. Were you told not to study them? [445] A. No.

Q. Okay. A. It didn't occur to me to study them, as a matter of fact.

Q. Well, how can you determine a competitive effect of a merger if you have not considered the actual relationships among the parties to the merger as they exist before the merger, and also the relationships they have with their customers? A. Well, as an economist——

Mr. Sims: Your Honor, if I might, I think that the cross-examination of even an expert witness is limited to a certain extent by the scope of the direct.

The Court: I will sustain the objection to that. I think the witness has told you what he hasn't done.

Q. All right, sir. Let me ask you this, Doctor. Did you assume that the defendant banks were, for competitive purposes, all separate unit banks? A. Separate unit banks? I did not assume that, no.

Q. All right, sir. Did you conduct any survey of bank customers? A. I did not.

[446] Q. Are you aware of any survey of bank customers, other than has been attended to—made part of the defendants' economic report? A. I am aware that there have been such surveys made.

Q. Are you aware of any surveys that are being made of bank customers in connection with this lawsuit, are being made or have been made, other than the Baxter Survey? A. A customer survey, not to my knowledge.

Q. All right, sir. You are not—you don't have any knowledge of any survey of bank customers being made in connection with issues in this lawsuit? A. I haven't—no, other than the one that is here in the——

Q. Right, in the—— A. In the economic report.

Q. Yes, sir. Okay.

Doctor, in your first affidavit, if you would turn to Page 12, Table 3, would you tell us how you arrived at the figures contained in the first column? A. Yeah, I believe, I believe that that is explained in the text, if I am not mistaken. It was done by multiplying—we picked some data for DeKalb and Fulton Counties, and found that for the people [447] reported in the census who work and live in DeKalb and Fulton Counties, that for each such person there were 0.93 small checking accounts in DeKalb and Fulton County banking offices. Now, I took that .93——

[448] The Court: Where did you get the .93?

The Witness: Calculated by the census report gives us the number of people who work in DeKalb and Fulton Counties, and we have, from the data submitted by the bank, by the banks the total number of small checking accounts with known zip code addresses. So, I divided the number by locations, that is, so we divide the number of accounts in Fulton and DeKalb Counties' banking offices by the number of people who work and live in Fulton and DeKalb Counties. That is the ratio that gives you .93 accounts per person, per person in that category.

Now, that is used as the norm. If it is a norm, if that is a correct norm, then we can multiply the people, the number of people who work in these peripheral counties, Clayton, Cobb and Gwinnett Counties by .93 per person. That gives us an estimate of the number of accounts there are that originate in these counties.

Q. That gives you an estimate of all the total, the total accounts that originate in those counties? A. That's right.

Q. Yes. Now, first, in that base figure that you were telling us about, you included those people who lived in Fulton or DeKalb County but who work outside of [449] those counties in the rest of the five-county areas; did you not? A. I believe that's correct.

Q. You talked about people who both reside and work in Fulton and DeKalb Counties? A. I believe that's right.

Q. All right. Now, if you included those Fulton-DeKalb residents who work in other parts of the metropolitan Atlanta, this would have increased the size of the labor force which you considered as a base; wouldn't it? A. If I included more people, yes.

Q. That, therefore, would have decreased the ratio which you came to as .93? A. That's correct.

Q. Now the people who are living in Fulton-DeKalb and working in Cobb, Clayton, Gwinnett are all commuting; are they not? A. Yes.

Q. By definition, and their commutation to outlying counties in fact increase an inter-action of customers between Fulton, DeKalb on one hand and Cobb, Clayton on the other? A. Presumably they go outside of the county.

Q. Increases the inter-action on the customer side of your market; does it not? [450] A. It may have.

Q. Don't you agree that commutation is affected which increases inter-action between what might or otherwise be a separate market? A. Yes, I think so. I think the direction of the commutation is important. I think people who live in DeKalb and go out into Gwinnett, people residing in DeKalb County and travelling salesmen would be less likely to bank away because of the commuting than would people who live in DeKalb and come into Atlanta each day.

Q. Would you verify this on the basis of the census data? A. Census data?

Q. Yes. A. The travelling salesman in question, no.

Q. You didn't find that impression in census data? A. No, census data don't have banking accounts data.

Q. Essentially, what you have done is applied a base in Fulton-DeKalb which includes commuters to the labor force which is heavily influenced by commutation; isn't that correct? A. I'm sorry. Labor force?

Q. Yes, the people who live in Fulton-DeKalb Counties but who work in the outlying five counties [451] constitute twenty-two percent of the people employed in those counties; don't they? A. I doubt it. That may be correct. I'm sorry, I don't have the data in front of me. I doubt twenty-two percent of the Fulton-DeKalb County residents work outside of those counties.

Q. No, constitute twenty-two percent of the work force in those two counties. A. Yes.

Q. Isn't it, that fairly significant percentage of employed population to banks that are located in those two counties? A. It may very well be.

Now, it's very difficult to make a judgment on the basis of these percentages only, for example, because if we know how many people are in the affected counties and how many people moving there, to think that constitutes a better basis for making a judgment.

Q. Right. As a matter of fact, the census data, the figures used in column one come from the 1970 census; don't they? A. Column one of table three?

Q. Yes, the census data which is a basis for that? A. Yes.

[452] Q. The subpoenaed information you used to count the total number of small accounts is 1972 information? A. Yes.

Q. And from that, two and a half year time from the census to the subpoenaed information, you have witnessed an enormous out-migration? A. Out-migration from where?

Q. Fulton-DeKalb to Cobb, Gwinnett, Clayton and Gwinnett. A. Certainly, I don't believe I have any data on that growth question.

Q. You are not familiar with the census data from 1960 to 1970 showing out-migration from Atlanta? A. From the City of Atlanta?

Q. Yes. A. That's different. It's a different matter from DeKalb and Fulton. Most of the out-migration is going out to DeKalb County. I'd say it's a rather small proportion who leave the City of Atlanta and go outside of Fulton and DeKalb. You can go up to Northeastern Fulton, that's a heavy growth area. There is a growth, I'm sure, into Cobb County as well. There's a considerable growth in Northeastern corner up here into DeKalb County.

Q. Beyond DeKalb? A. I'm certain that there's growth beyond DeKalb. [453] I don't mean to suggest there is no growth outside the two counties.

Q. The northwest quarter out the Northwest Expressway into Cobb County? A. Yes.

Q. Down the Expressway into Clayton is the fastest growing county in the state? A. Very rapidly. I believe the Clayton County population has doubled, as a matter of fact.

Q. The figure you use based on the zip code information assumed the county of origin is in every instance the county of residence; do they not? A. No, the county to which—the zip code data show the zip code to which the account statement is mailed each month.

Q. You're assuming—your impression of your table three. column two, is that the county of origin is the county of residence; aren't you? A. I assume that is almost, that's generally the case.

Q. There are a lot of people who have statements mailed to their business address or some other address; aren't there? A. I have no idea whether there are a lot in percentage terms or not. I'm not sure of those. However, I [454] think they would be of marginal significance.

Q. Now, Doctor, what you did to determine how many business accounts there were, now what you did was to take the zip code reports——

Mr. Sims: I wonder if there is any way to set that up so we could all take a look at it.

Q. Now, what you were trying to do, Doctor, in table three was to show the number of zip codes that originated in Clayton, Cobb and Gwinnett Counties that were in Fulton-DeKalb banks and offices? A. The number of checking accounts, small checking accounts.

Q. So, what you did, you took the zip codes for that report, the zip codes and then calculated how many of them there were? A. That's correct.

Q. By each particular zip code. Now, I want to ask you, Doctor, did you do any work yourself or did you have it done or did you direct it to be done? A. I directed most of it.

Q. All right, sir. Now, let me show you, starting with this zip code, sir, 30354, did you allocate this part of it to Clayton County and this part of it to Fulton County, or did you report all of that zip code as being in Fulton? [455] A. Let's see. There are eighty-seven zip codes. I just can't remember off-hand. I believe there are exhibits with our worksheets that would——

Q. Would you accept my statement—would you accept my statement, then, that as to this part of the zip code which is in Clayton County, you allocated it into Fulton County? A. I don't have it in front of me. If you say it's true, I'm certain it is.

Q. All right. Would you agree with me, generally, that as to all of the zip codes that are on the boundaries—I wouldn't go down the list—of Fulton and DeKalb, where it's split by the county line, it was always allocated into Fulton and DeKalb? A. Went one way or the other. None of them were split.

Q. They all went in? A. They all went in, yes.

Q. So, therefore, what you have done is by putting all of these areas into Fulton-DeKalb Counties in your split zip, your allocation of split zip codes, you expanded them into what most of us know as Cobb, Gwinnett, Henry and the rest? A. Yes.

Q. We have done that to show how much bigger the [456] counties are in geography, how much bigger they are in zip code allocation. I want you to take a look at it and ask if you agree those are areas you have now included within? A. What is the question—does it enlarge the counties?

Q. Do you agree that those areas you have now are included within Fulton-DeKalb.

The Court: He has testified he has included all split ones in the county which gives it the inevitable result, of what you say.

Q. Do you know how many actual bank accounts come from those areas? A. Again, I don't have the data in front of me.

Q. Would you agree with me—— A. I think they entered those as exhibits.

Q. Would you agree with me that on the basis of three hundred and thirty and some-odd thousand accounts—that's a round figure—that fifty-one thousand accounts originate in those split zip codes; does that sound reasonable? A. I can't testify to factual data when I don't have the facts in front of me.

Q. Does that sound reasonable? A. I really don't have any feeling whether it is or not.

[457] Q. Okay. Would you expect from your knowledge of the area that folks who are living in those areas closest to Fulton and DeKalb are more likely to be commuters into Fulton-DeKalb than people living on the farther out regions of those counties? A. That seems reasonable. I'd have to say it's speculation on my part.

[458] Q. All right. Would it also sound reasonable to you, therefore, that by allocating all of those people into Fulton and DeKalb County rather than counting them where they were, that you have discounted significantly the influence of Atlanta banking alternatives on residents of those metropolitan counties, Fulton, Cobb—— A. Oh, no, I would not agree with that at all.

Q. You would not? A. No, I don't.

Q. Those people are, in fact, banking in Fulton and DeKalb banks, are they not, because that is where you got the subpoena information? A. There are some people who reside there who bank in Fulton and DeKalb banks, yes, certainly.

Q. As a matter of fact, all of these 51,000 bank in Fulton and DeKalb banks because that is where you got the subpoena, right? A. That's correct, yes. There are also, presumably, other people there who don't bank in Fulton and DeKalb banks.

Q. I understand, but I am talking about the figures you put in your table. So, therefore, by allocating the amount you have discounted significantly the effect of Fulton and DeKalb on those counties. A. No, see, I won't go to that conclusion. I [459] will agree with you that I have increased the size of Fulton and DeKalb banks, since those are less populous counties, that that removes what would be percentage-wise a more important proportion of the peripheral county populations than that percentage would be to Fulton and DeKalb. However, that does not imply to me that banking markets in Gwinnett County are grossly miscalculated because of that inclusion, because——

Q. Certainly, at least 50,000 people, they are now living out and banking in, right, if you allocate them in the other direction from the way you allocated them, certainly as to those—— A. Certinly, those people come into Fulton and DeKalb, and I am sure that Gwinnett County banks, for example, would like to have those customers.

Q. All right, sir. Now, you have told us that the customer that you are talking about is a localized kind of customer, and what I want to find out is whether or not you investigated the significance of the five-county originating customer to those banks located in the suburban parts of Fulton and DeKalb closest to that county. A. In those banking offices, no; however, that, again, is information that can be taken from the exhibits that——

[460] Q. But you didn't investigate that. A. Investigate it? Yes, I have looked at all of those exhibits and—I am not sure——

Q. All right, sir. Now, again, on the Table 3, what you are using is all of the banks in Fulton and DeKalb Counties as a base to determine the importance of, say, Cobb County residents to them, correct? A. Yes.

Q. Now, if you looked at the relationship of people living in the outlying part of DeKalb County to all banks in Fulton and DeKalb County, wouldn't you expect to find the same insignificance of relationship? A. If I consider, for example, Lithonia banking customers as a percentage of all DeKalb County.

Q. Fulton and DeKalb. A. Oh, yes, I would consider those. I would expect those to be a very, very small percentage.

Q. And, again, you can take them one by one, Tucker? A. Yes.

Q. Chamblee, Sandy Springs. A. Well, there is a——

Q. Relatively insignificant to all Fulton County banks each, one by one? A. Well, I wouldn't—no, I wouldn't draw the [461] analogy that Lithonia is to DeKalb as Chamblee is to DeKalb. Because Lithonia is separated by considerable distance, and so the distinction there is, I think, meaningful, see. I think that the direction in which we are going is one in which we could say is any city block the supplier of a significant portion of a given bank's customers, and the answer, of course, would be no. Then, if we added up every—if we said that for every city block we would say there are no significant customers, that wouldn't be a very sensible conclusion.

Q. Yes, sir. And as you have done, you have taken Cobb County customers against all of everybody in Fulton and DeKalb. A. Yeah, right.

Q. Just like the city block you were telling me. A. Not like the city block.

Q. Except Cobb County instead of the block. A. No, you see, if you live in Marietta, your relationship to Atlanta, to Five Points, for example, is appreciably different from what your relationship to Five Points would be if you live in Ansley Park.

Q. But, it is a little bit closer actually than Sandy Springs, isn't it? A. It may be; I am not sure of that.

Q. You say there are banks in Cobb, Clayton and [462] Gwinnett who would tend to respond only to changes made by large downtown Atlanta banks, right? A. That's—yes.

Q. Aren't there banks in outlying parts of Fulton and DeKalb County who would tend to have the same response? A. I rather doubt that, who would respond only to the downtown banks?

Q. Uh-huh. A. I can't—I doubt that really.

Q. Don't the same reasons that argue for the exclusion of Cobb, Clayton and Gwinnett argue for the exclusion of the suburban parts of Fulton and DeKalb? A. Exclusion from what, now? From the definition of a banking market?

Q. Uh-huh. A. No, certainly not. Because, you see, a market has to be thought of in terms of all of the sellers and all of the buyers who determine terms of exchange and conditions of exchange. Now, if you live out in Gwinnett County, you will never have the option under existing law, for example, of banking at a bank near your residence that is a branch of an Atlanta bank. However, if you live any place in Fulton County or any place in DeKalb County and you are operating a bank, [463] whether it is North Fulton or South Fulton, there's always the potential, the possibility of having a branch of another bank come out there and compete with you.

Q. So, is that then—— A. So the relationship is quite different.

Q. So that, then, is the significant factor which you use in separating them? A. Not "the", certainly, but I considered that significant.

Q. It is the one you come to first? A. Well, it is the one you raised; I wouldn't say it is the one I come to first. But, I would say it is a significant factor in my judgment.

Q. You would say that in statewide banking, that the relative market was statewide? A. I haven't conducted a study on that, but it seems plausible that that case could be made, yes.

Q. Now, you talked about a market being a place where both sellers and customers both originate. Did you investigate, say, in the North Fulton market, to see where the customers of the banks located as you defined the North Fulton market, see where the customers actually came from? A. Did I examine the data to see where the customers came from?

[464] Q. Yes, sir. A. Yes.

Q. You determined, then, if you made that examination, that 36% of these customers that you are talking about came from areas totally without the area you defined? Does that sound reasonable to you? A. Yes, if you say it again, I accept it.

Q. All right, sir. And in addition to that, there are customers in the split zip-code area which account for 47%; you account for that? A. In split zip code, split out?

Q. Split by county line, split outside of the area you defined, so you found that there are 47%—— A. I'm sorry.

Q. ——who come from zip codes which split the market which you define; you defined a market which you said was the North Fulton market. Actually, you found two markets up there, didn't you? A. I don't believe that I said—I don't believe

I defined a specific market. What I am saying is that I don't think I drew any razor lines as boundaries on any market. All right. I don't believe in such lines and I don't think they can be drawn, so I——

Q. If we take the North Fulton market as being that part of Fulton County north of 285, which is, I [465] think, what you put in your affidavit. A. Okay.

Q. Do you agree with me that 36% of the customers of the banks located in that area come from totally without that area? A. Its entirety?

Q. All right, sir. A. Again, I don't have the data in front of me, but if you found that in my report, I am sure you report it accurately.

Q. And another 47% come from areas which are partially within and partially without. A. That may also be the case.

Q. Those two added together total 83%. A. Well, 47%, what does the 83% mean, though? You see, you said 47% come from areas that are partly in and partly out.

Q. Uh-huh, and you allocated them all in. A. But of the 47%, how many were in and how many were not?

Q. You didn't tell us, and I can't either. A. Well——

Q. You arbitrarily allocated them in, didn't you? A. Yeah, I presume it isn't important.

Q. All right, sir. Now, is it possible, when you [466] are considering the zip code origin of an account that is reported by the branch of a major banking system, that that zip code origin has nothing at all to do with the actual banking locations that are used by the customer? A. Is that a possibility? Is that your question?

Q. Uh-huh. A. It is a possibility.

Q. And as a matter of fact, a customer who, say, lives in the Ansley Park area and then moves out to Tucker, who earlier had his branch—his account at a branch in the Ansley Park area, could transact on that account out in the Tucker area without ever having to change it or make any difference to him; right? A. I believe that's a possibility, yes.

Q. Now, I think in your second affidavit you turned to—you drew the three circles in terms of defining a market, and you said that even though Bank A here and Bank C here are not competing with each other—— A. No, I don't believe I said that. I believe, even though the customers are actually found to have accounts in those offices, it may be in separate—spatially separated areas.

Q. Okay. So, then we get two circles here, and you suggest that if a branch of another bank is put [467] between them, that that is, as I understand it, will serve to transmit the effects from A through B to C. A. That's correct.

Q. Now, the theory of that—— A. Or from B out to A and C.

Q. Correct. The theory of that circular analysis as theory could apply from A being transmitted to C by B, B being transmitted to D by C, and so on to Athens, by theory; correct? A. Correct.

Q. Now, you chose to stop it at the DeKalb County line? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Or Fulton County line. A. I don't believe the circles refer to any county lines at all.

Q. Well, when do you consider that you stop tying together the transmission of effects? A. Well, I think there are various factors that determine the geographic limits of a market, and I think the lines outlining the geographic market cannot be outlined precisely, as I have said before. However, one of the factors, and I don't offer this as the key factor or the only factor, but certainly one of the factors in determining a market is where the sellers are able to [468] locate their offices.

All right. The point here is simply that if there is a law that prohibits one seller from going over into this area to compete for customers, then that is one factor that separates those customers from the competitive advantage they might gain from the banks in the other area.

Q. Now, Doctor, you have told us that the small banking customer is the one most affected by concentration in a banking market; didn't you say that in your affidavit? To consider the performance of the banking market as it relates to that small customer, don't you also have to consider the adequacy of other financial institutions, such as savings and loans and credit unions and the like? A. The adequacy? Not in serving demand deposits, because no other kind of institution serves demand deposits.

Q. So are we to hear your testimony as being limited solely to the service by banks of that one function, demand deposits? A. Not limited solely to it. However, as I indicated in my testimony, I selected demand deposits because that is the one unique, wholly unique, that is one of the wholly unique services that commercial [469] banking offers now. Commercial banks, of course, sell more product lines, more services, than just demand deposits. But, the base of customers who have demand accounts in a bank form the principal part of the base of potential customers for various other services sold by the banks. And, so, my attention was confined to these account customers on the presumption that those small checking account customers represent also an important part of the customers for other service lines, other products lines that the bank serves.

[470] Q. So, therefore, you did not consider the effect of concentration on the adequacies of any other financial institutions as to other services; is that right? A. Any others, no, I didn't consider any financial institutions other than commercial banks.

Q. Now, it's true that the concentration insofar as represented by the number of unit banks, concentration as represented by small customers is reflected by the regulatory—— A. Concentration as reflected by regulatory——

Q. The concentration deals with ease of entry, the number of units that are available? A. Yes.

Q. All right, sir. And don't regulatory authorities require approval before you can enter a market? A. Oh, yes, certainly.

Q. You can't enter the banking market unless you get that approval? A. That's correct.

Q. Aren't you aware of a group in DeKalb that, in fact, was denied a charter from the Comptroller? A. I've heard of that.

Q. Hasn't the FDIC established a policy of including the effect on the competition as a critical ingredient of its convenience and needs analysis on [471] passing on merger applications? A. I believe that's correct.

Q. And now, the regulatory concern simply reflects the fact there are other factors to be considered besides concentration, such as need or adequacy of management or solvency? A. I don't follow that question.

Q. Doesn't this regulatory concern limiting free entry into the market reflect that as to banking as opposed to steel or automobiles, something like that, that there are other public concerns such as bank solvency, adequacy of management and the like? A. There is a long history, of course, of regulations of the banking industry. I think it would probably be presumptious of me to say what the makers of the law that restrict entry officially had in mind when they did that. However, I would not—I think that there were probably some errors in judgment at the time the law was passed. I'm not sure that the presence of those laws restricting entry are that, indicates that each of those laws in fact serve an important and correct purpose.

Q. All right, sir. You are not sure you agree with the law, but you agree that the law is the law? A. The law is the law.

Q. Okay. When were you first retained by the [472] Government in this case, Doctor? A. I believe July 1st.

Q. And that was after the complaint was filed November of last year? A. That's correct.

Q. Now, these markets which you have located for us in your affidavits, you simply have verified what the Government alleged in its complaint; haven't you? A. Not precisely, no.

Q. Except in one instance, that's where you found two markets in north Fulton County? A. I believe there are more instances. I believe that the complaint alleges—draws some very hard lines identifying markets. For example, the complaint alleges that Fulton County is a market. That DeKalb County is a market. As I pointed out in my first affidavit, I think that DeKalb County is probably too large to constitute a banking market. The reason I believe that is that there are areas in DeKalb such as Lithonia that should not probably be considered a part of the metropolitan Atlanta, downtown Atlanta banking market. I think the Peoples Bank of Lithonia serves a different market. I think that it should not, that part of the county should not probably be included in a rigorous definition of the market.

I believe there are also probably some eastern, [473] some areas of the eastern boundaries of the county that should not probably be included in that market.

Q. Would you include Tucker in that? A. No, I would not.

Q. You would not. A. However, in terms of the present case, it seems to me that when you took those parts of the county out of the market, what you did, is remove a part of the county in which the C&S Banks have very little interest in which they have relatively few customers and in which the banks and most of the customers in that part of the county are in relatively localized banks. If you remove that part of the county, re-define the market as the smaller part and recalculate the concentration ratios, you will find higher concentration ratios than you found when you put that part of the county in. I think my conclusion that DeKalb County is not an unreasonable delineation of the market must be considered in terms of the purpose for which the research was undertaken in the first place.

Q. And so, in your determination that DeKalb County is not an unreasonable delineation of the market—— A. It must be considered in terms of the purpose for which the research was undertaken in the first place.

Q. And so, in your determination that DeKalb County is not an unreasonable delineation of the banking [474] market you affirmed what was alleged in the complaint; didn't you? A. No, I didn't. I believe the complaint calls DeKalb County a market. I didn't reach exactly that conclusion at all.

Q. You found two markets in north Fulton County; is that correct? A. I believe that there is at least one market in north Fulton County that can be separated from the Fulton County area. There is up in the section that is roughly in the northern tip of Fulton County, there are a couple of banks, several banking offices that are found to have captured or to serve most of the customers who reside in that area. You can come down farther and find a similar pattern.

Q. And you stated at the present time it appears that the north Fulton area contains two reasonable promulgations of the banking markets? A. It may, yes.

Q. On the last page of your first affidavit? A. Yes.

Q. All right, sir. You determined that by doing an analysis of the zip code of the banks? A. Yes.

Q. Did you do the same analysis of the zip code [475] origination in the DeKalb area? A. No, I didn't.

Q. Did you make the same analysis that you did in Fulton in South DeKalb? A. No.

Q. In the Chamblee area? A. No.

Mr. Doyle: I have no further questions.

Mr. Sims: I wonder if we might recess at this time?

The Court: Is your redirect lengthy?

Mr. Sims: I am not exactly sure. I would like to take a short break before we got onto it.

Mr. Hodgson: We intend to start our case as soon as we can. We'd like to start as soon after lunch as we can.

The Court: Do you really have questions as to whether you are going to have redirect?

Mr. Sims: Yes.

The Court: All right, we'll recess until 1:45.

(Whereupon, court was adjourned at 12:45 o'clock to reconvene at 1:45 o'clock P. M. the same day.)

[476] (Whereupon the proceedings resumed at 1:45 o'clock, p.m.)

Redirect Examination

Mr. Sims: Your Honor, we just have a few very short questions on redirect.

By Mr. Sims

Q. Professor Skogstad, Mr. Doyle asked if you had simply affirmed the market allegations that were in the complaint that was filed in this case. I believe that you answered no to that question. Have you ever testified for the government in a bank merger case before? A. No, I have not.

Q. What instructions, if any, were you given when you were retained by the Government in this case? A. Well, when the contact was made, I was asked if—I was asked to conduct a study to determine what the relevant geographic limits of the markets in which the effects of this merger would be.

Q. All right. Did you place any conditions on your employment by the Government? A. Well, we had preliminary discussions before we reached an agreement, and the only condition I placed was that I would guarantee no conclusions at all; without looking at the date I wouldn't have any way of making any reasonable determination of what the [477] geographic limit of the market was.

Q. And did you have any preconceived notions or opinions as to the geographic areas involved before you analyzed the data? A. No, I thought it would be—the market would be smaller than a whole state and larger than the head of a pin.

Q. Mr. Doyle also asked you whether or not you agreed with the statement that 75% of the deposits in Atlanta banks were in accounts over $10,000. I believe you said that that sounded reasonable. A. Yes, that's right.

[479] Q. Had you considered a percentage based on the number of accounts rather than percentage based on dollar amounts, would you still agree with that statement? A. Oh, no. Of course, that would fall very substantially. Probably—well, I don't know. I would think maybe twenty percent of the customers would be in that size class, thirty-something, like that.

Q. This is based on the number of accounts? A. Yes.

Q. You were also asked whether or not you had done an analyses in areas of DeKalb County, I believe, Tucker and Lithonia, some others were mentioned similar to the analysis that you did in Fulton County. A. Yes.

Q. Now, you said you had not—did you in fact do any analyses of the relationship between banks in DeKalb County, inter-action between banks in DeKalb County? A. Yes.

Q. What did this analysis reveal? A. Well——

Q. Excuse me, are you looking at something there? A. Yes, I have a table here that I prepared for the purpose of gaining an impression of the way that banks within a county might be related throughout the county. [480] Now, the purpose of this was not to draw any specific lines or markets, again, because as I have testified—well, I have testified in my direct testimony and here today as well—that I think it's impossible to draw any precise lines around the market, geographic lines around the market that economists would generally accept. I think any two economists would be likely to come up with two markets. I did construct this with the purpose of determining any relationship among major banks or most of the banks in the county and the results are found on this table.

Mr. Sims: Your Honor, at this time we would like to offer this as Plaintiff's Exhibit—I believe the next number is 195.

The Clerk: That's correct.

The Court: All right, I will admit it. Any objections may be noted in the same fashion.

Q. Mr.—Professor Skogstad, would you explain what this chart reveals to you? A. It would be helpful if I could use the zip code map.

Mr. Sims: Would it be all right if Professor Skogstad used the map over here, Your Honor?

The Court: Sure.

The Witness: Well, I notice that this is a Metropolitan Planning Commission zip code map. It's [481] not precise, however, I think it's essentially the same map that most plaintiffs and defendants have used in their analyses, and I think it's essentially faithful to this.

The starting point of this is zip code 30033, which is located here, just east of the Fulton-DeKalb County boundary. This is a zip code address from which C&S Emory draws its largest number of accounts. I believe it is the zip code in which the C&S Emory is located and has its main office located. Part A of this table then shows the small demand deposit accounts again. These are under $1,000 accounts that are drawn from zip code 30033 by C&S Emory, C&S Tucker, C&S DeKalb and C&S National.

Now, in the economic report, a line is drawn through this zip code, in fact, two lines, I believe, separating C&S Emory, C&S Tucker, again separating C&S Emory and C&S DeKalb. What this indicates in that report was that they draw their accounts from different parts of this zip code which I am sure is probably correct. However, the next, under the next heading which is other selected banking offices competing in 30033, I chose from the exhibits that we have submitted just from banks that appear to have a sufficient number of customers from this zip [482] code area. So, that these are competing at least for some customers in the zip code area.

Now, you will notice that this has seven banking offices located under part A of this, the table here, and the point is simply that in addition to the C&S Banks, there are other banks drawing from this zip code. This is by no means an exhaustive list of all banking offices that draw from the zip code area. The point is, if a line were drawn between the part of the market for every possible pair of banks, the part of this zip code from which every possible pair of banks draws, you would have patchwork that divided zip code 30033 into a very large number of banking markets. I think those markets could simply be so small as not to be useful in assessing competitive effects.

[483] A. (Continued) Now, when we go down to Part B, we find in—this is Zip Code 30030, which is directly south of Zip

Code 30033; this is the zip code in which Decatur is located. And Decatur and additional banking offices are approximately one mile down Clairmont Road—down Clairmont Road from C&S Emory's main office, located here.

And some of the banks that are important in drawing customers from that zip code are Fulton National's Decatur offices; in fact, they have a motor bank office there as well.

First National's East Ponce de Leon office and First National Bank of Glenwood, and so this repeats two from the list from the "Other Banks" section in Part A, for Zip Code 30033.

So, we have here certainly some interaction between all of the banks or between many of the banks in Parts A and Part B of this table. The point is simply that most of these banks are probably concerned for a significant group of customers in both of these zip codes. Now, from 30030, we go farther south to 300 Zip Code 30032, which is down in the Glenwood area, and Belvedere. I believe, is down in this zip code, or perhaps a little farther south. Again, in this zip code we see that the C&S DeKalb draws a significant number [484] of accounts, and C&S South DeKalb draws significant accounts, and C&S Emory has a branch, I believe this is a relatively new branch, down in 30032, and that branch draws over half of all of its DeKalb County accounts from this Zip Code 30032, that branch of Emory does.

Now, Zip Code 30032 is not listed in the defendants' exhibits as one of the zip codes that is included in the market of C&S Emory, and when the entire bank is considered, I can understand how that conclusion was reached; however, to exclude this Emory, this Covington-285 branch of Emory from this zip code seems to me unreasonable, since they draw half of their accounts—over half of their DeKalb accounts from that area.

Now, the additional, the other banks, non-C&S banking offices, that seem to me to be significant down there include, once again, C&S Glenwood, which we saw was also a competitor, a competitor up in Zip Code 30030, and so the C&S Glenwood Bank clearly competes with some of the banks that compete for customers in Zip Code 3——

The Court: First National of Glenwood?

A. Pardon me, yes. Excuse me, that is First National Bank of Glenwood.

On the next page, Zip Code 30034 is the farthest [485] zip code to the south that I have considered, and we find, once again, C&S South DeKalb drawing a sizeable number of customers from that zip code, and the Belvedere office of C&S DeKalb draws about half or a little less than half as many as C&S South DeKalb, but still customers that must be of some consequence to that banking office. And, then we have—C&S National has some customers there also, probably many of whom, if not most of them, customers who commute and go into town and can choose either banks in this zip code or banks, or banks in the city.

Now, South DeKalb, First National South DeKalb's office is clearly of consequence down in that area. First National Bank of Glenwood, once again, has 360 small accounts there. The DeKalb Exchange Bank has, relative to the total zip code supply of accounts, not many, but compared to the size of this relatively small bank, the 231 accounts are of, no doubt, some importance to DeKalb Exchange Bank.

From there, that is as far south as I took the analysis, and I think that is as far south as one would reasonably go in considering what I would call perhaps the metropolitan DeKalb area, the mainstream DeKalb area that economically, and in other ways, integrated with the mainstream Atlanta part of DeKalb, [486] DeKalb County.

From there we go back up to 30033 and directly northeast of it Zip Code 30329. This is the zip code in which C&S Park

National has its office. It is also the zip code in which the Toco Hills branch of C&S Emory is located. Economic Report draws a line through this zip code as well, separating it into two parts. One part being the principal supplier of C&S Emory accounts, the other the principal supplier, essentially, of C&S Park National accounts. But, the banks that show up in that zip code as being of consequence include C&S Emory, which I have broken down here into their various offices, three of their offices, because it clearly makes a difference which office you are talking about in considering the importance of that zip code to the C&S, the C&S Emory. Clearly, its the Toco Hills branch that is significant here, and the Toco Hills branch, I might point out, is one and a half miles directly down North Druid Hills Road from Executive Park. So that is the space separating those two banking offices, only one and a half miles. And I believe that a significant number of residents of this area are residents who occupy space a little bit north and a little bit south of North Druid Hills Road, but essentially in that space between Toco Hills and [487] Executive Park. The point is, it is a very short, easy trip from Executive Park down to Toco Hills, and it is only a mile and a half in distance.

Moreover, there are other banks, many other banks that have a significant number of customers from this zip code, and those include Fulton National's Executive Park office. I am not sure of whether the Fulton National printout may have been erroneous in showing only four accounts in there. It may be because that Fulton National office is relatively new, but since it is located in Executive Park, I consider it reasonable to conclude, regardless of the number of accounts that are shown in it, that it competes with other Executive Park banking offices.

Then, First National Bank has, about three-quarters of a mile from Executive Park on Buford Highway, an office that competes significantly in 30329. That is just across the expressway, and a little bit north and northeast on Buford Highway. Here, the Corporate Square office has 442 accounts in that 30329.

And, the Trust Company Executive Park office, of course, also draws from the area, and DeKalb County Bank, which is a little farther north on Buford Highway, also has a significant number of customers from its point of view down in this 30329. [488] So again, instead of comparing C&S Banks only in this zip code area in ascertaining the market characteristics of the 30329 zip code, one should, I think, include the offices, all of the offices of banks that compete for those customers. Again, I think it would be unreasonable to criss-cross this with lines and end up with maybe twenty or thirty or ten, however many markets from that relatively small geographic area.

Then, from there we go northeast to 30319. This is one of those zip code areas that straddles the county line. It goes over into Fulton County somewhat on its western border, at least the way it is plotted on this Planning Commission map, that seems to be the case. In Zip Code 30319, C&S Chamblee, C&S Park National, and C&S National all have a relatively large number of accounts in this area. And First National's Corporate Square office continues to draw, and that is reasonable because the Corporate Square office is just here, just across the border from 30319.

[489] And so that's a, clearly a competing office in this area as well.

Trust Company of Georgia, Brookhaven office, draws a very large number of small accounts, 1473 from this area. And so this Brookhaven office of Trust Company, again, it seems to me is clearly one of the competitors for the small banking customers who reside in the 30319 area.

Then, the Executive Park Branch draws a few accounts from there and Peachtree Bank & Trust Company draws 436 accounts. Peachtree is up here in Chamblee and, of course, draws probably from this northern area, 30319. DeKalb County Bank has 334 customers in here which I would consider a number of customers that DeKalb County Bank could not afford to ignore, therefore, competition among the banking offices in this zip code.

From 19, we go on the chart to 30345, I believe, which is to the right of—to the east of 30319, and directly northeast of 30329. That's directly northeast of Executive Park area. Also Briar—this is Briarcliff Road running through 30345. Park National draws some 161 small account customers from that area. C&S Tucker, LaVista office, is particularly important in that area. They have 450 accounts.

C&S North DeKalb office draws a significant [490] number, probably from this northeastern piece of zip code, 30345. C&S National again has customers, probably many of them, some of them at least commuters into downtown Atlanta.

C&S Chamblee has, from the Buford office draws 343 accounts. So, these offices are offices that draw customers from this zip code.

In addition, the DeKalb County Bank is a major factor or a factor in this zip code. The 279 accounts are again significant to it even though they don't represent a major proportion of all the accounts originating in this area.

First National Perimeter Center draws some accounts, probably from an area more or less similar to the area from which C&S, perhaps similar to the area from which Emory, North DeKalb and perhaps the Chamblee Buford Highway office draws as well.

Then, they go from there, 30341, which moves up in the direction toward Chamblee and you find C&S Chamblee certainly is probably the single major supplier of small account services up there with 293 accounts. The main office draws more from that zip code than other offices. But, it's important to both of those offices. C&S Tucker has 376 accounts in this area. Park National, 203, and C&S again comes in as a major factor. They [491] have 996 small accounts in that zip code area.

In addition, then the DeKalb County Bank is important in 30341 and Peachtree Bank & Trust up on Buford Highway draws many of its customers, most of its customers, apparently, from 30341.

Northeast Commercial Bank, which is also up in the Chamblee area, draws a few, 152 customers from that area. Fulton National Bank, Dunwoody office, has 132 customers in this area.

First National Peachtree Industrial office has 173 customers and again the Trust Company's Brookhaven office has a fairly significant number of customers, significant to that Brookhaven office, in this case, 236 accounts from this area. Trust Company's Executive Park office draws accounts from there, also, and that is as far north as the exhibit takes.

The point of this is not to show an exhaustive listing under these other selected banking office headings, of all the banks drew from this area, simply to show banks other than banks listed in Economic Report that compete, that is, other than the banks listed there in drawing lines to delineate markets, that compete for these customers, and I believe that this interaction ties this entire area more or less together, more, rather than less, ties it together in spite of the fact that when you come up [492] here and look at Peachtree Bank & Trust, for example, you would find them of little significance, I'm sure, no significance, in zip code 30030, for example, or 30032, for example, at the present time.

However, the connection, the interlocking chain that I illustrated with three rings referred to earlier today is what connects that entire area; consequently, whether you have one market here or one, two, three markets, or possibly even four markets here, here the effect of bank market conditions in one of these areas is going to be significant to the customers, the small bank customers of banks throughout this area as the effect is made and rather quickly throughout this metropolitan part of the county. That concludes this.

Q. Now, you said in your direct testimony, on page 27 of your first affidavit, I'm reading here, therefore, my conclusion is that the counties are reasonable geographic areas within which it's appropriate to analyze the competitive effects of the proposed merger. A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is this the same thing as saying that each is a precise banking market? A. No, that's far from saying that. It simply says that it's difficult to ask, perhaps, if we are honest, we would say it's an impossible task to draw precise geographic [493] lines around a market. Any lines that I draw and would show to an economic professor would have something they could argue with. The point is whether we define, for example, the area I just traced through in DeKalb, as many markets or one market, they are related anyway. The competitive effects of banking conditions in this major piece over there will be transmitted down through the rest as if it were one market. It may be one market or it may be several adjacent markets that are completely related economically and simply behave as if they were one market.

Another example can be found in, over in Fulton County where I have indicated that there may be, there may be two markets in north Fulton County. Regardless of whether those are two markets or one market, there is inter-action between the two. The two are related by having an office of one bank, a bank in one part of the northermost part of the county, and having a branch in the lower part of north Fulton County. So that those banks compete with each other.

Q. Let me just clean up one little housekeeping detail and that's all. Did you in fact prepare this chart that's been offered as Exhibit 195? A. Yes, I prepared that.

Q. What were your data sources for preparing that chart? [494] A. All of this data came from the exhibits that have been entered showing data that was supplied by, in response to a subpoenae by the banks in the area.

Mr. Sims: I have no further questions, Your Honor.

Recross-examination

By Mr. Doyle

Q. Doctor, based on your testimony with regard to the zip codes, I take it that if you find two banks drawing a significant number of customers from one zip code area, you conclude that they are competing for those customers; is that correct? A. They may be. I would assume that was worthy of further investigation if I found that to be the case, yes.

Q. All right, sir. Now, if customers from that same area can go to two complimentary banks or two banks and use either of those banks for their banking services, to cash checks and make deposits, those banks could well be regarded as complimentative rather than competitive? A. Complimentary banks?

Q. Yes. A. The case of one banking firm with two offices, yes, I would say that certainly would be the case.

Q. If the customer, therefore, can transact [495] business at either of those two offices, they could be complimenting rather than competing with each other? A. Certainly, yes.

Q. Now, if the question is whether a bank is an effective competitor or whether it's effectively competing, then you would agree, would you not, that Peachtree Bank & Trust is not presently competing in South DeKalb County? A. No, I wouldn't. I wouldn't conclude that. I would say that their probability of drawing customers from South DeKalb would be very, very slight, but that Peachtree Bank & Trust would not be insulated from what happens in Decatur, for example, in banking markets in Decatur. For example, if those banks in Decatur should take some strong pro-competitive action policy that appealed to their customers, I don't think that Peachtree Bank & Trust, even though it doesn't draw from exactly the same zip code, that it would be safe for that bank to ignore what is happening down in Decatur.

Q. All right, sir. Now, Peachtree Bank & Trust Company, taking that example, in fact, has an insignificant number of customers from that part of South DeKalb County, south of Decatur; correct? A. Yes, I doubt they have more than ten.

Q. Ten or fifteen customers from down that way and banks, after all, do compete for customers; don't they? [496] A. Yes, some banks do.

The Court: Professor, when you consider your transmittal effect or the three-circle effect, lines have nothing to do with that effect, do they?

The Witness: No, sir, the significance of county lines, we don't consider that county lines are significant because it's a county line, but because of the branch banking laws in this state right now.

The Court: They have no transmittal effects. It doesn't effect the transmittal effect?

The Witness: Only to the extent——

The Court: It permits the location of the bank within the area, within one of the three circles?

The Witness: Right, a bank in DeKalb, if the customer started moving into Fulton, the bank in DeKalb could not follow those customers by locating branches over in Fulton County.

The Court: Well, now, you were making the circles, zip codes, as I understand it.

The Witness: Well, that is actually my, in my second affidavit I drew circles which were an abstract thing really, not related to zip codes. I used zip codes in this case because that's the form [497] in which the data came to me.

The Court: Do the zip codes themselves have anything to do with the transmittal effect?

The Witness: No, sir, I don't think so. I don't think the zip code lines erect any barrier whatsoever.

The Court: With respect to transmittal effect, the only real inquiry is what banks happen to be in the location and where are their customers and what are their effects as to, the effect as to their practices on their customers; is it not?

The Witness: Well, a little bit more than that. I think it's not only what banks are in the area but what banks do they directly compete with because there may be two banks, let's say, in zip code 30030, one at the lower end of the zip code, another at the higher end of the zip code, they would probably be banks competing with each other if there are not too—directly for the same specific customers—if they are not too far apart. Also, the zip code below that, the next southern zip code would be important to the bank at the southern end of the county. Therefore, if that southern bank took some procompetitive action, the bank in the middle would probably respond, the bank at the [498] southern end of zip code 30030, would respond, when it responded, it would be unsafe for the bank at the northern end of that zip code to ignore it. So, in effect, you have got banks at the top of 30030 and a bank at the south of 30030, influencing each other's behavior even though they don't compete directly for some customers.

[499] The Court: All right, I understand your principle as a hypothetical principle.

A. Yes.

The Court: Have you examined it in practicality apart from the zip-code analysis which you have just given us? For example, if I were to ask you if there is any transmittal effect between the C&S Bank in Sandy Springs and whatever the bank is in Palmetto, Georgia, could you give me an answer?

A. I would guess that that would be slow, but, no, I can't give you a quantitative answer. My guess would be that that would be a very slowly transmitted effect because of the great amount of open space between Palmetto and the metro part of Fulton County.

Q. What do you mean by open space, people live there? A. Yeah, but relative to the Palmetto area, it is quite sparsely populated and it is quite a drive up the expressway from Palmetto to the—what I have been calling the metropolitan area, for want of a better word.

Palmetto, I consider one of those more—one of those towns similar to Alpharetta, for example.

The Court: Oh, I picked it because it is on the southern part of Fulton County.

[500] A. Yes.

The Court: But I was using it to test the validity of the use of county lines.

A. Oh, yes, sir, I think if you would cut off that southwestern piece of Fulton County that you would have been left with a market that was no less valid than the one you started with, and probably would be more valid than the market——

The Court: What do you mean by southwestern corner?

A. Well, where Fulton County juts down into the—in the southwesterly direction; I don't know if you pick a line, say, at the corner of there, at the corner of Fulton County, and that is Clayton County below it, and just draw a line northwest across there that that would—that would leave you with a market that was no less realistic than a market defined as the whole county, probably more realistic, in fact.

The Court: How about the northern bulge of Fulton County, what is that, old Milton County?

A. Yes, sir, that's right. It was at the river, the line was at the river until, I believe, it was 1940——

The Court: How does that fit in [501] with your market?

A. I think you could possibly cut off a significant piece of North Fulton County; look, for example, at that piece that juts out to the east from what looks like a straight line, at the northeast or top of Fulton County. You could probably cut that right off and not damage the market that you have, and have an equally realistic market. You might be able to cut off that crown of Fulton County up there and not damage the market, or possibly even more of it.

I think it is really just impossible. It would be a pure chance event if you found any county lines anyplace in the country that corresponded precisely to geographic markets.

The Court: All right. You may step down.

Mr. Kinkaid: Your Honor, except for one very small detail, which we raised yesterday, that is, the depositions, we are finished. Five of the depositions I understand—now, there's one that still hasn't arrived, I guess, from the clerk's office.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Kinkaid: But, it is our understanding——

[502] The Court: Identify them and they will be admitted.

Mr. Kinkaid: The plaintiff rests, Your Honor.

The Court: You want to identify the depositions?

Mr. Kinkaid: Yes, sir.

The Court: I don't imagine there's any question about it, but you can identify them now, if you wish.

Mr. Kinkaid: We have already designated them in a document.

The Court: At the end of your list of witnesses, as I understand it, you have the depositions.

The Clerk: I have them in order except for Mr. Morris Pierce.

The Court: Well, Mr. Pierce will be admitted on the same basis, his deposition, when it arrives.

Mr. Kinkaid: Yes, Your Honor. We have a document that we have submitted entitled "Plaintiff's Designation of Deposition Testimony", and this lists the various depositions which we took, and they [503] are listed alphabetically, and I would propose that we just simply begin the first one, the deposition of James H. Aldredge, as Government's Exhibit 196, and simply give consecutive numbers to the others, and that would take care of it.

The Court: All right. The clerk will do so, and they will be received.

The Clerk: Government's Exhibit No. 196 through 215, then.

The Court: All right. The Government rests. Is the defendant ready?

Mr. Hodgson: Yes, Your Honor.

If Your Honor please, on Monday we reserved a privilege of making an abbreviated opening statement in light of the issues that have been a little more sharply drawn through the trial briefs that were filed, and I would like to take a few moments at this time to emphasize these points.

The Court: All right, sir.

Mr. Hodgson: The things that seem significant to us at this time, Judge, are these: the Government's brief ignores our [504] charge or our assertion that these five small banks are, in name and in fact, Citizens and Southern banks; that they have been from the time that they were organized in the eyes of their shareholders, the public, the regulators, their competitors and their own officers and directors. Not only does the Government's brief ignore these as C&S banks to the pointed end of describing them without the name C&S, it also asserts that they are, in fact, vigorous and significant competition to the Citizens & Southern National Bank, ignoring the significant relationships we claim, and doing so with an emphasis on the legalities of officer and director responsibilities to their various corporations. Ignoring the areas of voluntary control that do exist in this case, and have from the beginning.

Now, that is one major facet of the brief that we intend to focus on as we introduce our evidence. And we will do this by emphasizing the history, and showing these are C&S banks and that they are not competitors in the sense of the anti-trust laws. Those laws have been [505] observed, and that they have competed among one another as friendly branches, but that to the public and to themselves they have been C&S banks.

The next significant feature of the Government's brief, it seems to us, is that it ignores the question of whether or not the mergers will reduce competition but argues in terms of what would be the effects of nonmergers. That is an enforced separation of relationships that have been voluntarily entered into and enjoyed with the full expectation that mergers will occur.

Again, the Government's brief ignores the history that led to these relationships, ignores the pro-competitive aspects at all times, not only of the attitude of the Citizens & Southern system generally, but in these particular instances, better to serve the conveniences and needs of the communities. That they are not anti-competitive, they are not merely not anti-competitive, they are indeed pro-competitive factors. All of this we expect to do in the light of the constantly changing laws in these areas, which Your Honor [506] has come to recognize as being numerous and confusing on occasion, but particularly we will ask that Your Honor bear in mind as, the evidence unfolds, the facts that in the Atlanta market no C&S bank, no C&S National bank could branch at all until 1960, and that after 1956 it could not engage in holding-company expansion previously permitted by the ownership of more than 15% of the voting stock of any bank. And, after 1960, by the ownership of more than 5% of the voting shares of any bank.

We ask Your Honor to bear in mind that it wasn't until 1963, less than ten years ago, that the Philadelphia decision came down for the first time, and to the surprise of many, applying the standards of Clayton 7 to bank mergers, and it was only the next year that the Lexington case applied, the Section 1 of the Sherman Act of these mergers, and it's only been six years that the Congress decided to immunize those relationships that had been taking place before July 1, of 1966 against the impetus of these laws, against those backgrounds.

Your Honor, we will present the testimony [507] of these classifications of witnesses: four senior executive officers of the National Bank & Holding Company; Mr. Lane, who through most of this period was president of the National Bank.

Mr. Howard Starks, who is in our marketing department, in our branch supervision department, and who was directly related, in large degree, to many of these activities. The current president of our holding company, Mr. Joe Hall, who has been in the controller's office of the National Bank and an officer of the holding company right along.

And, Mr. Dan Handley, who currently is particularly in charge of branch supervision.

We expect to follow these four major witnesses with representatives of regulators who have been kept fully apprised of our activities, of our competitors, seeking to show that they recognize each of these banks as a C&S bank; by our customers who traded with us for that purpose; by the presidents and selected directors of each of the six banks, to show their attitude.

Dr. Nevins Baxter, our economist who [508] filed our economic report, will be our last witness. We trust and believe that when our evidence is fully in, Your Honor will agree that the decision that the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, undoubtedly the toughest of the bank regulatory agencies on these issues today, was right when after a full year's study and examination of these separate facts which the Court is obliged to examine de novo, was right when it approved these mergers.

I would like to call Mr. Lane, please.

MILLS B. LANE,

being first duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Direct Examination

By Mr. Hodgson

Q. Would you tell the reporter you full name, please, sir? A. Mills B. Lane.

Q. Mr. Lane, what is your occupation today? A. I am vice-chairman of the Citizens & Southern National Bank.

Q. When did you become vice-chairman? A. July 8th, 1971.

Q. What was your position before that date? [509] A. I was president.

Q. And when did you become president? A. July 8th, 1946.

Q. What are your credentials, so far as the Citizens & Southern Holding Company is concerned? A. I am at present a director of the Holding Company. I was its president from '46 until Mr. Hall was made president, I think, in 1970.

[510] Q. Who is the current president of the Citizens and Southern Bank? A. Mr. Richard Kattel.

Q. And has been since July of 1970? A. '-1.

Q. When did you come to Atlanta with the Citizens and Southern Bank? A. October, 1939.

Q. At that time, Mr. Lane, what was the competitive posture of banking in the Atlanta area? A. Atlanta had three banks that were domiciled here. Two of them had—one or two of them had banking in Decatur prior to the Banker Freeze of 1926. One had a branch in Buckhead which is also a grandfather bank. The C&S was a branch of Savannah with the competitors using that as heavily as they could, that they were just a branch of Savannah. We had two little branches, one on Mitchell Street that is now a pawn shop, one at Tenth Street, that is now a nightclub. That was all we had with no opportunity for any increased facilities whatsoever.

Q. When did you become free to branch in Atlanta? A. We did not become free to branch in Atlanta through the C&S Banks until 1960.

Q. What did you do to expand in the meantime? A. We were fortunate in being able to acquire the [511] Bank of Atlanta which was a small bank, less than $7 million, as I remember, with an office out on Bankhead Highway, just at Peachtree and Marietta, Bankhead Highway, and Little Five Points. The bank was in serious trouble and we, I think part of the characteristics of our bank has been it's ability through its Board of Directors to give management the leeway to make decisions without having to hold multi-committee meetings.

Another bank in Atlanta was trying to purchase the Bank of Atlanta, but it's interesting that the Directors of that bank accepted a lower cash offer per share from us than they were willing to hang around and go through the Board of Directors from an upcoming bank. That gave us through the holding company a vehicle for taking banking to the people.

Q. In Atlanta? A. In Atlanta.

Q. Did you ever get into Buckhead? A. We were, in 1950, a small bank had been started in Buckhead. The owners of that bank decided they wanted to get out of the banking business. The owners of the bank were more friendly to a competitor bank than they were to us, but again, we had the vision, I guess, and the audacity, if you want to call it that, or foresight to make an offer for the bank with no strings [512] attached to it. Although, the ownership of the bank was non-friendly to C&S, they sold us the bank.

Q. What is the plan of improvement as an historic fact? A. The plan of improvement which, I think, went through two elections before it was adopted incorporated the Buckhead area into the City of Atlanta. The interesting thing about that, when I came to Atlanta we had, the way I looked at it, three banking capitols, Five Points, Decatur Square and West End. There was groupings of banks in those areas. When the plan of improvement went through, instead of there just being an office of C&S Bank of Atlanta and a branch of the Fulton, every bank in Atlanta went out with more than one branch starting with Buckhead Village going up Peachtree Street, branching out up Roswell Road and the plan, what happened was that within a period of three years after all the banks went there, the total banking deposits and resources in Buckhead were over a hundred million dollars, and it had made Buckhead a fourth financial capitol.

At a period where housing and real estate development and construction lending, we didn't have the major developers like Tom Cousins, the smaller corporations, individuals like Red Gerrin and others, but this putting together a pool of capital with branch management that [513] have authority to do, I'm sure, led to the area development of Buckhead and it began to spread right out as a concentric circle north, which is, of course, we had the development of Chamblee-Dunwoody as a result of the war with the bell bomber plants there.

Q. Did this cause the spreading out of the city limits? A. It had to.

Q. As far as banking is concerned? A. As far as banking in the City of Atlanta, it's in the same fix as the corporate City of Atlanta is. We have the metropolitan area hemmed in by unofficial legal boundaries and yet in the banking business the same thing is true in government, that the City of Atlanta now provides all the policemen for the whole county. The small police force of Fulton County was inadequate. The same is true of banking. Atlanta, in the post war years, has become the major financial center of the entire southeast. It's both in national new business, of the reputation and character of the major banks of this town, has meant that the citizenry, both small and large, this town brags about being big. One of the newspaper reporters said last week, I believe Atlanta believes its advertising. People want to do business with the big banks. We felt that way and that's what was needed and was necessary.

[514] Q. How did, if I may use the shorthand, your five percenter or correspondent's associate program come about? A. It came about when a group in Sandy Springs, where two banks, independent charters had been turned down by the State Banking Department. Jim Aldredge was a close friend. He was at that time, I think, Chairman of the County Commission. He had a building supply in Sandy Springs, and I'm sure that he had seen the, really, the renaissance of Buckhead as the result of being a financial capitol. What it had done. He came to me and said, "Sandy Springs is growing, it's the new section of town, it's going to, it needs banking, and I want to urge you to go take a look at Sandy Springs as it is, see what you think it is going to be in the future. We need a bank."

Q. What did you find? A. We found that Sandy Springs was indeed beginning to overflow. We had our bank at Buckhead, the people in Sandy Springs had to either come to Buckhead or go to Roswell to do any banking business at all and the convenience was absolutely a necessity. We saw that a bank would not only support them but would grow. The interesting thing about opening new branches is that you can put a bank in a location where there has never been a bank and [515] money seems to come up out of the ground. People that have never had a bank account before all of a sudden money comes out of shoeboxes or somewhere, I don't know.

But, you start a bank or a branch and resources begin to grow. We knew when looking at what had happened to Buckhead that obviously the City of Atlanta was either going to have to expand or certainly the banking laws in the State of Georgia were going to have to be changed.

Ever since I have been in the banking business there's been some action every year to try to do something to liberalize the tight laws that hindered banking from taking business to the people.

Q. Taking business to the people? A. Yes, going where people are, just like the neighborhood theatres or anything else. People didn't want to come downtown, they wanted to bank, they wanted convenience, they wanted to have a friend in the bank, too. It was with the knowledge that either the banking laws were going to be changed or Sandy Springs would come into the city that we organized that bank. We picked up a group of people, some from Sandy Springs, some who were just friends of ours, new to C&S Bank, and organized the bank providing it with a manager, a president for whom we financed a considerable purchase of stock. We sold stock to our friends and in the area combining a degree of [516] ownership that tied it to the Citizens and Southern, but with a sufficiency of local interest to make this at one and the same time an integral part of Citizens and Southern, what it was doing as well as having a local flavor that's bragged about so much by independent banks.

[517] A. (Continued) At that time we didn't have the courage to give the bank the name Citizens & Southern, but we picked the closest thing to it, Citizens National Bank of Sandy Springs. And when we put the big sign up there, we featured C for Citizens, and S for Sandy Springs, and from a distance of a mile, you would think the sign was Citizens & Southern, and not the Citizens National of Sandy Springs.

Q. I presume the shareholders and directors didn't object to this? A. No, sir, I think we all enjoyed the fact that we came as close as Mr. Fortuna did of putting C&S up there as we could at that time.

Q. What understanding was there, if any, with respect to the Citizens & Southern Bank and Holding Company furnishing management to lead this bank? A. Have to give me that again.

Q. What understanding was there, if any? A. Oh, we irrevocably said that we would provide the management, the direction and the supervision of the bank. After all, the directors of the bank had never been directors for any bank before. It was not a business they knew. They had value; they knew the bank was going to need a gentleman like Aldredge in helping direct business to the bank, in giving a new president local knowledge about credit and people doing [518] business with it, but it was a learning process for directors of a bank. It is a right interesting thing that when you organize a brand new bank, the directors have a feeling of pride and interest that is amazing. They want to learn; they want to help build the bank. When a bank has been in business fifty years, the directors pay very little attention to it, I am afraid. But, directors of a new bank have burning desire to see it succeed.

Q. Did you furnish this management? A. Yes, we did.

Q. At Sandy Springs? A. Yes, we did.

Q. Who did you furnish? A. We supplied a young man by the name of Tom Cook, whose father was a banker in Cochran, Georgia, and whose brother was working for his father, and the young man had worked for us here in Atlanta for several years.

Q. Did Mr. Cook remain president of that bank to date? A. No, he did not. Mr. Cook, unfortunately, did not have good credit judgment. We, ourselves, this being the first bank we had a five-percent interest in, did not have a director on the board, other than from [519] our law firm. We did not have the techniques of branch supervision that we have now, with a result that with a board of directors that were not really knowledgeable, we woke up one day, the supervising authorities, and found that the bank was in serious trouble.

Q. What did you do? A. We promptly saw that—recommended to the board that Mr. Cook be relieved, and recommended Mr. Lou Fortuna, a Dartmouth graduate, a man who had both real estate lending and installment lending in the C&S Bank, as well as having helped collect bad loans several times, while a Yale man doesn't like to stomach a Dartmouth graduate, they, having beaten our team while I was in college, Lou Fortuna was elected to be president and has been president ever since.

Q. The board elected him? A. Yes.

Q. Did the board look anywhere else for a president? A. No, sir.

Q. Did the board expect you to find a president and produce him? A. Yes, sir. And to show you the extent of our feeling that this was a C&S Bank, we promptly bolstered the bank's capital by the purchase of $100,000 worth of [520] capital notes.

Q. Were the regulatory agencies aware of the relationship that was formed here between yourself and the Citizens & Southern Sandy Springs bank? A. I feel absolutely positive that, two charters having been declined by independent groups, that only the name Citizens & Southern, our participation in the bank, the knowledge of our style of banking, made possible the granting of a charter in the first place.

Q. Was this a national association charter? A. Yes, sir.

Q. So, from that you are testifying that, at least, the office of the controller of the currency and his then chief national bank examiner were aware of it? A. I am sure that the State Banking Department was aware of it, too, because all applications for banks are circulated among all supervisory agencies.

Q. Would you say you exercised any influence over the management and policies of this bank or not? A. You talking about the Citizens & Southern National Bank or me, individually?

Q. The Citizens & Southern National Bank and Holding Company. A. As though it were a branch office.

Q. Did you so influence it as to tell the board [521] members exactly how to vote? A. No, sir.

Q. Well, then, how do you equate those two? How do you reconcile them when you say that you treated them like a branch but they made the decisions? A. They had their legal responsibilities, which they have very great feeling in. They were looking to us for guidance, advice and suggestions upon which to act. Certainly the past history of Citizens & Southern, since its beginning, had demonstrated both in depression years and in good years, the style that had been developed, that it was deemed toward helping other people before you help yourself, and that led them, I am sure, to looking to us for advice and guidance which, in the past, have been sound. They had seen us replace a president who did not measure up. They looked to us for that, but as far as legal control is concerned, no.

Q. Moving, Mr. Lane, if we may, to Chamblee, what was it like out there in 1960? A. Chamblee was a strip city, we call it, with the railroad on one side and a group of stores and offices on the other, and a little bit on the other side of the railroad tracks. But Chamblee was in an area that was industrialized with the building after the war of the Chamblee-Dunwoody whole industrial [522] development, which, in turn, had been brought about because of the building of the BPO Automobile Plant and the opening up of Peachtree Boulevard. And it was in, I would say, just a lag of a year or so, you go from Buckhead to Sandy Springs to Chamblee. It is nothing but an ever-widening circle of economy of metropolitan Atlanta.

Q. To the extent, recognizing the fact that you were then the chief executive officer of the National Bank and of the Holding Company, and not, therefore, always involved in each of the details of these, to the extent that you participated and have personal knowledge, Mr. Lane, please tell the Court how this bank got started, the Citizens &—the bank that is now the Citizens & Southern Chamblee Bank. A. The business people of Chamblee, two senior citizens, Mr. Frank Berry, and then Mrs. Miller, who is now Mrs. Berry, together with a doctor and other people, were meeting together talking about the organization of a bank. Mr. Berry, like Mr. Aldredge and others in Buckhead, was in the real estate business. He saw what had happened, I am sure, in Buckhead and in Sandy Springs, that there was no convenient place for people to bank in the first place, but, second, that if you had a bank with capital and deposits and with adequate [523] management tied to downtown Atlanta, that it would be the greatest single asset that Chamblee could have.

When I heard about that, I got in touch either with Dr. Mosher or with Mr. Berry, and I believe that I said, "Look, you people want to start a bank. We are a retail bank; we know more about branch supervision of big banks and small banks than anybody else. We are not blue stocking; would you let me have an opportunity to meet with you and tell you what I think the Citizens & Southern can mean to you, who will organize it for the bank itself, for its management and for the future of the community."

And they were kind enough to let me have them out for supper or lunch at Peachtree Golf Club, and later we used to meet at the dog and cat hospital. And out of that came a bond of friendship and understanding that led to their saying we would rather join hands than anybody we know in the banking business, because we like your style; we like you as an individual; we like what your bank has stood for, and you can do more for this community than anybody else.

Q. In each of these two cases, did you participate in the selection of people who would organize and then be directors of the banks? A. I did, but the selection of the directors in [524] this case was the work of the organizing group that let us join hands with them. We did supply the president and key personnel to the bank, although Mrs. Miller, who became an officer of the bank herself, again, did the same thing that happened in Buckhead and Chamblee, in Sandy Springs, tying together the capacity and knowledge of a big bank with local interest and feeling for the community. That combination is what has spelled success.

Q. Did the people at Chamblee have the same expectation with respect to management that you have testified about with respect to Sandy Springs? A. Yes. And I would think that they would not have participated or asked us to share in the organization of the bank if that hadn't been a requirement.

Q. In each of these instances, was there any expectation—well, let me come back and ask a prior question.

You testified a little earlier, Mr. Lane, that unless the city limits expanded or the branch-banking laws were liberalized——A. Right.

Q. ——there was no way to go directly out into these areas either by branching or by holding company expansion? [525] A. Absolutely.

Q. Were the city limits ever expanded? A. Not since the plan of improvement that I know of.

Q. And were the branch banking laws liberalized? A. Yes, they were.

Q. When? A. 1960—no, 19—countywide branch banking was passed in the legislature in 1971 to become effective a year later, in '72.

Q. If I may, Your Honor, I believe it was one year prior to that, the law was a '70 law, effective January 1, '71. A. Right.

Q. After the F.D.I.C. took a while with the application, remember? A. Right.

Q. Now, with respect to each of these two banks, was there or not any expectation that should either the city limits expand or the branch-banking laws be liberalized so as to allow these separate banks to become branches? A. I believe——

Q. That such would take place? A. I believe that in both cases the presumption [526] at the time of organization was that if there ever became an opportunity to put these two banks together, it would be done.

[527] Q. Now, Mr. Lane, though the Citizens and Southern Bank at Tucker is not a part of this litigation with respect to merging, it nevertheless is a part of the whole litigation and I'd like for you to tell the Court what it was like out in Tucker in 1965 when we first went in there. A. In 1965, Tucker was a totally undeveloped little patch with a railroad running through it and the old Lawrenceville Highway connecting up with Lilburn and a spur road that went over Stone Mountain. The only industrial plant of any consequence was a small operation by DuPont. The Cofer family dominated Tucker and had for many years in the real estate, mercantile business and a very large building supply business.

The Cofers, when Tucker was very small, had organized a bank partly for the convenience of the people but more pertinently to be able to finance the homes and construction as an adjunct to the building trade business. The bank was in a building not as large as this courtroom. They had no male employee except Mr. Cofer, who had a little office in the back and he would go over in the afternoon in the back and do a little bit of business.

Mr. Cofer and I got to be very close friends. He moved his correspondent relationship from another bank to ours and he came to me and says, "I am old, I don't [528] understand modern banking, I haven't got a man in this bank. My sons are in the mercantile business. I've watched what you all have done; you all would be good for this community. I'd like to make an offer to you and your friends to buy a majority of our interest in this bank and to provide management and new life to it." And that was done.

And here was the beginning of the real meaning of the five percenter bank. Charlie Thwaite, then president of Georgia Bank or Georgia Bank hearing over here at the capitol, had chided me that he thought we were wrong putting a five percent in a bank that other people owned ninety-five percent of and yet being its sponsor and its father with five percent ownership. We were going to be responsible for a hundred percent assets of the bank. And Sandy Springs—Mr. Thwaite proved out to be correct because we did not only have to, but wanted to back up one hundred percent of deposits liabilities of that bank. Mr. Cofer, the first thing he wanted to do was build a new building. We made him chairman of the building committee. We found it was going to cost $1,700 for a sign and he called me up and said the building committee isn't going to approve this sign unless you put C&S's name on it. I said, well, if you want to. He said, we want representation in this community, and I said, what you want is what [529] I want. And that was the beginning of the use of the name of Citizens & Southern which led to the changing of the name of the other five percenter banks not only in Atlanta but around the State of Georgia as well.

Q. Mr. Lane, why would you give your name which we lawyers represent holding out of your goodwill and take only five percent of a voting share of a bank and still be a hundred percent responsible, as you put it? A. We don't mind accepting responsibility of the banking business because our belief is—this goes back to the beginning of this bank—that you have got to serve people, you've got to serve them right. Obviously something was going to change in the banking laws of the state someday, they had to either by liberalizing the holding company or branch banking. We knew that if we gave it our name now that it would be our name then. Then we would have, not at that time the claim, but we would have built the bank in the beginning for what it was going to be in the future.

Q. You said a while ago that you were taking a substantial percentage of the stock in Tucker, but that the holding company had only five percent. What happened to the rest of it? A. It was divided mainly among officers, their wives, and close friends of the Citizens and Southern.

[530] Q. Why was this done? A. To insure that the ownership would be in friendly hands for the future and for the purpose of helping some people make some money.

Q. Did you have any control over those voting shares? A. Not one iota, or in the buying or selling stock after the original placement either.

Q. Did you personally have anything to do with the beginning of Park National, Citizens and Southern Park National out at Executive Park? A. Yes, that was again a major development in the economy of Atlanta. That was the first office park building with major companies, national companies moving from downtown to the periphery of the city, and it seemed obvious that that was going to be a continuing trend throughout metropolitan Atlanta. It had been brought on by the expressway system and then by the circumferential highway and we wanted to be in Executive Park for that reason.

From there on I had little to do with the selection of management. But, other than set the pace that this was a long-range objective and the first step, this was the first time that a major company, Sinclair, moved from Fulton National Bank Building downtown to [531] Executive Park as its prime tenant and we were its prime bank.

Q. What is your recollection of your participation in the formation of Citizens and Southern North Fulton Bank out at Roswell? A. I had practically nothing to do with that. By then we had, had permission to merge our bank at Belvedere. It seemed obvious that the trend among banks was for liberalization of branch banking that was to come, that we were then embarked on meeting the competition of other banks. By then the First National Bank of Atlanta had gotten friends of theirs to organize a bank not far from the Citizens and Southern South DeKalb.

Q. North Fulton? A. Roswell, now. I got the wrong one. I thought you were back down—I was down at the wrong place. Roswell had always interested me because of the presence of our director, Mr. William D. Ellis, who had had a mill out there. There was a bank there owned by Mr. Simms Garrett, who also owned a bank at Alpharetta. Mr. Garrett had been in bad health. He was active in politics. He did not live, I don't believe, in Roswell, and he approached me asking me if I would like to purchase the bank at Roswell and Alpharetta, and we came to an agreement to under which he would sell Citizens and Southern five [532] percent and I was to place the rest. That was in the form of a written contract. When the time came to deliver, Mr. Simms Garrett wanted to renegotiate the terms of the contract. I refused to do that. The Superintendent of Banks begged me to. He said Mr. Garrett was sick, he ought to be out of the banking business. Roswell needed a Citizens and Southern, Alpharetta needed a Citizens and Southern. He urged me to renegotiate the contract with Mr. Garrett, which I refused to do.

Subsequent to that, Mr. Garrett sold the bank to someone else and in the same vein that we had gone from Sandy Springs to Chamblee, we applied for a charter with friends for a new bank in Roswell which has again shown that when you start a new bank, competition doesn't hurt.

Simms Garrett's bank has grown, the Bank of North Fulton is now about a $7 million bank, plus. It has grown, it was probably unusual that the bank at Roswell was in the black within six months.

Q. Now, tell us about South DeKalb. A. Well, you want me to repeat it all?

Q. You can pick up where you left off, for better or not. A. I must be getting senile, I can't remember. But, I turned over to Dan Handley, who was then the [533] aggressive vice president in charge of branches and five percent banks, and left it entirely up to him, as I have since the change in branch banking laws, the location of all new branch locations. From there on out, I had nothing further to do with South DeKalb.

Q. Are you familiar with the fact that the Government's assertion in this complaint that these are not Citizens and Southern Banks, do you differ with that view? A. They're as much Citizen and Southern Banks in every way, with only one exception. We only have a five percent degree of ownership.

Q. And this is true from the beginning as to each of them? A. Yes.

Q. I suppose then you would resist the Government's assertion that they were vigorous and significant competition to the Citizens and Southern National Bank Emory and East Point? A. There is no competition between the two. As a matter of fact, as Sandy Springs, Roswell came into being we urged customers of C&S to move for convenience to those banks, including major national corporations.

Q. Have you had any experiences that you can advise the Court of which would lead you to believe that [534] competitors feel that they are not C&S Banks or are Citizens and Southern Banks, these five? A. I feel positive that as far as competitors are concerned that they consider themselves absolutely the Citizens and Southern National Bank, and I'm sure if this case hadn't properly displayed [illegible], they couldn't identify which ones were the five percent banks.

[534-A] Q. Mr. Lane, there is a bank that has been talked about in this litigation, which was the Stone Mountain Bank, and later the Citizens & Southern Bank at Stone Mountain, and now I believe it is the Citizens Bank of DeKalb. How do you compare that bank with these five, and its relationship and their relationships to the Citizens & Southern National Bank? A. Let's go back to the organization of the Stone Mountain Bank. I had developed, since I was twelve years old and my father took me out to see Gutson Paulson working on the mountain, a love for that rock. And I undertook, over a period of several years, to get the Venable family together. Nobody had ever been able to do it, and finally the Venables incorporated the mountain, put it in a voting trust, made me the sole voting trustee, and from that, although we didn't—weren't able to develop it as a private thing, later sold it to the State. The love of that mountain and the city of Stone Mountain was such that I became very friendly with lots of the leading citizens of Stone Mountain. There was a rapport between us because of what we had done for the rock. Stone Mountain had once had a bank that went broke; it went broke because the character of the people in Stone Mountain is as different as day and night from any other part of the state of [535] Georgia. It was founded by Scotchmen and Welshmen who were stone cutters.

The bank failed because individual credit in the city of Stone Mountain had never been any good. Nobody had any confidence in it, and yet the little merchants said, "We need a bank." And I met with them at the Plantation House, gave every one of them a brand new, sparkling Stone Mountain half-dollar, and from that came the organization of the bank at Stone Mountain. We had not gotten into the philosophy of the five-percent bank at that time; otherwise, it would have been organized, I think, in the same spirit that Chamblee, Sandy Springs and others were. They wanted an independent bank, and the five-percent interest had never occurred to me, but I said, "Look, we can't give you men out of the C&S Bank, but here is Arthur Drew, who is retired as an assistant cashier, and Arthur wants something to do. Maybe Arthur Drew would be interested in coming out here and buying a little bit of stock and being head of the bank. So this bank started with an entirely different embryonic stage. The character of the people of Stone Mountain, provincial. Stone Mountain was a sleepy little place. I don't think to this day it has been able to attract a chain grocery store, although they have had me working for several years to try to [536] get them a Winn-Dixie. It is a little pocket of between Decatur, Lithonia, with a sense of pride that is unusual.

At the time the bank was operated, one of the problems of developing the mountain was that the entire sewage system of Stone Mountain was an open cesspool. On the property that we had bought for the state park, it had no sewage system. It did not look like anything that was—other than as an adjunct to the development of Stone Mountain as a park, and the desire of a few people to have a bank, that it ever came into being. I have been amazed that it, too, developed deposits and profitability. The only similarity between this and the five-percent bank was that because we did not have an interest in the bank financially, did not have a member of the board of directors, did not really have a qualified president, the bank got in trouble. It got into serious credit trouble, and though we didn't have an interest in it, not five cents, when they got in trouble, because I had helped them organize it and kept them coming, I said, listen, we have got to get rid of Mr. Drew; we have got to have a president. All right, we can do it under these circumstances. We can either own five percent of the bank, so personnel can flow back and forth, and [537] you can occupy the same status, and that is what took place. We provided them with two men, Mr. Angus Parker, who was here, and Mr. Robert Maughon, who is now president of the bank.

Q. Previously you supplied Mr. Gibson, did you not? A. Mr. Gibson before that, too.

Q. How would you compare the relationship of the voluntary control, as we have called it, between those board members and officers and those of the other five banks and your bank? A. Now, give me that again.

Q. How do you compare the relationship of trust in asking for control and relying on it, as between those various boards of directors and yourself? A. I still don't understand.

Q. Well, let me go back, Mr. Lane, to your testimony about the dependence for expert advice that you testified about with respect to Chamblee. A. All right.

Q. And Sandy Springs. What was the relationship at Stone Mountain? Was it the same? A. Oh, no, entirely different.

Q. How do you compare them? A. Different as day and night. There is no [538] comparison. The only reason I think that the Stone Mountain directors were willing to let us own five percent was that is the only way they could get a C&S bank man that wanted to come out and run it. But they wanted to tell him what to do.

Q. And did so? A. Oh, yes.

Q. Consistently? A. Oh, yes, elected a chairman of the board without even telling us they were going to do it.

Q. Any other instances that you can, yourself, recall evidencing this mistrust? A. Probably only one, and I don't know that it is pertinent. We had suggested to the Keeper of the House that Mr. Hugh Jordan, a legislator in the General Assembly, be put on the bank's study commission for changes in the bank-branching law, and he was one of the few that voted in the committee against any liberalization of branch banking.

Q. Who was the dominant shareholder group at that bank? A. The McCurdy family.

Q. Did any of your employees or officers or shareholders, so far as you know, other than the Holding Company, own shares of stock in that bank, or friends? [539] A. I think that I may have owned fifty or sixty shares that came about a good deal after the organization of the bank. I am not sure how I got that little dab of stock. The only person connected with the C&S Bank that had any shares, Mr. Drew, owned five hundred, and he was already retired from the C&S Bank at this time.

Q. I suspect, Mr. Lane, with respect to any of these five things that we have been talking about, the shareholders or the board members could walk away from the C&S Bank and Holding Company's name any time they wanted to, couldn't they? A. Yes, sir.

Q. In your view, what is the likelihood of this happening? A. I can't possibly conceive of it.

Mr. Hodgson: He is your witness, Mr. Kinkaid.

Mr. Kinkaid: Can we take a break, Your Honor?

The Court: All right. We will take a ten-minute recess.

(Whereupon a recess was had.)

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Kinkaid

[540] Q. Mr. Lane, basically, I would like just to see if we can sort of clarify a few points on which I am a little bit confused here. A. Certainly.

Q. As I recall, you indicated that there was some intent with respect to the sign that was used for the Sandy Springs bank to, I think as you pointed out, stress the C from Citizens and the S from Sandy Springs. I was wondering, was that reference made to the time when the Sandy Springs bank moved into its new building out there on Roswell Road? A. Yes, yes.

Q. You weren't at that point referring to the early days of Sandy Springs? A. No, no, when they moved into the new office building.

Q. All right, sir. In the early days before Sandy Springs was formed, I got the impression from what you said that Jim Aldredge came to see you alone; am I correct in that? I had always thought that there was a group of people out in the Sandy Springs area, including Mr. Aldredge, who were interested in forming a bank and came to you seeking assistance. A. My memory is not clear on that. Jim Aldredge is the only one I remember.

[541] Q. There may well have been other people? A. There may well have been.

[542] Q. It may not be, you may not be able to completely remember then whether, when you said you picked the group, I can't remember your exact words with respect to the organization of Sandy Springs. I think you said something like, "We picked a group, provided management, sold some stock to friends." When you said we picked a group, what did you have in mind there? A. I had in mind that we had invited Mr. Ivan Allen, Jr., Mr. Lawrence Gellerstedt, Mr. Weinberg, all associated with our C&S Bank and friends to become founding directors. That is the group I refer to.

Q. When you say "we" there, would that be Mr. Aldredge and anyone else from the organization group that came to you, if you can recall? A. I really can't recall the logistics of it.

Q. I realize it's been a long time, I don't want to quibble with words thirteen years after the event. I have a little bit of problem with the statements you made that we provided management. Wouldn't it be more correct to say that you suggested to the directors at Sandy Springs, experienced officers that were to run the bank; wouldn't that be more correct than saying we provided management? A. I believe that you can use it both ways. We suggest the man to run it, when we are providing management [543] we are talking about all the back-up services, installment loan and all, management assistance.

Q. When you said management, I thought you mean the man that's representing management. A. No, we suggested the man we would like for them to look at to be for president. That has been true for all banks, all affiliates. Whenever a new man comes in, even in a branch city, we have never told an advisory board or bank that we, this is the man we want you to take, here's the man that we want you to look at.

Q. And whether or not that man actually becomes the president is up to the Board of Directors? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You mentioned a situation that developed with respect to Mr. Cook of credit judgment out of Sandy Springs. I believe you indicated that there came a time when you recommended to the Board that Mr. Cook leave and that Mr. Fortuna take his place. Do I recall you correctly? A. Yes, I think I'd better give you a little additional explanation of that. We did not have a Citizens and Southern man as a director of the bank at that time. The bad situation came to light as a result of routine bank examination and I recall that I recommended to Mr. Weinberg and the directors that Tommy Cook had not performed, and that I thought he ought to be replaced. They [544] didn't want to do it at first. They were very loyal to him. And it seems to me it was over a period of a month or longer or perhaps three months before I persuaded them that they ought to let Tom Cook go. They were very reluctant to do so.

Q. Well, doesn't the fact that there was no C&S man on the Board at Sandy Springs, and I believe that you also mentioned the branch supervision wasn't keeping an eye on Sandy Springs at that time, doesn't that indicate to you that up to that point in time there was a significant difference between the Sandy Springs Bank and C&S five percent picture that you have painted for yourself as to the five percent bank today? A. Not Tom Cook because of this case we did pick the majority of the Board of Directors from people intimately associated with the Citizens and Southern Bank, including a member of our law firm. Only in credit judgment were we lacking in things we had done for this five percent bank. Everything else, mechanics, bookkeeping, machinery to run the bank, only in credit review were we shortcoming at Sandy Springs.

Q. Wasn't it true that in the organizational stage of Sandy Springs that the original small group of organizers in turn went out and picked the rest of the directors themselves? Can you recall back thirteen years [545] ago on that? A. I believe that they were responsible for the selection of local directors without concurrence back and forth on either one of the two slates that we had. But after the original get together, Tom Cook, Mr. Aldredge and the rest of them put the bank together, the mechanics of it.

Q. I believe you mentioned that Citizens and Southern treated Sandy Springs like a branch, but the Board had legal responsibilities? Again, I apologize for not being able to quote your exact words. A. That's about it.

Q. Is that about it? Fine. What were the legal responsibilities that you had in mind in that stage? A. I don't think I want to be specific on that, but it would be the legal responsibility that any director has by law that is expected from a supervisory authority.

Q. Now, would that include the responsibility to make basic policy decisions for the bank? A. Yes, sir.

Q. I think you also indicated with respect to Sandy Springs, and this may have been true for the other thing, I think you also said this for Chamblee, basically, the directors at Sandy Springs were looking for Citizens and Southern advice and guidance. This, you indicated, was [546] an essential part of the relationship between Sandy Springs at that time and your bank; am I remembering you correctly in that regard? A. Yes. Let me get back a minute to the question of the broad decision of policy. Policy decision in any Citizens and Southern affiliate or five percenter is a matter of mutual confidence between one another and agreement. The actual physical carrying out in legal form by resolution and official action is done by the Board, the leading up to that in broad policy or other things. The second question is a matter not of supervision but of cooperative work in trust and confidence we have with one another, both at the directors' level and management level.

Q. Does that mean that basically the policies of one of these five percent banks is determined as a result of consultation between the management and directors of the five percent banks and the people representing the Citizens and Southern National? A. And the actual president of that bank, too?

Q. Yes, include him in it. Would that—would that procedure apply to all decisions of the five percent banks? A. I am not and have not been for quite a number of years in the daily management and relationship between [547] any of the five percent banks beyond the point of organization and policy that we try to give for the bank as a whole. I can't really answer that one specifically for you. I would if I could.

Q. From your standpoint, more or less in terms of what you were looking for? A. Right.

Q. At the time of organization, were you intending or expecting that that type of concurrence would take place with respect to such practices of the five percent banks as interest rates paid on savings accounts or service charges on deposit accounts? A. I never gave that any thought in my mind. Citizens and Southern with 115 locations or more, the executive officers that handle that do that, not me, so I wouldn't know that either.

Q. Executive officers are whom? A. I'm talking about Mr. Dan Handley and Mr. Joe Hall.

Q. Okay. Could we go back to this business of the advice and guidance. Could you spell out just a little bit more what you, the significance of the folks out at Sandy Springs looking to Citizens and Southern for advice and guidance was? A. All right, I think we can do that. Are you [548] going to put in a modernization loan program for underprivileged people; help do some property finance; or are you going to use the Citizens and Southern charge card; are you going to amend your pension and profit sharing funds and liberalize them as National Bank has done. Are you going to employ minority people in the bank. That would be the type of things that I was referring to.

[549] Q. As I recall, you mentioned with respect to the stock in the Tucker bank that—I think Mr. Hodgson asked you about what happened to the bulk of the stock. A. Right.

Q. Outside the five percent that the Holding Company bought. As I recall, you indicated that was sold or distributed to friends of C&S, to ensure ownership in friendly hands. Now, again, I am probably getting your words all garbled up, so would you—— A. No, I think that is exactly what I said.

Q. Again, could you give us an idea of what you had in mind there so far as what is the significance of having the stock of Tucker in what you call friendly hands? In other words, what does that do for you with respect to the bank in Tucker? A. Let's go back to the selection of the—there were two ingredients that I mentioned in placing of the stock in Tucker, most of which was done by Mr. Hall and Mr. Bennett A. Brown, who was then vice-president in charge of correspondent banking. In that primary relationship we saw Tucker as probably one of the great growth areas of Atlanta, that this bank was going to have to have increased capital as time went by, that the price at which stock was sold, that it was going to be one of the most lucrative investments [550] anybody could make. And of course it has turned out that way. It is worth over ten times what was paid for it. I think that whenever you sell stock in any institution, where you are participating in it, that you want your stock in friendly hands. I wouldn't say that Tucker is any different than when we went out and got ten thousand new stockholders for the Citizens & Southern National Bank ten years ago. We sold them to our friends, because friends build things together.

Q. Does that situation have any connection in your mind to the voluntary control that you were discussing with Mr. Hodgson while ago? A. I don't think so.

Q. So far as you know or can recall, were the Chamblee and Sandy Springs banks identified to the public as C&S banks during the organizational stage and in the early years of their operation? A. Whether or not we did it consciously, I am not sure, but certainly with the presence of the Citizens & Southern people, it had to be common knowledge, certainly from the supervisory level on down, that we worked together. Now, whether we ran newspaper ads saying that or not, I don't know, but I would say it was common knowledge that it was a C&S-sponsored bank.

[551] Q. Well, I had in mind, by public, it was not the regulatory authorities but the general public that would be affected either by advertising—— A. Well, the same thing, the same thing would be true.

Q. I am not sure if I understand you. Are you saying that the public was made aware of the relationship? A. I am sure the public was. Now, whether we consciously bought advertising in the newspapers to do it, I am not sure. I don't believe we did, but John Q. Public in metropolitan Atlanta, ever since we began developing retail banking, would almost bet that if anything was being done around town, it was the C&S Bank. Nobody else was active in the bullpen.

Q. You say C&S is the only bank that helps banks get started in communities where there are no banks? A. I am sure that up until that time there hadn't been a single move by another bank in Atlanta to do what we had been doing.

Q. Well, in terms of forming or helping a bank start, wasn't a bank—the formation of a new bank assisted by Trust Company in Chamblee at the same time? A. The Trust Company of Georgia acquired a bank [552] because it had been organized by Mr. Malcolm Bryant, who became uneligible—ineligible to own it when he became president of the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta. And he had to dispose of it to legally qualify. That is the way the Trust Company got started.

Q. Oh, excuse me, are you speaking of—I'm sorry. Are you speaking of Trust Company itself? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Oh, I am sorry. I misled you. A. Yeah, Trust Company.

Q. I was thinking of—— A. No, no, the Trust Company.

Q. I wasn't going back that far. No, I was thinking in terms of—I was asking you about the situation in Chamblee. A. Well, I think——

Q. The formation of the Peachtree Bank. A. Well, I think they were playing copycat.

Q. But it was at the same time that you folks had—— A. No, not at the time. They didn't organize the bank in Chamblee; we did.

Q. No, they didn't organize the Chamblee National Bank, right. A. I don't keep up with what the competitors do; [553] they don't do much.

Q. So far as the Stone Mountain situation is concerned, I sort of got the impression from what you were saying that the real difference, so far as your concern at Stone Mountain, from other associate banks, was the independence of the people who were making up, by and large, making up the board of directors. Is that a fair reading of your statements as to Stone Mountain? A. Partially. I think probably more important is that at the time the bank was organized, I did not spell out to the organizing directors what association with the Citizens & Southern could mean, why they would benefit if we organized the bank with a five-percent interest without being able to apply our young, aggressive management, and we were looking forward together, as we did in Chamblee and Sandy Springs; we are going to be lacking. That was my first chance; I was inexperienced, and we hadn't developed a philosophy or a policy at that time. That was a plaything, went with the rock.

[554] Q. And do you allow banks to use the Citizens and Southern name who are not part of the Citizens and Southern system? A. No, sir.

Q. Well, then, doesn't the fact that you allow Stone Mountain to use your name indicate that Stone Mountain is part of the system? A. When the other banks, five percent banks, were changing their name, we offered to the directors of that bank the privilege of changing the name if they thought it would enhance the growth and development of the bank. At first they were reluctant to do so and then realized it would be wheat in the bin and money in the till if they could draw the association closer together in the public's mind.

Q. I'm not sure if I—perhaps you didn't understand my question. Maybe I'm not understanding your answer. But, let's maybe back up a step. At that time, the time that Stone Mountain began using your name, in the subsequent years, wasn't Stone Mountain by virtue of that fact a part of the Citizens and Southern system? A. With the exception of personalities involved, yes.

Q. And here by that you mean the personalities on the Board of Directors? [555] A. And to some extent the officers of the bank as well.

Q. Mr. Lane, can you recall back, this would be back in April of '68, going up to Washington with, I think, it was Mr. Hall and Mr. Starkes and Mr. Fortuna and perhaps some other folks? A. Yes, sir.

Q. To meet with some of the staff members at the Reserve Board? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you recall at that time having discussions with the Board staff about the questions of control? Do you recall the issue of control? A. The entire purpose of the meeting was to discuss control, manner of control and how it evolved.

Q. As I recall, that hearing, and if you like, we could get into specific stages, but let's see if we could just get some broad items out. As I recall, the hearing, I got the impression that you had made it plain to the Reserve Board that Citizens and Southern did not have any control over its five percent banks? A. That is to say we had no control over the voting shares or the election of directors.

Q. In other words, that's what I was trying to clarify, but that was the context of your remarks? [556] A. Context with the Reserve Board hearing entirely with the question of legality and compliance with the Georgia statute. I guess with the Federal Reserve statute, too, sure, obviously.

Q. Can you give me a little bit more on what you mean when you indicate that the five percent banks or correspondent associates don't compete with Citizens and Southern National? Let me ask it a different way. By that are you indicating that they, the five percent banks, involved in this case, have the same competitive practices as Citizens and Southern National or have the same interest rate on savings accounts or service charges? Just what are you indicating in terms of there is no competition.

Mr. Hodgson: If Your Honor please, I ask that Mr. Kinkaid rephrase the question. I object to what he has asked because it has words of art in it to the extent that he is talking about competitive practices. I'd like for him to ask Mr. Lane, if he wishes, specific ones in serial, but not as a broad matter because Mr. Lane might not know what Mr. Kinkaid meant or what is on Your Honor's mind.

By Mr. Kinkaid

Q. We will try here again. A. All right.

Q. First of all, maybe I'd better establish that [557] I am recalling your direct testimony correctly, did you as a matter of fact have an occasion to indicate on direct testimony that the five percent banks don't compete with C&S National? A. No, sir, you're exactly right. In fact, we have helped them get business for themselves.

Q. Okay. Then, what I'm trying to get at is when you say that they don't compete, does that mean that they have the same—— A. They do not.

Q. ——interest rates? A. It means they do not compete for business and the help for customers of the bank in services or otherwise.

Q. Perhaps I could ask it another way. This would help me. From your standpoint as a banker, how would they be—how would banks or how do banks compete for the customers that you have just indicated? A. You advertise, use the direct mail, you get on television, you go calling and say, "Give me your bank account, don't keep it where you've got it."

Q. Now, are you saying that someone from a correspondent associate would not call on a Citizens and Southern National customer and try and take the account away? [558] A. Yes, sir, they will do that for convenience, and we urge them to. In fact, we have helped build these banks by putting them in places that were more convenient to Citizens and Southern National Bank customers than places where they were banking with us before.

Q. Well, the idea of convenience suggests to me, for example, that this would mean only a Citizens and Southern National customer, for example, up in Sandy Springs would be closer to C&S Sandy Springs than it is to National. A. Right.

Q. Does it go beyond that that wouldn't Sandy Springs call on a Citizens and Southern National customer who was located closer in than where he would be just as convenient to a National office? A. I don't think so.

Q. Is there any particular reason for that? A. I don't know what calling they would do, to tell you the truth. We are speculating. I do not know.

Q. And am I right in recalling that when Sandy Springs and Chamblee were formed there, that most of the stockholders of those banks were unrelated to the Citizens and Southern? A. I do not know. I think the stockholders' list would show that. I just don't know.

[559] Q. What I had in mind was there was a statement that you made in that Federal hearing that we just mentioned, would you like a copy of this to take a look at for yourself? A. No, I don't.

Q. I will try to read it accurately. A. Okay.

Q. Incidentally, Your Honor, this is Government's Exhibit 177. I think it also has a defendant's number on it, too, but I don't see it.

Looks as though this starts on the top of page 118, Mr. Noble, one of the attorneys on the Federal staff, asked, "I mean is it true that someone has an ownership interest greater than the combined interest of Citizens and Southern and the president's?"

Now, your answer was, "That is true at Warner Robbins, it was true at Pelham." Then following your statement then Mr. Hall indicated that is true at Chamblee, it's true at Sandy Springs and true at Fayetteville.

Then, on page 119, you got into a discussion with the Federal attorneys about divorces following marriages and what not, and you made a remark that there are also some common-law brides, too, and at which one of the Federal attorneys noted which the law recognizes as being marriages some place and then Mr. Noble popped in [560] with the Chamblee National Bank, whereupon you said that "This is a bank where there was a group of citizens, there was no bank in the community, it was at the north end of Atlanta, and a group of citizens were being put together by a Trust Company of Georgia." Reading on, after you met with these folks from Chamblee Springs, you "probably have less affiliated interests of any kind in that bank than in any of the five percenters that started. They organized the bank and I said, please, I am a better partner for you than the Trust Company." Does that sort of refresh—that was four years ago—your memory would be better than it is now. A. The organizing group—I think I said this a while ago when Mr. Hodgson was questioning me, I found out they were talking about organizing a bank themselves. I got a hold of them to try and sell them on Citizens and Southern. When I did that I found out they were talking with Trust Company of Georgia.

Q. Do you recall—is this right, the unrelated interest in Chamblee would be the unrelated stock and stockholders? In other words, there was a large proportion of the stock in Chamblee held by people unrelated? A. People we didn't know.

Q. Yes. A. I think that's probably so.

[561] Q. Does that sound reasonable to your memory at this point? A. I think so.

Mr. Kinkaid: Would you excuse me a moment, Your Honor?

Q. In view of the fact that as you seem to recall that there were a lot of people that held stock at Chamblee who were not affiliated or related to Citizens and Southern at that time, how would you characterize that in terms of Stone Mountain? It sounds to me like in those earlier days with a great many people having, being unrelated to Citizens and Southern, that the situation at Chamblee then would have been very similar to the situation at Sone Mountain that you described. A. Only in, different in one respect, that the organizing directors of Chamblee started their bank with the express interest of not only having the name Citizens and Southern, but being a part of Citizens and Southern. When the merger came to pass that was contemplated. That was not contemplated at Stone Mountain.

[562] Q. Did you just say that they contemplated having the Citizens & Southern name? A. No, they did not, because we hadn't—they hadn't changed the name yet but contemplated being a part of the Citizens & Southern.

Q. Okay. A. That was their—that is the way they started out. Stone Mountain just didn't start that way.

Q. We were just talking a minute ago about the competitive practices, interest on savings accounts and the like. Let's go back to that for one second. If a loan customer is rejected for a loan, let's say, by C&S Chamblee, now he is then looking for another bank to try to borrow. If he goes to a National branch or if he goes over to, say, C&S Tucker, would he automatically be rejected for a loan just because he had been rejected by Chamblee? A. I would like to answer that, but I don't have any part of that daily supervision.

Mr. Kinkaid: No further questions, Your Honor. Thank you, Mr. Lane.

A. Thank you, Mr. Kinkaid.

Redirect Examination

By Mr. Hodgson

Q. Mr. Lane, Mr. Kinkaid asked you some [563] questions about your verbs in providing management or recommending and so on. The fact is that you did supply and provide management to these banks, didn't you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. From the Citizens & Southern National Bank. A. Yes, sir.

Q. And when Mr. Kinkaid was asking you about ultimate legal corporate responsibility for making decisions, it is a fact that these boards and management did follow your advice, didn't they? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in talking in terms of stock being in friendly hands, that doesn't hurt voluntary control, does it? A. No, sir.

Q. With respect to the Federal Reserve Board hearing in April of 1968, you did go into this entire relationship, did you not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And there was a representative of the Anti-Trust Division of the Department of Justice there, was there not? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Hodgson: No further questions, [564] Your Honor.

The Court: Let me ask you a couple of questions, if I may, Mr. Lane.

A. Yes, sir.

The Court: You were asked a question by both counsel that dealt with an area which, as I understand the defense, is critical to the defense. The concept, as I would articulate, would be that these five banks that are involved are five-percent banks.

A. Yes, sir.

The Court: The five-percent banks are a part of the C&S system, that there has been no competition between C&S and these banks in the past, and there is no likelihood of competition between the C&S and these banks in the future; therefore, if the merger is allowed and they become branches of the C&S Bank——

A. Uh-huh.

The Court: ——there will be no diminution of competition.

A. Right, yes, sir.

The Court: That is the argument, as I understand.

[565] A. Yes, sir.

The Court: Now, with that argument, it becomes important to know what difference does five-percent ownership make. Five percent is just five percent of the ownership of the stock in a small bank; now take two banks and maybe both correspondents of yours, I don't know, but which are identically located, and neither affiliated with another bank. What difference does it make to you that you have got five-percent ownership in one of them and you don't in the other?

A. I don't believe I understand that.

The Court: All right. Take two banks similarly situated, like Sandy Springs or any one of these.

A. Right.

The Court: And they are not affiliated with any other bank.

A. Right.

The Court: Does the five-percent stock ownership mean that much to the C&S that you would treat one differently from the other?

A. It binds the cheese together.

The Court: It is sort of a symbolical [566] situation, isn't it? It isn't a monetary situation?

A. No, but only through that we have the ability to transfer personnel without fringe-benefit changes, pension-to-pension plans.

The Court: How does it do that?

A. Well, if you go to work for the Citizens & Southern National Bank and we pick up your pension and you draw the C&S pension fund, and you move to Sandy Springs, you are still a member of the pension plan with past service going from the time you first went to work for the bank.

The Court: Why is that? Because the C&S pension plan is so written as to allow that?

A. No, the—yes, that the relationship between the five-percent bank and the National Bank permits movement of personnel as though it were a branch.

The Court: Is that a legal concept or one that the C&S had adopted, that it will so consider the five-percenter as a branch?

A. Judge, I don't know about the legality, but it is true that when Stone Mountain disassociated, the pension interchange came to an end. When we sold our interest in Brunswick, that came to an end. When we [567] sold in Pelham, that came to an end and did not continue. That is, as far as I know that that —well, I don't know but I would assume that our qualification for the instrument by the IRS is that this is all you have an ownership in and you can extend this to it. We don't have a so-called master plan.

The Court: All right. Well, let me go a step further with respect to the cooperation and the sponsorship and the responsibility of the C&S. Five percenters are still separate corporations?

A. Yes, sir.

The Court: Have you gone so far, for example, say, in the C&S in the Sandy Springs situation or any other place to have to bail them out of a financial loss, and, if so, how can you do it?

A. In the case of Sandy Springs, we put in capital notes to meet supervisory requirements. In the case of Tucker, we purchased convertible debentures to increase its capital.

The Court: But you made loans to them, in effect, which would have to be repaid?

A. In Tucker it is convertible into common stock. [568] In Stone Mountain, the additional capital is convertible into common stock. And I want to give you what you want; I am not trying to withhold anything.

The Court: No, I am trying to see how it is when you can say a five-percent bank is a C&S bank, and it will never change, and one which is identically situated except for that five-percent ownership that falls in a different category. What is the magic or the ecstasy of five-percent stock ownership, which may be simply a few thousand dollars, which I am sure means not very much to the C&S as a system, just that particular amount of stock?

A. Well, as I say, it binds the cheese. It gives us a contemplation of acquisition or merger; the willingness to allow it to use the name Citizens & Southern, to have all the merger——

The Court: You could do that to someone else, I take it, if the C&S wished to?

A. We would never do that.

The Court: What is in the five percent that makes you wish to?

A. Contemplation that we would be able to [569] acquire these banks down the road. If the law said your minimum is three percent, I think we would have taken three percent.

The Court: All right. Do you make any difference in classification among your five-percenters as among those that you expect to acquire down the road and those you don't?

A. Yes, sir.

The Court: And where did that differentiation take place?

A. It takes place where there is interest in the bank on one hand larger than ours that could become incompatible at some point in the future that is compatible today. We were once compatible with the Hands of Pelham. They owned the bank; we did not have the persuasive influence because it was a bank already in existence. It had not started with us as a new bank. The same thing is true in Fayetteville, where they rely on us, where they are operating just as much as they would a C&S bank today, the same as the five percenter. But, its name is still the Farmers & Merchants Bank of Fayetteville, because the Redwine family own the bank. We are friends. The Redwines have been in court before on family squabbles, in [570] estate things that they have to settle. We don't have the same assurance with the Redwines, although they have got a C&S man down there, and young Redwine, who is the president of the bank, was trained in the C&S Bank.

The same is true at Hogansville. At Hogansville we have a five-percent interest. The Heinz family control the bank, fifty-one percent of it. He wanted us to have a five-percent interest so he could have the advantages of our helping him, but with never the contemplation that it would be a part of the Citizens & Southern in full.

I don't think the Redwines ever contemplate that even if we could go to Fayette County that they would like to be a branch of the Citizens & Southern.

The Court: Why do you own five percent in those banks? Why don't you just have——

A. I guess sometimes I made a career out of being misunderstood, but Old Man Kil Redwine came to me and asked me and asked me and said, "We would like to have your pension plan and we need your help," as a matter of fact. In Fayetteville's case, this was the only bank left in the state of Georgia that was not a member of the F.D.I.C. It had been a private bank, and I used to travel through [571] Fayetteville on the way to La Grange, where I was a director, and I would stop in and see the old man and sit around the hot-stuff stove, and I would tease him, say, "Why don't you make me chairman of the building committee? Let's build a new building. Let's join the F.D.I.C." And out of that came a personal friendship, and there came a day when Mr. Redwine, who at that time was banking with another bank and wanted to make a substantial loan of $100,000, and he got turned down. And he came to see me and said, "My brother, Charley, didn't like you all because you turned him down in the Depression, but I would like to have $100,000." I said, "Sign right here." And from that came a personal friendship and his asking me to help him get the F.D.I.C. insurance, train his son, build them a new building, design it, which we did, purely a personal relationship and a desire to help Fayetteville. I am not always motivated by economic gain.

The same thing was true at Hogansville.

The Court: Well, let me ask you the question which perhaps may not even be answerable. We have heard, in cases of two other banks, similar attempts such as this, and following opposition, apparently there was a divestment of whatever stock ownership [572] there was.

A. Yeah, sure.

The Court: What are the economics or what is the situation with respect to these five banks that are under consideration if the Court is required to forecast, what is there——

A. Future?

The Court: Future, absent, approval? What is it as a continuance of a five-percent bank or a divestment, and why and wherefore?

A. Well, I think that is the most important question you can ask me. It would be a tragedy and a calamity, because we have never contemplated that that would ever come to pass. Now, we only have five percent of these banks, for the most part, the stockholders have.

The Court: Let me stop you at that point and throw a time factor in there. You have indicated you openly contemplated, if it was ever permissible, that it would become a part of your bank.

A. Right, yeah.

The Court: But, was there ever, in the original formation, any time factor attached to that forecast or was it simply [573] an indefinite partnership on a five-percent basis?

A. I think it was the latter, but with the feeling that it was going to come sooner than we thought, that the mood of Georgia banking and the—for the first time, the unanimity of thought among the Atlanta banks working together to try and get expanded city limits, that we thought it was going to be much shorter than that.

[574] The Court: Unless you were committing yourself for then an indefinite time to a five percent partnership?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

The Court: Assume a disapproval here, what happens and why?

The Witness: I do not know, it would be the biggest dilemma we would ever face.

The Court: What would be the motivating factor for you to divest? I assume one thing would be to free your skirts, so to speak, for branching if you could get approval, or what would be the factors as to the retention of the five percent? Doesn't it keep those banks closer to you in the event that you can't get in those areas yourself and in closer cooperation? How do the factors balance out?

The Witness: If that were to come to pass, it's going to take an awful lot of weighing on the part of the stockholders of these banks and their directors, and Citizens and Southern National Bank management to decide just what in the world to do. On the one hand is a market place and your name on a shingle that you want to keep giving people Citizens and Southern banking, and yet here is a [575] bank that has got its name on it already. If you took it off, you would damage it. I don't know, I just honestly don't know. I wish I knew.

The Court: Let me ask you a related question. How can you justify sending a customer of the Citizens and Southern to the C&S Sandy Springs and call it convenience?

The Witness: I guess it gets back to Mills Lane as individual and the way I was raised and trained. All my life I've done things to help other people unselfishly without, I guess, it's part of the way I was brought up.

The Court: Well, as I understand it, the effect is that you lose ninety-five percent of whatever profit there is in that account.

The Witness: Yes, as far as profit to the stockholder is concerned. You've got friends of the Citizens and Southern that are both the directors and stockholders and you've got a whole separate different set of stockholders and directors for Citizens and Southern National Bank.

The Court: The stockholders of Citizens and Southern Bank have a duty to maximize profits to that corporation.

The Witness: That's right. I've thought [576] about this. I do not know what in the world we would do. It would be the worst drastic dilemma we could ever face. I don't know what in the world to do.

The Court: Well, what basis has the Court got to say that absent this suit these banks would continue forever as Citizens and Southern Banks?

The Witness: I can't speak beyond my lifetime or the lifetime beyond Dick Kattel or C&S management. I'm paid by C&S Bank, my investment majority is in C&S National Bank, that's my heart, that's my love. The same with all these men out here who are presidents of these five percent banks. If anything ever happened to those five percent banks, we had to divest ourselves of them, they would be welcome back in Citizens and Southern National Bank. It's been their past, it's their present. It's what they want to make their future. It would be painful and costly to the stockholders of these banks. When the rate of exchange was determined from Sandy Springs, took Sandy Springs' bank stock, the ratio was at that time as Citizens and Southern National Bank stock was selling for $23 a share. It's now selling for forty-seven. They are going to take a terrific financial loss with that rate of [577] exchange. It was fair to them in the first place, but now has doubled in value. Without the Citizens and Southern tie with an adverse decision, that exchange is gone. The little bank is cast adrift and as we both agreed, we have got a five percent stock and they've got our name, and yet their daddy and mother, aunt and uncles in Citizens and Southern National Bank, every bank merger in Atlanta that any of the major banks have proposed, including the Peoples American, have been challenged. Everybody else dropped off and wouldn't contest the issue. Here's the FDIC that's giving us approval of mergers and in the same breath says, "You can't have a new branch," and in this year and a half that we have labored and suffered, twenty-seven banks have been opened in DeKalb County by competitors. We are losing a share of the market in a most unfair way. It just leaves you gasping. The war between banking bureaucracies, Federal Reserve doesn't see things like the Comptroller of the Currency. The Comptroller doesn't see things the way the FDIC does. You take and scramble up the approval of these mergers which are totally unrelated to whether or not we ought to have a new branch and new market place, it deliberately makes us stand by for over a year and [578] with the contemplation that this litigation, if it were settled in our favor, would not bring it to an end, but could go another year, has punished the Citizens and Southern Bank, disturbed the morale of its officers and directors, employees. I'm sure it's very pleasing to our competitors.

The Court: Well, it occurred to me that about the only basis I could think of where the Citizens and Southern really could change Citizens and Southern National customers where their banks would be an ultimate contemplation that that is to become a part of your system. I assume that, though from your testimony, that that was applicable, say, to Stone Mountain.

The Witness: Of course, we contemplated from our side that Stone Mountain would become a part. I don't think we would have urged them to have taken our name if we hadn't thought that. I misjudged the character and attitude of Stone Mountain because I was not in touch with their management organization. There was a misjudgment on my part.

The Court: People's attitudes, of course, can change. It really boils down to the fact that the only place where you can really have a continuing contemplation that what you went into it with would [579] stay the same, the situation would stay the same, would be where the ownership other than that of Citizens and Southern was so fragmented that there was no possible court, antitrust action possible.

The Witness: That's certainly a possibility. I wish I knew what we would want to do and would have to do if that came to pass. It would be a decision that Mr. Kattel will have to make. I will probably be retired by the time this thing is resolved.

The Court: I suspect that everybody has to reconcile themselves. This has got to go to one more level at least, if not two.

The Witness: And in the meantime, we are hurting, banking is hurting. You can't hurt one bank without hurting the banking industry. Atlanta banking stands out in the nation for its progressiveness, what it's done. I don't know of any community where four banks have the mutual respect, trust and confidence that exists in Atlanta today. It wasn't always that way, but an adverse decision would set Atlanta's banking back as well as Citizens and Southern.

The Court: What I am seeking is not the results of this decision because that decision here has to be made on the record, but a forecast as, [580] which is purely a hypothetical one, if absent a decision by this Court, what would happen to those five banks?

The Witness: I don't know. There are, of course, several things that could happen. I don't know which one would take place.

The Court: Well, thank you very much. Anything further?

Mr. Kinkaid: No, Your Honor.

The Court: You may step down.

Let's see, it's a quarter of five. How long is your next witness going to be, or do you wish to wait until tomorrow morning?

Mr. Doyle: I'd prefer to waiting until in the morning.

The Court: We will recess until 10:00 A. M.

(Whereupon, court was recessed at 4:45 P. M. to reconvene at 10:00 A.M., September 28, 1972.)

[581] Volume IV

(Title omitted in printing)

Transcript of proceedings had before The Honorable Charles A. Moye, Jr., Judge, United States District Court, on the 28th day of September, 1972, commencing at 10:00 o'clock A.M., in Atlanta, Fulton County, Georgia.

[582] The Court: Are we ready to proceed?

Mr. Hodgson: I call Mr. Howard Starks.

HOWARD STARKS,

being first duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Direct Examination

By Mr. Hodgson

Q. Will you state your full name for the record? A. Howard S. Starks.

Q. What is your position with the Citizens & Southern Bank? A. Executive vice-president.

Q. Of the Citizens & Southern National Bank? A. Yes.

Q. What are your responsibilities in that position? A. I concern myself with services that we sell to people as opposed to those we sell to corporations.

Q. What is known as retail banking? A. Yes.

Q. What was your position before that? A. I was executive vice-president in charge of branch supervision.

Q. When did you become in charge of retail banking? [583] A. I believe it was '69.

Q. How long had you been in charge as a branch supervisor? A. Since about 1963 or '64.

Q. Previous to that, what was your position? A. I was assistant to the president.

Q. Mr. Lane? A. Yes.

Q. When did you become assistant to the president? A. In 1962, I believe.

Q. Mr. Starks, have you had experience in banking in the area of marketing? A. Yes.

Q. What experience have you had? A. Well, in the late 50's, I was marketing director.

Q. Have you had anything to do with the question concerning joint identification of banking services of Citizens & Southern? A. Yes.

Q. And the development of the logogram and how it is used? A. Yes.

Q. Will you describe for us exactly how the [584] bank came to use the logogram? A. Well, it dawned on us, I believe in the late 60's, we had been having architects design our banks; we saw the value in having a common identification, especially when we became known as the C&S Bank as opposed to Citizens and Southern National Bank. We felt this would be helpful, let everyone know when they saw this logogram full banking services were available. Much the same as when you see the sign on the Waffle House or a Gulf station.

[585] Q. Why did you allow—well, let me ask you this question. Do you or do you not allow the banks, the correspondent associate banks in which you own a 5% interest to use the name in Logogram? A. Yes, we do.

Q. Why do you allow them to use it? A. Because this is where Citizens & Southern's services are available.

Q. Is this true in each instance where you own 5% interest in the stock of the bank? A. Wherever the name C&S Bank is a part of the 5 percenter relationship, yes, we permit the use.

Q. Correspondent associate relationship? A. Yes.

Q. Do you have any banks that you own five per cent of the stock which you do not have correspondent relationships with? A. No, sir. Restate the question.

Q. Are there any banks in which the holding company owns a 5% interest which you do not consider to be correspondent associated banks and which do not bear the name and logo? A. Yes, there is one in Cartersville; there is one in Fayetteville that do not carry the C&S Bank for a name, nor use the logo.

[586] The Court: It would be most helpful if you would get for me the definition of what is correspondent associate. What is the difference between a correspondent bank and correspondent associate bank? Is there something at an associate bank that there is not at a correspondent bank? What is the difference of putting the two words there?

Mr. Hodgson: I will speak in my place, Your Honor. Apart from the words, such as subsidiary and affiliate which do have those confusing differences, do have specific connotations. This one does not.

I will, therefore, ask Mr. Starks what the word correspondent associate bank or associate correspondent bank mean to you?

A. It's a phrase for identification which we have given to banks in which we own a 5% interest.

The Court: It is completely interchangeable with the 5%?

A. Yes, not completely interchangeable because we do have banks, we have a 5% interest that do not carry the Citizens & Southern name.

Mr. Hodgson: Frankly, I think Mr. Hall can testify much more in depth as to this question than Mr. Starks. I simply wanted him to state the distinction at this time.
[587] There are banks which do not carry the name and are not considered correspondent associated banks and have 5% interest. There is a difference.

The Court: You can tell me in your place, it will be just as useful, correspondent associate bank is a bank that has C&S correspondent services, plus the 5% interest generally?

Mr. Hodgson: Let me put them in three categories, if I may, because we are using two names, correspondent and associated. There are banks, and we'll put these aside. There are banks in which the Citizens & Southern Holding Company own 5% of the shares purely as an investment without any other relationship, which may include a correspondent relationship or may not. That is really not important whether it does.

There are some in which we have a purchase investment, some of them outside the state even. These appear in our annual statements which are part of the record. That is the purchased 5% interest.

Then there are those in which we own a 5% interest of the stock, which is the maximum that is allowed us in banks under the Georgia law, and if we wanted more than that under the Federal law, we would have to make application under Section 3 of the Federal Bank Holding Company Act to acquire it, [588] even if Georgia law permitted us to have more. But there are some of those in which, as I think Mr. Lane testified to an extent, Your Honor. These witnesses will testify there are some of those with which we feel such a close relationship that in addition to their being just 5%, we also call them correspondent associated banks or associate correspondents or frequently the word five percenters is used with respect to these, even though we may have a 5% interest in others.

So when Mr. Starks is talking about 5 percenters, I believe though he will testify to this, he is talking only about those with which we claim this very close relationship which we say gives us that variety of management control. So, that they are the same thing as affiliated with the technicalities of law permitted or the same thing as branches with technicalities of law permitted. That is when I say affiliates, I am going back to the Federal Reserve Act, related statutes, which affiliate is where you have a majority control of stock.

Did I pursue this far enough?

The Court: I think so. I get the idea that the correspondent associate tag or definition then is indicative of the somewhat subjective feeling on [589] the part of the Citizens & Southern in respect to——

Mr. Hodgson: No, sir, we feel it's a lot deeper than that. That's what we wish to develop during the day. It's far deeper than subjective. There is neither the legal control or ownership of more than the voting stock in a holding company itself. But there are shareholding by many friends, there are shareholdings by those who invited us to these banks for the purpose of expressing a desire that this relationship exists. There are Directors whose invitations caused this to come about in a mutual endeavor. There are officers who have supplied us who are Citizens & Southern born, bred and trained. There are systems in management and policies and all these things that go along and all of these relationships that enable us to rely as surely as if we owned the stock on those banks, being part of our system just as much as though they were a branch in which case there is simply divisions of the corporate structure where an affiliate being one which is part of the majority stock ownership of the holding company structure.

We do not quarrel with the legal results of that, that there is a possibility, this possibility that we lawyers talk about all the time, anything can [590] happen. That these banks could then, should they change their minds and their desires to have these relationships, re-sever themselves, nevertheless, because we were invited, because of our friendly shareholders, because of our friendly Directors, because of our management which is our management, all of which has been invited and which we give, when that happens, we then allow them to use the name and the logo. We then call them associated correspondents. Up until that time, the relationship is the existant one over which we would have no possibility of making a prediction.

We cannot say there is no possibility that there would be a separation, but we can, as we argued to the FDIC, argued strongly, that there is no reasonable possibility that it will take place absent it being forced upon us and that is, I think, the heart of the whole investigation, if Your Honor please, and it's for this reason that I'm asking these witnesses to testify with respect to this relationship.

Now the ones in which we simply own a 5% interest and have not tagged with the word correspondent associates, are just plain correspondents. There are just correspondents in [591] addition to that.

[592] The Court: What you were sponsoring was not intended to minimize the familiarity or the strength of the relationship you have just mentioned. In using the word "subjective," I still understand it to be a subjective determination by the C&S Bank to the point that the relationship amounted to such a bond that the C&S gave it its designation and called it a correspondent associate.

Mr. Hodgson: I guess, Your Honor, there is no one stand when you get to the correspondent associate. I will make one point, it is a mutually agreed-upon thing; it is not opposed by either party. It is invited by either party, so they jointly agree and decide.

The Court: But it becomes subjective; I think that is the point, when the C&S is willing to entrust its goodwill and logo to the other bank.

Mr. Hodgson: It is obviously agreed it is an evolution that came about through a change in directors as the restrictive banking laws change.

[593] By Mr. Hodgson

Q. Mr. Starks, you heard Mr. Lane testify yesterday, I believe, with respect to Sandy Springs? A. Yes.

Q. In an effort to avoid duplication of the testimony already in the record, I will not ask you to state anything that you know of that he has already testified to. Will you tell the Court, if you don't mind, what your experience actually was with respect to the beginnings of Sandy Springs? A. Well, it was in late '63 or early '64 we were developing a branch supervision in our organization; primarily, at this time we had sufficient banks that warranted branch supervision. Along about that time, as part of my activities, I was given the opportunity to review such audits and credit examinations as were being made of the bank in Sandy Springs. It became apparent that the bank was headed for trouble. I went to Mr. Lane and asked him if I might sit with the board, if I might not put them on the same system we were in the process of developing for the branch so that we might be able to detect these problems and cure them before it became cancerous. It was agreeable, and at first I sat there informally with the board and was later elected to the board and later having to resign [594] because the area was viewed as contiguous to Fulton County.

Q. That is under the Clayton Act? A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Starks, why do you feel it was your responsibility to take charge over the credits and loans of this bank when all you had was a five-percent stock interest? A. Well, there was a C&S man running that bank. It was recognized by a lot, if not most people, that this bank was organized by the C&S Bank, and we certainly had more than even a moral obligation to see that it met the convenience and needs of the Sandy Springs and that it was a valuable and profitable operation.

Q. Would you advise the Court of after this time how you treated the Sandy Springs in relation to how you were beginning to treat all branches in your supervision. A. We asked them to send in the same reports; we gave them the benefit of our sales information. We did this in an attempt to make these banks more effective.

Q. What was the attitude of the board members who were already there to your presence? [595] A. I think the relationship developed here very quickly that was the relationship that existed and has existed all along was one of mutual trust and confidence, one of respect.

Q. Will you tell us about the Chamblee branch, as far as you have recollection of it? A. Well, George McKinnon and Mr. Lane were involved in that organization of the bank. The selection of the organizers, the selection of the directors, and I guess I got into the stream about in '64, somewhere along that line. Again, I was first as an advisor to the board and later as a board member, in more or less the same role I played in Sandy Springs.

[595-A] Q. Tell us something about Mr. McKinnon. A. He was first vice-president. I thing he was cashier at one time and later vice-president and cashier. When we acquired the Bank of Atlanta, he became president of that bank. When that bank merged with C&S National Bank, he was first vice-president and later assistant to the president.

Q. Do you recall the opening, say, at the Chamblee Bank? A. Yes, we had a lot of fun with those.

Q. Will you describe for us some of the things you did? A. Well, at the Chamblee opening, we thought it was important for the people to know we were in the community and we were anxious to serve them, and over and above the usual newspaper announcements, we had a formal opening where we invited the people to come by and look us over. In order to do that, we sent invitations to them telling them to come by. Hopefully, they would do some business. We also decided to take a group, a C&S group of employees, junior officers and so on, to Chamblee and go house-to-house and door-to-door extending invitations to the opening, inviting them to come and bank at the Chamblee National Bank.

Q. How many people do you recall were involved [595-B] in this? A. Maybe as many as forty or fifty.

Q. For how long? A. Two or three days immediately preceding the opening.

Q. Is that what is known as a blitz? A. Yes, that is what we referred to as a blitz. A few got bit by a few dogs, too.

Q. Did you do this consistently with other bank openings also? A. Yes.

Q. Was there a distinction as to whether it was a branch or a five-percenter opening? A. No.

Q. Tell us your recollection of the C&S Park National. A. Park National was started when we recognized really that Executive Park was a developing area. Even though we had an office at Toco Hills, we felt some of the C&S National Bank customers were moving out there and there was growth in that area such that it warranted a banking office in the Executive Park proper, and the only way we could get it there was through a five-percent correspondent associate. So negotiations were begun for a lease.

[595-C] Q. Who negotiated that lease? A. I believe I had a good part of it, along with Bob Hazelrig, who was president of that bank.

Q. Why was Bob Hazelrig selected to be president? A. Well, he had to deal with the corporate accounts division, and when this office opened, it was felt these were business relationships rather than what I would refer to as a bedroom community. This was a business community.

Q. Where did the shareholders come from? A. Well, the shareholders came from the customers of the C&S Bank. People who were corporate customers of the C&S Bank and friends of Mr. Hazelrig's. The directors were primarily people who we did business within that area.

Q. How were the organizers and directors selected? A. If my memory serves me correctly, Bob Hazelrig and I selected them or made up the slates and Mr. Lane referred them.

[596] Q. Tell us your recollection about Citizens & Southern at North Fulton out at North Roswell. A. There was a group in Roswell which felt that they needed additional facilities out there and this was after, I believe Mr. Lane's testimony of yesterday with Mr. Sims Garrett, and I was not involved in that negotiation. I was invited to lunch one day with Dr. Irving in that community, Mr. Harold Benson, I believe, and the bank, it was decided that we would put a bank in Roswell and that Mr. Lane, who had formerly been in Sandy Springs would go out to run it. Lou Fortuna, who was at that time at Sandy Springs, was serving a great number of customers from Roswell. It was very apparent that there was a need, that they had to come by several banks to do business with Citizens & Southern Bank. And so we wanted to go out there. This was the way it was evolved. Lane sold the stock, the friends at Citizens & Southern Bank, officers, employees of the Citizens & Southern Bank bought a little stock in it, too.

Q. How was the Board selected? A. In much the same fashion, Hugh Lane mainly made the nomination, we submitted them and they were approved by Mr. Lane.

Q. Who provided the economics research? A. Our market research department at the Citizens [597] & Southern National Bank in the person of Mr. Ray Herman.

Q. Who provided and warehoused the property for eventual use? A. We bought the property, as I recall, in the Citizens & Southern Holding Comapny. We also bought a building, what was termed then a portable building, temporary quarters which, unfortunately the bank still occupies and leased it to that particular bank. It's now inadequate.

Q. What did you have to do with South DeKalb, Citizens & Southern at South DeKalb? A. Very little, then, other than to anticipate the development in that area and to acquire two pieces of property, even though we couldn't get there at the moment, we anticipated there'd be changes in the branch banking laws. We knew it had to be there ultimately. I merely acquired the property and then Dan Handley subsequently organized the handling of it.

Q. Did you ever have anything to do with the Citizens & Southern Bank at Stone Mountain? A. Yes, I did.

Q. Would you explain to the Court how that came about? A. I'm just trying to remember, refresh my memory on that date. I know the bank was organized in '57. [598] I had nothing to do with that. I know in '59, we acquired a 5% interest in the bank. Mr. Hall went on the Board. It was sometime after that, in the middle of '60, that Joe was, felt that he needed a little help. That two people might be more effective on that Board and the bank, at that time, was having some credit problems and I had had some credit experience. We felt that we were complementing one another. I subsequently went on that Board after some hassel trying to get qualifying shares.

Q. By Joe, you mean Mr. Joe Hall? A. Mr. Joseph A. Hall, III.

Q. Let me ask you this, Mr. Starks, how many of these 5 percenter boards did you sit on, either as a Director or as an advisory Director, or with whom, or with which you met from time to time? A. All of them in the metropolitan area.

Q. All of them? A. All of them.

Q. Including this one at Stone Mountain? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there any difference between the attitude of the Board at Stone Mountain as compared to the others? A. Well, yes, there was a great difference.

Q. Would you describe that difference? A. Well, first of all, Bob Maughon went with that [599] bank when it was organized before it became, before we had any interest in it.

Q. Bob Maughon was whom? A. Bob Maughon, I believe, at that time was Cashier at the bank. He had severed his connection with The Citizens & Southern Bank. I think he felt closer to the Board than he did The Citizens & Southern Bank.

I think the fact that the 40% of the bank was controlled by the McCurdy family, they needed us, but I don't think they really wanted us. They called for help when they had credit problems. I think they wanted to get all the good out of it, but they really didn't want to participate and let us really help them manage the bank so it might be most effective.

I recall in trying to institute operational procedures or trying to suggest that certain action be considered or making recommendations that it was often the habit of the Board to postpone any action until the next meeting. I always had a feeling or I do as I reflect it anyway, that they wanted to meet privately after the meeting and bring it up during the meeting again at the next meeting. This is not a fact, this is the way I felt about it.

Q. Do you have any opinion as to whether or not The Citizens & Southern National Bank and Holding Company, [600] through branch supervision or otherwise, exerted and exerts today any significant influence or control over the management of the five banks that are the subject of this litigation, Citizens & Southern at North Fulton, at Chamblee, Park National and South DeKalb?

Mr. Frisbie: Your Honor, if I might, that's two questions, actually, and both of these are critical to the issues in this case. If we could break that down into two questions.

Mr. Hodgson: I'm perfectly willing to break them down. What are the two parts?

Mr. Frisbie: You said, did they exert any significant influence or control over management. I believe that is the two separate questions.

Q. Let me ask you, did they exert control over these five banks?

Mr. Frisbie: Your Honor, if I may again, could we have Mr. Hodgson, the same as he required of us, to define control that he is speaking of in this instance?

Q. Let me ask you this, Mr. Starks, what was your view of the relationship between The Citizens & Southern National Bank and Holding Company on one hand and each of these five banks, on the other, with respect to management of those banks? [601] A. There's no difference than between our relationship with the branches and the five percenters because what we had to offer was solicited, invited, wanted, received, and our recommendations were readily accepted. I think that even sometimes you have to sell branch managers on a course of action that even makes good sense. But, all of our—we never had any trouble with the exception of Stone Mountain of having the new services that we wanted to offer through the five percenters, as well as the branch accepted, promoted and enthusiastically received, procedures that we wanted to put in, control methods. After all, the guy who ran this bank was a Citizens & Southern man and the Directors respected us and had confidence in us and readily accepted the recommendations that we made.

Q. Had they invited you? A. They invited us, solicited our help and took our advice.

Q. You heard yesterday, I presume, the colloquies between the Court and Mr. Lane and the question was asked somewhat like this, I think. How can you justify serving a five percenter bank correspondent associate bank, with the business of one of the customers of the National Bank when the proprietary interest in that five percenter is just five per cent? Would you respond to that question? A. Well, then this bank, although it may be disbelievable, perhaps, or hard to believe, in some people's minds, has an attitude that the interest of the community comes first and that customers service is our number one business value, and that if we serve the community and do the job for the customer, that ultimately there will be a payoff. And a case for directing customers to a five percenter bank, if it makes sense for them to bank there, if that's where they want to bank, we certainly have no objection. In fact, we would encourage it. After all, we would much rather have that customer go to a Sandy Springs or Chamblee or South DeKalb or Roswell Citizens & Southern Bank and to be served than to see them go to the Trust Company of Georgia or First National Bank. For them, it's a matter of convenience. It would be kind of shortsighted on our part. Frankly, we hope some day to have them all back in the same family.

Mr. Hodgson: May I have just a moment, Your Honor.

The other colloquy of the Court that I want to remind you of, Mr. Starks, was when the Court and Mr. Lane were wrestling with the dilemma of suppose the mergers are denied, what would then happen. I ask you that question and in your opinion? A. Well. Well, the Vice Chairman——

The Court: If you are going to ask that [603] question, I want to repeat, as I did yesterday, I'm not sure that that inquiry is relevant.

Mr. Hodgson: I'm not either.

The Court: What would happen if the merger were denied or this Court ruled adversely, the relevant question is what would happen absent any action, absent approval. In other words, would they stay the same absent any favorable action on an acquisition.

Mr. Hodgson: Absent this application never having been made.

The Court: That's right, what would happen.

Mr. Hodgson: I didn't perceive that distinction. That's always been my view that that's a much different question.

The Court: I think that's the relevant inquiry. I don't think—so far, I don't see the relevance of what would happen if this Court issued an adverse decision. That's the matter at issue.

A. Would you like to restate the Judge's question or have him restate it. I know I didn't know the answer to the other question, I don't know if I would know the answer to this one or not.

Q. Mr. Starks, I may be as chicken as you, I may turn you over to Mr. Kinkaid and make up my mind later.

[604] Cross-Examination

By Mr. Frisbie

Q. Mr. Starks, I would like to go back to some of your first testimony for just a second. When you were talking about the definition of a correspondent associate, in your words, you made some replies; as I understood your definition of a correspondent associate from your testimony, it was a bank in which the C&S was holding five percent, and the bank enjoyed the use of the name and the logo of the Citizens & Southern National Bank. You also talked about a few banks that were five percenters but not correspondent associates. What did you mean by that? A. I mean by that banks that we had a five-percent interest but were not correspondent associates.

Q. In your opinion, what relationship, if any, does the Bank of Woodstock have? A. The Bank of Woodstock, I would say, was a correspondent in which we have a five-percent interest. The degree of influence and control, I cannot testify to.

Q. Was the Citizens Bank of Hapeville known as either a correspondent associate or a five percenter? A. I think not.

[605] Q. The C&S Holding Company never, to your knowledge, owned five percent of the stock of that bank? A. They may have had five percent in the bank as a casual investment, I would say.

Q. What about the Bank of Stone Mountain? Would you classify it as a five percenter or a correspondent associate? A.

I would think in 1959, when we took a five-percent interest in the Bank of Stone Mountain, when Joe Hall went on that board, that bank was considered by us to be a correspondent associate. I don't think now that the board out there knew the stockholders of the C&S to be in control in the role of what we term a correspondent associate.

Q. What it boils down to then, actually, if you take a five-percent interest and designate it with the title "correspondent associate"; then it is a correspondent associate; is that correct? A. Not in my mind. As I testified in my testimony earlier, it is a question of mutual trust, mutual confidence and respect and interdependence.

Q. I believe you also testified that wherever the C&S logo would appear, this would mean that C&S services are available there; is that substantially what you testified to? [606] A. Substantially, yes.

Q. When you say C&S services, what services are you talking about? A. I'm talking about all of the C&S services. We have never made a designation between the services that are available in our branches and those that are available through our affiliates and correspondent associates. We do income taxes at both places, for instance, with a back-up central crew where such back-up is necessary. When you initiate new services such as the payment holiday, it is available to the associate correspondents or affiliates.

Q. Trust services are not performed at that particular branch? A. No, but they are available. We would not risk losing your customer to somebody else, let me put it that way.

Q. Then you would consider that if the C&S Bank of Sandy Springs offered one of its customers trust service that the service that bank in Sandy Springs would be offering would actually be the services of the C&S National, would it not? A. They would.

Q. And the same would be true with the tax [607] services you perform at each branch, say Sandy Springs, for instance? A. That service is being performed by Sandy Springs personnel. We trained people.

Q. Is that a Sandy Springs service? A. Well, it's a C&S service being offered by the Bank of Sandy Springs.

Q. Does Sandy Springs have an international department? A. Of course not.

Q. Would you consider services offered by the Sandy Springs bank to be yours in this field? A. I would consider it to be a service available through the Bank of Sandy Springs, by the fact that the president or an officer of the bank might bring the customer to our international banking service. Or, our international banking officer may contact the customer without the manager, but it would be at his suggestion; it would be his referral.

Q. What about checking-account services? Would that be a Sandy Springs service or a service of the C&S? A. It's considered a service of Sandy Springs. The deposit may be taken at the Sandy Springs office, but the computer work is done down on Mitchell Street.

[608] Q. Do you offer demand deposit accounting to your regular correspondents? A. Of course, for those banks, non-correspondent associate banks.

Q. Do you consider when they offer them through their banks that it is a service of the C&S National? A. I think it is merely an economical handling of the check or a handling of the deposits, that it is a service of the C&S, rendered by the C&S people offering that service. We had to be helpful to the customer; we have to compete on the basis of being problem solvers. That is still the C&S philosophy of doing business. It is just not the mechanics of pushing the button and stamping the receipt.

Q. And when income-tax season rolls around, I believe last year you had what you called tax shelters? A. Yes, we called them tax shelters and we had little tents in each office.

Q. Was one of them set up in Sandy Springs? A. Yes.

Q. And the earnings or revenue that come from this tax shelter, to which bank are they attributed? A. The income goes back to the Sandy Springs branch. The services that we perform, we charge the overall cost of the computer runs. We share the [609] expenses and they get the income. The expenses are pro-rated out and the difference is their profit.

Q. Are they staffed by C&S people? A. They are staffed by C&S-trained people.

Q. If a customer came to the international department for service in Sandy Springs, who would the income be attributable to? A. As the situation stands now, I would say it would be attributable to the international department. They did the work solely, so they would get the income.

Q. The same as the trust department? A. Yes. But we are trying to work out a method to compensate for this. Eighty percent of our business is through referral. We haven't done it yet, but we are looking for a way.

Q. How about services and income that originates from checking accounts? To which bank would this be atributed? A. They go to the bank who afforded the service.

Q. Would that be true with savings accounts and interest earned? A. True.

Q. I believe you mentioned that you had to get off of the board of directors of the Sandy Springs bank at one time. [610] A. I had to get off of all of them as an official member of the board. It made no difference in the role I played; I continued on as an advisor to the directors. This is what they called me.

Q. Why were you told to get off the board? A. Well, I am not familiar with all of the laws and regulations. I know originally, when we asked to go on these boards, it was felt there was enough wasteland between Sandy Springs and Atlanta and Chamblee so they would not be contiguous; however, later on it was ruled, I believe, they were contiguous.

Q. That was Section 8 of the Clayton Act? A. Yes, I believe that's what Mr. Hodgson says.

Q. Mr. Starks, you also testified as to what you did on the board of directors out there a little bit, you alluded to your functions out there on the board. To which banks did that refer? A. To any of the correspondent associates.

Q. Maybe my question should be were your functions and duties any different than as a voting director of the correspondent associate banks? Were they any different? A. No.

Q. You did mention you were on the board at Stone Mountain also? [611] A. That would be correct.

Q. And in 1968, did you accompany Mr. Hall and Mr. Lane to a hearing before the Federal Reserve Board in Washington, D.C.? A. I did.

[612] Q. During the Federal hearing, a question was directed to your group concerning the function of the directors on the boards of these banks. I will read to you and offer to you to inspect. Your reply to the question which was generally, "What were your duties there?" says, "after all, in most cases the men who were running these banks, particularly these smaller ones in the greater metropolitan Atlanta area, are representing a lot of talent, a lot of ability, but are of limited years of service in the depth of experience. We feel we give them this depth of experience by sitting on the board." This is on Page 26; I'm sorry.

Do you recall this statement, Mr. Starks? A. It sounds like me.

Q. Do you still believe that that is a true statement? A. Yes.

Q. For that period of time. And you have stated you were on the board at Stone Mountain and that was in 1959. Who was the president at that time? A. I was on the board in 1959.

Q. I beg your pardon. When were you first on [613] the board at Stone Mountain? A. Gosh, I don't know, '60 sometime. It was certainly after '63. I'm going to make a stab at it, maybe '63, '64 or '5.

Q. Can you remember who the president was at that time? A. At what time?

Q. The time you originally got on the board? A. I believe that Walter Gibson was the president at that time and subsequently became sick. We replaced him with Angus Parker.

Q. How many years of banking experience did Mr. Walt Gibson have? A. I guess he had the same experience for twenty years.

Q. Mr. Angus Parker, how much banking experience did he have? A. Angus had several years of experience, primarily, however, only in the installment-loan area or, basically, in the installment loan area. I should say not only——

Q. You were on the board at the Chamblee National Bank also, were you not? A. Yes.

Q. How many years had Mr. Harris been a banker? [614] A. Mr. Harris had been a banker a long, long time. However, there were areas where Mr. Hall or myself were still in the position to be helpful to him in areas for which he had not had direct experience.

Q. Now you also are on the board at Sandy Springs, at the C&S National Bank of Sandy Springs? A. Yes.

Q. How many years' experience has Tom Cook had at C&S? A. He had about twelve, if I recall correctly. Tom, however, as Mr. Lane I believe testified yesterday, was a liberal lender and needed help. He was also a little independent and hard-headed and perhaps over-evaluated his capacities, and we found it necessary to try and encourage him not to make loans on dump trucks or against contractor retainage. Things you just don't do and not get in trouble.

Q. Mr. Starks, have you ever bought any stock in any of these five-percent banks? A. You'd better believe it.

Q. A good deal? A. It's a matter of definition. I have a little piece of every one of them.

Q. Did you borrow any money for these purchases? A. Indeed I did.

[615] Q. Did you borrow at a preferred rate? A. I did.

Q. Do you still have any of this stock? A. I do.

Q. I believe you stated that you went to the branch supervision department about 1963 or—— A. '63, '4, I can't remember exactly. I think about that time, organized it. I mean it didn't exist then.

Q. Oh, this was the original organization? A. That is correct.

Q. Mr. Herb Dickson was in that department also? A. Mr. Herb Dickson. He and I had a drink that night. We decided he would take the retail, I would take the wholesale.

Q. Was Mr. Lou Fortuna ever a member of the branch supervision department? A. I don't believe so.

Q. Mr. Starks, in an attempt to try to refresh your recollection—— A. Please do; it's lousy.

Q. Just a second. In a deposition taken by this Department of Mr. Louis J. Fortuna on August 7th of this year, on Page 63, I spoke to Mr. Fortuna and established that he went out to Sandy Springs back in September of [616] 1964. My question was that, "And prior to that, you were in branch supervision?"

This was in response to earlier testimony. Mr. Fortuna's answer is, "That is correct."

Question: "What was your position in branch supervision at that time?"

Answer by Mr. Fortuna: "Let's go back two years prior to that, when the National Bank was expanding branch operations in Atlanta, set up under a fellow named Herb Dickson, who was executive vice-president of coordination team. I, having been trained possibly in retail banking as such, was coordinator of retail banking in the Atlanta area, metropolitan area. This, then, particular division then came under Howard Starks. When he took over branch supervision, my function was working with Howard Starks in retail banking under branch supervision."

Does this refresh your memory at all? A. Yes, it's hazy, and, yes, I do remember there was an interim period in there when Bob Adamson left, and I believe this was it, that Lou did work with Herb on, particularly, some branch credits. I think that's right.

My mind is hazy on it; I really don't remember. [617] Branch supervision, basically, in those days consisted of me and Connie Nesbitt in the early days.

Q. Can you identify Connie Nesbitt? A. She was my secretary.

Q. That was my next question. How many people were in branch supervision at the time it started? A. There were two, and then John McIntyre, who was then vice-president in charge of the Tenth Street office, and Bill Mathis, in charge of the Howell Mill office, came in, and then we eventually supplemented the staff. I think the trouble over Lou Fortuna is a matter of semantics and definition. I don't think it's significant.

Q. I don't want to belabor a point unnecessarily; I do need to establish one thing. We established, or the deposition establishes, that Mr. Fortuna went to Sandy Springs back in '64? A. On my recommendation.

Q. Two years prior to that time is when the branch supervision department was started. Now that would place it about '62 or early, possibly, '63. A. This is a matter again of definition, what was branch supervision.

Q. Which banks came under the supervision of the branch supervision department? Not by name, by classification. [618] A. All of those in metropolitan Atlanta.

Q. All branches? A. Yes, and all affiliates and five percenters.

Q. Any regular correspondents? A. No.

Q. And at that time, in 1963 or '64, can we establish that there were only three correspondent associates banks in existence at that time?

Mr. Hodgson: Excuse me. Is counsel referring to the whole state or just metropolitan Atlanta?

Mr. Frisbie: I'm sorry. In the metro area.

The Court: Why don't you name them and let him see.

Mr. Frisbee: Sandy Springs, Chamblee, Stone Mountain.

The Court: Do you recall any more?

A. Well, there were—no, five percenters. Could I refresh my memory on some dates here? We are talking about the period what?

Q. 1963 or '64. A. Sandy Springs, Chamblee and Stone Mountain; of a variety, yes, I believe that's correct.

[619] Q. I don't believe you ever stated what the original function of that department was. A. It was responsible to the needs of the branch initially; then it was felt they would like a staff office in the bank where they would like to have one guy to whom they might have access for help and guidance in all matters, so that they wouldn't have to run all over. Essentially, they needed to have one guy to talk to, whether it was a credit or an operations problem.

Q. In 1963 and '64, we have established that you were the supervisor over that department. Would you have been the person that these branches and correspondent associates would likely come to? A. Mostly. We are a very loosely-knit organization. If somebody wanted to talk to Joe Hall or Dan Hodgson, they had a perfect right to.

Q. Did you ever go out and visit any of the five-percent banks? A. You better believe I did.

Q. How often did you do that? A. Certainly, with few exceptions, not less than once a month, and even more frequently whenever possible.

Q. Did you supply the Sandy Springs Bank with [620] a copy of the general operating guide? A. It was furnished; whether it came through my office or not, I couldn't say.

Q. Were they furnished at that time, in '63 or '64? A. I can't remember whether they were given to them. I'm sure people took them with them when they went.

Q. Were the correspondent associate banks, were they on the regular correspondence list in the same manner as the branch affiliates at that time? A. Yes.

Q. In looking through the general operations guide that has been furnished by the plaintiff in this case, the addressee portion is to the president of the bank or the manager of the branch or the president of the affiliate banks, but there is no mention in those years of any correspondence going to any of the correspondent associates. A. In what years?

Q. '62, '63 and '64. A. I can't testify to that for sure. I think most of the information that we furnished to the banks, to the best of my knowledge, was information to all correspondent associates.

Q. Well, my investigative manual is very large [621] and I may have overlooked one. A. I think the proof of the pudding would be whether they're in the files of those banks. I don't know.

Q. You stated in your direct testimony that these banks were recognized as being part of C&S. What do you mean by that? A. Referring to Sandy Springs and Chamblee, they were recognized by a lot of people as being organized by C&S.

Q. Did any of these, either the Chamblee or Sandy Springs, have a sign or put anything on their stationery to designate to the public that they were correspondent associates of the C&S National? A. Some of them did; some of them did not. I think, however, it was generally understood by the people that it was the C&S National Bank who took part in the opening. It was common knowledge that we had something to do with it.

Q. Are you referring to the people who took part in the blitzes? A. Yes.

Q. And those persons who did the blitzes, did they identify themselves as being C&S National employees on all occasions? [622] A. I couldn't say on all occasions.

Q. On some occasions? A. I know I had a badge on at the Chamblee opening identifying myself.

Q. How many people attended those openings? A. We had a system; we had two or three bank officers on the scene at all times during the openings.

Q. You said something about some of the banks having some manner of identifying themselves as correspondent associates. Can you give us any detail on that? A. No, I can't. I remember a sign, I believe, which designated one as an associate correspondent.

Q. Which bank was it? A. I don't remember.

Q. None of these banks bore the Citizens & Southern's name at that time, is that correct? A. That is correct.

Q. And the logo had not come into existence until what year? A. '68—'69, I believe.

Q. Are you aware that what is known as the bank of Stone Mountain had at least two signs that were placed at the city limits of Stone Mountain designating themselves as correspondent associates of the C&S [623] National Bank? A. At what time?

Q. In 1963 or '64. A. Those might be the signs I just recalled.

Q. You don't recall any other banks? A. I just recall seeing the sign. I don't know.

Q. When was the first credit audit by C&S National done at Sandy Springs? A. I can't testify to that.

Q. Does the bank supervisor take care of the credit audits for the correspondent associate banks? A. Yes.

Q. You stated earlier in testifying that in reviewing the audits—— A. I want to distinguish that credit examinations were functions of the branch supervisor, but operational audits were done by our auditing department.

Q. Those are coordinated? A. Those are not coordinated. They are just as big a surprise to me as the guy who is running the branch.

Q. Can you tell me when the first operating audit was? Do you know? A. No.

Q. Can you tell me if there was one prior to [624] '64? A. I would think so.

Q. Is it true that the problem at the Sandy Springs came to your attention only after an audit by the federal agency? A. I think that was part of it. I have the impression that we also picked up some problems of our own, maybe from the supervisor's audit. I am not positive.

Q. This problem at Sandy Springs was considered serious by you and by the Sandy Springs Bank at that time? A. Yes, when it was discovered.

Q. And it was considered serious by the regulatory authorities? A. Later, yes.

Q. And serious enough that you had a special meeting called of the directors to raise more capital? A. Yes.

Q. How was that capital raised? A. By a capital note.

Q. It was purchased by whom? A. C&S National Bank.

Q. How did this credit problem develop out at that bank? Was there a bank supervisor supervising [625] the bank? A. You will note in '63 or '4 that the branch supervision that included the correspondent associates was being developed, and it was at my suggestion that we then put it in control, and so forth, the same as we had for the branches and the five percenters, because we uncovered these things.

Q. Prior to the creation of the supervisory department, there was no one looking after the correspondent associates? A. I think we looked to various people in the bank to look after that. That was one of the reasons we formed the department, because it was not being adequately done in our judgment.

Q. If you had been supervising and reviewing the credit at Sandy Springs then as closely as you do now, wouldn't you have discovered the problem at that time? A. I believe so.

Q. Then, it is fair to say that your degree of supervision over that bank is greater than it has been at any time before? A. We are getting better every year.

Q. Mr. Starks, when application for merger with Emory and East Point was filed after that time—— [626] A. I beg your pardon; I am not with you.

Q. After the period of time where an application was filed for permission to acquire the assets and assume the liabilities of each of the correspondent associates, East Point and Emory—— A. Okay, I am with you.

Q. After that period of time, there was a document called a supplement to the application that was filed, containing additional information about the bank. You may or may not be familiar with that document, but it purports to show how the Stone Mountain Bank was different from the others—— A. In the middle of '59, some of the original Stone Mountain people came to the C&S National and asked for help. They had credit problems, and they felt they needed someone who was more familiar with the day-to-day operations than they were.

Q. At this point was C&S guidance given to them in this first year of existence? A. No C&S guidance was given to them during the first few years of their existence.

[627] Q. Were you sitting in the courtroom yesterday, Mr. Starks? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear Mr. Hodgson state in his opening remarks there that the plaintiff has ignored the defendants' assertion that these five small banks, in name and in fact, are C&S Banks? They have been from the time they were organized in the eyes of their shareholders, the public, the regulators, their competitors, and their own officers and directors of Citizens & Southern Bank. This is what they are referring to, in name, and in fact, they are Citizens & Southern Banks and have been from the time they were organized. Isn't it a fair statement, based on your previous testimony you have just given, that for several years after the Sandy Springs and Chamblee were formed, after they were organized, they were not C&S Banks in the eyes of the public? A. No, I do not think that is a fair statement. I think they were Citizens & Southern Banks in the eyes of the public.

Q. Do you think it's a fair statement to say for several years after Chamblee and Sandy Springs were organized, they were not Citizens & Southern Banks in the eyes of their competitors? A. I think they were Citizens & Southern Banks [628] in the eyes of their competitors.

Mr. Frisbie: Your Honor, could we have a ten-minute recess?

The Court: All right, we will take a ten-minute recess.

Q. Mr. Starks, you stated in your earlier testimony that one of the differences between a correspondent associate and regular correspondent was that a correspondent associate enjoyed the mutual trust, confidence, freely asked for and gave advice, respect, and inter-dependence, one dependent on the other; is that substantially what you said? A. That's right.

Q. If you take a regular correspondent bank you don't own any five per cent in, do you feel that you have mutual trust between those two banks, Citizens & Southern National and that bank? A. Yes.

Q. Do you feel the two banks have confidence in each other in their dealings normally? A. Yes.

Q. Do regular correspondent banks ever ask Citizens & Southern National for advice? A. Yes.

Q. Do you believe the banks respect each other? [629] A. Yes.

Q. Do you believe that there is an interdependence on the banks? A. To a degree, the correspondent associates, we are partners; we are married.

Q. But there is some interdependence among the banks in that one gets correspondent services and the other pays for it? A. To a degree, it's semantics.

Q. You also stated in your direct testimony, I believe your words were "later on"; I think you just referred to the time the branch supervision department started. You said later on, you started treating them the same as the branches, no different.

When did this start, when you started treating them no different than branches? A. Immediately after Sandy Springs; I would say after we discovered the problem at Sandy Springs. That's a fair statement.

Q. You also mentioned the wording "management control" as being one of the essential elements when we were talking about the differences between a correspondent associate and five percenters or regular? A. Right.

Q. Could you briefly define what you mean by [630] management control, in your own words? A. Management control result because we have a C&S-raised, C&S-trained, C&S disciple running these banks. It results because the board of directors has the confidence, the respect, the other things that I previously referred to, of the Citizens & Southern National Bank and we, in turn, in them, and there is a great deal of interdependence to a great degree not present in a correspondent bank.

Q. So then the management control you are speaking of, the management you are referring to is the management of the correspondent associate bank? A. No, no. Certainly that is part of it. What I am saying is that they readily accept the new services that we develop; they readily accept our suggestions and recommendations. They want and find useful the credit examinations and the audits that we do, the reporting that we have put in. It's the working-together business relationship. We, the Citizens & Southern National Bank control the role that this bank plays in the economy, the role that, the effectiveness that—we increase the effectiveness of this bank much beyond the point that they could possibly do for themselves alone.

Q. Is this management control the same [631] management control you had over a branch? A. Other than legal, yes.

Q. Can you fire a branch manager? A. Can I fire a branch manager today or when I was in branch supervision?

Q. Can Citizens & Southern National fire a branch manager? A. Yes.

Q. Can Citizens & Southern fire the president of the Bank of Sandy Springs? A. I think it's done in a different way. The end result is the same. You go to the board; you say, "Hey, we have got a real problem here, and a divorce has to be", and they have the trust and the other things that I have been talking to you about. I have never had any problems accomplishing this if it were necessary. It's pretty damn drastic.

Q. How long did it take you to get Mr. Cook out of Sandy Springs? A. I would say there was probably a period of maybe three weeks, thereabouts. I talked to each board member individually.

Q. In the same Federal Reserve hearing we were talking about earlier, on Page 27, Mr. Lane testified:

Let's take Sandy Springs again. We had a [632] Citizens & Southern man out there as president. He got in trouble. We went to that bank board and said, 'This buy (I'm sure it means boy) can't cut the mustard.' They wouldn't replace him.

We went back six months later to the board and said, 'This guy can't do it.' They said, 'No, he is a nice young guy. We aren't going to get rid of him.'

Mr. O'Connell stated: "Was this nice young guy your man?"

Mr. Lane: "Yes."

Mr. O'Connell: "You had him put in there?"

Mr. Lane: "Yes, sir, it was a year later that the board that had its own chairman, I guess the largest stockholder in the bank, he finally said, 'You all were right. Give us somebody else. We have got to get rid of Taylor Cook.' "

A. My recollection of the time span and Mr. Lane's at that time are obviously different. I don't recall it being that long.

Q. You also stated earlier you were expecting about this referral of customers back and forth from Citizens & Southern National Bank to the correspondent associates? [633] A. Yes, sir.

Q. I believe you stated something to the effect that you encouraged them to use the five-percent banks because you would rather see them go there than to Trust Company or First National? A. Certainly, if a matter of convenience, particularly.

Q. Well, isn't it a fair statement to say that this occurs because you would rather have five percent of something in form of stock and the correspondent business rather than ninety-five percent of nothing? A. I wouldn't put it that way. I think that what we were really looking at here is the ultimate merger of these two banks that were all one in the same family and we eventually would recapture that customer. It was a short-term, unselfish thing that would ultimately bring us return.

Q. Isn't it also true in your own mind that, as Mr. Lane testified yesterday, an important part of the correspondent associate relationship is the fact of expectation of merger? A. I would say yes.

Mr. Frisbie: No further questions.

Redirect Examination

By Mr. Hodgson

[634] Q. Mr. Starks, Mr. Frisbie was reading you out of the Federal Reserve transcript of April, 1968 and called your attention to some of your testimony to the effect that you were representing a lot of talent and a lot of ability, the presidents, but are of limited years of service. We feel we give them this depth of service sitting on the board. Then he talked, I believe, about Mr. Parker and Mr. Harris and some others. Do you recall this question by Mr. O'Connell? Indeed, he included Mr. Fortuna in the illustration, I believe, and the answer by Mr. Fortuna to this end.

Mr. O'Connell: For instance, in your bank then, we are speaking of the Sandy Springs Bank, if at a point in time an analysis of the loan portfolio of that bank indicated that you are very heavy in a particular long-term type of loan, and, in the judgment of C and S, that that portfolio should have a major adjustment to short term loans, to more local type loans, to meet the local business needs, and that suggestion is made, Mr. Fortuna, could you say, no, I won't change, and feel free that that decision would stick?

Mr. Fortuna: I think the approach is having had the experience of twenty years, [635] seventeen years with the Citizens and Southern, and realizing that their experience is greater than mine. I would certainly listen to counsel and we would make the change because we would all benefit thereby, because Citizens & Southern has given me a long-range point of view. I'm going to go the long-range way.

Do you recall that testimony? A. Yes, sir, I believe I do.

Q. Mr. Starks, have the five-percenter banks in the Atlanta metropolitan area ever been under any other organization in the National Bank than branch supervision? Any other organization? A. No.

Q. Mr. Frisbie was asking you some questions about the distinction between these correspondent associates here and an ordinary correspondent relationship there. I would like for you to distinguish for the Court this relationship to the extent you see it in two particulars, first with respect to the degree of reliance that the management of an ordinary correspondent places upon you and the degree of reliance that a correspondent associate places upon you with respect to management. A. Well, I can't think of an instance unless [636] we were called upon to give up a man for, in an emergency period, where a correspondent would rely on us for management, other than to assist him with investments and that sort of thing.

Q. I ask you the question in reverse style and ask you with respect to responsibility for furnishing management from the point of view of yourself to compare that responsibility or sense of responsibility, to compare an ordinary corerspondent to a correspondent associate. A. From a branch supervision standpoint?

Q. Yes. A. None.

Q. You find no distinction between—— A. No, I misunderstood your question then.

Q. What distinction do you find with respect to responsibility to furnish management on to a correspondent, on the one hand, and to a correspondent associate on the other? A. Well, one, if we are asked to try to find somebody to help run a bank, if this is the point you are trying to make, and part of the correspondent, this is one thing. We have an obligation more than moral to furnish management for a five percenter or correspondent associate.

[637] Mr. Hodgson: No further questions.

Mr. Frisbie: We have no further questions, Your Honor.

Mr. Hodgson: We call Mr. Joe Hall.

Whereupon,

JOSEPH HALL

was called as a witness by and on behalf of the defendants and, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination

By Mr. Hodgson

Q. State your full name for the reporter, please, sir. A. Joseph Albert Hall, III.

Q. What is your position with the Citizens & Southern, Mr. Hall? A. First vice-president of the bank and president of C&S Holding Company.

Q. When did you become president of Citizens & Southern Holding Company? A. About two and a half years ago.

Q. Before that, what was your position with the Holding Company? A. Well, last twenty, thirty years, I guess I had been—started out as assistant secretary-treasurer of [638] the Holding Company, and then secretary and treasurer, and vice-president, executive vice-president and president connected with the Holding Company, with the Holding Company as well as the comptroller operations in the bank.

Q. Have you been entirely in those two offices throughout your entire banking? A. Just about.

Q. And you have been there at least since before 1959; is that right, Mr. Hall? A. 1935.

Q. Let's start, Mr. Hall, with respect to some of these banks and the beginnings of their relationships with Citizens & Southern National and the Holding Company and ask you to add whatever you think you can to the development of these relationships as to what they were; and let's start with the bank out at Stone Mountain first.

Tell the Court what you know of it. A. Well, where I got in on it was with a group from Stone Mountain came to us and said that they were in trouble. This was in 1959. This was a bank that had been formed about two years previously. I didn't really have any direct knowledge of the formation of the bank beyond the fact that they asked us in the [639] comptroller's department to see if they could find them a vault door, I believe it was. [640] But in '59 they came to us and said they were in trouble. The bank was making money but losing some credit, so Mr. Lane suggested to them that the C&S Holding Company take a five-percent interest in it and suggested I go to the board and try to get somebody out there to take over the branch, since the main problem at that time was credit losses. Since this was a consumer-oriented area, we picked the man most experienced in our bank in that area of consumer loans, and we asked him if he would go there. After we solved the credit problem, the bank turned around. It was simply a thing of stop losing money from credit losses.

Q. Who was the officer who went out there at that time? A. Walter Gibson.

Q. What did you do next with that bank? A. Well, I worked with the directors from time to time.

Q. Did you go on the board in '69? A. I went on the board in '59. I tried to sell them on the things that I thought were right for the bank. It got to the point where I felt it would be better if we had two C&S voices on the board instead of just one. I asked Howard if he would join me, and [641] I asked if they would accept both of us, and we both continued to serve as directors and did so until—I forget which one of the regulatory agencies raised the question about a regulation, whether or not we were in violation of that regulation what had to do with not being officers or directors or employees of a member bank if the two are in a contiguous area. I believe the Feds here in Atlanta interpreted that we were now related, and we simply resigned. I believe that was in connection with the hearing we had in '68. When that took place, it was sort of a by-product of the hearing.

Q. Mr. Hall, what was your and Mr. Stark's relationship with these board members at Stone Mountain, how did you get along? A. Well, I thought we got along with them pretty well. Apparently we didn't, apparently we didn't do the job we should have done because when we talked about whether they wanted to join us permanently, they turned us down. Apparently they had found somebody else, and we just parted company.

Q. Let me ask you this: do you sit on the board as a director or as an advsor to the directors through the Atlanta area on the five-percent banks? A. Yes, the Fayetteville, Tucker, I don't know, [642] several others, and some throughout the state, as I recall.

Q. How would you compare the relationship that exists between yourself and those boards and those various banks and Tucker? A. Well, in Stone Mountain the directors were not picked by us. In Tucker, for example, as were most of the directors in the other banks, they were C&S-oriented directors. At Stone Mountain they were C&S-oriented. They were more —I think most of them had connections with other banks that were closer than any connections they had with us. The only reason I think they came to us was because of Mr. Lane. My recollection is most of them dealt with the Fulton Bank out in Decatur because we did not have any. We did not have any in Fulton out there when they probably started in the banking business. I think probably at the beginning of their business, Fulton was the closest bank.

Q. How did the stock ownership at the Stone Mountain Bank compare in stock ownership in the other five-percent banks in the Atlanta area? A. Well, in the Stone Mountain Bank it seemed to me the profit-sharing owned five percent, and the Holding Company owned five percent. It seemed the [643] shares of stock were bought from Sonny Kellogg. I know when I went on the board I got one hundred shares from Mr. Horne. He was an Atlanta man, not from Stone Mountain. All throughout the period we were involved with them, we had trouble getting stock whenever anybody came in. When Howard or Walter Gibson came, it was a fight to get stock because nobody wanted to give it to us.

Q. How does this compare with the stock ownership in the other five percenters? A. We never had that problem. Probably in most other instances we were able to allocate the stock out and it went to enough C&S people so there was no problem of a new man coming in and getting stock for him. Maybe somebody was leaving or was in some way connected with the C&S in some way.

Q. Mr. Hall, I hand you some sheets which are sheets that have been marked in this case and identified as Defendant's Exhibit 269, with the exception of one sheet which I will hand to the clerk for inclusion, and I believe that's been identified as 334. Mr. Hall, these purport to be sheets analyzing stock ownership in these various five-percent banks, and I am going to ask you to look at the last column there and identify the percentage of the stock owned by the various categories. [644] And let's just start with the Park National Bank and ask you the percentage owned by the officers, directors and employees of the National Bank and affiliates. A. 18.31%. And the officers, directors and employees of the C&S Park National, 31.34.

Q. And the total of those two is approximately how much? A. 49%.

Q. And the customers of the National affiliates? A. 38.71.

Q. And the customers of Park National and the other five percenters? A. 10.7.

Q. Do you have knowledge of whether or not a significant number of these customer stockholders were stockholders who were solicited by Hazelrig? A. I believe so. My recollection is that we made a survey of all of the stockholders and asked how many of them expected to merge when they bought the stock, and I believe we got back, as I recall, something like a 98% reply. So these were people who were solicited by Bob Hazelrig and his group, and that is how the stock was sold.

Q. Turning then to Chamblee, looking at the second page, the last column, I will ask you the same [645] question as to the officers, directors and employees of the National Bank and affiliates. A. 12.56.

Q. And then officers, directors and employees of C&S Chamblee and other banks? A. 16.64.

Q. And the rough total of those two? A. 29%.

Q. Would you say of the C&S affiliates, 29.4, and the customers of Chamblee and the other five percenters? A. 41.40.

Q. We referred a moment ago to a survey that was taken with the shareholders with respect to obtaining a consent or a desire to merge. What is your recollection of the results of it there at Chamblee? A. My recollection is that in all but five or six instances, they were in favor; this was something in excess of 95% of the people said that was the original intention, that it would ultimately be merged. When they voted on the merger, I don't think there were more than one or two individuals who didn't vote in favor of it.

[646] Q. These figures were exhibits which were submitted to the application to merge; is that right? A. Right.

Q. Turning then to Tucker, Mr. Hall, I ask you to look at the last column, which is December 31 of 1970, officers, directors, employees of the National Bank and affiliates. A. 41.48.

Q. Former officers, directors and employees of the National Bank and affiliates. A. 6.51.

Q. Officers, directors, employees of the Citizens & Southern of Tucker and other five-percent banks. A. 9.97.

Q. What is the rough total of those three? I wouldn't ask you if you had not been a comptroller. A. About 58%.

Q. Customers of National Bank and affiliates. A. 4.72.

Q. Customers of Tucker and others, five-percent banks. A. 37.32.

Q. Who was instrumental in placing these shares of stock, Mr. Hall? A. Bennett Brown, Mills Lane, Joe Hall.

[647] Q. Turn now to North Fulton Bank, Citizens & Southern North Fulton Bank at Roswell, and I ask you in the last column, which is the second page, June 30th of 1970, Category A, officers, directors and employees of the National Bank and affiliates. A. 17.82.

Q. Former officers, directors and employees of National and affiliates. A. 2.63.

Q. Officers, directors and employees of North Fulton and other five percenters. A. 25.36.

Q. What is the rough total of those three? A. 45.

Q. Customers of Citizens & Southern National and affiliates. A. 49.48.

Q. And customers of North Fulton and other five percenters. A. 4.73.

Q. Look at Sandy Springs next, which is much longer. I believe you have to go to the second page, officers, directors and employees of National and affiliates. A. 1971?

[648] Q. Yes, sir. A. Well, 10.7.

Q. Former officers, directors and employees. A. 13.1.

Q. Officers, directors and employees of Sandy Springs and other five-percent banks. A. 28.1.

Q. What is the rough total? A. 51.52%

Q. Then customers of National and affiliates? A. 24.3.

Q. And customers of Sandy Springs and other five percenters? A. 23.7.

Q. And then our most recent baby, South DeKalb, officers, directors and employees of National and affiliates. A. 46%.

Q. Former officers, directors and employees of National and affiliates. A. 2%.

Q. Officers, directors and employees of South DeKalb and other banks, five percent. A. 18%

Q. Rough total of those? [649] A. 66%.

Q. Customers of C&S National and affiliates. A. 14%.

Q. And at South DeKalb and other five percent? A. 40%.

Q. Mr. Clerk, would it be easier if these stayed all together or just the one sheet?

The Clerk: The one sheet, please.

Q. And I believe that was Fulton—National. We have talked then about Stone Mountain and its share ownership. Let's turn to the next one in chronology, Mr. Hall, Sandy Springs.

What was your direct part in the organization and operation of that bank? A. Well, working in the comptroller's department, we were responsible for the physical location, insurance, those kind—audit control, those kinds of things, and so I worked, or some of my people worked with Tommy Cook in locating the branch, remodeling the store that we decided on renting. We worked with getting insurance for them. We did about the same things we had done several years previously when the Citizens & Southern Holding Company had organized a bank over in Augusta. We did basically the same things with them we had done there.

[650] Q. Incidentally, talking about the bank over in Augusta, whatever happened to it? A. I'm talking about the Augusta National Bank, which was ultimately merged into C&S National Bank.

Q. When was that? A. Oh, I can't remember, really. It's been——

Q. Been within the last fifteen years? A. I believe so.

Q. How were the shareholders and directors at Sandy Springs determined? A. Mainly the impression I got was that they were picked by Mr. Lane. I can tell from the list of them that they were his business associates or personal friends.

Q. Have you anything that you could offer with respect or additionally to what Mr. Lane and Mr. Starks have testified about the severe credit loss that occurred out there and resulting possible capital impairment? A. No, it's rather vague in my mind. The only thing that I think I could add is the fact that there was some question about why there wasn't a credit examination out there. I'm not sure it wasn't or not, but I do know this, that there is a requirement under law that the directors have to conduct what is called a directors' examination. This consists of a [651] verification of the assets and liabilities of the bank. It has nothing to do with an appraisal of the assets. Credit review is an appraisal, and while we now make credit reviews, we didn't at that time, and one of the main reasons was because we were not—it was not a requirement, as far as directors of Sandy Springs were concerned.

We were giving them the things that we thought they should have, plus the things they were required to have, and we subsequently found out that we needed to give them all credit reviews, and we do that now.

Q. This was not the time of change of relationship of any kind? A. No.

Q. The relationship had been the same from the beginning as it is today? A. Except that we give them more services now because as we find that they have needs, we try to fill the needs and the same thing would go with our own branches. But we find that we need the credit reviews, and we put them in our own branches. As experience of the people changes, why we have to put more or less control on them.

Q. What was your direct experience and what is your present recollection of the beginning of Chamblee? [652] A. Well, there was a gentleman by the name of Les Bailey who was chief national bank examiner here in Atlanta, which is the same thing that's now called Regional Administrator of National Banks. He had come from California. He was a branch-banking man. He was a very outspoken person. He would always chide us about why we didn't do something about the branch-banking laws, why we didn't do something about fulfilling the needs of the people in the area outside of Atlanta, and he is the guy who told us he thought that maybe a branch or bank in Chamblee would be a good idea. And also he mentioned the Belvedere area. In fact, at Chamblee, he said that he thought that would be a good place for the C&S to go. The only way we could go was with a five-percent interest.

We took his advice; we went along with his advice, and we got together with this group at Chamblee. We got together also in a group at Belvedere. Unfortunately, the gentleman passed away before he could approve the application, so that when the applications were submitted to the Comptroller of the Currency, they turned down the branch.

Q. Of Chamblee? A. Of Chamblee; turned down completely the one at Belvedere. But we did get the bank at Chamblee and [653] about—I don't know, two years, year or two years later, we got permission from the Comptroller of the Currency to open a branch of the Chamblee Bank on Buford Highway as he, as Les Bailey has originally predicted was the thing to do. The Belvedere location, it was some four or five years afterwards.

[654] Q. I will come to the Belvedere later. I am taking these chronologically and I am trying to keep them in sequence. With respect to Chamblee, Mr. Hall, what recollections do you have on the comptroller's office with respect to buying and warehousing land for a premises there? A. I remember working with Hubert L. Harris. He went out there to pick a temporary location. We rented a storefront, I believe on Peachtree Road. It runs along the side of the railroad tracks. It seems like we got a teller counter from some of our old banks somewhere and fixed this thing up temporarily. I thought we did a pretty good job, and inexpensively. We began to look for a permanent location, and we ultimately decided upon Peachtree Industrial Boulevard.

Hubert came back to us and said we needed a little more space, and we talked to the people who owned the property next to it to see if we could use part of it. We bought it and added it to what the Chamblee branch originally needed and held the rest of it, which was ultimately disposed of with the approval of the Chamblee bank.

The C&S Holding Company bought the original land and held it for the Chamblee bank. They then held onto the unoccupied portion until a purchaser was found who was acceptable to the Chamblee bank, [655] and we sold to that purchaser.

Q. What recollection do you have with respect to underwriting salaries at Chamblee? A. We paid Hubert Harris for six or eight months for two reasons. One to help get the bank on its feet and, secondly, because we had to get the bank's profit-sharing plans formally approved. We didn't want to lose any continuity to the profit-sharing, and it was easier to keep him on the bank payroll.

Q. What is your recollection of how the Tucker relationship came about? A. Well, Tucker was a place that needed a bank. For a long time, Cofer had a bank out there which was being operated really as an adjunct to his lumber supply business. I remember going out to Stone Mountain as a director and would go by Belvedere and my mouth would water. That was going to Stone Mountain. And on the way back, I would go through Tucker and my mouth would water going through Tucker. These were two areas that needed a progressive bank.

Somebody else obviously felt that way, too, because another group got together in Tucker and made an application for a bank charter. Mr. Cofer realized he wasn't going to be able to compete with them; he either had to give up his lumber supply business or [656] give up the banking business or get somebody to run the bank. He decided on the third, and he came to Mr. Lane and asked him if we would be interested in trying to run the bank. He didn't think his company could compete with the new bank.

Of course we accepted, and we bought 80% of the stock and put it in the hands of the C&S officers, directors and employees. We changed the directors, and I think we named three or four new directors to the board. Bennett Brown was with the board as a representative of the C&S Bank, and again, later, when Bennett left to go to Augusta, I went to the board. And it's been a very good relationship. I think it has grown from $3,000,000 to now where it is a $35,000,000 bank.

Q. Did you warehouse any land for this bank? A. Yes, when we were discussing acquisition with the Superintendent of Banks, we talked about the area that looked like to him might be a good place for a branch. I went along with Bennett to look at it with him and I thought after I saw it the first time that he had bought a pig in a poke, because it was the biggest hole I ever saw in my life. We had already bought it, and I think it was about two and one-tenth miles from the main office of Tucker, and the law only [657] allows you to go two miles. But, fortunately, they put the expressway right in there at the two-mile mark, so the Superintendent of Banking allowed us to technically exceed the law by about one or two-tenths of a mile. We bought it and held it in the Holding Company until they were ready to put the branch in.

Q. Did you help Tucker with respect to any of its capital needs? A. It seems we in the comptroller department worked with any of the five-percent banks with respect to capital problems. We would counsel them as to what we thought was the best, a straight note, a convertible or a debenture or straight capital. I believe that we got a debenture out there in Tucker.

Q. Okay, now let's go to Belvedere. What is your recollection of that? A. In about 66, it seems to me, we came back and got a group of people together, men, and made application for a bank there at the corner of Columbia Road and Memorial Drive.

This time we went to the Superintendent of Banks and we got a favorable reaction from him and we were able to open that bank on the corner. My recollection is Celeste Dupree and Bill Jones worked on picking the directors and stockholders. We operated [658] in that location for quite some time, and then after that I believe we moved maybe a block or so away because it really was very congested. It was not the best location. While it was very visible, it was not the best in the world for getting into and out of, and as it got bigger and subsequently merged, I think was sort of really an important point to us. We maybe misread the sign, but this was a bank that asked to be merged, I believe it was in '70 or '69, and we asked that it be allowed to be merged in with the bank.

They asked for an opinion letter from another agency and the Justice Department. The Justice Department, I don't know what the exact words were; it's somewhere in one of these exhibits. The Justice Department felt this was no more than a corporate reorganization; that this had been a branch bank, that there was no difference between this and a branch bank, and therefore there should be no lessening of competition.

We bought this bank and operated it as the rest of the five. We thought what we had done was right and that we would be able to merge. That is why we took an active interest in getting the bank, because we felt the position was that these banks could be merged.

[659 thru 662] Q. You did not make the effort with the other five percent banks in 1969 that you did make in '71? A. We did not merge them at that time. The only reason we could merge Belvedere at that time was because of a change in the definition of a village, as far as the state banking law was concerned. By the change of definition, we were able to bring in the banks in Avondale and the Belvedere bank, which was defined as a village. Therefore one could be the branch of it.

Mr. Hodgson: Judge, I have finished a section of the testimony related to these. There are some general matters I wish to cover with the witness which will take maybe fifteen to twenty minutes, so now might be a good time to break for lunch.

The Court: We will now recess for lunch and resume at 1:45 p.m.

(Whereupon a lunch recess was had.)

[663] Direct Examination (continued)

By Mr. Hodgson

Q. Mr. Hall, will you resume the stand, sir.

Mr. Hall, can you tell the Court what steps were taken, what activities were engaged in to keep the various banking regulators informed of what was going on? A. Most of these banks were, that we were involved with, I guess, right now are state non-member banks and as such, there is a provision in, I believe, in the law or maybe it is one of the Superintendent of Banks' regulations, I believe it's FDIC regulations, that you have to keep them informed of changes in ownership. Of course, on a new bank, they know all about it.

We talk to them quite frequently, the Superintendent of Ba[illegible], the FDIC, Federal Reserve, the Comptroller of the Currency. I think every one of them will tell you that they are thoroughly familiar with the operations of all our five percenters.

Q. You say you keep in touch, tell the Court, if you don't mind, how you keep in touch with the Commissioner of Banking and Finance, who was formerly known as the Superintendent of Banks, State of Georgia. A. Well——

Q. As a routine matter. A. I would guess that we call on them once every [664] couple of weeks, that I remember an instance within the past two years where he asked us if we would not, if we would ask the people in the five per cent banks to stop coming to see him, that he was tired of listening to their stories as to what they wanted to do when he felt that we could tell them things that would be helpful without—that would be questions in his mind without having to send them back. And we told everybody at that time and every one of the associate correspondents that we would appreciate it if they would not contact the Superintendent of Banks any more about any matters without talking with either me or Rountree's Youmans. It was just a matter of him not wanting to repeat something to every one of them on every application. For example, if they wanted to get in a real estate holding company, there were certain things that he knew that had to be done. He told me, he told Rountree he didn't want to have to tell ten others the same thing. He would rather that they would come to us and let us tell them.

[665] Q. Now, when you say "he", to whom are you referring? A. Mr. Jackson at that time.

Q. Mr. W.A.M. Jackson? A. Right.

Q. Then superintendent of banks? A. Right.

Q. You said you would make calls every few weeks; did you ever otherwise contact Mr. Jackson? A. Oh, yeah.

Q. On what, for what sorts of—— A. Well, anytime anything would come up about five-percent banks or our bank or our affiliates that was under his jurisdiction, why, we would call him.

Q. How about the regional administrator for the controller of the currency, formerly the chief bank examiner, the same sort of relationship or not? A. Oh, yes. Of course, there weren't as many in the banks that were National banks. I think the only one that was involved here was Park National. And, of course, anything that was involving it, one of us talked to Joe Ream or John Gwinn or Les Bailey, depending upon the particular time.

Q. How about with the Federal Reserve Bank and Federal Reserve System? A. Of course, we, as you know, had an extensive [666] hearing at the Fed, and that thing went on for a period of about two years. It started in 19—I believe it was at the tail end of 1966, one of the things that we are required by law to do is to make an annual report. Every holding company, every registered bank holding company is required to make an annual report to the Federal Reserve Board, and it was at that—in 1966, in our report, one of the requirements of the report is to list the loans, and there were a number of loans in there listed in various individuals' names as agents. And they asked us what these agents were, and I remember telling them that this is just a separate designation of the individual, separate and apart from himself; that we just did this to facilitate the brokerage of the stock, where we might acquire the stock in a bank and then parcel it out to other people. The sellers usually wanted their money right away, and it sometimes was impossible to get the money from the ultimate buyers immediately. Usually—or not—I don't guess "usually" is the right word either. Frequently we were able to close these things out in a matter of months. There were one or two instances where the stock was held by the holding company in an agent's name for a period in excess of a year. They wanted to know if we felt like that through these agencies we controlled the [667] banks. I told them that is a question that they would have to answer, but in my opinion, good management controls every bank, because management always sends out, in a bank, proxies to their annual meeting, and I believe in most of the cases 95% of the stock is set—is voted on by proxy, and proxy has been—the attorneys have been named by the management, and, as a result, management, in effect, controls that bank. I said I can't tell you whether this is control or not. You will have to decide it. But, as far as I'm concerned, when you go down to the bank in——

Q. Take—— A. Tucker.

Q. Take Tucker. A. That the president will send out to the stockholders proxies, and the stockholders will execute them and send them back. At the time of the annual meeting, he will have proxies for maybe 95 to 98% of the stock, and as a result he, in effect, through this is able to control the election of the board of directors and, through that, to control the bank.

Q. Now, whether or not that is the control that they talk about in the Bank Holding Company Act, I am not qualified to answer, and I don't think—it doesn't seem to me like they have ever answered it either.

[668] Q. Well, proceeding with this hearing you were speaking of, when they found the shareholdings and the names of individuals as agents, what happened as a consequence? A. Well, we finally—they asked us to come to Washington. They asked us to give them a lot of information, which we gave them. We went to Washington and spent a day there with the Federal Reserve Board. Invitations to the hearing were extended to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Controller of the Currency, the Justice Department and, of course, the Fed was there itself. I think everybody had a representative present except the Controller of the Currency. I don't know why he didn't—didn't accept the invitation.

We spent the best part of a day talking with members of the Federal Reserve staff, and went over in detail the relationship of the C&S National Bank and the C&S Holding Company to these banks in which we had a five-percent interest. As a result of the hearings, they concluded that they did not—or we were not in violation of the Bank Holding Company Act. They asked us, in going ahead, that when we acquired—when we had these similar situations to develop, what usually happened was that a bank would get to the [669] position of where their executive officer was maybe sixty-five, seventy, seventy-five years old, and they needed a replacement. One of the hardest things in the world for a small bank to do is keep people, so that when the senior officer leaves they have an adequate replacement. And about the easiest way I can explain it is, in a big organization you will have maybe twenty steps between the salary of, let's say, $10,000 and $40,000. The ten thousand being the lower officer and the forty thousand the top of the—the president of the bank. Whereas, in a small bank, you might not have but five steps, and it is very difficult for the small bank to keep, to get and retain qualified replacements because the guy that is in the No. 2 spot can move somewhere else and get a better paying job, and so he does.

Consequently, many banks, many small banks come up to the situation where they don't have a replacement for their senior officer, and this is the—these are the instances in which the banks throughout Georgia have come to us and asked us if we would supply it. [670] When we did that, we always made an offer to acquire five per cent of a stock and then to place any other stock, any other stockholders that wanted to dispose of, we would, in effect, guarantee that we would place it somewhere.

Q. At as good a price? A. We always offered everybody the same price. This is another one of the things that wherever we did this, we were sure that every stockholder was offered the same per share of sale, that they would place it somewhere. What we had been doing previously, previous to our meeting in Washington was to make a loan in the Holding Company to somebody as agent and then as the stock was sold out, it would be credited on that note. They asked us to stop this. They asked us to go to—in the future, so through some kind of a stock broker if we had to hold the stock more than overnight. They asked us also to report any of these instances as they occurred.

Q. Did you do so? A. We did so, yes. We had, as a result of whenever we did become in one of these situations, we would always notify them just by letter saying that such and such a bank asked us to do such and such. We were going to acquire so much stock and so forth, so on. It was also at this meeting that, well, one of the results of this is, I always felt and actually, the counsel, Federal Reserve [671] expressed to me, he felt like we had control. Of course, control is—I use that word very hesitatingly because it means so many different things. He had expressed the opinion that we probably controlled these banks although we were probably not in violation of the Federal Bank Holding Company laws dealing with control. As a result, he asked Congress to include in the Bank Holding Company Act a provision where a situation like this, that the bank would be deemed to be controlled by the holding company, and this is the way I look at our associate correspondents now.

Q. How do you look at them as being controlled or not controlled? A. As being controlled within the definition of the Bank Holding Company Act. We do not control the stock or voting of the stock, but as I see it, one of the provisions—one of the provisions about it is that if a holding company exercises substantial influence over the management of the bank, it, I think it says, it's deemed to be under the control of the bank and should be classified as a subsidiary. This is one of the things that I say is one of the distinguishing characteristics of an associate correspondent. It's one of the banks that would be classified as a subsidiary under the Bank Holding Company Act.

Q. Mr. Hall, going back to your keeping the [672] regulators informed, you got into at this Federal Reserve hearing. What was the final result of that hearing? A. Well, as I say, they said everything we were doing was all right as far as the Bank Holding Company Act was concerned. There were no violations. They asked us, though, going ahead, to do certain things to handle any future acquisitions through a broker. Two, there was a few stocks they asked us to dispose of which really had nothing to do with the hearing. It was just a by-product.

Q. Do you recall whether or not at the outset when Mr. O'Connell, who was, I guess, he was then Deputy General Counsel with the Federal—— A. Right.

Q. ——before Mr. Heckstall left, do you recall his mentioning anything about the commercial and savings merger in connection with the hearing? A. I think that there were a number, probably a number of reasons why they called—had the hearing. One was the question that came up as a result of our listing the loans in the annual report. The other is that commercial and savings bank merger in Augusta, as I recall, one of the parties, maybe it was the Justice Department, had cited the Federal Reserve on whether or not they had enforced the Bank Holding Company Act. Maybe we were in violation of the Bank Holding Company Act, when we originally [673] acquired the interest in Commercial Savings Bank in Augusta.

Q. Was that bank eventually merged? A. It did merge, yes, we merged it with Citizens & Southern National Bank in, I believe it was 1968. I believe that's right.

Q. Without any problems? A. No, no problems. No.

Q. Mr. Hall, in addition to routine calls and keeping in touch, you might say, with the various regulators, I presume you also kept counsel advised of what was going on, general counsel? A. Oh, yes.

Q. Legal counsel. A. Yes.

Q. Let me ask you some opinioned questions, Mr. Hall. From your experience in this position, how would you compare a definition in the Citizens & Southern Bank and system, the relation between that bank and an ordinary correspondent in relationship with one of these banks you call a correspondent or associate correspondent? A. Well, I say that there are three classifications. The easiest, simplest way for me to say it is that there are three different groups of banks. There is a correspondent bank, there is a super-correspondent bank and there is an [674] associate correspondent. Now the correspondent is a regular bank, just a regular correspondent, just like everybody else everywhere has. The ones I call super-correspondents are ones that get these extra services that we offer them, but which we do not feel will, which have not committed themselves to being interested in merging with us at some later date. And the correspondent, associate correspondents are the ones that receive all the services and we have also got some kind of understanding with them that if the law ever allows it, they will merge into the Citizens & Southern group, if possible. So, it's really fairly simple in my mind because that puts in the classification of super-correspondent banks like Woodstock and Cartersville and Fayetteville and Seynoia, some of the places where there is a single large block of stockholders and who have not expressed a wish to become a part of the C&S Bank at some point in the future.

Q. Now you have mentioned two elements then. One is mutual intention, if possible, to merge? A. Yes.

Q. Another related to another block of stock? A. Yes, as far as correspondent associates are concerned, I believe there are four elements that seem to me to be present. Number one, there has to be a small, no large block of stock that's held by any one individual [675] or group of individuals. The large stock has to be owned by the Citizens & Southern Holding Company, which is 5%.

Then there has to be an understanding that if and when it is, becomes possible, that this bank will merge into the Citizens & Southern family bank, then there has to be a determination, there has to be—there has to be a bank which would qualify as a subsidiary under the Bank Holding Company Act. Let's see, there's one other, I can't think of it right now.

Those are, it's got to be classified as a subsidiary. It's got to be a bank that will merge with us. It's also got to be a bank which understands that we are responsible for its management, subject to the veto of the Board of Directors. I think those are the four things.

Q. Do you have an opinion as to whether or not Citizens & Southern National Bank or Holding Company, or both, have working control over the management and policies of these five banks? A. In my opinion they do.

Q. In your opinion, is it exercised? A. It is.

Q. Is it accepted? A. It is.

Q. How do you compare that with control, working control over the management and policies of the bank at [676] Stone Mountain? A. Well, there was a lot more hesitancy and a lot more delay, for example, they had a capital problem out at Stone Mountain. We talked to them about what we thought was the best thing for them. They just insisted that they didn't want to go twenty-five years on a debenture. They wanted a five year debenture. I never could convince them that it was to their advantage to go ahead and take a twenty-five year one.

When we did the same with Tucker, we had no problem at all. They immediately accepted exactly what we recommended. I think the way the name got on at that bank, Mr. Lane explained it yesterday, Mr. Cofer insisted that he be allowed to put the name Citizens & Southern on the Bank of Tucker. When they did, I informed the Board of Directors of the Bank of Stone Mountain that Tucker was going to change its name to Citizens & Southern Bank of Tucker and told them I wanted them to know before it happened, that if they wanted to use the name and they were willing to do so, we were willing to do so. By, I believe it was six months to a year later when they came back to us, they said, we would like to use the name. We said, "Okay, you can use it." Again, it was something they took their own time about doing.

[677] A. (Continued) When we had to move the—when we outgrew the quarters, the rented quarters in which we were located in the city of Stone Mountain, our research department made a study, survey of the Stone Mountain area, and decided on one particular geographic location which we thought was the best one for a bank. We recommended to them that they put the new bank on that spot. They did not choose to accept our recommendations and put it on another lot somewhere else. But it was all—I mean these are just three examples. Ultimately, they did most of the things, but it was always much slower and some of the advice we gave them was not even accepted, not that there was any hard feelings, as there wasn't, and, in fact, when they finally said that they didn't want to merge in with our bank, we went—I went back to the board and told them, if this is what they didn't want to do, it was perfectly agreeable with us to leave the situation just exactly like it was then.

We would continue the five-percent relationship as we had operated over the last, at that time I guess it was the last ten or eleven years, but apparently they had already committed themselves to some other course of action.

Q. Mr. Hall, there was some conversation [678] yesterday with Mr. Lane in which the question was asked, and I believe I may have asked the question in another way, why would you assume this responsibility toward these little things and take only five percent of the stock? A. Well, Howard——

Q. Well, let me ask you an obvious question, if I may, first. Why didn't you take more than five percent? A. We weren't allowed to.

Q. By law? A. That's right, except in the instance of—I believe in the instance of Sandy Springs, and at that time I believe the law was fifteen percent. However, at that time there was an indirect control provision in the law that said that officers, directors and their wives, ownership by officers, directors and their wives, would be attributed to the company and, as a result, our counsel, your associate, Mr. Henry Miller, told us that none of us could buy any stock in the bank at Sandy Springs. So the stock that we own in Sandy Springs now has all been acquired subsequent to the change in the law, and which occurred in 1960.

Q. Why did you take any stock at all? Why [679] didn't you just have the relationship without the stock? A. Well, I think there were—to my way of thinking, several reasons, the main ones being that as long as nobody else had any substantial block of stock, that made us the biggest stockholder. We were able to buy five percent of the bank in the Holding Company and five percent of the bank was acquired by the Citizens & Southern Profit-Sharing Fund, because they were also excellent investments. This meant that there was ten percent of the bank that was controlled in—effectively by us, according to the Bank Holding Company definition. Because, they subsequently attributed ownership by a trustee for the benefit of the employees to be ownership by the company itself. So we had effectively a ten-percent interest in it, and therefore we are the largest stockholder, by far, in the bank.

In addition to that, I think it said to the other people who were investing, "Look, the C&S is willing to put its money down here." And it was just an example, an illustration that we were willing to risk our money if anybody else wanted—else wanted to, they at least knew that we were risking ours also.

Now, those are the two things that I say why we—sure, I think technically we could get—we could [680] have accomplished everything without even having a five-percent interest. I mean the pension plan could have been written that way and everything else could have, but I think these two things were reasonably important.

Q. Was there a separate and independent block of stock at Stone Mountain? A. There was. The McCurdy family, and you can attribute anywhere from thirty—I don't know, thirty to fifty percent of the bank being in the hands of——

Q. You spoke in terms of Tucker, of putting stock—in placing stock among employees and officers and so on as investments. What is the importance of friendly stockholders to you under these circumstances? A. Well, I think it is two-fold. It is a two-way street. It is really a good investment to them. I think, like Mr. Lane said yesterday about you could put a bank almost anywhere and make money, at least over the last ten or fifteen years, and that therefore we were giving the purchasers an opportunity to make a good investment. From the standpoint of the bank, it meant that your stockholders were people who knew you, who knew about you, who knew the way you did things and who approved of the way you did things. So, it just made for a more harmonious operation; that's all.

[681] Q. In your belief, does it help in the view you have of having control of these—having control of the management and policies of these banks that stock is in, as you put it, friendly hands there? A. Oh, yeah.

Q. How do you justify or would you even justify what Mr. Lane testified to yesterday and Mr. Starks this morning, that you would feel quite comfortable in recommending that a customer of yours, for his convenience, go to a bank in which your holding company held only a five-percent share interest? A. Well, I think what Howard says is right, that we want to do what is the best thing for our customer, that actually we get more than five percent of the net profit because we also get a relationship that is certainly not unprofitable. We are getting the account of the bank, and it depends upon how much money they carry with us. It is more or less lucrative. So we really get more than five percent out of any five-percent bank.

Of course, I think all of these arrangements, these de novo associate correspondent banks, were all started with the thought in mind that they would some day be either wholly-owned subsidiaries or branches as a result of a merger.

[682] Q. How would you feel, if you can project your mind to such a circumstance, and this is just an opinion and an hypothetical situation, how would you feel that your relationship would be or that your actions would result if no merger approval or effort to merge these banks had been made at all? Would your relationship be continuing or would it not? A. Well, that would have to be—that would be a two-way thing, because it would have to be a bilateral agreement, bilateral decision. Both sides would have to agree. But from our sides, I think we could say that we would continue it, and I think the evidence of the answer is what we told them at Stone Mountain. We would be willing to leave the thing just like it is. We don't try to merge it, just go ahead with a five-percent relationship. They didn't accept—didn't decide to accept that, but that was our offer or our position I think has already been demonstrated, that we would just go along just like—like it had been. But I must say that seems to me to be an impossible situation, because I don't think there was ever any thought in mind of operating that way permanently. We just felt that the minute it was possible to do so, the banks would be merged in some way, consolidated or something.

[683] Q. When you include blocks of stock in your definition of correspondent associate, you are talking about blocks of stock and the importance of your five percent, none being greater than yours. Where do you place the president of these banks in that computation? A. The guys that were brought up by us, and if we want him I would say that he would stay with us, and therefore I would say he would be just as much on our —in our group as would my stock.

Mr. Hodgson: No further questions, Your Honor.

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Sims

Q. Mr. Hall, some of the questions I ask you might appear to have been asked before, but I am just trying to clear up a few areas. First of all, I would like to make clear—you said you had been with the C&S Holding Company for twenty or thirty years? A. Well, that's right.

Q. Is that correct? Is that since the time C&S Holding Company was established? A. No, the C&S Holding Company was organized in 1928. Actually it was originally started—I think there was a capital subscription as to the bank and [684] $400,000 of it was allocated to the formation of the Holding Company, and the stock of which was held in trust for the benefit of the shareholders of the bank. Then here, oh, some ten or fifteen years ago, that stock was distributed by the shareholders to the bank, so the bank actually owns the Holding Company, and it is one of the few arrangements in the country like that.

Q. All right. Now, you have been—have you been with any other banks other than C&S? A. No, sir.

Q. All your banking life has been with C&S? A. Been real lucky.

Q. Have you been—would you describe your activities with C&S in relation to the establishment of the correspondent associates, the acquisition of five-percent interest in various banks throughout the state, the attempts up to the present day to merge, some of which have been successful in the past? Could I assume that you have been involved in those activities right along? A. Well, involved, or knew about what was going on?

Q. Would it be not fair—would it be fair to describe your role as a supervisory or coordinating role in that effort? [685] A. In some areas. We all work together in the C&S Bank and I think that is one of our—the secrets of our—what little success we have had, is that everybody does anything they want to, and everybody gets in everybody else's way, and we are all interested in doing the job, which is supplying the best type of banking service we can supply to the State of Georgia.

Q. Based on your experience in banking, Mr. Hall, who are the policymakers in the bank? A. Mills Lane.

Q. No, no, not just the C&S Bank, in a bank, who are the policymakers in terms of roles, officers, directors? A. It all depends on the way a bank is run, as I see it. And it all depends on whether the directors are groups who are sitting there to veto the actions of the management or whether they are a group who actually run the bank. In all of our banks, and in any bank that we have anything to do with, we have a very positive understanding that we know more about running a bank than the directors do. And that if you don't want to do it this way, well, let's don't get together; let's stay apart. But if you want us to help you with the bank, you have got to understand that we believe that we know how to run a bank. Just like, and it is [686] a very simple thing to explain to a director, because you say to the man who runs a drugstore, "We know nothing about nothing about running a drugstore, so you run the drugstore". You know nothing about running the bank, so we run the bank. You don't like the way we run the bank, you tell us and we will get out.

[687] Q. Okay. Now taking Citizens & Southern National Bank as an example, and would you say the policymakers or maker, C&S National Bank, is or are the officers or the Directors of the bank? A. I can only, yes, and I think the Directors, I don't mean—by saying this, I don't cast any aspersions upon the Directors, I think they themselves know that they don't know the problem of making installment loans, the problem of soliciting accounts, the problem of recruiting people. These are the things that management knows about. These are the things that management should do. We use our Directors more as a review board and our Directors' meetings consist primarily of informing the Directors of what is going on and what we are trying to make go on in the future. But, definitely in our bank, the Directors do not set the policies, they might veto them.

Q. In the time you have been associated with the Citizens & Southern National, have there been any disagreements between management and Directors? A. Let's see. The only one I can remember was when Howard Starks got that logo and we made the mistake of asking all the Directors before we started using it, whether they liked it. They, as well as I, didn't like it. So, subsequently, we had to go back to them and after about six months, we finally got them to accept it.

[688] So, I think that was somewhat of a lesson. That's the only thing I can remember that we have been in disagreement about because the rest of the things we always, I have always gone ahead and done or have said we are planning to do this and I don't remember them ever saying "Don't do that." There may have been something else.

Q. You said that, that management sets the policies of Citizens & Southern National Bank, but the Board of Directors might, or has the capability to veto; is that a correct statement? A. I think so.

Q. You have been a Director on several banks at one time or another, have you not? A. Yes.

Q. Are Directors of interstate or national banks required to take any oaths? A. I believe they are.

Q. Do you know what that oath consists of? A. No, I don't.

Q. Let me read to you, Mr. Hall, out of the United States Code, Section 73, Title 12. "Each Director, when appointed or elected, shall take an oath that he will so far as the duty devolves on him, diligently, honestly administer the affairs of such association and not knowingly violate or willingly permit to be violated any provisions [689] of this chapter and that he is the owner in good faith in his own right to the number of shares of stock required by that chapter."

Then it continues, what does that mean to you? A. It would mean to me just exactly what our Directors are doing in allowing us to run the bank.

Q. When you were on the Board of Directors, of any of the banks that you were on, I believe you said you were on Stone Mountain at one time and some others around the state of Georgia. Did you at any time have any personal disagreements with any of the activities of management of those banks? A. I am sure I must have.

Q. But you don't recall any specific instances? A. Yes, at Stone Mountain, I didn't agree with the way they would go, wanted to go with five year debentures instead of the twenty-five years debentures.

Q. Was that suggestion offered by the management of the bank? A. It was offered, that's right. Offered by the management of the bank.

Q. And the Board of Directors would disagree with the management? A. That's right.

Q. And that suggestion was not implemented? [690] A. That's right.

Q. If I could get you just to help me out a little bit on these terms. A. You don't need any help.

Q. I wish you were right, Mr. Hall. Now we have got several species or at least some species of banks running around, running around in this case. As I understand it, there are some banks that are correspondents. Now some banks are super-correspondents, correspondent associates, branches, affiliates, subsidiaries. I guess there are just banks after that. The banks in which you own a majority interest in terms of stock, what do you call those banks? A. I call them subsidiaries, fully-owned subsidiaries. No, not even wholly-owned. Subsidiaries.

Q. You just call them subsidiaries? Are those banks in which you own more than 50% of the voting stock? A. That's right. That's right.

Q. Now the bank in which you own less than 50% of the voting stock, I assume from listening to the testimony over the past couple of days, there aren't any banks between five and over fifty; is that correct? You either own five per cent or own fifty? A. I don't think there are now. That's right, there are none now.

[691] Q. Those banks in which you own five per cent of the stock, you call—— A. Some of them we call associate correspondents, some of them I call super-correspondents.

Q. Okay. Do your subsidiaries have Board of Directors? A. They do.

Q. Have you ever served on the Board of Directors of one of the subsidiary banks of Citizens & Southern National? A. I don't believe so.

Q. Have any officers of Citizens & Southern National ever served on those boards? A. Yes, we had, have one on every one of them, whoever is responsible for that area, the bank in that area serves on the Board of that bank. For example, Dublin, in Dublin either Bennett Brown or Bill Mathis, one, is on that Board. That is the way it goes on all of them—majority owned banks.

Q. If I understand correctly, there are three banks in Fulton and DeKalb County you would classify as subsidiaries? A. There are in what counties?

Q. Fulton and DeKalb Counties. A. I believe there are six; aren't they?

[692] Q. I'm talking about—— A. You are talking about subsidiaries, about the way, you are talking about subsidiaries as defined under the Bank Holding Company Act.

Q. I'm talking about how you define it. A. Fulton County, there would be Fulton-DeKalb, there would be Emory, East Point and Avondale, that's right.

Q. Are there any officers of Citizens & Southern National which sit on those Boards? A. Yes, I believe.

Q. Today? A. I think so.

Q. You don't sit on any of those boards? A. No, I do not.

Q. To your knowledge, were officers of C&S National sitting on those boards at the time that you had the trouble with the Fed over the officers of Citizens & Southern National being on the Boards of some of your five per cent banks? A. Yes, there were, not the same people, but there were other people.

Q. Now as I understand your testimony correctly, you said that the Feds, I believe I may not be correct on that for one reason or another advised you to remove your Citizens & Southern National offices from the Boards [693] of the five per cent banks in Fulton and DeKalb Counties; is that correct? A. Did I say that or did Howard?

Q. I thought you did. A. That's true they did, that's right, I believe it was sort of a side issue as a result of the hearing. It came up about the same time as the hearing.

Q. They did not then, I take it, just by implication, advise you to remove your officers from the Board of subsidiary banks? A. It seems that there is an exception. I think the thing read that where 50%, where the stock—where the same stockholders owned 50% or more of one bank and also owned 50% or more of another bank, this is exempt from the provisions of Regulation L. I believe Regulation L is the equivalent to Section 8 of the Clayton Act.

Q. Do you know what purpose is behind Section 8 of the Clayton Act and regulation L? A. No, I don't.

Q. I take it after, you testified that after the Fed asked you to remove these, you did remove these Directors rather promptly? A. Yes, each one ceased to be full Directors and continued in the capacity of advisory Directors.

Q. Did I hear you correctly when you said that [694] technical change didn't make any difference in their function? A. I believe Howard said that. I would agree with it completely because at Stone Mountain, I was no better off as an advisory Board member than I was as a member of the Board.

Q. So what it boils down to really, was you simply didn't cast votes? A. That's right, and this we discussed with the supervisory authorities. They acknowledged that, too, that was why we have no real quarrel with them. We are perfectly happy to do it that way.

Q. Did the fact you were able to cast votes prior to leaving those Boards really matter to you? A. It didn't mean anything.

Q. Now, going back to your distinction between correspondent associates and super-correspondents, would both—would banks fall in both of those groups? Would you own stock in banks falling in both of those groups? A. Yes.

Q. Do you know how many banks in the State of Georgia, just to pick an area, that your Holding Company owns 5% of the stock in or 5% or less? A. It's about twenty, I think.

Q. Twenty in the entire state? [695] A. I am sure we have got it somewhere in the exhibits.

Q. How many of those are correspondent associates? A. I think all but about four or five. I think again if you want to identify them, you can get out the Federal Reserve Annual Report. We identify them in it as to whether they were in effect super-correspondents or associate correspondents.

Q. The best I can do for an annual report is 1969. Has there been any substantial changes since then? A. Oh, yes, because I don't believe the Bank Holding Company Act of 1970 had not been passed and therefore, there was not the description or definition of what a subsidiary was.

Mr. Hodgson: I may be able to help you. I think Mr. Sims is talking about the bank's own annual report. I believe Mr. Hall is talking about the annual report to the Federal Reserve Board.

Q. I apologize. You have your annual report, Citizens & Southern Holding Company, December 31st, 1969. A. Every holding company is required to make an annual report to the Federal Reserve Board. In there, we are now, we are required to list subsidiaries.

Q. Right. A. We, therefore, have to determine which ones [696] of these banks we think are subsidiaries under the definition of the 1970 Bank Holding Company Act. In my recollection, without having the thing before me is that there are four, five banks that we classify as not being subsidiaries. We footnote them and say no hearing has been held on these. But we assume these banks would be subsidiaries under, I forget the section, 2G23 or something like that, those ones that we don't identify that way are the ones that I call super-correspondents. Those are the ones like Woodstock, Fayetteville, Seynoia, Bainbridge. I don't know what else.

Q. I believe you listed over four qualifications when you described what a correspondent associate was. A. That's right.

Q. Let me see if I recall those correctly. First, no large block of stock was held by a group other than Citizens & Southern? A. That's right.

Q. The second was that there was an understanding that if possible in the future, they would merge or become a part of C&S? A. Right.

Q. The third was, has to qualify as a subsidiary under the Bank Holding Company Act? A. Right, under this one that we have just been talking about, there is—does anybody have a copy of [697] Regulation Y here?

Q. I don't have a copy of Regulation Y. I have a copy of that particular section of the Bank Holding Company Act, if that would be helpful. A. Where it deals with determination of control.

Mr. Hodgson: 2A2C, he is talking about.

A. Anyway, in there, one of the ways of determining control is whether or not the company, meaning the holding company, exercises substantial influence over, I think it says the managing policies of the bank. This is where—this is the type of control that I think we exercise in these banks that I describe as correspondent associates or associate correspondents, whatever you call them.

[698] Q. Just one second here and let me find that provision. A. Yes.

Q. Tell me, if this sounds correct, Mr. Hall. "Subsidiaries with respect to a——"

Mr. Hodgson: May I ask counsel to tell us which section you are reading from?

Mr. Sims: I am looking in your brief on page 110, it is 12(c), 1841(d).

Mr. Hodgson: D?

Mr. Sims: Yes.

Mr. Hodgson: No, sir, that is not the one he is talking about.

Mr. Sims: Let me ask him about this section then.

Mr. Hodgson: All right.

By Mr. Sims

Q. From 1841(d), and I believe this is the definition of a subsidiary or one of the parts of a definition of subsidiary: "Subsidiary with respect to a specified bank holding company means any company with respect to the management or policies of which such bank holding company has the power, directly or indirectly, to exercise the controlling influence, as determined by the Board, after notice and opportunity for hearing."
[699] That's the definition that you are using? A. No, it may be the same one, but the one I am using is the one in the section that talks about determining control, and it doesn't read exactly that way. I don't know whether—whether there is any—whether we are quibbling about words or not. I just don't want to make a misstatement.

Q. Let me have you take a look at this, Mr. Hall, study it, if you would. A. You might—the part that I'm—this is not the part, no.

Q. Well, that is from the Bank Holding Company Act, that is from the section 1841(d), which defines what subsidiaries or bank holding companies are. Reading that definition, if you would, would you consider that the correspondent associates throughout the State of Georgia qualify as subsidiaries under the Bank Holding Company Act? I realize you are not a lawyer, just reading the words. A. I believe so. I believe so, but I would ask my counsel if it were.

Q. I'm not asking for a legal—I just want as you understand it. A. I believe it is the same thing as the other, but it is put in a different way, because in the other [700] one I believe it gets at it by defining what control is, and then saying that if it is controlled, why——

Q. Have you been informed by the Federal Reserve Board that you must, in your annual reports, list subsidiaries—list as subsidiaries banks over which you have or claim to have a controlling influence? A. I believe that is part of the instructions of it; is it not?

Q. I am not sure, sir. A. I think so.

Q. I am not sure. A. I think that's right.

Q. Is this the reason you put it in? A. That's right.

Q. Now, let's take the correspondent associates and the super-correspondents, if we can, as two different groups and look at those. Do these banks receive from C&S the same services? A. I think they, for all practical purposes, the ones that I call the super-correspondents, receive the same services. Sometimes it is a little bit harder to get some of the guys to give them the same services, but usually, I beat them over the head and they will finally come around.

Q. Going one step further, then, to the ordinary correspondent, do they receive the same services? [701] A. No, sir.

Q. What kind of services don't they receive? A. Well, he had a checklist, we asked whether you were—whether you had the people from the correspondent bank division of the other banks. We asked them a series of some eight or nine or ten questions about what did they furnish with these kind of services.

Q. Is this the list that had the internal audits and that sort of thing in it? A. This is the one—yeah, and had a pool of people to leave on vacations and sickness, the audit— my mind goes blank right now, but I remember writing out a list of about eight or ten things that these banks do we don't normally do for correspondents.

Q. Would you do any of those services to the extent you can remember them, I mean to the extent you were requested by a correspondent? A. I don't believe we would, no.

Q. Then, looking at the correspondent associates versus the super-correspondents, does the management, and by that——

The Court: Let's go back to that last, the distinguishing characteristics of the list to which you referred. Was the adjective or adverb "regular and routine", as I recall it, such a regular and [702] routine audits?

Mr. Hodgson: Systematically and routinely were the words, Your Honor.

The Court: All right, I am sorry. Now, when you said no to the last question, you were putting a negative based on the systematic and routine, rather than upon the providing of the services upon request, which might not be upon a systematic and routine basis; is that correct?

A. That is a fair statement.

The Court: That is what I was interpreting.

A. That is exactly right.

The Court: So the emphasis was on that systematic and routine.

A. Right.

By Mr. Sims

Q. Let me get that clear in my mind then. Would you provide any of these services to your regular correspondents? A. We have and do.

Q. Upon request? A. We have and we do. I don't know whether we—without looking at the list, I don't remember whether we do or have provided every one of them to some particular correspondent, but we would own—see, we even do it to [703] some non-correspondents, too.

Q. You provide these kind of services to non-correspondents? A. If we are trying to get their business.

Q. I see. Sort of a sales technique? A. Sure.

Q. Going back, then, to the difference between correspondents and super-correspondents, does the management of the super-correspondents, and by management I mean Board of Directors and Presidents, have any greater or lesser authority as to the management of the bank, than the management of the correspondent associates? A. Well, I think one of the things that I said had to have in a—is, an associate correspondent, was this matter of exercising substantial influence over the management policies. This, I don't think we do in a super-correspondent, besides there being a block of stock, besides one particular individual or family or group owning a substantial block. Also, we do not exercise the same degree of influence over the management. In other words, they don't do everything we ask them to do.

Q. I think I understand that distinction. A. Okay.

Q. I am trying to get a little narrower point, perhaps. Is the authority to manage the bank, which is [704] vested in the Board of Directors and the President of the correspondent associates, any different from the authority in the super-correspondents? A. Are you asking me about the authority of the—please say that again, I am——

Q. Well, maybe I am not making myself clear. I think that Mr. Lane and Mr. Starks, perhaps even yourself, have testified that you don't dictate or maybe even can't dictate to your correspondent associates; is that correct? A. Well, obviously, we can't dictate. At any point, the Directors can walk out, if they want to, I guess, but from a practical standpoint, we influence the decisions of the management to the point where you never have to get to dictating. We would never dictate, because if it got to that point, it would be time to separate.

Q. Well, would you say then, that the real difference between the banks which you own 5% in and call super-correspondents and the banks that you own 5% in and call correspondent associates, are the relationships with the officers and Board of Directors that C&S National has, would that be a fair statement? A. The difference would be, number one, that there would not be—that there would be a block of stock that was owned by one individual or group of individuals which was of a significant size to where that person probably [705] could exercise effective voting control. Number two, there would be no agreement with that individual that if and when merger was possible, that they would merge.

Number three, there would be no understanding that the C&S National Bank would manage the bank subject to the veto of the Board of Directors. The only thing that would be present, I guess, would be the 5% interest, and that's all, really. Five per cent interest, plus giving them the services we give.

The Court: Let me ask him a question.

Mr. Sims: All right.

The Court: Up until the time of the problem with Stone Mountain; is that true?

A. Well, there was—the problems were——

The Court: In other words, you gave them—did you give them the limited range of services?

A. Did we give who a limited range?

The Court: Stone Mountain.

A. Yes, sir, we gave them the same.

The Court: You gave them the full range or the limited range?

A. The full range.

The Court: So they were a correspondent——

A. Well, didn't really think of it at that point. At that point, it really wasn't an associate correspondent [706] or not an associate correspondent.

The Court: Didn't have the super concept at that time?

A. It came in—that's right. I know it sounds stupid, I apologize, but that is the way it has evolved, and that is the easiest way I can explain it.

The Court: The super—Stone Mountain got everything that Chamblee did?

A. Yes, sir.

The Court: How about Hapeville?

A. No, no, that was an investment, I guess I guess must have only had a fourth.

By Mr. Sims

Q. Hapeville? A. Hapeville, basically, and was because we were competing in that market, and there was no prospect of us ever getting into that with that one. We were competing with it at the time we bought the 5% interest.

Q. If that is true, why did you buy the 5% interest? A. Because it was in trouble and they wanted somebody to help them.

Q. But this is not one of those banks which you ultimately planned to merge? A. Oh, no, sir, no, sir. We were holding it and helping them to find somebody. Unfortunately, unfortunately, [707] we weren't able to find somebody as quickly as they were, but we sent three or four people out there to interview——

The Court: Thinking back on the various banks in which you held 5%, would it be correct—a correct generalization as to the ones that you now characterize as correspondent associates, and you were with those banks from the very formation of all of them, participated in their formation, and in the ones which you characterize now as super-correspondent banks, what you call, although you do have the interest, you came upon them at some stage after their formation and it occurred to you that they might qualify and some might and some didn't.

A. No, sir. Tucker, for example, I would classify as an associate correspondent, although we acquired an interest in it after it had been organized. We did not compete with them at the time that we acquired the interest, but nevertheless, that was a going bank. And I think we exercised the same degree of influence on the management of the Tucker bank that we do over any other right now.

And I think we did the day we went into it.

The Court: Well, normally you have someone who is approving participants, the movant in the enterprise, the dominant personality, when you start something which normally I would think would put it [708] in your category of the supers rather than the correspondent associates.

Now, if the Tucker had already been formed I would have assumed that there was somebody who was the moving genius in that organization. Did you supersede and take his or her place or what?

A. Yes, sir, this was Mr. Cofer with the Cofer family and they were running the bank, basically, as an adjunct to the lumber supply business. Then, competition came in there, somebody else saw that the bank was not really serving the community in the way the bank could, and Mr. Cofer would acknowledge that. He didn't have time to run the lumber supply business and the bank, so he was looking for somebody to come in and do a good job in his bank, that he felt he had to have, since there was competition coming.

The Court: I didn't understand Mr. Lane's testimony, although it may have been true that I missed it, that you bought out all of the Cofer family's stock?

A. We bought out 80% of it. The Cofer family retained 20% of it. I think the reason for that, they were good friends of ours, they were a substantial family and they were the ones we wanted.

The Court: You didn't consider that a sub- [709] stantial block of stock?

A. No, we didn't then. We know that we had 60% in the hands of very friendly people, I believe that's about the percentage.

[710] Q. How many of the banks would you classify as correspondent associates that you participated in the organization of? A. In Atlanta, Fulton?

Q. In the State of Georgia. A. I don't have a list of them.

Q. Most—— A. Oh, let's see, maybe I can put it this way. Outside of the Atlanta-Fulton, of course in Atlanta, Fulton County, would be the five that are here. Outside of Atlanta, I guess there is the one in—the one that we participated originally in the formation would be in Henry County and Dalton. I don't know whether there are any others or not. I believe all the rest of them were situations where the President of the Bank had gotten to the stage where he had to retire. They were looking for somebody to come in and take over.

Q. It's fair to say then that most of the banks you classify as correspondent associates, you did not participate in the organization of? A. Let's see, probably more of them that we classify as, as associate correspondents, probably more of them we did not start, but that will all be out of Atlanta. Most of them are from Atlanta.

Q. Now, did I understand your testimony earlier [711] correctly, and I might ask you, you have been in the courtroom while Mr. Lane and Mr. Starks have testified; have you not?

Q. You have heard their testimony? A. Yes.

Q. My understanding of that testimony is that you were the moving force in establishing the correspondent associates that are defendants in this lawsuit; is that correct? A. Oh, yes, the defendants that are involved in this lawsuit, that is your question?

Q. Yes, sir. A. Right.

Q. Yes, sir, it is. A. That would be my description, of course; it's a matter of semantics as to what you say is the moving force. I think we were as much of a moving force as any other force in every one of them.

Q. Let me go back to this Fed hearing that's been talked about quite a bit here today and quote Mr. Lane on page 7, "In no case in the entire history of this bank have we ever gone to a community either to buy interest in a bank or to organize new ones. It's always been, the policy has always been to us as in the case where a bank had deteriorated." Doesn't that seem inconsistent to you? [712] A. No.

Q. Why doesn't it? A. I still think if a group from Chamblee came to us, that we were still the moving force to get the thing done, my recollection of it is that, as I say, the chief national bank examiner said to us, "This is a place the bank ought to go." We were looking around and we happened to find out there was another group that was interested in starting a bank at that time and I believe had been turned down and we were able to get with them, we all had sort of a handmade group already. I think to be honest, to be perfectly fair with you about the thing, you could answer the question either way, that there was somebody else was the moving force or we were. I think there was a jointly, was the way it was.

Q. Would you say that these initial acquisitions, just tell me if you agree with this statement or not, if you would. Would you say that these initial acquisitions of 5% interest in these banks were part of a plan to gain ultimate control of the banks? A. Of what banks?

Q. The banks that are defendants in this lawsuit. A. Each individual bank?

Q. Right. A. If our plan was to ultimately merge with them, [713] would you say that that was to obtain control of them?

Q. I don't know, would you? A. You can't answer it.

Q. Your plan in all of these instances—— A. Was to ultimately merge with them because that's what—I say that's what makes it so impossible to answer about what would we do absent a merger, because that's what these things were really created for was to merge.

Q. How many of the banks, if you know, or just an estimate if you don't know exactly, in Georgia, which you have a 5% interest in, have the C&S name? A. It's those ones I call associate correspondents.

Q. All the associate correspondents? A. Yes.

Q. And nobody has your name who isn't an associate correspondent? A. I believe that's right.

Q. When you give them the name or when they take the name, whichever way it works, I assume this means that you have reached an agreement or understanding that you are eventually going to merge with them, if possible; is that correct? A. Right, an understanding. No written agreement, no formal agreement or anything like that.

Q. This is true of all the banks throughout the [714] State of Georgia? A. Yes.

Q. All the correspondent associates? A. Yes, I think so. Without looking at the list and analyzing each one of them individually, I would say yes, that's true.

Q. I believe Mr. Lane testified that having the stock of these banks placed in friendly hands really wasn't the part of the control that he was referring to in his testimony, if I heard you correctly. I think Mr. Hodgson asked you does this help and you said yes. A. Sure it does.

Q. Looking at these charts which Mr. Hodgson had you look at on your direct testimony, most of them are divided into five categories, the officers, Directors and employees of the C&S National Bank and affiliates. Now am I correct when you say affiliates, there—do you know what they are talking about? A. Subsidiaries.

Q. The second group is former officers, Directors and employees of C&S National affiliates. A. The one you are looking at might be——

Q. I'm looking at South DeKalb, maybe that's different. I'm looking at South DeKalb right now. A. Okay, I've got it, I believe.

[715] Q. Now the third group is officers, Directors and employees of C&S, South DeKalb, other C&S five per cent banks? A. Right.

Q. This would include, this includes both correspondent associates and super-correspondents? A. It would include both of them, but for practical purposes, would be very few shares held by the one I would classify as super-correspondents, in my judgment. I think we would have to go look at it specifically. I don't believe there would be many of those.

Q. The fourth and fifth categories, customers of C&S National Bank and affiliates, customers of C&S National Bank of Sandy Springs and other five per cent banks, if you don't know, do you have an opinion as to whether or not any of those customers which own stock in your bank are also, get banking services from other banks in and around Atlanta? A. I would imagine they would.

Q. Would this be more true of the larger customers? Is it frequent for a large bank customer to get services from more than one bank? A. Sure.

Q. Do you happen to know whether or not those customers own stock in any other banks? A. No, I do not. My recollection of the way we [716] got it, this thing was a result of a hearing. It seems to me that's the way they asked us to break them down at the hearing. Probably just carried—when this thing came up, we just sort of updated the information. I believe that's right, the Fed hearing.

Q. I think you testified, or I may be confusing you with Mr. Starks or Mr. Lane again, one of the three testified, one of the problems was Stone Mountain where a lot of independent people were out there, Scotch and Irish, so on and so forth? A. Mr. Lane.

Q. Mr. Lane, yes. That is they never really felt they were part of the C&S family system; do you agree with that? A. I do, I do.

Q. Now was that one of the instances in which there was a large block of stock in one individual or group of individuals acting together? A. McCurdy's family.

The Court: What is the McCurdy family? A. Well, gosh, the more I stayed out there, the more I thought there was nothing in Stone Mountain but McCurdys. There is a McCurdy Chevrolet Company, Doug McCurdy. I don't honestly know all their relations. Mr. Evans, who is married to a McCurdy. Two McCurdy [717] sisters from whom the property was bought out there and Lou Jordan's wife is a McCurdy. Kingsley Weatherly's wife is a McCurdy. When you added them all up, my recollection is something in the neighborhood of thirty-five to forty per cent held by people who were either, had the name of McCurdy or who were married into the McCurdy family. I'm not very good at keeping up with families.

The Court: Prior to your interest in that bank, had it been operated by the McCurdy family?

A. The McCurdy family had controlling—were the controlling group of Directors. There were, I think, a majority of the Directors who have been included in the McCurdy family. So they, they controlled it through the Board, yes, sir.

[718] By Mr. Sims

Q. Now, I assume, and correct me if I am wrong, that since one of the—one of your conditions for calling a bank a correspondent associate is that that kind of situation doesn't exist, a large block of stock held in hands other than C&S. A. That's right.

Q. That that is not true of any of the five-percent banks that are involved in this litigation? A. Not to my knowledge is it true.

Q. Has it ever been true? A. Not to my knowledge, I don't believe so.

Q. I would like to go back, if I could, to the Fed hearing.

Look on Page 118. Mr. Noble is asking questions; Mr. Lane and you are both responding. I will point out which is which.

Mr. Noble asked: I mean is it true that someone had an ownership interest greater than the combined interest of C&S and the president?

Mr. Lane: That is true at Warner Robbins and it was true at Pelham.

Mr. Hall: It is true at Sandy Springs and it is true at Chamblee and Fayetteville.

A. I must have misunderstood the question. I [719] mean I really—I mean I can't imagine why it would be answered that way. I mean I can't remember any block at Chamblee, in my recollection. The largest stockholder is a druggist out there, and I believe our holdings are bigger than his.

At Sandy Springs, I don't know of anybody at Sandy Springs, so I don't know why I would answer it that way.

Q. Let me read on a little bit more, maybe tie it back in.

Mr. Lane continues his answer: and true at Hogansville. It is true at the Coffee County Bank in Douglas.

Mr. Starks: It is true at Stockbridge.

Mr. Hall: Stone Mountain.

Mr. O'Connor: These are interests unrelated to C&S?

Mr. Lane: Absolutely.

Does that help you at all?

A. No, I can't understand why Sandy Springs and Chamblee would have been included in there. But maybe somebody else can help me, but I can't—I can't recall.

Q. Let me read on Page 119, if I can. Mr. Noble is in the pages prior to this asking for a little [720] description of each of the banks and he has now gotten to the Chamblee National Bank.

Mr. Noble says: The Chamblee National Bank.

Mr. Lane: That is a bank where there is a group of citizens. There is no bank in the community, and that is at the north end of Atlanta, and a group of citizens were being put together by the Trust Company of Georgia. And I said, 'How about letting me come out and talk to you guys? I think I have a better deal to offer you.' So we met for supper one night and had a highball and I told them about the C&S benefits, and they said, 'We don't want to go to the Trust Company.' We bought five percent and they had all the stock subscribed. We probably have less affiliated interest of any kind in that bank than in any of the five percenters that started. They organized the bank, and I said, 'Please, I am a better partner for you than the Trust Company.'

I would like to go back to a part of that quotation, if I could. 'We probably had less affiliated [721] interest in that bank than probably any of the five percenters that started." Do you agree with that statement? A. I know that we had ten percent of that bank in the Holding Company, and the profit-sharing plan, and I don't believe anybody came anywhere near that. Any other single stockholder or group of stockholders.

Q. Well, is that all? Is that all that was meant by affiliated interest? We probably have less affiliated interest of any kind? A. Affiliated. Well, what did these show? Did these show that we had less affiliated in Chamblee than the rest of them? Chamblee and Sandy Springs, it seems to me, are the ones that we have the less—the least amount of interest in this particular suit.

Q. All right. Did you—did you know or were you aware that a man named Williams and his related interest had approximately 2,800 shares of Chamblee National Bank? A. I didn't realize he had that many. He was the druggist that I talked about. I didn't think it was that much.

Q. Do you know how many shares C&S Holding had at that time? A. No, I don't know.

Q. The number of shares, would 1,500 sound [722] correct to you? A. If it is correct, then there would also be 1,500 in the name of the profit-sharing fund, which would add up to more than 2,800.

Mr. Sims: All right. Your Honor, I wonder if we might take a short recess at this point?

The Court: All right, we will take a ten-minute recess.

(Whereupon a recess was had.)

By Mr. Sims

Q. Mr. Hall, you stated that a couple of times, I think, in answer to my somewhat repetitive questions, that one of the characteristics of the bank which you call a correspondent associate is that it fits the definition of subsidiary in the Bank Holding Company Act. A. That's right.

Q. Did you have correspondent associates before January 1st, 1970? A. We used the term before that.

Q. Was the definition you are referring to in the Act prior to that time? A. No, it isn't; no, it wasn't.

Q. Then prior to that time, you didn't think [723] that that was a necessary condition? A. Oh, I would have said it would have been one of them that the Fed had talked to us about in the hearing, and which they wanted Congress to write into the law, which is what they did. When they wrote it into the Bank Holding Company Act, because they specifically, directly told us that they were going to ask Congress to put that in the law, so that we would be deemed to control these particular types of situations.

Q. Who was it that told you that? A. Tom O'Connell.

Q. When did he tell you that? A. I don't know whether it was at the end of the hearing or whether it was a period of time after that. But since the law has come out, he has, in answer to my inquiry, did you put this in the law because of us? And he said yes, you and others.

Q. Now, you said that you were notified that you should start listing in your annual report to the Fed banks which you considered subsidiaries because of qualifying under this new language in the Bank Holding Company Act; is that correct? A. Did I say that?

Q. Is that correct? I am sorry. [724] A. No, I didn't say we were notified. I said there is a provision in the instructions for preparing a bank, for preparing the annual report for a bank holding company, which says to list the subsidiaries. Since the 1970 Act has come out, you have, therefore, got to decide whether a particular bank that you own an interest in is a subsidiary or is not.

[725] Q. Has there been any hearing by the Federal Reserve Board on that question? A. I'm sorry to say there has not.

Q. Have you requested such a hearing? A. We have requested a hearing unofficially and they asked us not to officially ask for it.

Q. I take it then—— A. Because the inference that I get is that they really don't know what to do. They have got their hands so full of other things, as I gather, that are more important than deciding whether these particular banks actually are subsidiaries under the law, under the Act.

Q. So it's fair to say that the Federal Reserve Board has not yet determined these banks to be subsidiaries? A. No, sir, I'm sorry, if I gave that impression. What I intended to say was neither of the banks, either in my judgment, fell under that definition as expressed in Regulation Y.

Q. And you list them in your annual report simply because the annual report calls for subsidiaries? A. That's right, we put a notation on there that we are listing them as subsidiaries because of the provisions and footnote the ones that are not to the effect that we don't believe they would come under the definition.

Q. Now you testified earlier that you have always [726] kept the regulatory agencies fully informed of your relationship with these banks and any activities between? A. To the best of our ability, yes.

Q. Did you also testify that when you acquired your interest in the Tucker bank that some 80% of the stock in that bank changed hands? A. I believe that's right.

Q. At the time that you acquired that interest in the Tucker bank, where did that 80% go immediately from whoever owned it before? A. It went into the hands of—I believe it was Bennett Brown's agent and Howard Stark's agent and it was then transferred, I think, within thirty days, to the final purchasers. I know we made an announcement to all of the staff, that is officers and employees, that this stock was available if they wanted to buy it. We would even finance it on a pay-as-you-go plan.

Q. You did not seek approval from any of the regulatory agencies to acquire that stock? A. I didn't think there was any approval required. The bank at Tucker, I believe as it should have done, reported to the FDIC and the Superintendent of Banks, because it was a substantial change in the ownership. I believe that they did that although I am not positive. That's what they should have done.

[727] Q. What is your understanding of why the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation turned down your application to merge the Tucker bank? A. Because it was not a de novo situation. That was an acquisition of a going bank. And in our judgment, it was not a going bank, it was a bank that was created in 1919, as I remember, and it had only grown to three and a half million dollars, three million, something like that and after we got into it, of course, a lot of it was due to the fact that that area mushroomed right about that time, but it wasn't very long, but it was a fifteen or eighteen million dollar bank. As I said, it's now a thirty-five million dollar bank. That's over a period of about six or seven years, which is pretty good growth.

Q. The situation in respect to your bank, the relationship between your bank and Tucker bank right now today is because of the FDIC approval or disapproval, the same as would have been the case if they had turned down all of these banks in relation to the defendants in this case; is that correct? A. That's a kind of confusing statement.

Q. You applied to merge the Tucker bank, you were turned down by the FDIC, correct? A. That's right.

Q. You still have a 5% interest in the Tucker bank [728] is that correct? A. We still do.

Q. Do you consider them a correspondent associate? A. We still do.

Q. What do you plan to do with that situation? A. I think a lot of it depends on the outcome of this suit.

Q. How is that? A. Well, if you let us go, why we would be encouraged. Maybe we could go back on the Tucker question.

Q. Where would you go back? A. We would make that decision at that moment.

Q. Would you have a choice? A. Sure.

Q. Why is that? A. Because we have both a national bank, we are a national bank and we have affiliates who are state and non-member banks.

Q. You go to different regulatory agencies for approval? A. That's right.

Q. Is it fair to say then, that you are waiting to see what you are going to do with Tucker until this case is decided? A. Yes, sir.

[729] Q. You mentioned earlier, I think, in your direct testimony something about a merger poll that was taken in connection with the application and supplement to the application? A. Well, I believe I said that in the voting on the merger, that there were only two or three individuals who voted against it in the stockholders meeting. And I also said that one of the Directors on one of the five per cent banks reminded us that when he had gone out to sell the stock, originally, he had sold it to everybody on the basis that this bank will ultimately be merged into the C&S group of banks. And we immediately drew up a letter to go to all of the stockholders to see if they all felt that way in all of the banks. And I believe we got back about 95% of the stockholders who answered affirmatively.

Q. When was this letter sent out? This is after you filed the application? A. This was, yes, after we had filed the application and after you all had stopped it.

Q. This is after the vote, vote by the stockholders in both institutions to merge? A. Right, but the question that we asked them was did you buy it originally with the understanding that the banks would be merged, with the expectation, I believe, was the way it was worded.

[730] Q. Does each of the banks in which you own 5% interest maintain correspondent accounts with your banks? A. I'm not real sure.

Q. Would you be surprised if they didn't? A. Would I be surprised if they didn't?

Q. Right. A. No.

Q. You don't necessarily expect them to maintain correspondent accounts with your bank? A. Let's be sure we understand each other. By your bank, you mean the C&S National Bank?

Q. Yes, sir. A. No. I believe in reality a lot of them maintain accounts with some of our affiliate banks. Because we have to pay this, I almost feel like this is not to get up on a sandbox and talk about indirect taxes banks pay, because we have to put up reserves with deposits that are in the National Bank. We ask these people to keep your money with some other bank where the reserves are not required. So, in answer to your question, technically, I mean to specifically say they are under our control, but there are some of our affiliated banks where reserve requirements are zero for all practical purposes.

Q. If I understand correctly, then are you saying that all the banks in which you own 5% interest do maintain [731] correspondent accounts with other—your bank or one other subsidiary? A. That's right.

Q. Are they expected to do that? A. Well, they have got to carry there—they have got reserve requirements so they have to carry the reserve requirements somewhere. We would be kind of foolish if we were exercising management, exercising substantial influence over the management policies and didn't.

Q. Influence that one? A. Right.

Q. Right. Do you own stock in any bank outside the State of Georgia? A. We have about, Citizens & Southern Holding Company has a portfolio of about twenty-five million dollars worth of non-Georgia bank stocks. These are all investments.

Q. Do any of those banks use your bank as correspondent? A. Some of them do, some of them don't. These are purely investments.

Q. None of these are correspondent associates? A. No.

Q. Or even super-correspondents? A. No.

[732] Q. If I could just go back one minute to the Chamblee organization, have the people that you eventually organized the bank with, the group of Chamblee residents, do you know whether they had approached any other bank prior to talking to you? A. My understanding is that they had, either to whole group or part of the group had already talked to people at the Trust Company, my understanding was that Trust Company indicated either no interest or not enough interest and when we approached them, they accepted our proposal.

Q. Would it be fair, considering that, wouldn't it be fair to say that the primary interest of these local organizers was in obtaining local bank assistance from any large bank, whether C&S or otherwise? A. I would think that if they, if we had not offered to do it, they would have gone to somebody else.

Q. And in fact, they went to somebody else, even before you offered to do it? A. Yes, in which event, we would have looked for another group of people.

Q. Now you have said that some of these banks which your holding company and C&S National are involved in are subsidiaries, some correspondent associates, you have both kinds in the metropolitan area; is that right? You have [733] both subsidiaries and correspondent associates in the local metropolitan area, Atlanta metropolitan area? A. Oh, yes, subsidiaries of our bank. Yes, I am sorry.

Q. The terms are hard to follow sometimes. A. Sure are. We have majority owned subsidiaries. There are three of them in the Atlanta area and then there are six associate correspondents in the Atlanta area.

Q. Is there any difference between—is there any difference in the level of—competition between the correspondent associates and your bank as opposed to your subsidiary banks and your bank? A. I don't really think so. The way I look at the competition is that they all compete, one against each other, basically for the initial contract with a customer. After that, there is a minimum of competition because you have got to realize that the correspondent associate and national bank and affiliates or subsidiaries, all sell the same product. It's very similar to four or five McDonald stands. As I understand it, these are franchised efforts which are not owned by the same people. Yet, they don't compete against each other. By the same token, our affiliates, subsidiaries, branches and the associate correspondents, as I see it, all offer the same product and therefore, the competition between them is minimal. [734] That is why I don't see where any competition is going to be lessened as a result of this merger, because they are all selling the same thing.

Q. Let me ask you about that, they are all selling the same thing. I assume when you say that, you mean the C&S block of services? A. Right.

Q. Right. That you have described before. Now that, obviously, breaks down into numerous component parts, checking account services, etc. etc., etc. Do they all sell the same thing, these parts of the same thing at the same price? A. No, not necessarily. No, not necessarily. Some of them would be the same price, some of them wouldn't be.

[735] Q. Well, is the price of these services, in your mind, a part of competition? Does price play any part in the competition? A. I don't know. That is really a hard one to answer. I am sure it must play some, but I don't think it plays near as much as the service that is rendered by one organization versus another one. That is just my opinion. And the reason I say that, if I am not wrong, I believe, for example, a little bank out in Clarkston has an entirely different service charge schedule than the bank at Tucker. So that this doesn't really affect our relationship with mutual potential customers.

Q. Let me see if I can understand exactly what you are saying here. A. I am not very good at it.

Q. I am getting a little confused. Let's start back a little bit. What would you say are the elements of competition between banks? A. Between all banks?

Q. Yeah, Bank A and Bank B. A. Well——

Q. How do they compete? A. Well, it is the way you handle a customer, the interest you take in him, the way you handle him. [736] It is the products that you have to offer, the range of products, like charge card, which was something that whenever this was going on, that nobody else had. Things like—oh, this program that we have where you skip a monthly payment on your installment account. These kind of things.

This, to me, is what is involved in competition between banks. It is a question of which bank is the more innovative and which bank is more—gives the impression to the customer of being more interested in his problems. That is what really is a bank. It is the people in the bank.

Q. Am I correct then in assuming that you don't feel that the price charged for checking-account service, the interest rate charged on loans, the interest rate paid on savings deposits, that those things aren't really as important, as far as competition goes? A. I didn't say that. I said they are not as important as the others. I didn't mean to say they weren't important; because obviously you couldn't charge $20 a check and expect to compete with somebody who charged something else. I mean, say, a nickel a check. But, I would think that what generally happens in the area of charges is one bank will set out some kind of schedule on the service charges, and everybody else will follow, or decide whether they don't want to [737] follow. Mostly, they follow. Banks are notorious at being followers.

Q. Well, let's take your subsidiary banks. Now, these are the ones, just to make sure we are clear on the terms, that you own a majority of the voting stock? A. Uh-huh.

Q. Who sets the service charge on checking accounts for your subsidiary banks? A. Just to be sure we understand ourselves about subsidiaries, are we talking about Avondale, Emory and East Point?

Q. That is what I am talking about, yes. A. All right. Well, then those would be set by Howard Starks or Bennett Brown, dependent upon—well, by Howard.

Q. How about loan policies and rates to the extent that those are fixed? A. Well, I am not a lending officer, and I really get over my head when I get to talking about loan rates.

Q. I was just wondering who determines those for your subsidiary banks? A. We set forth schedules, which I am sure you have seen that list the recommended rates, but on different types of loans from time to time, depending [738] upon the price of money, and these individual lending officers have to, within their judgment, lend money, depending upon whether it is—the risk involved and other things, to where they go up or down from that recommended rate. But, whether—well, go ahead.

Q. Well, just one last. How about the interest paid on savings accounts at your subsidiary banks; who would set that figure? A. We do.

Q. C&S National Bank? A. Uh-huh, Avondale, Emory and East Point?

Q. Yes, sir. Now, I think you testified earlier that part of the understanding between the correspondent associate, the banks you called correspondent associates, and C&S National Bank or the C&S Holding Company is that C&S will manage the bank? A. Uh-huh.

Q. Or, at least will influence the management. Does that management include making decision as to interest rates, service charges, et cetera? A. With the president of the particular bank, yes.

Q. Well, let me get that clear. Who, in fact, sets the service charge to be paid or to be charged on checking accounts at one of your correspondent [739] associate banks? A. Well, I think what would actually happen, and I believe, as I recall what actually happened was that somebody else decided to go—to change. I believe it was the Trust Company of Georgia, but I am not sure, decided the last time to make the last change that was made. And I don't know that anybody was—it was suggested by anybody. As soon as everybody knew that they had done it, everybody else says, "We have got to follow it. We have got to stay in line with them." None of the places that I served as a director actually discussed it, to my recollection. If it had come up while I was there, what I would have done, and which I am sure whoever was responsible for it did, was to sit down and talk with the president of that particular bank and say, "What is this going to mean to you competitively in this area where your market is. And do you think you ought to go up or do you think you shouldn't," and the decision would be made there, and you go from there. I believe, if I am not correct—well, no, go ahead.

Q. Well, if I can try to pin you down just a little bit. A. You can't pin me down.

Q. Maybe I can. Who would actually make the [740] decision, who would actually make the decision? Would it be the president, would it be the board of directors or would it be the C&S National people? A. Well, it would be the president, because here is the guy that would have come up in our organization that would have known whether we made the right or wrong decision, and when he saw what we were going to do, he would have probably followed it.

Q. But he would have made the decision? A. In the final analysis, yes, because he is the guy on the scene. He is the guy who deals with the local customer. He is really the guy who knows more about customer relations than we do, sitting down here in downtown.

Q. In a similar situation, would your branch managers have authority to make such a decision? A. They would certainly be consulted.

Q. Would they have the authority to actually make the decision? A. No, I don't think they would have the authority, but they would—their views would be given serious consideration, I would say would be an important element in the decision.

Q. Now, I think you testified just a few minutes ago that all the charges in all your correspondent [741] associate banks are not the same; am I correct there? A. I don't know, did I——

Q. Do you know whether or not, for instance, the checking account charges—— A. I believe they are all the same; I am not positive.

Q. The loan rates and policies, are those identical, to your knowledge? A. Well, the ranges are similar, but not identical. If you will take a classification of—now, to satisfy ourselves, we took all the business loans in all of the five or six, whatever banks are involved in this thing, and we listed them out off the computer, because they were all on the computer. We listed them out by amount and by rate, and it showed a reasonable range of rates, comparing each one of these six five-percent banks with the nearest C&S National Bank or affiliate, subsidiary. I don't know whether they presented it or not? I don't know, but it showed us that there was nobody—there was nobody who was just simply sticking right by the rate charge, that the individual circumstances were being taken into consideration.

Q. Let me show you, Mr. Hall, a memorandum which is marked Government's Exhibit 191. A. Uh-huh.

[742] Q. Do you recognize that? A. I believe I do.

Q. Can you tell me for sure? Can you look at it? A. I recognize it.

Q. Can you look on Page 2 of that memorandum, the last paragraph? A. Yep.

Q. Could you read that for us? A. C&S five-percent banks?

Q. Yes. A. "compete across the board with C&S National and its affiliates and with each other for all customers of all types and in all locations for all types of business. And, of course, this goes the other way, too. The same goes for banking hours, new bank office sites and locations of other facilities. There are no exceptions to this general rule."

Q. That is, to me, that sounds inconsistent with what you just said. How would you—— A. Well, I thought I——

Q. Explain that. A. Well, I tried to explain it by saying that they compete between each other for the initial contact.

Q. All right. A. Keeping in mind that the most important thing [743] is the customer to get to the bank that is the most convenient for him, that is the best for him; that is, the most satisfied customer is the best customer. So, that is the competition. Once they are there, there is no real reason to talk about competing anymore to try to get that customer away from one other bank, unless there is a change in the customer's situation, unless he moves or goes to work for somebody else or something like that.

Q. So they compete up to a point? A. Right, they don't compete to the same extent that—they don't compete with each other to the same extent that they compete with the First National Bank or the Trust Company or the Fulton, because, again, as I see it, they got one product and the Fulton National Bank's got another product.

Q. Mr. Hall, in your mind as a banker, what is the area of most competition between banks? Would it be fair to say that the most competition between banks is in acquiring the customer in the first instance? A. I think so.

Q. As opposed to keeping him? A. I think so. Probably, yes, I think that's right.

Mr. Sims: We have no further [744] questions, Your Honor.

Redirect Examination

By Mr. Hodgson

Q. Mr. Hall, that document from which Mr. Frisbie had you reading—Mr. Sims, excuse me. Mr. Sims had you reading, what is the date of it on the front page? A. July 12th, 1972.

[745] Q. What is its stated topic? A. Anti-trust actions between C&S banks.

Q. What is the reason that was distributed? A. It was distributed at the request of the attorneys.

Q. Mr. Hall, suppose the Branch Manager of one of the national banks made a compelling case to have his rate charges or any other factors of competition deviate from those of other branches. What consideration would be given in that case? A. Well, you said compelling. If it was a compelling reason, he would probably be listened to. I am not sure that I visualize a compelling reason.

Q. But he would be listened to? A. He sure would, I think that is the key to all of this, these are the guys that are face to face with a customer, the people that know better than anybody else what the customer wants and what he will pay for it. You have got to listen to them.

Q. And if though your separate President might have the legal power to make the final decision and would in fact, have it, if he were trying to make a compelling case and didn't get it, what is the likelihood of his changing your mind? A. Nil.

[746] Q. N-I-L? A. N-I-L.

Q. Now as a matter of fact, Mr. Hall, you had some other de novo correspondent associate banks around the state in the past, have you not? A. Yes.

Q. Would you name them? A. Yes, yes, my memory is not as good as it should be. In addition to the ones I mentioned before, what did I say before, Dalton and Henry County. We also started de novo associate correspondents in Chatham County, just outside of Savannah, and I believe two in Richmond County—Augusta. The C&S Bank, Richmond County and I believe Citizens State Bank, if I recall it.

Q. Commercial and Savings? A. Yes, but anyway, both of them were banks that were started de novo and both of them are banks that were, then were merged into the Citizens & Southern National Bank after this suit was started.

Q. Each of these banks were started de novo and spearheaded by Citizens & Southern National Bank people? A. They were exactly the same as the South DeKalb or any of the rest of them.

Q. Or Belvedere? A. Belvedere.

[747] Q. Each of the five that are the subject of this litigation, with respect to the mergers, are de novo; are they not? A. Right.

Q. Without exception? A. Right.

Mr. Hodgson: No further questions.

The Court: You may step down.

Mr. Hodgson: I will call Mr. Dan Handley.

Whereupon,

ROBERT DANIEL HANDLEY, JR.,

was called as a witness by and on behalf of the Defendants, and having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination

By Mr. Hodgson

Q. State your full name for the record, please. A. Robert Daniel Handley, Jr.

Q. What is your position with the Citizens & Southern National Bank, Dan? A. Executive Vice President, Branch Supervision.

Q. How long have you been in charge of Branch Supervision? A. Since 1968.

Q. What was your job before that date? A. Prior to that, I was Personnel Director for [748] the Citizens & Southern system.

Q. When did you take that job? A. That was approximately 1963—'64.

Q. What was your job before that? A. Prior to that, I was in the Controller's Department of the bank. Prior to that, I was with the bank in Macon, transferred here in 1961.

Q. When did you start with the bank? A. 1948.

Q. Did you have any personal experience with any of these banks getting organized? A. Just one.

Q. Which one was that? A. That was known as C&S South DeKalb.

Q. Where is it located? A. On Candler Road. It was a result of a piece of property that I believe Howard Starks had mentioned earlier today in his testimony, that he acquired in anticipation of the laws being changed that would permit us to either branch or have an affiliate bank. And in our responsibilities in branch supervision, we noticed that this area was developing rapidly and probably would need a bank before these laws could come into being.

He bought two pieces of property, in fact, one where the present bank is located on Candler Road and a [749] piece at Candler Road, I-20 and Rainbow Drive located adjacent to the Candler Shopping Center.

He thought the time was right when the area needed a bank. I contacted Warren Berry, one of the Branch Managers, South Expressway office, and tried to pick those people who are experienced to a point and could take on additional responsibilities and asked him if he would like to organize for us a Citizens & Southern Bank of South DeKalb. He was excited about this opportunity. My instructions to him were to look at the area, get with some other people back in the area and get with some other people, get with some other folks in the bank to see and decide what kind of bank we might need there, to determine what organizers we would want to include in the bank and Warren, working with Don Ingram, in our branch supervision, and Mr. Skinner, who is President of C&S Bank, Avondale, and Bill Jones who was, at that time, President of C&S Bank of Avondale came up with a list of organizers that they thought would, as we like to say, would be, I think, our kind of people who had the same kinds of interest we do in banking services and that we could work with. These people were checked out as our customers——

Q. How do you mean checked out? A. By that, I mean checked out the background of the people the best we can through the regular research [750] access to be sure that the regulatory authorities, when we go to put in an application, there would be no question about the organizers. That way, we want the very best. This list was submitted to Mr. Lane. Of course, he knew some of them, some of them he didn't know. Based on our recommendation, he approved them.

We then, Warren, I asked Warren then to think in terms of the stock distribution to limit the Directors of the bank to 500 shares a piece, that he himself would have available, 5% of the bank, that they would like to distribute in the community, customers of the bank, neighbors of the bank, in small amounts approximately 45% of the bank. The remaining stock we would like to distribute among the employees of the C&S Bank and its associates.

The stock was over-subscribed. We had to cut it back. Essentially that breakdown was accomplished.

Q. Had there been any previous efforts that you are aware of to organize a bank in that area? A. We found out that there had been. I think Warren found out that when we started stirring around out there, a group of people previously considered it and I think even approached, this I am not sure of, approached the Superintendent of Banks and he had not been willing to or encourage them to carry it any further. [751] I might say that when Warren went out there, he found that both of these sites needed banks and it was our plan and we did go to the Superintendent of Banking and get the necessary application to file for the banks and we also at the same time asked for branch applications. We thought that it was desirable to apply for a bank and the branch at the same time. I guess our appraisal of the neighborhood and area was good because at that time, either the week before we started or the week after, we were never sure, First National Bank of Atlanta was sponsoring a bank out there that has later been merged into First National Bank of Atlanta. It was a de novo branch of theirs. We did submit after getting all the necessary data, put together by research department of the bank, the necessary date, we did submit it to the Superintendent of Banking and to the FDIC.

The Superintendent of Banks, I believe, called Joe Hall and said that we have got a problem, we've got two banks that want to get in on the same corner and I need to ask you to withdraw part of it. So, I went over to see Mr. Jackson. Warren went with me. At that meeting, Mr. Jackson said we have got this bank that's being sponsored by First National Bank and that has an application where your branch application is. We would like for you to withdraw that and if you will, we'll approve the bank. [752] We felt very strongly that the branch was also needed and we elected not to withdraw.

He subsequently did turn it down, but did approve the bank. We had the organization meeting in the bank, in our bank, C&S National Bank in one of the rooms there with the organizers, Don Ingram who again, worked in branch supervision and has worked with this bank since its inception, Warren Berry, who has since been transferred to Milledgeville to assume the Presidency of C&S Bank of Baldwin County in Milledgeville.

Currently, the bank is being run on a day-to-day operation by the Assistant Vice President under the direction of Mr. Don Ingram.

[753] Q. Of branch supervision? A. Of branch supervision. We, incidentally, have had, or have had now for a year and a half, approval of that branch that was originally turned down by the superintendent, but it has been hung up in this litigation. Because, in the approval was requirements for additional capital, equity capital, and we have recently been able to get, through all of the legal requirements, I guess, the superintendent to change that to debt. And this probably will be opened, and those customers will be served. This, of course, is ideal. Now, it is necessary because this little bank is bursting at the seams and can't serve its customers.

Q. Mr. Handley, I would like, at this point in time, to review some areas of services, mostly within the bank, in general terms that branch supervision may or may not offer to its branches, and, in your instance, to your correspondent associates in the Atlanta area, and ask you as briefly as possible to describe the areas of services furnished here.

Accounting. A. Well, currently we do all of the accounting for—by that, the bookkeeping, the proof and transit operation, the general bookkeeping of the branches, the affiliates and the five-percenter associates, in our [754] central operations area. We pick up this work by carrier, either by a helicopter or by truck, depending on what route schedules work the best.

Q. Are these all handled in the same computer as were your branches and the other? A. Oh, yes.

Q. Other accounts in this area? A. Oh, yes.

Q. Credit, credit administration. A. All of the branches in the affiliate banks and five-percenter banks in Atlanta divide themselves off into credit review committees. That is, review committees after the fact. They meet once a week to review two things, that is, new loans that they have made as to the creditworthiness, things that they might not have picked up in tying them up, and maybe self-criticizing what they might have done better to make it a better loan. They review those loans that have gone sour since they were put on the books.

Q. Do they have any assistance from your staff? A. Oh, yes, we have a senior credit man who attends each of these meetings, offer technical and professional credit comment and criticism. We provide for each of the branches in the banks the credit review service where we go out and will review all of the loans [755] on line sheets, making criticisms and suggestions. And then give them back to the branch manager or the bank president and ask them to review them and take whatever corrective action is necessary.

When this is done, we, in branch supervision, go back and go out with these credit sheets to determine what helps can be done to make them better loans.

Q. To what degree do you utilize comparative performance figures? A. Extensively.

Q. Comparative with what? A. With each other.

Q. Five percenters as well as branches? A. Right, and the banks, we——

Q. What about a loan gone so bad that it needs serious collection effort? A. Well, we have, we think, a pool of people who can get in and help some. Of course, some of our people in branches and some of them in the banks have varying levels of experience. Some of them can handle situations, that is, branch managers or bank presidents can handle a certain type of credit without too much difficulty. Then there are those who don't have particular experience in a certain-type critical situation, and we are able to step in with our credit [756] people and maybe work with them, or even just take over the line itself. I don't mean take it off the books, but I mean take over the loan, as far as the customer is concerned.

Q. The collection of it? A. And trying to get collection of it.

Q. Participations. A. Well, we are constantly in participation with the banks, particularly in this area where this is just tremendous real-estate land development and commercial construction. All of our banks need this.

Q. Payroll accounts. A. We do all the payroll accounting as far as credit, too. We do this; we have in a, in our branch supervision, what we consider, I guess, as a consumer-loan expert that follows constantly the type loans that are going on in the banks and the branches. If we detect what we think is a problem, a credit problem, he will go out and review samples of the accounts and procedures to be sure that we are not getting off-track in any of the offices and if we need some re-training of the people, pull them back in, or, if we have made a mistake putting a guy out, we put him in another spot where he can be re-trained.

Q. Now, the general, large area of personnel. [757] A. Well, personnel, of course, I think that——

Q. You were in charge of systemwide personnel? A. That is correct. And we recruit personnel in the system for all C&S banks, and we do utilize all offices for training. We get a man in that is a career trainee or management associate, as we call them; we may take one and put him out at Tucker to learn the initial banking, I mean put him at Emory. We may put him at the South Expressway; we bring him into the credit department for cross-training purposes. That is so that when we have a branch manager's job, a new branch that we will go into of the National banks or any of the affiliate associates, we look through the personnel roster of all C&S associates and officers and we attempt to pick the best man, regardless of where he is, and make this job available to him.

Q. Do you furnish any sort of emergency personnel pool? A. Yes, sir, we have a group in the branch supervision. We do —it is a constant pool—but in the summertime—hire school-teachers and this sort of thing for clerical fill-in support, and that is essentially the fill-in support, of course. If a guy at a bank has some—a lot of people out at school or what-have-you, we can send temporary officers out for help.

[758] Q. Who does the payroll for the five percenters and branches? A. Our bank payroll department, all the same.

Q. Fringe benefits, vacations, holidays, service clubs. A. Administered by the assistant personnel department.

Q. Deposit accounts, both demand and savings; are they handled likewise? A. Yes, that's right. In one building where they are all handled by the same people.

Q. Where is that? A. Well, we have two locations now. One is at Mitchell Street, and we have recently moved part of it to Northlake Mall for transportation convenience.

Q. New features of deposits and savings accounts are made available to each alike? A. Yes.

Q. What is ready reserve? A. Ready reserve is an overdraft feature that we promote, too, on approved credit, where a person can apply for, and, based on his creditworthiness, can be given a line where he can overdraw his account. It is transferred from his charge account to his checking account.

[759] For instance, if a person had a ready-reserve account at the C&S Bank of Sandy Springs, and had a ready-reserve account and overdrew at $200, we will say, and then $200 would be transferred from his C&S charge account to his checking account automatically.

Q. Well, tell me something about your C&S charge account. What is that? Is that Master Charge or BankAmericard? A. That is our independent charge. We are members of the—I believe, the I-Card.

Q. Interbank? A. Yes.

And, of course, this is available to anyone, obviously, other than deposit customers. We have in our bank in the Atlanta area five 24-hour banking machines that take deposits, make loans.

Q. That is your Instant Banker? A. That is the Instant Banker. We have one that is located at Sandy Springs, and the other four or five are located at branches. The attempt was to place them around where they would be available to as many of C&S bank customers as possible. Now, this is activated by a C&S charge card, I-Card holders, where their credit has been pre-approved for this sort of thing.

[760] Q. C&S charge cards issued by the C&S National Bank? A. Yes, it is.

Q. Now, in the area of general administration of these operations, what about the making of goals and projections and objectives by these officers, branch managers? A. We believe that the way to run good banks is to encourage people to set goals for themselves, and then have another party to review them, and then periodically check them. To that end, we devised a system several years ago of setting goals. We call it the goalpost, for lack of a better identification. At the end of each year, we set goals for next year in these categories, along with forecasting the budget. And I think the goal-setting is a vehicle to set your sights on how many customers you can serve as opposed to forecasting as to how many dollars of business you will do. And we then, we, by branch supervision, I mean we review with the managers and the presidents of the banks quarterly the results of their progress as it relates to a goal. And we also make this known to their associates, by that, their branch-manager associates and presidents, competition.

Q. Do you have any appraisal of performance of [761] managers and presidents? A. We do.

Q. Other than these goals? A. Well, we do. We do that on the operating statements, that is, the return on assets, the loan-loss ratios, again, the goals of people that they serve, and also, informally, the customer service. And this is sort of an intangible thing in that we get—obviously, we don't get too many, but we get more than we want, that is, customers' complaints. When they can't get satisfaction, for instance, if a customer calls Bobby Morris, the president out at the C&S Chamblee and he can't get satisfaction or he thinks he can't, he will probably end up calling Mr. Lane or Dick Kattel or myself to step in and see what we can do. Usually everything has been done, but this is what the customer is asking for.

Q. Now is this reflected in salaries or other compensation and rewards to the officers and managers? A. Well, I think this is the consideration that we take in reviewing the salaries of the presidents of the bank and the managers of the branches. That is the results for the year, the ability to produce a profit, to generate new business, all these things.

Q. Mechanically, though, Mr. Handley, how do [762] you affect, let's say, the president's salary at Chamblee, once you have made these appraisals? How did you do it with Mr. Morris? A. Well, I would meet—some of them were different. This one was where, once a year, in the late fall or early winter, I would go out and sit down with the president of the bank and two or three of the directors and review with them the performance of the president, and we would recommend to the board a salary based on performance for the president. And then, of course, the president of the bank knows the performance of his subordinates better, and, based on previous conversation that I would have with the president, we would come up with the figures.

Q. These recommendations inevitably followed or not? A. Yes.

Q. Describe the advisory director function that you filled on occasion. Let me ask you this, on what boards in the Atlanta area did you serve as an advisory director? A. Well, when Howard Starks moved to retail banking, we had an awful lot of things going, so it was necessary for us to spread our time. So some of the boards I don't attend regular, but I try to put in [763] appearances at the board meetings, irregularly, all of them irregularly. But there's somebody from our department that attends the meeting, of course. There are certain times when it just can't be possible, but, in addition to that, I meet with the board members over the telephone, or we might run into each other or some other reason.

Q. All of this in addition to your constant— A. Oh, yes.

Q. ——relations with the management and staff? A. Yes.

Q. How available is all of the packages of sales promotions and public relations and market research, literature that you have in the National Bank? How available is that to the five percenters? A. Automatic. By that, anything—I mean anything we have as a new sales tool, any new product, any new service.

Q. Helicopters. A. Oh, yes.

Q. Ground transportation. A. Yes.

Q. Central money vault. A. Right.

Q. Centralized purchasing. [764] A. Right.

Q. Equipment. A. Right.

Q. Security system. A. Right. Yeah, in that connection we do—with the security problems now, we, I guess, have had security problems, and we have a security department in the bank that assists—well, really, has written a security manual that is used by all of the C&S banks and branches, and is audited by our security people to be sure they are following the procedures we had recommended and set up, all the equipment that is necessary, even beyond the—I believe that is required by the F.D.I.C.

[765] Q. Blanket bond? A. Yes.

Q. Installment loan billing? A. Yes.

Q. Educational programs? A. Oh, yes.

Q. Including the law seminars? A. Yes, and of course, when we participate, not only in in-banking training, but when we use some of the management schools, Harvard, Stanford and so forth, we have reserved for us spots, each year our educational people go through, we pick the people who can benefit most by this. We pick people, regardless of whether they are in the national bank, branches or affiliates, or five percenters.

Q. Money management? A. Yes.

Q. Supplying capital needs? A. When necessary.

Q. When you say supplied, do any of these officers, no distinction is ever made as to whether they are five percenters, national or affiliates? A. No.

Mr. Hodgson: He is your witness.

Cross-Examination

[766] By Mr. Frisbie

Q. Mr. Handley, your testimony sounded an awful lot like the affidavit I saw with your name attached to it at one time, so I could follow it very closely. Which banks come under the supervision of the branch supervision department now? Which categories of banks? A. Well, in that connection, it is the branches in Atlanta, that is the City of Atlanta and recently, those that might have been organized in DeKalb County. The five banks that I guess are in question here today, Tucker, The C&S Bank of Cobb County, C&S Bank, Rockdale County.

Q. Are the affiliates also under branch supervision? A. Yes, I'm sorry.

Q. Do you have any dealings at all with what has been classified here today as regular correspondents, no ownership of five per cent? A. No, sir.

Q. Are you the person today who, in your department is the one right now that works closely with the correspondent associates? A. Yes.

Q. If, speaking very generally, if a correspondent associate bank had some kind of problem, they want to discuss with C&S National, would you—only I would say this, only in that geographical area that I identified. [767] A. Okay.

Q. I understand. So, would you be the person in that department that would be most likely to be contacted for any problems? A. Indirectly or directly?

Q. How many—excuse me. A. We have three divisions in the department and sometimes they go to a division.

Q. How many people are in that branch supervision department? A. We have three division men, we have a—we have three what we consider commercial credit men. That are men who are expert in commercial credit. We have personnel or consumer credit and we have an operations man. That's the man that has experience in the operation of tellers, all the procedures that—I didn't count them, that is it.

Q. Would be about a dozen or so? A. Yes.

Q. Do you own any stock in any of the banks involved in this lawsuit? A. Yes, I do.

Q. Five per cent banks? A. Yes, I do. Not all of them, but some of them.

Q. Did you take out any loans to purchase this [768] stock? A. Some of them I did, some of them I didn't.

Q. Did you get a preferential interest rate? A. Yes, I did.

Q. And you still own some of the stock at this time? A. Oh, yes, I do.

Q. We have gone through these services pretty thoroughly. I need to get some dates at this time about some of these programs. Can you tell me approximately when the goal post program started? A. Yes, that probably started out, this is three years ago.

Q. '69. When did the meetings that have been referred to as the Wednesday morning meetings or credit meetings, is that the same meeting? A. No.

Q. They are two separate meetings? A. Right.

Q. Credit meetings follow the Wednesday morning meetings? A. Well, for clarification, Wednesday morning meeting is a regular meeting that Mills Lane or the President of the bank, is irregular or regularly held, which with the Branch Manager, President of the Bank and [769] major department heads come down at 6:30 or 7 o'clock for a meeting. The reason many of them, for convenience sake, their credit meetings are held following this so there may be some on Thursday, some on Monday, some on Tuesdays.

Q. Do you know when these Wednesday meetings started? A. Before I came to Atlanta, 1961.

Q. Do you know when the credit meetings started? A. Before I started in Branch Supervision. This was in existence in Howard Starks' organization. We obviously have had to expand it because of the people.

Q. Did you start the program of personal and bank performance appraisals that has been referred to? A. Personal?

Q. Was it started while you were in Branch Supervision? A. I started the personal bank appraisals, I think probably I started an attempt to objectively evaluate branch managers and bank Presidents, I would say, yes, I have attempted to do that.

Q. Do you know when the first Director was put on the Board of a correspondent associate? A. Of——

Q. Who was an officer of a C&S National? A. Who the first officer of the C&S National [770] Bank that was put on?

Q. In period of time, do you know when that time was? A. No.

Q. When did the customer service audits begin? A. That was something I also put in, I guess about 1968 or '69 to evaluate the customer service.

Q. Now when did the credit audit start? A. That goes back—that goes back prior to this time, 1968. That was in operation and we had that in full blast.

Q. When did you start rating the performance of each correspondent associate President? A. Well, on a formal basis?

Q. Was it started during the time you were Branch Supervisor? A. I don't think so. This is my system of evaluating.

Q. Did you ever have the power to determine his level of discretionary cash profit sharing? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You do determine that? A. Yes.

Q. Was the President aware that you have the power to do this, President of the correspondent associate [771] banks? A. I can't answer that. I would assume so. Mr. Parker did.

Q. Did you actually review the President's salaries and make recommendations to their Boards? A. To some directly, some indirectly.

Q. Was your approval required by that Board? A. I believe they expected me to make this evaluation and determine for them, based on my comparison of their performance between bank Presidents and branch managers.

Q. Did the President know you had this power or influence also? A. I would assume so.

Q. Would you think it would be reasonable to assume that this might have had some bearing on the fact whether these Presidents followed your suggestions or advice in these appraisal meetings, goal post meetings you had? A. I would think that they would probably want to do well on the criteria that we used because it obviously results in reward.

Q. When you were talking about the credit services that you have, I believe you said something to the effect that the Citizens & Southern credit review staff would [771A] analyze and rate banks, using uniform set of criteria? A. Yes.

Q. Does this have the effect of stabilizing the range within which the price is paid for loans by customers of the correspondent associates, that will be made? A. It shouldn't, this review is primarily, I would say primarily, by that I would say the review itself is 100% to determine the credit worthiness of the borrower or company and how well the loan is being buttoned up or administered, the credit review, and that we really concern ourselves with credit worthiness.

Q. But you stated also that you review the comparative performance of all banking officers in approving charge-offs, probable losses, things like that? A. I said review performance based on operating statements. The assets are made up of a multitude of in-put, that is control of expenses, ability to gain deposits so you can rent it out, this sort of effective utilization of people. I'm looking really at the return on assets, rather than any particular item.

Q. When you are reviewing comparative performance between these different persons at different bank branches, and locations, don't you think this would have the effect of stabilizing the range wherein the price is paid for loans would be made by correspondent associates? [772] A. No, sir, I wouldn't think so. I think the main thing, at least I preach this, that the way to make the bank prosperous to solicit deposits. If you get deposits, you can make money. If you can control your expenses, you can make money. Some banks, some branches are in heavy loan demand areas, some aren't.

Q. Is most income from banks, does the most income from banks normally come from loans? A. Normally.

[773] Mr. Frisbie: Your Honor, I doubt if we are going to have very many more questions for Mr. Handley. If we could have about a five minute recess at this time, we might forestall further questions.

The Court: All right. We will take a five minute recess.

(Whereupon, a recess was had.)

By Mr. Frisbie

Q. Mr. Handley, we were talking about this discretionary cash profit sharing program. Who funds this program? A. It is funded by the various banks involved.

Q. Who does the money that—let's take the Chamblee, for instance. If Chamblee contributes X dollars into this fund, who does that money belong to? A. To the officers and employees of the Chamblee Bank.

Q. Isn't it true that the Board of Directors are the only persons who have the authority to distribute these funds of Chamblee? A. This money is and—an anticipation is made, and this money is accrued, and then it is disbursed. The employees get a fixed amount and the officers, based on performance. This money is just as the salary, the final authority, I am sure, rests with the Board.

[774] Mr. Frisbie: I have no further questions.

Redirect Examination

By Mr. Hodgson

Q. I have just one question, Mr. Handley. If a customer of the East Point Bank or of the National Bank were to be in Chamblee and wanted to make a deposit to his account in East Point or National at the location of the Chamblee office, would this be possible? A. Yes, sir, and it's frequently done.

Q. How would it be handled? A. Well, this deposit is taken. Of course, cashing of checks is no problem. The deposit poses a little additional problem. The deposit is accepted and a receipt is given, a receipt—I forgot the wording, the wording has been approved by the regulatory authority, saying the deposit is received for transmittal, but it is transmitted to the central bookkeeping department where the credit is given to the person's account.

Q. The customer gets his receipt right there? A. Right.

Mr. Hodgson: Thank you, sir.

Recross-Examination

By Mr. Frisbie

Q. On that same subject, Mr. Handley, actually it is not deposited if you drop in the Chamblee—actually [775] the money is not deposited at that—if you have your account at Emory? A. Oh, no.

Q. Is that correct? A. That's correct. Actually, it is accepted for deposit at East Point, I think, as an example he used. It is accepted at Chamblee for credit to the man's account at East Point, and actually has to be transmitted.

Q. All right. So, actually, it goes by mail or by carrier? A. Carrier, our normal carrier, right, just along with our normal work, is sent to the central proof.

Mr. Frisbie: Thank you.

Mr. Hodgson: Judge, it is five o'clock. We just as soon suspend for the day, if it suits you.

The Court: Well, if we are on schedule, all right.

Mr. Hodgson: As far as we are concerned, Judge, I think we are going to meet our schedule just fine.

The Court: Suits me, too. We will stand in recess until 10:00 o'clock tomorrow.

(Whereupon, the proceedings were recessed until 10:00 o'clock A.M., September 29, 1972.)

[776] Volume V

(Title omitted in printing)

Transcript of proceedings had before The Honorable Charles A. Moye, Jr., Judge, United States District Court, on the 29th day of September, 1972, commencing at 10:00 o'clock A. M., in Atlanta, Fulton County, Georgia.

[777] Mr. Doyle: I will call Warren Berry to the stand.

Whereupon,

WARREN L. BERRY

was called as a witness by and on behalf of the defendants, and having first been duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination

By Mr. Doyle

Q. State your name for the record, please. A. Warren Landem Berry.

Q. Where are you employed; in what capacity? A. I am employed as president of the C&S Bank, Milledgeville and president of the C&S South DeKalb Bank.

Q. Would you outline your employment history before you became president of C&S South DeKalb Bank? A. Well, I had been with the C&S for, as of this December would have been sixteen years. During that time I was branch manager at the South Expressway office for a couple of years. I was branch manager previous to that at the Roswell-Wieuca office for approximately four years. Previous to that period of time, I did various things, including assistant branch manager, Stewart-Lakewood office, Cascade Heights branch. New business division, downtown Atlanta new [778] business, I was manager of that department. I at one time took an animated display throughout the State of Georgia called "The Magic City" and displayed that to various banks.

Q. When were you first selected to be president of C&S South DeKalb, what year? A. That was in 1969.

Q. Who first selected you to be president of C&S South DeKalb? A. Well, Dan Handley approached me about the possibility of me becoming president.

[779] Q. And this was prior to the organization of the bank? A. Yes.

Q. Would it refresh your recollection, Warren, the bank was organized in 1967 instead of '69? Is that not right? A. I don't believe that is correct.

Q. Am I wrong? Okay. A. I believe it was 1969.

Q. When you were first approached by Mr. Handley and talked about the organization of the new bank, were you encouraged by him to purchase stock in the bank? A. Yes, very definitely.

Q. And did you do so? A. Yes.

Q. Was it financed? A. Yes.

Q. At a favorable rate? A. I would say so.

Q. How were the directors of your bank selected? A. Well, I got together with some of the other officers of the C&S National Bank, and also the correspondent associates and the affiliate banks, and tried to find the best people in that area. I didn't know a [780] lot of people in the South DeKalb area, and I tried to determine who would be the best people in that area with help, from such people as Don Ingram, who at that time, I believe, was president of the C&S Emory Bank; Bill Jones, who was the president of the C&S Belvedere Bank; and other individuals, including Dan Handley in branch supervision.

Q. How was the stock in your bank placed? A. We placed it—well, first of all, when it was determined that we were going to be putting up a bank in South DeKalb, I had numerous requests for stock, and we tried to allocate that stock between friends of the C&S, employees of the C&S, officers of the C&S, and we also tried to allocate some of it to the community, people in the community through the board of directors.

Q. In selecting directors and in selling the stock, were the potential directors and stockholders assured of C&S management and support of the new bank? A. Certainly.

Q. Were eventual merger anticipations discussed at that time, as and when the law permitted? A. Yes. I believe that some of the directors at our organizational meeting did bring up that possibility.

Q. When you went out after the physical facility [781] was up, did you feel like you were leaving C&S when you went to C&S South DeKalb? A. No.

Q. I have got stacked up here a bunch of guides and manuals, which, for the record, are Defendant's Exhibits 270, 298, 309, 310, 311 and 312. Did you have the benefit of these guides and manuals in your C&S South DeKalb Bank when you were there? A. Yes, I did.

Q. Do you or do you not agree that the operations and policies of C&S South DeKalb are subject to C&S National Bank's management and control through you, as you heard it testified to by Joe Hall yesterday? A. I would say that that would be true.

Q. Do you regard the common logo and all the other common identification with C&S as important to C&S South DeKalb Bank? A. Yes, very definitely.

Q. Do you find customers in your bank and other branches of the C&S Bank using the offices interchangeably? [782] A.

Yes, very often. I think also that many, many people put deposits in that bank simply because it's C&S.

Q. All right, sir. Would you tell the judge how the loan to deposit ratio has run at South DeKalb? A. Well, it's a very high lending area and as a result, the loans have increased deposits or been greater than deposits in the area.

Q. You have more loans than you have deposits? A. Yes.

Q. You have handled that through what means? A. We sold some of these loans to C&S National Bank. When you have banks, you do have some banks that are deposit gatherers, some banks that are lending banks, and by our affiliation with the C&S, we can go ahead and service the particular customers in that area.

Q. If we had not filed the application to merge when we did, would your bank's correspondent associate relationship with Citizens and Southern have continued as it has in the past, from your standpoint? A. I think so.

Q. To what extent is C&S South DeKalb facing competition from new branches of other Atlanta banks? A. Well, I would say extensively. We have several branches that are already up in our area, have [783] been established within the last couple of years.

Q. You have been president of two correspondent associates and manager of several branches of C&S. What is the difference between them?

The Court: Between the ones which he has managed, or between them and something else?

By Mr. Doyle

Q. What is the difference between managing a branch as you have managed, and being a president of a correspondent associate, as you have been president? A. I would say primarily the only difference would be that you have a Board of Directors in the bank, in the bank that is an affiliate bank. Whereas, although at South DeKalb, I mean at South Expressway we even had a similar Board of Directors. There was a Board of Advisors in that branch, we had a Board as such. I would say there would really virtually be no difference in the two.

Q. Is there rivalry among C&S branch managers? A. I would say there was competition between branch managers, yes.

Q. In your opinion, would the granting of the mergers applied for here tend to lessen competition? A. No.

Mr. Doyle: He is your witness.

Mr. Kinkaid: Just a moment, if Your Honor [784] please.

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Kinkaid

Q. Mr. Berry, I'd like to show you a copy of a letter I received a few months ago, and ask you to notice that it's on the C&S Chamblee stationery, but take a look at it, and I would like to know whether you know of C&S South DeKalb sent out a similar letter to its customers. A. I don't recall sending out this specific letter, but I very well could have. I would have to see my letter to testify that I sent it out

Mr. Kinkaid: Your Honor, I have to apologize, we seem to be caught short-copied, if there is such a word, as this is the only one I have. That one, of course, was sent out by Bobby Morris of C&S Chamblee. Do you have any recollection of whether you sent out a letter in similar vein?

Mr. Doyle: Excuse me; can we have an opportunity to read this before examination goes on about it?

[785] Q. Do you recall sending out a similar letter to your customers? A. I do not but it could very well have happened. I don't recall it, no.

Q. I would like to show you a rather famous ad that appeared in the Tuesday issue of the Atlanta Journal November 23, 1971. I presume defense counsel is sufficiently familiar with that ad that we will not have to produce a copy for you.

Mr. Doyle: We know about it.

Q. Have you seen that ad before? A. Yes.

Q. Can you recall whether you may have—whether or not you sent a copy of that ad to your customers of South DeKalb? A. I think so.

Q. Mr. Berry, you indicated that so far as you were concerned, except for the existence of the board of directors, there was no difference between managing a C&S National branch and running C&S South DeKalb. A. I said virtually no difference.

Q. All right. What was some—since it is "virtually," are there some that you would like to—— A. Well, there are some legal and technical differences, but as far as the customer is concerned, [786] doing business with South DeKalb or Belvedere or Stewart-Lakewood, which is a branch, or South Expressway, it doesn't make any difference. It makes no difference to them.

Q. But, I think the question was what is the difference between managing these two operations? What was the difference to you? A. Well, you have—the end result is the same. In other words, the end result of accomplishing promotion of the C&S style of banking and our way of doing business is the same. The means that go about those ends might differ because of legal technicalities, but, other than that, that would be the primary difference.

Q. Weren't there differences between being a branch manager and running South DeKalb? Weren't there differences in terms of your ability to, for example, change the service charges on your checking accounts? A. Well, I would like to think that as a branch manager that I certainly, if I had a strong feeling about service charges or any other thing, that I might very well be able to prevail in making changes.

Q. Now—— A. However, I would like to add this, that I would be very careful before I would do it because I wouldn't want to confuse the customer.

[787] Q. Now, by that, I take it you mean that if at the South Expressway, for example, you had changed your service charge and a C&S National customer who happened to bank primarily with another C&S Bank branch determined that the South Expressway office was offering a different service charge, he would be a little upset, wouldn't he? A. Well, not—I don't know about being upset. I think it would be confusing.

Q. As a matter of fact, aren't the service charges offered at all C&S National branches in Atlanta, aren't they the same? A. In Atlanta.

Q. Uh-huh. A. I think so.

Q. And isn't that also true of interest paid on passbook savings accounts?

Mr. Hodgson: Excuse me. Your Honor, I am not sure if Mr. Kinkaid is asking the witness if he knows as a matter of fact that each of these rates and charges are the same at each of these branches or if he is asking for his conjecture as to what is going on at these branches. He has not testified that he has been at all of them.

[788] By Mr. Kinkaid

Q. Well, do you happen to know? A. I don't know for a fact, no.

Q. Now, if, as a matter of fact, they were all the same, would that surprise you?

Mr. Doyle: I object to that question as pure as conjecture, if the Court please. He has already stated he doesn't know the fact.

The Court: It wouldn't add much to the record to determine whether this witness would be surprised.

Mr. Kinkaid: Excuse me, sir, I couldn't hear.

The Court: I said it wouldn't add much to the record to determine whether this witness would be surprised.

Mr. Kinkaid: I don't think it adds much to the record as to whether he thinks the acquisition at South DeKalb would lessen competition, either, but that's beside the point, perhaps.

[789] Q. (By Mr. Kinkaid) As branch manager of South Expressway, could you have increased, for example, what was the rate you were paying on passbook savings accounts? A. I believe on passbook savings——

Q. Uh-huh. A. I'm not sure what you're referring to when you say passbook savings. What do you mean?

Q. This is the accounts where someone comes in, wants to put his money away. This is not a checking account, not a demand account, he's going to put his money away. He makes a deposit and the deposit is entered into some sort of record that is usually, as I understand it, called a passbook. He has paid a certain amount in. A. We have three different kinds of savings; passbook would not be one of those. We do not give customers records books on some of our type savings. So, ask me your question again.

Q. All right. Was there any type of savings account offered at South DeKalb on which South DeKalb was paying three and a half percent interest? A. We had a regular savings account that was paying three and a half percent interest.

Q. You called it regular? A. Regular savings account, right.

Q. Now, when you were at South Expressway, if in [790] your opinion it would have been some advantage to you to pay four or four and a half percent, would you have been able to do so?

Mr. Doyle: I object to that question, being objectionable on two grounds. One is asking if in his opinion, we have not testified, found out whether it would be in his opinion, and two, four and a half percent is legally impermissible under the law. I object to it on both grounds.

The Court: Overruled.

Mr. Kinkaid: I think his, what his state of mind as to this matter is, is quite relevant, Your Honor. He has testified as to the difference between managing branches and managing a correspondent associate, and that has to raise questions of how he approached both institutions.

The Court: Well, we have the substantial record on the question so far. I think that is an area where we can continue to get new questions even if we stay in session for a month. I'd like to try to pin it down to the ones that add to the record.

Now, as I understand the record so far with respect to the five percenters, there is a unanimity of testimony among the defendants' [791] witnesses that there is very little difference between their operation and that of a branch. Now, I take it that there is inherent in those answers, and I think the witnesses express it, the thought that, of course, there are legal differences, there is a corporation there. Over here is a part of the bank. Therefore, the difference, I think, would be developed in a necessity for, say, persuasion with respect to the five percenters as opposed to that with respect to the banks, the branches. And then, if that be the case, it seems to me that the question such as you're asking would be, we could get one if, in your opinion, there should be a diversion, a necessity for a diversion in procedure, rates, whatever is applicable to the five percenters as contrasted to the branches or the named business. Could you accomplish it? What would be the difficulty of accomplishing it? I think that is, of course, relevant to the record. I'd like for you to do it, let's get it in there once, develop it fully. I see we are going to have a number of witnesses in the same category. Let's see if we can handle it once and not go over it several, on several occasions.

That is the record, if you think that there is a—that it's not an accurate characterization [792] of it, then obviously you have got liberty to develop it further.

Mr. Kinkaid: No, I think that's really what I was trying to get to. I was going around Robin Hood's barn to get there. The main thing I was trying to establish is the difference in, the difference in operations seems to me would include whether or not the president of the associate can make these major competitive changes without being stopped by his C&S associate.

The Court: It seems to me——

Mr. Kinkaid: What, on the other hand, can branch managers do in the same regard.

The Court: Tell me if I'm wrong. The branch manager can do it because he would be, as I take it, the operating authority of the president, Board of Directors, whoever is running C&S National Bank. He has got that authority and he can do it. He may have an advisory board, still he would have the authority.

The legal authority in five percenters is in the Board of Directors, duly elected or appointed officers and the authority to make the change must come from there. Then, you have the intangibles of the trust, the confidence, the belief that C&S's [793] way of operating is the best way. He may believe that three and a half percent is better for the bank than four and a half or whatever the figure may be. He has got the legal problem to get over. I construe the testimony as saying that that has proved to be no great problem because all that has been necessary is for a good manager to exert, use his persuasive powers and explain the benefit of the C&S system, and it's just followed in due course.

Why don't we get the witness to say, give him a hypothetical, suppose he thought that there was a, that three and a half percent was too low to attract savings accounts in this neighborhood where other banks were offering whatever they might be offering. He wanted to go up a quarter of a percent. What would he do? Would he have problems? Has he run into any situations like that?

[794] Q. Well, Mr. Berry, if you had wanted to raise your regular savings account interest rate when you were at the South Expressway, what would have been the procedure that you would have followed? A. Well, I would have communicated with branch supervision, discussed the matter with them, tried to determine—I believe that they would have tried to determine from me my reasons for wanting to make this change, and I would have communicated with them to determine whether or not it would be in the best interest to do so.

Q. Now, if branch supervision indicated disapproval of this move, what would you have done? A. Well, I—that depends, really. I might have accepted that or I might have appealed it to someone else, if I felt very strongly about it. I might not have. I might have discussed the matter further. I probably would have. Unless I felt, depending on how strongly I felt on something like that.

Q. To whom would you have appealed if branch supervision didn't go along with you? A. Well, I might go to the president of the C&S National Bank.

The Court: Suppose he said no. Would you then go to your board of directors, [795] the board of directors of the five-percent bank and say that you have been advised to the contrary from the C&S; I feel strongly about this?

Mr. Doyle: Excuse me, if the Court please. That question was directed to the time he was a branch manager at South Moreland. A. South Expressway.

The Court: I apologize.

Mr. Kinkaid: I was taking the branch first.

The Court: I apologize.

By Mr. Kinkaid

Q. Okay. So you are still branch manager and you have been turned down by branch supervision, and you are going to Mr. Lane and he says, "No, I don't care for that." A. All right, sir. All right. I would have had to comply with that. Whatever the amount of the charge was, or, if I still felt strongly about it, I could have left the bank.

Q. On the other hand—— A. Might not have eaten very well.

Q. On the other hand, now, you are at South Dekalb. [796] A. Right.

Q. And you want to do the same thing. In that case, would you have gone to branch supervision for anything? A. I certainly would have. I would have communicated with them and probably the—I would have tried to find out, tried to determine what the best thing is for the area, the same way as a branch. I would have tried to determine what—why a change is necessary and trying to look out for my area of responsibility, to be sure that we do the best job there. And I would have pursued it in that light.

Q. Yes, sir. Of course, we were setting up this hypothetical and it was——

The Court: You had determined already that it was necessary.

Q. Yes.

The Court: The basis of the question is that your analysis of the neighborhood indicated an increase in rate was necessary.

A. All right, sir.

The Court: Then, as I understand it, you discussed that rate with branch supervision.

A. I would.

The Court: All right.

[797] A. I would get the pros and cons from them, and I would rely very heavily on what they suggested and recommended.

By Mr. Kinkaid

Q. Now, if branch supervision didn't care for the idea, but you still felt strongly about it, now keeping it comparable to the hypothetical as to the branch, now at that point you still feel strongly about it; they have not been able to convince you that you shouldn't go up. What do you do then? A. Well, let me say this, that, first of all, I would give—I think that I would have to recognize that they have a lot more resources to determine what would be an appropriate amount than perhaps I would, and I am saying this to say that I would give a lot of weight to their recommendation, because they know about the cost accounting, which I do not know what it costs the bank, and this kind of thing.

They help me in this area. If we disagreed, which I think would be highly improbable, because, as I say, we are both working for the same ends, so I would say that I would probably pursue—I would probably go to perhaps Mr. Lane or Mr. Kattel and discuss it with them. If I felt like the C&S and I were not in agreement on a price, then I could go to [798] my board and discuss the matter with them. I think the chances of something like that happening, they have never happened, and I think it would be highly improbable that they would.

Q. But, if they did, would you have been able to go to your board and, if you could convince your board that it was a good idea to make the change, could you have made it? A. I could have legally, or they might have gotten another president if, you know, I could have—certainly I could have done it, yes. If the board didn't agree, then we would have to—we would have to confront that situation.

Q. All right. Now, if your own board at South DeKalb didn't like what you wanted to do, as you say, they could have gotten a new president. Suppose branch supervision didn't care for what you were doing, now, would they have been able to get a new president out at South DeKalb? A. Well, I don't know. I mean I don't know about that. I would say this, if I felt strongly about a price in my area, that the ultimate authority would have to rest with me and my board of directors.

Q. And when you were the branch manager, if you insisted upon doing something that branch supervision [799] didn't want you to do, they would get a new branch manager, wouldn't they? A. That would be correct.

Q. Either they would fire you or you, yourself, would go somewhere else? A. That would be correct, yes.

Q. I think you indicated that you had heard Mr. Hall's testimony on this question of management control and that, as I recall, you said you agreed with it so far as your circumstances were concerned; am I correct about that? A. Yes, you are correct.

Q. I was curious as to just what your understanding of this concept is, just from your standpoint, what is this management control we have been hearing about? A. Management control would be employing the C&S style and the C&S philosophy of banking. It would be doing what I have been raised to do since I started working for the C&S Bank, that is, trying to take the positive approach, trying to say yes, rather than no to loan requests, and this kind of thing.

Q. Is that about it? A. This is—well, no, I wouldn't say that was it. I would say it just involves a very, very broad-type [800] thing really.

Q. Yes. Well, I was curious as to where the control element comes into that situation. A. Well, you see, the C&S National Bank and I, we agree. We agree because I have been employed there and I understand why they do things the way they do. And so it is a voluntary thing; I just agree with what we do and what they recommend.

Q. Well, when you agree with someone, someone else as to what someone else wants to do, does that necessarily mean that you are controlled? Do you always think of it in that way? A. Well, it just—in other words, I have asked for their help. I have asked for them to provide the tools to make that bank successful, and I don't see how I could be anything but receptive to what they recommended.

Q. Excuse me, Your Honor.

Mr. Berry, I think you indicated that you might have sent a copy of that ad to your customers, this, you know, thing here. A. Yes.

Q. Can you recall, if you have a recollection at all of having sent it, would that have been shortly after the suit was filed in this case? That would have been back in November last year? [801] A. I think so.

Q. Perhaps you would take another look at this letter, please. This is the Bobby Morris letter again. And you will notice on the second page that he notes that: "For those of you who are not familiar with the threat posed by this group of anti-trust attorneys, I am enclosing a copy of a recent public service advertisement." A. All right, all right.

Q. Do you think the ad that the public service announcement he refers to here in that paragraph would have been this ad that we have been talking about on November 23rd? A. I think so. I am not positive, because I don't specifically remember these, but I think this would be appropriate.

Mr. Kinkaid: Thank you very much. No further questions, Your Honor.

[802] Redirect Examination

By Mr. Doyle

Q. Mr. Berry, you are presently president of C&S Bank, Milledgeville? A. Yes.

Q. Is that a correspondent associate of C&S National Bank? A. Yes.

Q. Are the services, charges, interest rates charged and paid by that bank in Milledgeville the same as the C&S South DeKalb? A. No, sir. No, sir, we have different charges in various areas.

Mr. Doyle: All right, that's all I have.

The Court: You may step down.

Mr. Doyle: Mr. Roy Holland.

Whereupon,

ROY B. HOLLAND

was called as a witness by and on behalf of the defendants, and having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination

By Mr. Doyle

Q. Mr. Holland, would you state your name for the record, please, sir? A. Roy Bynum Holland, Jr.

[803] Q. What is your occupation, Mr. Holland? A. Pharmacist, owner of drug stores.

Q. Where is your drug store located? A. Two stores; one at 2003 Candler Road, one at 3290 Memorial Drive.

Q. What are the names of the drug stores? A. Holland & Knight.

Q. You are presently serving on the Board of Directors of the South DeKalb branch, is that correct, bank? A. Yes.

Q. At the time you bought your stock in the bank—you did buy stock in the bank, of course? A. Yes.

Q. And agreed to serve on the Board. Who approached you in that connection? A. Warren Berry and another officer of the bank, Tom Holmes.

Q. Was Citizens and Southern National's direction important in your decision to buy stock as a director? A. Yes.

Q. Did you expect Citizens and Southern management and direction in the bank? A. Yes.

Q. Do you rely on them now as a director? [804] A. Yes, I sure do.

Q. How important would you say Citizens and Southern is to the running of your bank today? A. We think it's very important. They furnish us with all kinds of materials. For example, at our Board of Directors' meetings we have a very detailed report of all of the procedures, all the things that—transactions that have happened during the month, shows the profit and loss, and all of that. And it's really very helpful and we have been very successful in the bank. We just believe in the way Citizens and Southern operates.

Q. If the merger applications which are the subject of this litigation hadn't been filed, Mr. Holland, would your bank's past and present relationship with Citizens and Southern have continued? A. It would as far as I was concerned. I'd be very much in favor of it.

Q. Has Citizens and Southern South DeKalb Bank faced competition from other new branches from other banks in your area? A. Yes, we have several nearby.

Q. Have you helped solicit customers for C&S South DeKalb Bank? A. Yes.

Q. In doing so, do you make any reference to [805] Citizens and Southern? A. Yes, we do.

Q. Do you hold it out as a Citizens and Southern Bank? A. Yes, I do.

Q. Can you tell the judge and the Court how the bank has helped serve banking needs in the community where it's located? A. Well, of course, all banks are similar, but I think, the important part of our bank is the confidence that people have in it being associated with Citizens and Southern, and its being a large bank that they can offer, maybe some services that smaller banks could not.

Mr. Doyle: Thank you. He is with you.

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Stern

Q. Mr. Holland, just a couple of questions. What services do your customers need that other smaller banks can't offer? A. The primary one that comes to my mind would be large loans, larger loans than smaller banks would be able to give.

Q. Have you ever heard of a correspondent relationship? A. Yes—you mean with other banks, other than——

[806] Q. Yes. A. Yes.

Q. You have heard of that. Aren't there loans that your bank gives that are beyond the lending limit capacity of your own bank? A. Yes.

Q. And you are able to make these loans by loan participation in cooperation with Citizens and Southern National? A. Yes.

Mr. Stern: All right, no further questions.

The Court: You may step down. Call your next witness.

Mr. Hodgson: If Your Honor please, our proposed course of the trial at this point is to have such a representative of each of these banks. We don't think it will take any more time of the Court than has been indicated by this pair. If the Court feels that this is entirely cumulative evidence, of course, we think it may be also.

We do not want to prejudice the course of the trial by failing to make these men available. There are slight differences among each of them. We are prepared to go on.

The Court: I am certainly prepared [807] to accept what has been testified to by Mr. Berry and Mr. Holland with respect to South DeKalb as completely typical of the others. If the Government counsel thinks that would be an improper conclusion, then we can go into it further.

Mr. Kinkaid: The only problem I can foresee, Your Honor, with this would be what is the time frame involved in this similarity. If we are saying that as of today all the other associate banks are pretty much the same as Sandy Springs, is one thing. It's another thing to indicate that other of the banks that have been around for ten, twelve years are also same and have been so for their entire history.

The Court: Do you know any difference, suspect any difference?

Mr. Kinkaid: Yes, I think there were some differences that are already in the record.

The Court: We sure don't need them again.

Mr. Kinkaid: True, as long as the differences are there.

The Court: With respect to the past pair of witnesses, it seems to me that there is generalized testimony which pretty well can stand as typical. If there are specialized differences the record [808] shows, certainly we can consider them.

Mr. Hodgson, are you happy with that?

Mr. Hodgson: Is the Government satisfied with this?

May we consult just two minutes, Your Honor?

We have one officer we would like to call because of some specific differences in regard to dates.

The Court: All right, you may do so.

Mr. Doyle: What we propose to do, if the Court please, is address the specific issues raised by Mr. Kinkaid as to the organization of Citizens and Southern Chamblee Bank. I call Mr. Hubert Harris.

Whereupon,

HUBERT HARRIS

was called as a witness by and on behalf of the defendants, and having first been duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination

By Mr. Doyle

Q. Would you state your name for the record, please, sir? A. Hubert Harris.

Q. What is your present occupation, Mr. Harris? A. I'm retired.

[809] Q. From what are you retired, sir? A. Citizens and Southern Bank of Chamblee.

Q. How long were you employed at C&S Bank of Chamblee? A. Twelve years and four months.

Q. In what capacity, sir? A. President.

Q. Were you there when it opened? A. Yes.

Q. What has been your employment history before that time? A. Since 1926, I have worked for Citizens and Southern National Bank.

Q. Would you outline what you have done, tell us what you have done for Citizens and Southern National Bank immediately before you went to C&S Chamblee? A. I came from Athens to Atlanta. After several moves, I was in charge of the Office at Marietta Street, Northwest office, and then the office at 140 Peachtree Street. From there, I went to Chamblee.

Q. All right, sir. Who first elected you or approached you to be president of Citizens and Southern National Bank of Chamblee when it opened? A. It was Chamblee National.

Q. Chamblee National Bank? [810] A. George McKinnon.

Q. He was then employed by whom? A. By Citizens and Southern National Bank.

Q. Were you encouraged by Mr. McKinnon to purchase stock in your new bank? A. Yes.

Q. Did you? A. Yes.

Q. Was your purchase financed? A. Yes, with C&S National.

Q. Were the members of the public aware of the Citizens and Southern sponsorship and support of your bank when it was organized? A. Yes, they were.

Q. Did you solicit sale of stock of the bank? A. Yes.

Q. Could you tell us how you did that? A. Well, this is a new community. Of course, in selling the stock it gave me an opportunity also to meet many of the individuals there. I stressed the fact that we would have the support of Citizens and Southern National Bank in all that we did there.

Q. Did you solicit the new customers for the bank when it opened? A. Yes, I used the same principle, same process.

[811] Q. Did you mention or emphasize the fact of Citizens and Southern's relationship? A. Yes, I did.

Q. I show you a bunch of brochures that come from Defendants' Exhibit 314, and ask you if you are familiar generally with these kinds of things. A. Yes, I'm familiar with them.

Q. Those are brochures that deal with various services offered by Citizens and Southern Bank? A. That's correct.

Q. Did you display similar kinds of brochures in your bank when it was first organized in Chamblee, the bank at Chamblee? A. Yes, sir, those that were available at that time, yes, sir.

Q. By that, do you mean there may have been some difference between what was available then and now? A. What was available then we displayed them.

[812] Mr. Doyle: No further questions.

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Kinkaid

Q. Mr. Harris, on the question of public awareness of your association with C&S back in what was it, 1960, when the bank opened? A. Yes.

Q. Can you recall whether or not your bank ran any newspaper ads or ran any kind of advertising campaigns which specifically referred to any association that you had at that time with C&S? A. I don't think so. In some of the ads we had a little sentence at the bottom, "Correspondent associate of the Citizens & Southern National Bank."

Q. And so far as you can recall, that was the relationship that was being made known to the public at Chamblee? A. Yes, sir, but in all that we did, we made it very clear, our relationship; for example, our stock was over subscribed and many of our customers wanted stock, so when we could not supply stock of Chamblee National, we suggested that they buy C&S National, and many of them did. But we made it very clear, our relationship from the very beginning.

Q. What was that relationship at the beginning [813] that you told these people about? A. That we would have the support and guidance of the Citizens & Southern National Bank. We said we are a small bank, but we have every service that the big bank has, and we can give it to you here.

Q. Did you tell these local people in Chamblee that C&S National would be running your bank? A. I told them they would be behind us.

Mr. Kinkaid: Excuse me, Your Honor.
No further questions, Your Honor.

The Court: All right. You may step down.

Mr. Hodgson: Judge, in view of the fact that we had planned to have approximately twelve witnesses on and did not know—did not predict this course of trial, we do not have any witnesses currently on call and present in the courtroom. As a consequence, I would say we are ahead of schedule, you might say.

The Court: All right. How soon can you have a witness in the courtroom?

Mr. Hodgson: After lunch. Is that satisfactory with Your Honor?

The Court: Yes, sir.

[814] Mr Hodgson: Some of them—we are through, for the most part, with our own people, you see.

The Court: You can have them about 1:30?

Mr. Hodgson: Yes, sir.

The Court All right. We will be in recess until 1:30.

(Whereupon a recess was had from 11:00 o'clock, a.m. until 1:30 o'clock, p.m.)

[815]

Afternoon Session
1:30 P. M.

Mr. Hodgson: Mr. Beasley.

Whereupon,

LEWIS C. BEASLEY

was called as a witness by and on behalf of the defendants, after having first been duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination

By Mr. Hodgson

Q. State your name for the reporter, please, sir. A. Lewis C. Beasley.

Q. What is your job, Mr. Beasley? A. I'm regional director of Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

Q. Here in Atlanta? A. Yes.

Q. What area does that cover? A. Georgia, Alabama and Florida.

Q. How long have you been in that position? A. Since April, 1967.

Q. Where were you before then? A. St. Louis, Missouri.

Q. With the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation? A. Yes.

[816] Q. What is the function of your office? A. Under the guidance of the director of the preparation division of bank supervision, I administer the bank supervisory functions of the corporation in the Atlanta region. This involves guidance of the examination program for state non-member insured banks, the administration of statutory investigation work that would cover merger applications, applications for deposit insurance information, uninsured banks or for proposed banks that are to be members of the Federal Reserve System, branch applications, any other statutory type of applications, before the FDIC for decision.

Q. Broadly, would you describe to the Court what you do with respect to examination of banks within your supervision? [817] A. Well, I have a staff; they examine the banks for safety and soundness, conformity to law, adequate capital management. They provide reports which flow through my office, which I review or have reviewed. I then see them before I forward them to Washington, with a recommendation for any action I think the corporation should take.

Q. Do these systematic contacts through examinations and treatment of application of various sorts lead you then into direct contact with officials of banks in your region? A. Yes.

Q. What sorts of contacts do you have with those individuals? A. My contacts would come largely when we have problems with banks, either through correspondence or conferences in dealing with applications, when we, either through correspondence or through direct discussion, deal with the subject matter of the application.

Q. Do bankers or not frequently consult you with respect to actions they propose taking before they make final applications? A. Yes.

Q. Have you been in such contact with officers or officials of the Citizens & Southern National Bank [818] and Holding Company from time to time in this regard? A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Hall, the president of the Citizens & Southern Holding Company has testified that he has kept in close touch with the various regulatory agencies concerning the activities of that holding company from time to time. Would you consider yourself included in that group? A. Yes.

Q. What sorts of contacts does Mr. Hall and his people—do Mr. Hall and his people have with you from time to time? What form do these contacts take? A. Well, either by telephone call or a visit, they discuss applications they contemplate filing, have filed, practices or policies of the banks under their guidance.

Q. In your capacity as regional director for the Atlanta region of Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, did you consider the application for Federal Deposit Insurance of the Citizens & Southern Bank of South DeKalb at the time it was in organization? A. Yes.

Q. Did you understand that Mr. Warren Berry was proposed to be the president of that bank once it was organized, that he had been an officer and employee of [819] the Citizens & Southern National Bank, and at the time the application was being considered by your office, he was a manager of a branch of the Citizens & Southern National Bank? A. Yes.

Q. Did you consider the application for that charter as being one sponsored by the Citizens & Southern National Bank? A. Yes.

Q. Did you expect that the Citizens & Southern South DeKalb Bank, if the charter were organized, would have the general policies of the C&S, its standards, the support of its normal audit procedures, and that the Citizens & Southern National Bank and Holding Company were behind the proposed bank and would supervise it?

Mr. Kinkaid: Excuse me. Your Honor, I would much prefer to hear this testimony in Mr. Beasley's own words. It seems to me like an awfully leading question on a very important point.

The Court: Would you break it down, please, sir.

Mr. Hodgson: All right, sir; yes, sir. [820] With respect to this application and your expectations concerning support of the Citizens and Southern National Bank Holding Company, what did you eypect that this sponsorship and support would consist of? A. I expected particularly that audit procedures and general policy guidelines woud be furnished by Citizens and Southern.

Q. What about with respect to management and management continuity? A. Yes, I think that generally management had come, it did in the Citizens and Southern South DeKalb case, from the Citizens and Southern National staff.

Q. Considering applications which were in fact made for branches submitted by non-C&S Banks in DeKalb-Fulton areas and market areas where C&S five percent banks were also in existence, did you consider the support that the Citizens and Southern Banks received from C&S as making them better able to receive competition than if they were independent unit banks? A. Yes.

Q. Did you pass on the application in any degree of Citizens and Southern of East Point to establish a North Springs branch at Roswell and Dalrymple Road? A. My office was required to make a recommendation.

Q. In passing on that and making your [821] recommendation, did you consider that this branch application was a part of an overall plan which also included the application contemporaneously submitted by East Point to merge with C&S Sandy Springs and C&S North Fulton? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Hodgson: He is your witness, Mr. Kinkaid.

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Kinkaid

Q. Mr. Beasley, I wanted to get a couple of things straight, really, about what we might call a chain of command between your office and the FDIC office in Washington. If I understood your direct testimony correctly, when you entered into the organization of the South DeKalb or even the branch for East Point in North Springs, am I correct in understanding that your office was simply conducting an investigation and making a recommendation to the folks at Washington? A. Yes. I have a field examiner conduct a field investigation then I have to make a recommendation to the Washington office.

Q. In other words, you yourself do not exercise the final approval or authority for the FDIC? A. That's correct.

Q. I think you also, in generally describing the [822] functions of your office, noted that basically it shall function to see to it that various banking activities, particularly those of nonmember banks are handled in conformity with the law; am I correct in recollecting your testimony in that regard? A. Yes.

Q. Now, the laws you were referring to were various banking statutes; am I right? A. Basically Federal banking statutes.

Q. Right. Do the laws—does this question of conformity to the law, do you have anything at all to do with determining whether the actions of the bank under your jurisdiction conform with the anti-trust laws in any way? A. Well, I'm not an attorney so I would not render opinions as such.

Q. No, what I was getting at, of course, you are head of the local FDIC office and you were describing the functions that you perform, and you did say that one of the functions that you perform was determining whether various banking activities were conducted in conformity with the laws. I would think it would come within your own knowledge as to what laws you have in mind. A. I have generally banking laws in mind.

Q. Do you have the anti-trust laws in mind? [823] A. I did not have anti-trust laws in mind.

Q. As a matter of fact, were any of the matters that Mr. Hodgson asked you about, were the anti-trust laws considered in any respect within your own investigation or recommendation? A. On the recommendations on mergers, the effect of the transaction on competition?

Q. Right. A. It's considered.

Q. Yes, of course, I was thinking more in terms of the application for the new bank at South DeKalb. A. No.

Mr. Kinkaid: We have no further questions.

The Court: You may step down.

Mr. Hodgson: Thank you, Mr. Beasley. You may be excused.

You have no reason for us to hold this witness, have you?

Mr. Kinkaid: No.

[824] Mr. Hodgson: Mr. Ream.

JOSEPH M. REAM,

being first duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Direct Examination

By Mr. Hodgson

Q. State your full name for the reporter, please, sir. A. Joseph M. Ream.

Q. What is your position, Mr. Ream? A. Regional administrator of national banks, Sixth National Bank Region, Atlanta.

Q. Under what national organization do you function? A. Controller of the Currency.

Q. How long have you had this position? A. September 1st, 1966.

Q. Would you describe to the Court the function of the office of regional administrator? A. It is the primary field supervision of national banks within the region, which includes investigation of branches, charters, mergers, trust powers and other banking functions. This also includes the field staff of examination of the bank itself, the preparation of the reports, initial supervision of the [825] banks and forwarding the reports to Washington.

Q. Does this or not place you into systematic and regular contacts with officials of banks within your region? A. It does.

Q. What is the scope of your region, Mr. Ream? A. South Carolina, Georgia and Florida.

Q. As a result of these contacts, do you have other contacts with officers of national banks in your region? A. I do.

Q. What form do they take? A. In the event of severe problems in a national bank, I normally meet with the board of directors and the officers of the bank. Many times we will have public hearings on charters and branches. I also meet with them informally, at gatherings, such as the BGA, FBA, South Carolina Bankers, and normal supervisor-supervisory relationship.

Q. Is your office consulted from time to time by officials of national banks in your region as to actions they propose taking? A. Normally.

Q. This normally happens? A. Normally, yes. Especially on charters, branches, [826] building programs, capital programs, this sort of thing.

Q. Was the Citizens & Southern National Bank and Holding Company an exception to this, or did they consult you regularly in that regard? A. They consulted me.

Q. They did? A. They do.

Q. Which officers do? A. Many times, Joe Hall, Gordon Trulock, Howard Starks, Bill Green, many of the officers of C&S.

Q. In the scope of this, did the fact that these five-percent relationships, which I will describe as relationships between the National Bank and Holding Company on the one hand, and state banking companies in which it held—they held a five-percent interest on the other, and with which they had various management relationships, were those discussions with you and did they come to your attention? A. Yes.

Q. In what form? A. Well, the Holding Company is a subsidiary of the National Bank, and we have the right of examination of all subsidiaries. And these five-percent holdings would appear as assets in the Holding Company's books, [827] so that they are available to us as we check the Holding Company's books.

Q. With regard to the application for charter of the Citizens & Southern Park National Bank, a national association, did you have any expectations as to the extent of the C&S relationship that would exist if the charter were granted? A. I knew that C&S would provide management policy, audits, legal service, and various other factors as though it were an important part of their own organization, yes.

Q. Did you consider this, the furnishing of these services and the giving of this relationship, as a favorable factor in considering the charter application? A. I did not consider the charter application.

Q. Did you make any sort of recommendation with respect to it? A. This, I believe was done before I arrived in Atlanta. I think that was done in the spring of '66 or fall of '65. I did not arrive until September.

Q. So far as you know of that relationship, would you have considered it a favorable aspect or an unfavorable one?

Mr. Kinkaid: Your Honor, that is [828] pretty speculative, and the man was not here, as he has plainly stated and has nothing to do with it.

Mr. Hodgson: I think he is speaking as an expert, Your Honor, as to whether he would or not.

The Court: Go ahead, you may answer.

A. Repeat the question, please.

Q. Would you have considered those relationships as being a favorable factor or an unfavorable factor, yourself, standing alone? A. The fact that there is continuity of management, which is a problem in many banking institutions, yes, that would be a favorable factor. The feature of participation of loans to get the bank onto an immediate profitability basis, as we have in Florida with our holding companies there, yes, there is a definite advantage to affiliation or an affiliation.

Q. In considering an application by a non-C&S bank in Atlanta and Fulton County after countywide branch banking became possible, such as by the National Bank of Georgia or First National Bank, to establish a branch in that market area, in the market area of a C&S five percenter, would you consider that the five percenter was more able to withstand competition [829] of those new branches than if it had been an independent unit bank? A. Yes, I do.

Q. Why? A. Because the C&S Bank actively competes with these organizations, and I feel that with their association with the five percenters, they are going to use the same competitive aspects as they would in the city, if it were a branch.

Q. Except for the legal, separate structure of the banks, do you consider these five percenters to be C&S Banks? A. No.

Q. Except for the legal structure. A. Well, except for the legal structure, they are associated, affiliated, but they do have separate boards of directors and are supervised independently of any parent organization while they are under the aegis of the C&S National; yes, I must say that they are independent organizations.

Mr. Hodgson: All right, sir.

Mr. Kinkaid: Your Honor, we have no questions.

The Court: You may step down.

Mr. Hodgson: Thank you, Mr. Ream.

[830] Mr. Doyle: I call Mr. Henry Collinsworth.

Whereupon,

HENRY T. COLLINSWORTH, JR.

was called as a witness by and on behalf of the defendants, and having first been duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination

By Mr. Doyle

Q. State your name for the record. A. Henry T. Collinsworth, Jr.

Q. Where are you employed? A. C&S Bank.

Q. In what capacity? A. Executive vice president, corporate banking.

Q. How long have you been with C&S? A. Twenty years.

Q. Could you outline generally the areas of banking which you have been employed in? A. Operations a brief period of time, approximately ten years in consumer lending and consumer banking. For the past ten years, in corporate banking.

Q. Could you outline briefly what the business of the corporate banking area is? A. It's our business to handle the corporate customers of the bank, those business customers as opposed to individual customers of the bank including both [831] national companies, who are doing business with us, those local companies who do business at our main office or downtown office as opposed to our branches and small businesses, in your small business lending area.

Q. Mr. Collinsworth, you have before you a copy of Defendants' Exhibit 84-85; do you not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Collinsworth, have you had occasion in connection with your testimony here today to analyze your corporate business coming under your department? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you attempted to determine the dollar value of demand deposits of Citizens and Southern National Bank and its affiliates which are in excess of $100,000 which originates from companies headquartered outside of the State of Georgia? A. Yes, I have.

Q. That is that first figure on this Exhibit 84-85; correct? A. Yes, sir, $138,962,000.

Q. The second figure there, State of Georgia, is the same thing except that it's outside of the Atlanta area? A. That's correct; it's $23,524,000.

Q. And by Atlanta area, we are talking mostly [832] about metropolitan? A. Metropolitan Atlanta area.

Q. Then, that third figure? A. Is the out-of-state accounts from ten to a hundred thousand dollars, that is those accounts head-quartered outside the State of Georgia which is $19,740,-000.

Q. All right. The correspondent bank accounts that are reported there, those are as they are characterized? A. They are correspondent bank accounts from banks in Georgia, Alabama, Florida, and other parts of the southeast.

Q. Okay. A. Which total $54,749,000.

Q. In that Division 1, Georgia? A. Yes.

Q. Is that within or without Atlanta metropolitan area? A. It's out from the Atlanta metropolitan area.

Q. Okay. Now, with affiliates you did essentially the same thing? A. Yes, sir, we took those accounts from Georgia headquartered companies, those companies headquartered outside of the Atlanta area, yet bank at Emory, East Point and DeKalb amount to $8,403,600.

[833] Q. And then with regards to correspondent associate banks, you had occasion to run that analysis as reported there? A. That's right. Those totalled, in the case of Georgia headquarted companies, $6,685,400.

Q. The correspondent associate banks there, are those the ones who are defendants in this action? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you talk about an out-of-state company, what is included within that? A. These are companies whose corporate headquarters are located outside the State limits of Georgia, basically those companies where the financial decisions are made at corporate headquarters.

Q. And by financial decisions, what do you include within that so far as this is concerned? A. Placement of these bank accounts, judgment as to which banks will receive these accounts.

Q. Are there included, say, in that first figure, $138,000,000 figure, are there included in there any accounts of companies which have no brick or mortar physically located in Atlanta? A. Yes, there are.

Q. Give us some examples of what and why, how that comes to be. [834] A. For instance, there is an account of Warner Lambert Pharmaceuticals, a New Jersey company, a lock box at our Atlanta office, Atlanta main office, C&S National Bank for collection of its accounts receivables. These accounts originate throughout the southeast. The account is billed by Warner Lambert. The check comes from the lock box or post office box under our control and is deposited in the account at C&S National Bank. The company gains the benefit of faster collection time on these items through our check collection procedures. Again, faster mail time into Atlanta as opposed to New Jersey.

Q. What are the effects with regards to a company getting its money? A. A company gets its money faster, gets expendible funds faster.

Q. Can you give us another example where a company has no brick or mortar in Atlanta, you know, physical location? A. Yes, we have an account which has just come on from the International Telephone & Telegraph Company, Continental Baking Division, where bakeries throughout the southeast send deposits into concentration accounts in our bank. These are internal funds from these bakeries. They are collected in our bank here and transmitted onto the company's headquarters in New York. The company again [835] gains collection of funds. In addition, it has control of funds from the time collected into the banks in the areas throughout the south.

Q. All right. Now give us the range of banks that you compete against for this kind of business. A. Well, the larger the dollar deposit, the more the competition from outside our area. These competitors in New York, money centers, such as Chicago, Los Angeles, they are in North Carolina, they are in other parts of the southeast.

Q. All right, sir. Now, all of the figures that are reported in out-of-state, State of Georgia, $100,000 and more, all of them are not related to companies that have no physical location? A. No, sir, they are not.

Q. And now, do out-of-state banks compete for the same national accounts sort of business of Atlanta-based businesses? A. Yes, they do. We have a number of accounts here in our bank in Atlanta which do business with banks around the country.

Q. Are you aware of the extent of that? A. Yes. For instance, I'm aware of certain instances, for instance, New York's banks, I believe nine in number, tell us they have $45,000,000 on deposit in [836] Atlanta-based companies. Chicago banks tell us they have approximately $9,000,000 on deposit from Atlanta-based companies.

Q. Now, you have reported here and on this exhibit deposits at correspondent associates from the companies categorized. Who solicited that business? A. In some measure, the Citizens and Southern National Bank solicited the business or assisted in its solicitation through account offices in corporate banking areas.

Q. Other instances? A. The business was solicited in some cases by those banks themselves, but the principal assistance in putting together the relationship, I would say, came in joint efforts between those banks and our corporate banking offices.

Q. Can you give us any example of how this would come to be with regard to the specifics? A. Yes, I can give you one particular account, Marathon Oil Company which has an account at the C&S National Bank, main office, in addition has $3 million, or we, C&S National Bank, has a $3 million dollar participation in revolving credits of this company, in that company's total credit. That company, in addition, has a lock box relationship with us and deposit relationship at [837] the Citizens and Southern Park National Bank. In this particular case, the company's principal balances are at Citizens and Southern Park National Bank, amounted to some $500,000.

Q. Does the handling of this lock box business of Marathon Oil, for instance, relate at all to Citizens and Southern's system? A. The handling of the lock box done at the main office in Atlanta, that is the negotiations for a lock box, the call on the company related to it was done by the Citizens and Southern National Bank.

Mr. Doyle: That's all.

Mr. Sims: If we could have just a minute, Your Honor.

Cross-examination

By Mr. Sims

Q. Mr. Collinsworth, looking at this chart, Exhibit 84-85, the first number on there is out-of-state accounts, $100,000, and over a total of $138 million. Do you know how many accounts that represents? [838] A. No, sir, I don't. We have back-up information; I don't have it with me. It would be in excess of a hundred; I don't know.

Q. Would it be in excess of two hundred? A. I just couldn't answer that. It would be an approximation, and I just don't have any——

Q. Would it be less than a thousand? A. Yes, sir, I would think it might be.

Q. Do you happen to know how many accounts are represented by any of these other numbers on this chart? A. Yes, sir. Again, these are approximations. I don't have exact figures.

Q. Approximations are fine. A. But I don't—in the case of the next two items, in the case of the correspondent banks, we have some 700 correspondent bank accounts in total. Those represented in the first three, I would say, would—first three categories would represent the largest majority of those. I don't have the specific number.

Q. How about the figures for the affiliates? Do you have any idea of how many accounts those involve? A. No, sir, I don't in the case, no, sir, I just don't. I don't have the specific numbers.

Q. And for the correspondent associates? [839] A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know how many total accounts Citizens & Southern National Bank has? A. How many total bank accounts that Citizens & Southern National Bank has?

Q. Total bank accounts. A. Well, no, sir. I would guess the figure is in excess of 100,000, but it is a guess. You are talking about total bank accounts?

Q. Total bank accounts.

You mentioned that some of these out-of-state accounts were, I think you used Warner Lambert as an example? A. Yes, sir.

Q. People who don't have any brick and mortar in the state of Georgia? A. Right.

Q. How many others are there like Warner Lambert in that? A. There are a number. Again, I don't have a specific number, but there are——

Q. As a percentage of the total number, what would you estimate? A. The percentage of the total number is relatively small.

[840] Q. All right. Mr. Collinsworth, how long have you been with C&S National Bank? A. Twenty years.

Q. Have you always been in the corporate accounts department A. No, sir. As I said, I was in consumer lending and consumer banking for about ten years.

Q. What determines the bank's lending ability? A. What determines a bank's lending ability? I think that bank's size; I think its capability of its lending officers; I think the market in which it operates.

Q. When you say size, do you mean the amount of deposits that it has on hand? A. No, sir, I mean the lending capacity of that bank.

Q. Would you distinguish those two things, the amount of deposits versus the lending capacity? A. Well, there are legal limits applied to banks related to capital and surplus. There are. I think deposits relates somewhat to capacity, in that they have funds which they can lend or over which they cannot,

Q. Let's try to—let me try to get a little clearer on this last point. The bank has a legal lending limit? A. Yes, sir.

[841] Q. Which is determined by what? A. Its capital surplus and undivided profit.

Q. What relation does the total deposits of a bank have with those figures? A. Well, obviously, the bank's ability to gather deposits to the extent that capital and surplus relate to those deposits. A bank is required to maintain certain capital requirements in relation to its deposit size. Obviously, the larger the deposit, the larger the capital growth of the bank, the more money it can lend.

Q. So, therefore, the larger the deposits, indirectly at least, the larger the lending ability? A. The larger the lending capability, to the point that it reaches a legal capacity.

Q. Right. When your bank is faced with loan demands in a particular area, let's use DeKalb County as an example, is its ability to meet those demands limited by the amount of deposits that it draws from DeKalb County residents? A. Let me give you this example. I think, and, again taking the case of Marathon Oil, Marathon Oil's request for credit at a time when money was awfully tight, the capacity of the C&S National Bank enabled us to meet that need, even though the main deposit of that company was at the C&S Park National Bank, [842] simply because we look on these banks as one and the same.

Q. Okay. Well, let me rephrase the question, then, because I don't think we are on the same point.

To the extent that you have loan demand in DeKalb County, as an example—— A. Yes.

Q. ——is your ability to meet that loan demand determined solely by the amount of deposits which you receive from DeKalb County? A. No, sir, it is related to the amount of deposits that are in the bank as a whole.

Mr. Sims: I have no further questions.

Mr. Doyle: Call Mr. Gordon Trulock.

The Court: Step down. Thank you.

GORDON B. TRULOCK, JR.,
being first duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Direct Examination

By Mr. Doyle

Q. State your name for the record, please, sir. A. Gordon B. Trulock, Jr.

Q. By whom are you employed, Mr. Trulock? A. The Citizens & Southern National Bank.

Q. In what capacity? [843] A. I am now assistant to the president.

Q. How long have you been with the bank? A. Twenty-five years.

Q. In broad brush, would you outline your career with the bank? A. Basically, I have been in the credit and credit-related areas for the entire twenty-five years. Just prior to my becoming assistant to the president in May of this year, I had been senior vice-president for credit for the C&S system. I had been in that capacity for approximately four to five years.

Q. What part of banking is credit? A. Well, credit, basically, is the lending of money, the making of loans. In my case, primarily commercial loans to businesses or time loans to individuals, and I say commercial and time loans to distinguish from the consumer loan area, with which I haven't had much involvement.

Q. Can you tell us what ingredients you consider, a banker considers, in making a loan or handling a loan application? A. What ingredients?

Q. Uh-huh, what goes into it? A. Well, basically, there are five ingredients that any lender of money might consider in extending [844] credit. I think, first, would be the cost of money. I think second would be the cost of servicing. Third might be the risk factor that is involved in lending money. Four might be the profit factor that we would expect off of a typical loan transaction. And, finally, we have to consider the competitive environment in which we operate.

Q. All right, sir. Let's go back and treat each of those briefly. A. Yes, sir.

Q. With regard to the cost of money. A. Yes, sir.

Q. What do you consider—how does that get determined? A. Well, as I look at it, a bank, such as the C&S, makes many different types of loans, but, basically, we are lending from a central pool of money that arises from demand deposits, time deposits of various kinds, as well as the short-term money market instruments. For example, federal funds. It is difficult, I think, or well-nigh impossible to say that a given loan is funded entirely by either time or demand deposits, although I think to a certain extent we do consider this.

Q. What factors affect the cost of money? [845] A. Pardon?

Q. What factors go into the cost of money that you have to pay? A. Well, in the case of time deposits, the rate that is paid; also, I think to be included is the cost of servicing, and, that is, the cost of accumulating, of soliciting of loans; the inherent cost of maintaining the records or filing the necessary reports that are attendant with various types of deposit transactions.

Q. Would you take for me a couple of examples of loans where the cost of servicing would vary, let's say, one at one end and one at the other. A. Yes. As a for example, and illustrating a situation where the cost of loan servicing might be minimal would be perhaps the lending of money to a national account, such as Mr. Collinsworth described. For example, if General Motors were to send a note into the C&S Bank, I would say that the cost of servicing that particular type—that particular loan would be relatively small. On the other hand, if a local company, because of its financial strength, et cetera, is borrowing against accounts receivable, we might consider that this is the type of loan where the proper control and dominion, supervision, if you will, of the collateral requires a great deal more time and expense [846] on our part. And, in a case like that, we would say that the cost of servicing is fairly significant.

Q. You mention inherent risk factor. I suppose that is obvious, but would you show us by brief examples the way those might differ? A. Well, here again, we get into a broad range of topics. But, specifically, I look at risk as that probability of the bank being repaid its principal plus interest that is involved in any loan.

[847] Q. What would you consider a very low risk kind of loan as an example? A. Well, the low risk type loan might again be a loan to a large national company of impeccable credit standing and strength for the size of the loan as related to the company's total assets, where the purpose of the loan is relatively short term in nature and we can foresee or anticipate a fairly rapid pay-back. We might say that the risk is minimal. On the other hand, where we are lending to a small business, for example, that is just getting underway where the financial strength is perhaps marginal, and perhaps the future of the business really depends in part on their earning a profit fairly soon after they open the doors, you would say that the risk is significant.

Q. All right, sir. You mentioned the profit factor and competitive factor. A. Yes.

Q. Tell me how you go about putting those into a mix. A. Well, obviously, we like to think that the dollars we lend, the purpose of our lending activity is such that a typical borrower, customer can use the dollars we lend at a profit to himself, and the customer having then earned a profit, we think that we are entitled to be [848] compensated for our time and effort, and so we typically attempt to plug in a profit factor.

Q. And the competitive effect? A. Well, we don't lend money in a vacuum. By that, I mean that to say, the customer has other choices in terms of lending institutions who are willing to make credit available to him. And while we might feel that a credit based on the standard that we use should carry a rate of interest of, we'll say, eight percent, we have to carefully review our transmittal process or calculations to make sure that this is right because we know that if we are wrong, and that we quote this customer a rate that is not in keeping with the type of transaction, that he can very likely go across the street and borrow the money at a cheaper rate.

Q. Well, in a given situation, with a given customer, Mr. Trulock, how do you put all these factors together? A. Well, I like to think, in fact, I know that, Mr. Doyle, having been involved in this for a number of years, that the lending of money is an art and not a science. By that, I mean, simply this, that we know that the ingredients that go into the making up of the credit decision for any given credit place different emphasis on different ingredients. And it finally gets down to the ability of [849] the lending officers to evaluate these, to determine the validity of the loan request in terms of its value to the customer and to the community, to this about all of these factors, that these five factors, at least, that I have outlined, and to arrive at a decision as to a rate that is proper. And I'm sure, because I have seen it happen, that you can take the very small loan requests, you can ask five lending officers in the Citizens and Southern Bank to evaluate it, and to list the strong points in the credit and to list the weak points in the credit, and finally come up with a rate of interest. I dare say out of those five people you would have at least four, maybe five different conclusions. Could have, you may not have.

Q. Now, your office and you have, on occasion sent out various kinds of general quoted rates? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you tell me how those fit into this picture that you are telling us about? A. Basically, and I assume you're referring to rate charts——

Q. Yes, sir, that sort of thing. A. Well, we attempt to do this primarily as a service to the lending offices to the various areas of the banks knowing full well that there is nothing in the way of an ethical secret about this, that they could obtain [850] the same information about this if they had the time and inclination to do it, and really, it's in the final analyses, Mr. Doyle, a composite of our reaction to the national money market to supply and demand for money, if you will, to our evaluation of the propriety of the bank making a specific type of loan under existing economic conditions.

Q. You say that if they had an inclination to get it, where could they go get it? A. Well, it's not a question of really where they would go get it. It's a question of really trying to digest the voluminous information that is available. For example, the Federal Reserve Bank publishes economic information that most businessmen have available. The great majority of businesses belong to various trade associations, which, as a service to their members, publish economic trends or information that is available across the board.

By the same token, the Atlanta press frequently comments on changes in rates, the fact that the Federal Reserve Board perhaps has changed to some degree its posture and is either making money more readily available or conversely, is attempting to restrict the money supply.

Q. In Citizens and Southern Bank, who makes the decision as to whether or not to commit to make a loan? A. The lending officer.

[851] Q. Does he have to go to a committee to get approval? A. Typically speaking, in the Citizens and Southern Bank the lending officer has the authority and he will usually make the loan decision and so tell the customer. Now, we do review the loans after the fact. There may be some instances when because of the nature and the structure of a credit that a lending officer might come and consult with myself or with some other officer in the bank, attempting to get our ideas as to how a loan should be structured. And if he asks for it, we attempt to give it. At the same time, it's his decision. He has to assume the final responsibility for having made the loan. If the loan goes bad and is charged off, I can assure you it's his bad loan and not mine. And on that basis, we emphasize we are glad to give you all the assistance that you want and need, but as a lending officer of this bank, you are expected to assume that final responsibility of saying yes or no.

Q. Now, you mentioned after the fact credit review. You have heard earlier testimony about the credit review meetings, credit committees? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You heard the question, I think, that was put to Mr. Handley, as to whether or not credit review has a [852] stabilizing effect on loan rates. Tell us about credit review, what it does. A. Well, first of all, I don't think that it has a stabilizing effect on loan rates for the simple reason that review is primarily after the fact. It comes after the loan has been committed, after the customer has been told, "Yes, we will make the loan." After the rate has been quoted.

Q. Now, what is the purpose—what do you do there? A. Well, the primary purpose of credit review, one is to maintain some feel of the continuing quality and liquidity, if you please, of the loan portfolio.

It is used to a very large degree as a training tool to assist in the development of younger lending officers. In other words, this is a forum whereby we can make use of a living example, if you will, we can discuss a particular credit as it relates to C&S policy and philosophy.

Q. Now, would you liken it to the case method of instruction? A. Indeed I would.

Mr. Doyle: He is with you.

Mr. Stern: May we have a moment, Your Honor?

The Court: Yes.

[853] Cross-Examination

By Mr. Stern

Q. Just a couple of questions. You stated, if I recall your testimony right, that several people at C&S National, about five people, you said, would get together to decide what to charge under certain circumstances for a loan? A. No, sir, I don't believe I said that, Mr. Stern. If I did, I didn't mean it in that context.

Q. You said they would have different ideas, different people would have? A. I said if you presented the same situation to a group of five people in the bank, you might come up with as many as four or five different reactions and different ideas as to the proper rate that the loan might carry.

Q. Isn't it possible that somebody might, outside the bank might also have a different view? A. That's right.

Mr. Stern: Okay. Thank you.

The Court: You may step down.

Mr. Doyle: No further questions. I call Mr. Ben Cook.

[854] Whereupon,

BEN C. COOK

was called as a witness by and on behalf of the defendants, and having first been duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination

By Mr. Doyle

Q. Mr. Cook, state your name for the record, please, sir. A. Ben C. Cook.

Q. Where are you employed? A. Presently employed by Citizens and Southern Bank of Cobb County.

Q. In what capacity? A. Banking officer, manager of Marietta Square office.

Q. Could you outline for us your former history? A. I came with the bank in 1955 and worked in various areas.

Q. Which bank? A. Citizens and Southern National Bank. I worked in various areas, primarily clerical positions until 1959, while I attended school at night. I took a leave of absence from the C&S Bank to go to the Navy. I came back in 1963. I worked in the credit department, analyzing credit, credit files for approximately one year and then [855] since that time I have worked in the various branches throughout the C&S system.

Q. All right, sir. What branches did you work in? A. I went to the Northwest office in 1964. I went to the Fulton Industrial office, C&S Bank, 1966. Then, I went to C&S Belvedere Bank in March of '68, and in November of 1971, I went to the Citizens and Southern Bank of Cobb County.

Q. November of '71 you went to Cobb County? A. That's right.

Q. From 1968 to 1971, you were at Belvedere? A. That's right.

Q. During that period of time, the Citizens and Southern Bank of DeKalb was merged within the C&S Bank of Belvedere? A. C&S DeKalb Bank.

Q. And you were at Belvedere during that time? A. Yes.

Q. I wonder if you would tell us what difference it made as a result of that bank being merged into a branch.

Mr. Lehman: I object to the relevancy, materiality of Mr. Doyle's question. We are not dealing with a bank at hand in the case today, the defendant's banks. This merger occurred over three [856] years ago. Apparently it has, is channeled toward the Section 7 portion and I do not see the relevancy nor the materiality as to the relationships involved before the Court as to the defendant banks, nor as to the mergers before the Court.

The Court: Overruled. You may answer.

The Witness: C&S Belvedere Bank was a unit bank. That was the only banking location of that particular bank. As such, we carried on the entire operations of the bank there. I was a cashier of the bank. As such, I was in charge of the operations department, that is the fulltime bookkeeping department. I also served in a lending function, retail lending and commercial lending. I would imagine I would have spent at that time approximately forty to forty-five percent of my time in the operations function, that is attending to the management of the operations area.

After the merger, the operations department was no longer my responsibilty and all of my time was, at that time, devoted to, waiting on customers, soliciting new business, and so on and so forth.

By Mr. Doyle

Q. What sort of effect did this merger have on [857] the ability of that bank and banking office to serve its customers? A. I think it improved it considerably from a couple of standpoints. One, it enabled those of us who were on the line in that location to devote more of our time to what we think of as frontline banking operations, that is soliciting business, opening accounts, making loans. There are some efficiencies to be gained perhaps, in combined operations, operation departments.

There was an increase in our legal limit because of combining the resources of the C&S DeKalb Bank and C&S Belvedere. There was an increase in lending limit resources which we could rely on to wait on larger corporations.

The size of C&S Belvedere Bank prior to that, we did have several corporate customers who we were banking. It was necessary to participate out a portion of their loans because of our resources. Because of our resources we were unable to handle the entire transactions. While we can make larger credits available to customers in this manner, it requires the steady approval of the credit by the participating bank also. It is a bit more time consuming, a little less flexible.

[858] Q. All right, sir. And how about with regard to deposits? Was there any difference for any of your customers in that connection? A. The only change in the deposits would be that we had an additional location at that point that they could deposit their funds and receive same-day credit. At that particular time, we were accepting deposits for other C&S banks, other C&S locations. However, those deposits were necessarily forwarded to the bank of account. Prior to that time, for example, if one of my customers at C&S Belvedere had made their deposit at the Avondale location, it would have been necessary for Avondale to have forwarded it to me, resulting in a minimum of a one-day delay in their receiving credit.

At that time, of course, if they made their deposit or any transaction that they conducted at the Avondale location, they could receive same-day credit.

Q. The significance of the same-day credit, is that important to a relatively small number of your overall customers? A. I think it is quite important to the customers because of a convenience factor. And, historically, a lot of our customers get paid and make their deposits and write out all their checks the same day. So it is [859] most important that we give them credit for the funds immediately. And, of course, it just afforded them an additional location on which they could receive same-day credit.

Q. Did your customers know the difference before and after? A. Not really. They came into the office there, and I was still there; Susie or those girls, all the faces were the same; there was really no difference so far as the public banking function was concerned. There was no difference evident to the customer at all.

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Lehman

Q. Now, Mr. Cook, you mentioned that through the merger the banks were better able to serve the customers in your opinion; is that correct? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What new services did the merger bring that weren't provided to your customers before the merger? A. Not a new service per se, just an increase in legal limits and an additional location with which they could conduct their business.

Q. As to the increase in legal limits, in other words, that meant that you didn't need to engage in loan participations as much as you had before? [860] A. Well, as Mr. Collinsworth indicated before, we do have limits, and our legal limit that we could lend to one particular customer at that time, of course, was increased by the portion that the capital and surplus of the two combined banks were.

Q. And as to this merger, adding an additional servicing area to your customers, additional bank, branch or whatever, how many of these customers that would be serviced in this additional area would normally engage in a loan the size that would require or would have required a loan participation with C&S National? A. I don't recall. There were several. I had several loans participated out to various branches at the time. I don't recall the exact number.

Q. Would it have been a large amount, do you recall, or a relatively small amount? A. Well, of course, everything is relative. I suppose probably in—by your terms, it might have been relatively small. I don't recall how many there were. As I recall, there were seven or eight corporate customers whose needs that we actually could not serve without the participation function. But, I don't recall the exact number; I am sorry.

Q. Do you believe that a large bank, such as C&S is better able to serve the customer than, say, [861] a smaller bank? A. There is no question about it, particularly in an area with an expanding economy we are in here.

Q. This would be to the average customer, what you would consider to be your average customer? A. Well, who is the average customer? We all benefit from the economy as a whole. I don't really know how to answer the question, to be honest with you. We are located in an area of expanding economy; I don't suppose I am qualified to answer this question. We are in an expanding economy, and unless industry is able to keep up with the needs of the public, the public is going to suffer in the long run; in the end it all comes down to the consumer.

Q. Would you consider industry your average customer then? A. What do you mean by average? Dollar volume, number of accounts or what?

Q. Let's say number of accounts. A. No, not in number of accounts, no, sir.

Mr. Lehman: We have no questions.

The Court: All right, you may step down.

Mr. Doyle: One moment, if Your Honor please.

[862] The Court: Oh, excuse me.

Mr. Doyle: No further questions.

The Court: Thank you.

Mr. Doyle: Call Merrill Autry, Jr.

MERRILL AUTRY, JR.,
being first duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Direct Examination

By Mr. Doyle

Q. State your name, please. A. Merrill Autry, Jr.

Q. Where are you employed, Mr. Autry? A. I am employed with the Citizens & Southern Emory Bank.

Q. How long have you been employed there? A. Since July of 1969.

Q. What capacity are you employed in? A. President.

Q. What is C&S Emory Bank? A. It is a—except for qualifying shares of the directors, a wholly-owned subsidiary of the Citizens & Southern Holding Company. It has four offices.

Q. All right. Before you went to C&S Emory, outline for us your employment history, please, sir. A. I have been with the bank twenty-one years. [863] I grew up, basically, in installment lending and term lending, spent five years in a Chicago service office. I returned, headed up corporate accounts, then moved to head up the correspondent banking department of the C&S National Bank, and then went to C&S Emory.

Q. Can you tell us, outline for us, the history of the growth of C&S Emory Bank? A. Emory started at the so-called Emory Village, right down by Emory gate, Emory University gate, in 1951. The bank remained there until 1956 or '57. It applied for and received permission to move to 1237 Clairmont Road, which was about a mile east of the Emory campus. At the time it moved, it was about a $3,000,000 bank in deposits, and today its deposits structure is about $46,000,000 or $47,000,000, total footings of 52.

Q. Was this growth a result of internal growth or acquisition? A. Purely internal growth, no acquisition.

Q. All right, sir. Tell us what factors you consider to be important in your effectiveness as a banker. A. Well, I guess it is what I basically grew up with in the National Bank, and that is the ability to do business on an individual level, to solicit and seek business, to commit your loans, to manage your people [864] through your guidance and direction of your board and help you receive from the National.

Q. Do your branch managers have that same sort of authority and responsibility? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that the same or different from what you are familiar with with regard to the branch managers of the National Bank? A. That they have—they operate the same.

Q. All right, sir. Are you familiar with the operations and the methods of operations of the presidents of the correspondent associates who are involved in this? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How do you regard them? A. They operate the same.

Q. Can you tell us whether or not there is any internal competition or rivalry among branch managers and presidents of affiliates. A. I think there is internally. We have a goalpost and we—Emory was denied access to a new trade area, a new market for it, namely, the City of Decatur on the square, so to speak. And we now have a National Bank there. We have helped that bank get some customers, but yet, at the same time, on the goalpost, [865] I need to show up good, too, so, internally we do have competition.

Q. How did that access to the City of Decatur get denied Emory? You said it was denied; what were you talking about? A. We had applied for a branch of Emory under the countywide branch banking law.

Q. And it was turned down? A. And it was turned down.

Q. That is what you are talking about? A. Yes.

Q. Do you feel that you can do what the competition requires you to do in selling your banking products and services? A. Give me that again.

Q. Do you feel that you can do what competition requires you to do in selling your bank's products and services? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Getting business. Is your board of directors just a rubber stamp, Mr. Autry? A. No, sir.

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Frisbie

Q. I am not sure if we established it or not, but [866] the C&S Emory Bank is an affiliate bank, is it not? An affiliate with C&S National. A. Well, what do you mean by "affiliate"?

Q. Or subsidiary. A. I consider it a wholly-owned sub.

Q. Okay. A. Except for qualifying shares of the directors.

Q. Is there any such thing as a super subsidiary? A. I heard the term, and I guess there is.

Q. Mr. Autry, how are you familiar with the internal operations of the correspondent associate banks, the question in this suit? A. Well, having been in the corresponding bank department, they did not come under the correspondent bank department, but in various of the C&S National schools that we have attended, we have discussed various phases of banking together. Since I have been at Emory, we has discussed various phases of banking together. I remember one school in particular we attended, all of the presidents of the five percenters, super correspondents and correspondent associates, on international banking and how we could take international banking and use it in our own shop, put it into our own operations, sell it to our own customers through international. So, we talk with each other an awful lot.

[867] Q. You never worked for a correspondent associate bank in any capacity; is that correct? A. Only relieving for vacations and emergencies, I have worked for Avondale, DeKalb Bank, and I worked for Buckhead before Buckhead was merged in as a branch of the National Bank.

Q. All right. But none of those correspondent associate banks are involved in this lawsuit. Is it correct to say that you have never served in any capacity with those, as an officer or director of those banks? A. No, sir, I have never.

Q. That is a correct statement? A. That is a correct statement.

Q. And your knowledge of the internal operations of those banks is limited to classes you have attended which were also attended by members of the management of these correspondent associate banks? A. No, sir.

Q. And discussions with these persons who were officers or in the management of these banks? A. Well, unless you would want to consider that my cashier works with the cashier of each one of these banks in any trouble that they may be in, if they are out of balance or if they have trouble in their call reports or this sort of thing, Emory helps out. We [868] kind of serve as a guidepost for them. They come over and we help them.

[869] Q. Who owned the majority of stock of C&S Emory? A. The Citizens and Southern Holding Company.

Q. And who votes this; do you have any knowledge of who votes the stock held by C&S Holding Company? A. It's voted by proxy and by different persons named to vote that proxy. I would say different persons' names are on it. Since I have been there, proxies have been voted three or four times. I think there has been a different person each time than someone who is designated by the holding company.

Q. Does Mr. Hall ever sign the proxy statement? A. No, not since I've been there.

Q. Are there any officers or directors of the Citizens and Southern National Bank on your Board of Directors at the present time? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are they voting members? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Autry, is there any doubt in your mind that if Mr. Hall came to you with his stock certificates in his hand in the name of C&S Holding Company and said, "Mr. Autry, I want you to call a special meeting of the Board of Directors and present for a vote the matter of changing the service charges on our checking accounts," [870] don't you feel sure that such would happen and such would be passed if it were so desired? A. Well, legally speaking, he owns—if he comes out under proper credentials and he owns the amount of stock the holding company owns, he has a right to hold it. It's immaterial what we think. I will say to you, I have been in my stockholding meetings, I imagine you are referring to the rubber stamp Board. Right after I went to Emory we had a deficiency, what we considered a small deficiency in our deposits to capital ratio and rather than trying to float any new capital issue, we decided we would withhold dividends, and I remember very vividly there were one or two directors who were quite outspoken, that they couldn't see the long-range value of leaving the dividends in the bank and letting the depreciation grow. They wanted their money even though they had to pay tax on it.

We had quite a discussion on it. Naturally, when it gets down to voting the stock, yes, the holding company is going to win. That's all cut and dried.

Q. One more point I want to clear up. Is it not true that four and a half percent is the legal maximum that can be paid on regular passbook savings? A. No, sir, I believe it's four. I may be wrong. But, if it's four and a half, and you don't leave it in a certain period of time, it reverts back. I think regular [871] passbook is four.

Mr. Sims: I have no further questions.

The Court: You said you were denied the opportunity to merge with the Decatur National Bank?

The Witness: We applied under the State. We are a State bank and applied.

The Court: You are a State bank?

The Witness: Yes, sir. We were denied to branch. I believe the denial came from the Fed rather than the State.

Mr. Hodgson: I can state that the denial of the application for a branch in Decatur by Emory Bank was denied by the FDIC. At the same time, the mergers were approved. Subsequently, the National Bank just recently has obtained authority to open a branch in Decatur from the Comptroller of the Currency.

The Court: Okay, you may step down.

Mr. Hodgson: Judge, one way or another we have had eighteen witnesses on the stand. Some of them were quite short. This is all we have been able to scrounge up for today with the exception of Mr. Gellerstedt. He said he had to go meet the Jamaican Prime Minister. His testimony will be very brief. If we could just suspend for a short time——

[872] The Court: We will recess for fifteen minutes.

(Whereupon, a short recess was taken.)

being first duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Direct Examination

By Mr. Doyle

Q. Would you state your name for the record, please, sir. A. L. R. Gellerstedt, Jr.

Q. What is your business, Mr. Gellerstedt? A. I am a general contractor, president of Beers Construction Company.

Q. Have you had any contacts, past or present, with the C&S Bank? A. All my life.

Q. Would you tell us about it, please, sir. A. Yeah, my dad came with the C&S Bank when I was two years old. He was a national bank examiner. We moved here, so I was raised the son of a C&S bank officer. And our company does business with the C&S Bank, and I have served in various and sundry capacities on a C&S Bank's affiliate board of directors.

Q. Have you also had occasion to serve, in addition to your employment capacity, in connection with the City of Atlanta Chamber of Commerce? A. I am the president of the Chamber of Commerce [874] this year and have been affiliated with the Chamber for a number of years.

Q. Have you had occasion to have contacts with the C&S Bank of Sandy Springs? A. I was one of the original directors on the C&S Bank of Sandy Springs when it started. I believe that was back in 1960.

Q. And its name at that time was—— A. Citizens National Bank of Sandy Springs.

Q. Citizens National Bank of Sandy Springs? A. No, it wasn't—yes, it was Citizens National Bank of Sandy Springs, and we changed it to——

Q. How did you happen to become a director for that bank? A. I got a call from Mr. Mills Lane one day, and he asked me if I would come up to his office. I went down and he said he needed to start a bank out in the Sandy Springs area, and he said, "I need some people to be on the board of directors." I says, "What has that got to do with me?" He said, "I want you to be on the board of directors." I said, "I am a contractor; I went to Georgia Tech; that is a technical school." He said, "I need somebody to be on the board of directors," and so I said, "Well, if you tell me to do it, I will." So that is the way I came to be on the board.

[875] Q. Did you have meetings with regulatory authorities when you opened? A. Yes, had them in your law firm's offices. We were interrogated by several agencies, and I can remember very well them asking me what I was doing there. I told them because Mr. Lane said we ought to do it for the area of the city, and I told them I had no banking background or anything, but I had been very much connected with Mr. Lane and the C&S over the years; that I thought this was something that was needed out there and looked to me like it was an area that was going to grow. I was all for it.

Q. Did you have a concern as to what you could bring to the management or the direction of the bank? A. I could bring very little. I had been raised as a banker's son; I guess he didn't think I had enough sense to be a banker. That's why he sent me to a technical school. No, I didn't have any thoughts.

Q. What was your thought about where that bank was going to get its management and direction? A. From the C&S Bank, because the whole thrust and organization, Tom Cook was then an officer of the bank, was the one out pushing the paper, selling the stock and doing all the leg work for it. So the entire organization of that bank came right out of the main [876] office over here, and, consequently, we knew full well that all the time we would be tied in with the help of the C&S Bank to move that bank forward.

Q. Did you have any contact as a contractor with regard to the initial banking quarters of the bank? A. Yeah, I actually developed—we rented a space in a shopping center out there, and I actually developed the space, and I remember we were trying to meet a certain time schedule and it was rather tight. We didn't have all of the approval of the various and sundry agencies, and we were spending money out there. I know I asked Mr. Lane what is going to happen if we don't get this bank approved. He says, "We will open Lane's Pawn Shop out there." So, yes, I did develop the area and it was opened, then, I believe it was, in December of '60.

Q. When the bank opened, did C&S people have any contacts with the opening of it? A. Oh, yes. They were involved in publicity involving our opening ceremonies and were very much in evidence.

Q. Was the bank known as a C&S supported and sponsored bank? A. There wasn't any question. I think all the people that bought stock bought because of their ties [877] with the C&S Bank. It was always conceived that once the banking laws were changed, that this bank would come into the system. Because there wasn't any doubt that this was an area of town that was going to grow in a hurry, and it needed bank facilities up there. So I feel that all of us that went on the original board of directors of that bank felt that once the banking laws were applicable, we would come into the C&S system.

Q. Has the bank been able to serve the Sandy Springs Community, in your opinion? A. I think it would have served it better if it had been a branch of the C&S Bank, in my own personal opinion. But, yes, it served the community; the bank's history is on record. It grew and it grew fast. It has had, I think, a very good effect up there. But, of course, the area itself has developed with such a tremendous rate of speed, I frankly feel it would have been better for the area if it had been a C&S Bank earlier.

Q. At the time, in change of management from Tom Cook to Lou Fortuna, was there any question in your mind, the board's mind, of disaffiliation from the C&S? A. Oh, no. When we got into the obvious problem, when the auditors were out, we had one real bad loan; I believe it was a fellow by the name of Eidson, if I [878] remember, Eidson and Seiden, it became evident then that we had some problems in our loan portfolio, and when we dismissed Tom Cook, Howard Starks brought out Lou Fortuna, brought him off of vacation, and I believe that Lou at that time was out at the Emory C&S Bank, or one of the other banks, so there wasn't any question about where the replacement came from or was going to look for him. He came out of the C&S system.

Q. From your position at the Chamber of Commerce and your experience you have outlined to us of growing up in Atlanta, I wonder if you would give us your view on the relationship of banking business in Atlanta to Atlanta's economic growth. A. I don't think there's any question but that the banking portion of a city plays more of a part with how that city grows than anything else. If you have got a banking community that is very staid and very conservative, a community grows in one way. If you have got a banking community who has faith in the future, who is willing to look at things a little bit differently, it grows in a totally different way. I will never forget that my dad, when he was at the bank, Mr. Lane Young was president of the bank, I remember they gave a testimonial dinner for Mr. Young when he retired. And he said one of the guys got up to give a little say about Mr. Young, [879] and said he came to the bank, didn't know anybody, went in Mr. Young's office and told him he wanted to borrow $500. Mr. Young said that he would be glad to lend him the $500. That shows what a man of character he was; he took a mortgage on my car, a mortgage on my furniture and my house, and he lent me the $500.

I remember that versus Lane, when he would go into the lobby and say, "I got money to sell." There's some things I have seen involving the money business in Atlanta. We have got four big banks in Atlanta. I can remember very vividly when we had a drought in South Carolina and the farmers were having a terrible time there, and C&S got some water wagons; I think they got them out of Army surplus, and sent them over to South Carolina. I can remember when the first industrial development department was opened up, when they hired the boy that was in the Columbus Chamber of Commerce to come here to do nothing but get and develop commerce, move them out in Atlanta, very, very vividly. They brought Carling Brewery out here, which was a vivid thing. What Mr. Lane did, such as the stadium, why he put the money for the plans on the stadium. Once again, before all the legalities had been tied up, and he ended up with a $750,000 bill for a set of blueprints, and I asked him what he was going to do if the plans weren't [880] approved, and he says, "I guess I will be the only citizen that owns a set of plans for the stadium."

I remember how he bought the property for the Governor's Mansion, did all of this.

No, the banking industry in Atlanta has been, in my opinion, probably the real reason that Atlanta has experienced the wonderful growth that we have had, and I think Mr. Lane has been the leader; if not the one, one of the leaders in this particular field.

[881] Cross-Examination

By Mr. Sims

Q. Mr. Gellerstedt, you said that you thought that the bank out in Sandy Springs would have better served the community if it had been a branch of the Citizens and Southern. How; why is that? A. I think it would be direct management contact rather than through the Board. In other words, the Board served but classically, the management direction from the bank was coming from the Citizens and Southern. I think we felt like a direct contact would have been a better thing, rather than the way it was. I think the loan capacity would have been different if it had been directly with the Citizens and Southern Bank. I think certain other features would have helped the normal growth of the area better.

Q. Would you be able to be more specific in what you mean by other features? A. I think the banking community probably has more to do with the area of growth, the type growth you have than any other thing. I think if you have a national bank out there, I think there would have been some direction so far as planning and zoning are concerned that you don't have with a smaller bank like this.

I think certain direction so far as getting[882] other thrusts of particular movements of companies in the area. I can see a lot of things would have been different if you had a national bank there.

Q. Would you say that during the time you served on the Board of Sandy Springs that the Board of Directors was merely a rubber stamp? A. Basically, yes.

Q. Any exceptions to that? A. Not that I can think of. We joined up with the Citizens and Southern profit sharing plan for our employees, every time they would change one of their plans, we would change our plan. No, we basically didn't give any management direction.

Q. Were you on the Board of Directors at the time Tom Cook left the bank? A. Yes.

Q. Was there any discussion about the question of whether or not Mr. Cook would leave for any length of time prior to the time he left? A. Not that I remember. As I say, the auditors were, we knew we had this bad case with Edson and Seiden, which is a relatively large, looked like, loss for the size bank that we were. The auditors came in and, as I remember, the chain of events, it was relatively fast after that. We decided that Tom ought to leave.

[883] Q. Now, you said that you think the banks are important. A. The banks in the community are very important.

Q. In your own opinion, do you believe that the level of competition between banks and the community makes any difference as to the service they provide to the community? A. A. I sure do. I've never seen competition quite as severe as it is in the banks in Atlanta. I am in the contracting business, which is relatively a competitive field itself. I've seen, in this city, a fantastic competition between Trust Company, C&S, Fulton and First National, over the years. Now we have the Bank of Georgia. It's a very tight competition situation as it is.

Mr. Sims: I have no further questions.

The Court: You may step down.

Mr. Hodgson: Judge, we have no more witnesses available for today.

The Court: Let me check with you where we are, run through your list. Of course, the first two that are on there, Messrs. Jackson and Dunn.

Mr. Hodgson: Jackson and Dunn, Mr. Jackson will be available as our first witness on Monday. Mr. Dunn will not be available until Monday afternoon. Of course, Mr. Jackson is the former Superintendent [884] of Banks and Mr. Dunn the present commissioner.

The Court: Are you going to call Mr. Stevenson? I noticed you called two in that category.

Mr. Hodgson: No, sir, the Feds, as I understand, are reluctant to permit the witnesses to testify.

The Court: He will not be here.

Mr. Hodgson: He will not be called.

The Court: Messrs. Cleveland, Bruner, Robinson, Williams, Presley?

Mr. Hodgson: Presley will not be available to come from Augusta.

The Court: Mr. Dick Allen?

Mr. Hodgson: It's problematical about Mr. Dick. The mayor's going to Africa, Mr. Allen's gone again. We urged him not to let a fly bite him.

The Court: But, he is out as far as we are concerned? He will not be a witness. Chatham?

Mr. Doyle: No, Chatham is not going to be.

The Court: Munford?

Mr. Doyle: Yes, sir.

The Court: We have had Mr. Gellerstedt. Connelly, I notice you have got his deposition, I believe.

Mr. Hodgson: Mr. Connelly was among the five [885] percenter presidents who has testified to by proxy, testified by proxy.

The Court: We had him a little bit different paragraph from the others.

Mr. Hodgson: Yes, sir, he was included as a five percent president, really.

The Court: You won't have him. That leaves Mr. Baxter.

Mr. Hodgson: Yes, sir.

The Court: So, let's see how many that gives us.

Mr. Hodgson: I believe that's about nine. We may have some disappointments among them. Their absence probably won't disappoint the Court.

The Court: From what I see, then, there should not be any lengthy testimony except that of cross-examination of Mr. Baxter and if Mr. Kinkaid will follow your example there we will have no problem.

Mr. Hodgson: I believe we are in excellent shape, Your Honor. I think we will conclude Monday evening or Tuesday morning.

The Court: I think we will recess until 10:00 o'clock on Monday.

(Whereupon, court recessed at 3:30 o'clock P. M., to reconvene at 10:00 A. M., Monday, October 2, 1972.)

[887] The Court: All ready?

Mr. Hodgson: Yes, sir.

The Court: Fine.

Mr. Hodgson: So Your Honor will have some notion how we think the day will be going, so we may make some plans, we will be planning to call this morning Mr. King Cleveland, president of the National Bank of Georgia, and Mr. W. M. Jackson, former Superintendent of Banks of the State.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Hodgson: And Mr. Walter Eaves, and last in the morning, Mr. Evans Bruner, and Mr. Mack Robinson.

The Court: In that order?

Mr. Hodgson: Most likely. Mr. Robinson asked that he be allowed to go on late morning to suit his problems, and then Mr. Jack Dunn, the current Commissioner of Banking, who cannot be here until after lunch.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Hodgson: Which will leave us with three witnesses, two of whom will be quite brief, Mr. Jimmy Williams, who is coming in the first thing in the morning, and Mr. [888] Alex Munsford, who has been out of the state, and we haven't been able to reach him. We will try to get him this afternoon and, if not, the first thing in the morning. And then Mr. Baxter.

The Court: How about Mr. Dick?

Mr. Hodgson: Mr. Dick will not be testifying or available.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Hodgson: Mr. Cleveland, will you take the stand, please, sir.

Don, did you pick all of that up? I guess I was mumbling a little bit.

Mr. Kinkaid: Yes, I think I got it all, thank you.

KING CLEVELAND,

being first duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Direct Examination

By Mr. Hodgson

Q. State your full name for the reporter, please, sir. A. My name is King Cleveland.

Q. What is your job, Mr. Cleveland? A. I am chairman of the board and chief executive [889] of the National Bank of Georgia.

Q. How long have you been with the National Bank of Georgia? A. I have been there almost eleven years.

Q. What has been your course of duties with National Bank of Georgia since you have been there? A. I started at the mid-management level when I first went with the bank, and I have been in primary charge of the bank's growth and development for the last six years.

Q. Previous to that, where were you employed? A. I was with the C&S Bank in Albany, in the trust department.

Q. During your time with the C&S, were you always with the trust department? A. Yes, always.

[890] Q. As chief executive officer of National Bank of Georgia, are you familiar with the metropolitan Atlanta banking market? A. I'd say so, yes.

Q. Why is this? A. Well, it's my business to be familiar with it.

Q. I'm going to ask you several opinion questions about this, Mr. Cleveland. I'm going to ask you first, whether or not in your opinion as the chief executive officer of a major bank in this area, if in your opinion, this area is dominated by or concentrated in one or a few banks, relatively to banking markets as you know them, through the country. A. No, I would say certainly not.

Q. What is the reason for your opinion? A. Well, because we are the smallest of the five major banks and we have had no problem in increasing our share of the market. Although the competition is fierce between the banks in Atlanta, it's a clean market, a good market, growing community. I would say that this city probably has the most aggressive banking competition of any cities in the south and probably in the country.

Q. Are you familiar with the fact that this lawsuit relates to attempts by the Citizens and Southern National Bank Holding Company, Emory and East Point, to [891] merge Citizens and Southern Sandy Springs and North Fulton Banks into the Citizens and Southern East Point Bank and Citizens and Southern Chamblee—excuse me—Park National and South DeKalb Banks into the Citizens and Southern Emory Bank? Are you familiar with that fact? A. I am aware of it.

Q. Do you have any opinion as to whether or not if these mergers go through there will be any lessening of banking competition in this area? A. I don't think it makes a bit of difference one way or the other.

Q. Why not? A. The market is open to all of the banks in Atlanta. If we want to do business in those areas, we can make an economic decision to do so. What the Citizens and Southern does with their business in those areas doesn't make any difference to us.

Q. From a competitive point of view, do you have any opinion whether or not these five banks ought to be merged into East Point and Emory or not? A. I don't think it makes a bit of difference. They are recognized as C&S Banks in those communities. Whether they are merged into the existing organization or remain as they are, I don't think it makes a bit of [892] difference from a competitive standpoint.

Q. Could you have done what the Citizens and Southern did? A. Yes, if we had the imagination and the intestinal fortitude and been able to take the business risk involved, doing what they did, we could have done it, yes. So could any other bank in Atlanta.

Mr. Hodgson: No further questions, Mr. Kinkaid.

The Court: All right, you may cross-examine.

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Stern

Q. May we have one moment.

Mr. Cleveland, what is the basis of your opinion that this is a highly competitive market? A. I base it on my day-to-day experiences in competing with other banks in the metropolitan community on a day-to-day basis for both growth, loans, branch locations and all of the other forms of banking.

Q. What other markets were you considering when you were comparing this with the competitiveness of this market? A. Primarily, cities the size of Atlanta, Chicago, Dallas, cities of this sort, where I have the experience of sitting in conference with these bankers from these communities and hear their discussions of their market [893] development, bank expansion.

Q. Have you personally conducted banking in any of these cities? A. No, I have not.

The Court: Anything further from you?

Mr. Hodgson: No, Your Honor.

By the Court

Q. Let me ask you a couple of questions. You apparently considered some geographical area in making this statement, even though the boundaries may have been fairly loose. What boundaries did you consider for the market that you say is highly competitive? A. Primarily the metropolitan area, two counties, DeKalb and Fulton.

Q. Do you consider the competition is fairly intense throughout or does it vary in that area? A. Well, Your Honor, we consider it very intense throughout the two counties. That's based to a large degree on the analysis that we made when we started our branch banking program and we are trying to determine what branch locations may be desirable from our standpoint. We made an analysis, statistics in almost every community in the two counties and found places where we wanted to put a branch.

[894] The Court: Well, do you find that the competition to which you refer is primarily there with the largest four or five banks, or does the competition include more than that?

A. It includes more than that. There are several independent banks located in the metro Atlanta area, where we felt that they were so strong in that particular market that we were not encouraged about opening a branch across the street from them.

The Court: And do you find that they compete as effectively in the areas which they serve as the largest banks?

A. Yes, sir, that was our opinion. Because of their ties in the community, that it would be a more difficult market to compete with them than it would one of the large Atlanta banks.

The Court: Anything further from this witness?

Mr. Hodgson: We have no further questions.

The Court: Step down. Thank you.

Mr. Hodgson: Mr. Jackson, please.

W. M. JACKSON,

being first duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

[895] Direct Examination

By Mr. Hodgson

Q. State your full name for the Court, please, sir. A. W. M. Jackson.

Q. Mr. Jackson, what is your job today? A. I'm retired, former Superintendent of Banks.

Q. How long have you been retired, Mr. Jackson? A. Since January 1st, this year.

Q. Of this year? A. Uh-huh.

Q. Would you tell the Court briefly, sir, the course of your career in the Banking Department, how you got there and how you developed. A. Well, my career in the banking business, banking industry, began about forty years ago. As a matter of fact, it began during World War I. I was in the banking business for about fifteen years, and then in 1945, I became associated with the State Banking Department as bank examiner. I examined banks in the state system for about eight years and then was appointed Assistant Superintendent of Banks in 1953. I remained Assistant Superintendent of Banks until 1963; in July of 1963 I was appointed Superintendent of Banks by Governor Carl Sanders for the term of four years; and then was reappointed at the expiration of that four-year [896] term by Governor Maddox for an additional four years, which expired January 1st, this year, at which time I retired. About twenty-six years with the State Banking Department.

Q. Would you describe to the Court in broad terms the functions of the State Banking Department as they existed under your administration? A. Well, the prime responsibility of the Superintendent of Banks in the Banking Department is to see that state banking in this state is conducted in a safe and sound manner in the public interest. The duties are to charter new state banks, approve applications or disapprove applications for branch banking in the state; to approve mergers and liquidations in the state; to examine all state banks to see that they are complying with the state banking laws; and to see that management is competent and conducts the banking business in a safe and sound manner. That's the general principal function, to examine each state bank once each year.

Q. In connection with this, do you coordinate your business with those of other regulators of banks? A. We work very closely with the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and also the Federal Reserve Bank. We have state non-member banks and state member banks. The Federal Reserve have some supervision over [897] member banks, while the F.D.I.C. has supervision over non-member banks. So we work closely with those two agencies in the supervision of our state banking system. The state, of course, can—only charters the banks; those agencies do not charter state banks. The F.D.I.C. is an insuring agency that insures deposits, and their functions are very similar to the state functions in the supervision of our banks.

Q. Mr. Jackson, when you are examining into questions relating to new charters, branch applications and the like, is one of the factors you take into consideration the convenience and needs of the communities to be involved? A. That is correct. That is one of the primary factors, bases.

Q. One of the several factors. I would like to come back to all those factors in just a moment. We might as well do it right now.

What are the factors categorically, by statute, that you are obliged to inquire into with respect to charters and branches? A. When applications are filed for charters, and the same criteria applies under the law to the granting of branch banks in the state, there's five basic factors that we govern these applications by. One is the [898] financial condition of the new bank at beginning of business. It involves a good many details, which we won't relate right here.

The second is the adequacy of capital of the proposed new bank. The third is the management factor of the bank, and the fourth is the convenience and needs of the community in which the proposed bank is to be located, and the future earning prospects of the bank, and such other facts; and circumstances that have a bearing on the proposed bank in the particular locality includes competition and any other factor that might be relevant to the application.

Q. Do these same factors apply with respect to applications for conversion of a national banking association charter to a state banking charter? A. They do when relevant, they do; all of those factors.

Q. Now, Mr. Jackson, in your official functions with the Department of Banking over the years, did you regularly come in contact with representatives from the Citizens & Southern National Bank Holding Company and affiliates? A. Yes, most —in every instance where we examine affiliate C&S banks, the five percenters, where there were criticisms or needs for adjustments in [899] management or capital or earnings and so forth, as a general rule, I always contacted Mr. Joe Hall, who had general supervision over the C & S affiliate banks. And when there was a need for any adjustments or improvement in the conditions of the bank, I would generally talk with Mr. Hall about it, and it was forthcoming immediately, such as capital increases or capital notes on debentures and what-have-you, general information. Finally got better results by that than going direct to the president of the particular bank. Of course, we did talk with the presidents of each of these banks, but I relied primarily on Mr. Hall for the corrections that we have covered.

[900] Q. Now, when the Citizens and Southern—well, let me ask the preliminary question. Do you recall the conversion of the Citizens and Southern Chamblee Bank and Sandy Springs Bank from national association into state banking charters? A. Yes.

Q. Do you recall the chartering of Citizens and Southern North Fulton and South DeKalb by your office? A. Yes.

Q. In those actions by your department, I presume they were all four favorable? A. They were all favorable but any condition that might have come up; which we did have in one instance, one of these bank's capital in conversion from a national to a state bank was below our state average of the requirement and as a condition for that bank to convert, I required Mr. Hall, or agreed with Mr. Hall, that the capital after conversion would be increased to that amount that we would ask for.

Q. And that was done? A. It was forthcoming, yes.

Q. Now, in considering these applications for two charters and two conversions, you were aware of the fact, the relationship as you described it, affiliation with the Citizens and Southern National Bank Holding Company; were [901] you not? A. That's correct.

Q. And the supply of the management and capital? A. That's right.

Q. And did you consider these to be favorable factors in considering the applications? A. I did.

Q. They carried the name Citizens and Southern, did they not? A. That's correct.

Q. Did you have any objections to their being separate corporations? A. None whatever so long as they didn't conflict with some bank in the immediate locality or area; might have been in the C&S system and change the names to the C&S system, the bank. We did have one or two objections but they were corrected, you see.

Q. Can you recall what those objections were, so that it's not unclear on the record? A. The Citizens & Southern Bank of a certain community was too near the Citizens Bank of that same community and we required Citizens and Southern to eliminate the Citizens and Southern and adopted the C&S symbol.

Q. Just the C&S symbol rather than the full name? [902] A. Right; that's correct.

Q. Mr. Jackson, do you recall the application of South DeKalb, Citizens and Southern South DeKalb Bank, at the time of this organization, particularly? A. I think so.

Q. Do you remember that Mr. Warren Berry was proposed to be president of that bank? A. That's correct.

Q. Do you recall where Mr. Berry was coming from? A. The C&S system.

Q. Did you consider the application itself as being one of Citizens and Southern system? A. Banks, yes, sir.

Q. Did you expect that the Citizens and Southern South DeKalb Bank would have the same general policies, standards and support, management and name as the Citizens and Southern other affiliated banks? A. That's correct.

Q. Mr. Jackson, did you consider with respect to the applications for new branches by Citizens and Southern East Point and Emory, these very mergers that are here under consideration by this Court—I'll put it that way—in connection with the application for the mergers, were not applications filed with your office disclosing the mergers and applying for state branches of Emory and [903] East Point? A. Sure.

Q. What was your action on those applications? Was it favorable or unfavorable? A. It was favorable.

Q. Why was it favorable? A. Well, I could see no adverse effects on competition in those particular areas and it makes little difference in the public's minds. They look at the bank as the C&S Bank anyway and I had no objections from any source, from any banker in the immediate area or locality or the state, and the mergers met all of the criteria of the five, six principles that I ennumerated a while ago; I had no choice other than to approve it.

Q. Mr. Jackson, you heard me ask Mr. Cleveland, you heard his response to this question, I'll ask you the question also, do you have an opinion as to whether or not the Atlanta metropolitan area is either concentrated or not concentrated in several banks in the area and whether or not there is much competition here among the banks? A. Well, I would think that. Of course, there is competition among banks in every locality in Georgia, where there is two or more banks. Atlanta is not unlike any other major metropolitan city in the nation. There is competition in all of the major cities. There is [904] competition in, very strong competition in Fulton County, among the banks, that's inherent in the banking business. It's inherent in any business where there is competition in it. And I think that, and feel that, competition in the banking business is pretty well diversified among five, six of the major banks in Atlanta which is a healthy condition, and I at the same time feel that the major banks, larger banks of Atlanta, Georgia are going to adequately serve the banking needs for industry, commerce and the public in this state, they've got to grow and expand with the economy. They've got to be allowed to expand and grow to meet the financial money markets of the nation as well as foreign money markets. We do have banks here that have branches presently in foreign countries and you can't do that on a small shoestring basis. If all the banks in Atlanta are going to be stifled by extreme regulations, then I think our banking industry in Georgia would be harmed.

I think it's necessary that our banks grow and expand with our economy in the state. I don't think there is any undue competition among the state banks. It's not going to hurt competition in the locality.

We have had over the past twenty years probably equal number of new banks as well as merged banks. I see no ill effects it has on banks in Fulton County. The [905] same thing in DeKalb County.

Mr. Hodgson: We have no further questions, Your Honor.

The Court: Cross-examine.

Mr. Kinkaid: Just one moment, please, Your Honor.

The Witness: Judge, could I add one point to what I already said? I'd like to add further, Mr. Hodgson, that as far as the approval of those applications for merger was concerned, you understand, as I stated, I had no objection from the bankers of this area, locality, neither did I have any objection from the Federal agencies that had supervision over these banks. I contacted all of them, you see, so I had no alternative other than to approve it.

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Kinkaid

Q. One small point has occurred to me during Mr. Jackson's testimony. As I recall, Mr. Jackson filed an affidavit several months ago in connection with the motion to lift the statutory stay, I believe, that exhibit has been offered. That affidavit, rather, has been offered here as an exhibit. I'm wondering whether that affidavit has been withdrawn in view of Mr. Jackson's live testimony today?

[906] Mr. Doyle: It has been withdrawn.

Q. Mr. Jackson, you were talking about competition in Atlanta. Could you tell us what is the geographic areas you had in mind when you were describing what you feel is good competition in this area? A. Well, the trade area of any bank is the area in which it expects to get its banking business from. Now, there was a time in the history of banking in Atlanta when just the city limits of Atlanta was considered its trade area. But, communities can outgrow the banking trade areas and expand out and overflow into the adjoining communities which become a part of the trade area of metropolitan Atlanta banks.

[907] I would say now your trade area is—embraces metropolitan Atlanta, which would include Fulton and DeKalb Counties at the present time. Now, in another twenty-five years it might take in another county, but I think the Atlanta banks have got to follow, and that brought about your countywide branch-banking field. They have got to follow their customers and their trade area as it expands. And I think it expands to DeKalb County at the present time. That is part of metropolitan Atlanta.

Q. Now, Mr. Jackson, could you take a rough guess as to how many banks you chartered while you were Superintendent of Banks? A. In the state?

Q. Yes, sir. A. I had those statistics in my office, but I would say, since I was Superintendent, it would be just a guess now, I'm thinking more perhaps in the whole state, probably sixty, maybe seventy-five during my term as Superintendent.

Q. Yes, sir. A. Now, I would say probably in the Atlanta metropolitan area we have had twelve or fifteen new banks chartered. I think as time goes on and our expansion of our economy continues, there will be more [908] new banks chartered in the metropolitan area; wherever there is a need, necessity for the bank, whether there is a branch or not, we will charter a bank if there is a need for it.

Q. In connection with chartering of some of the banks involved in this litigation, like South DeKalb, for example, you mentioned that C&S relationship, if I recall you correctly, was a factor in your—a favorable factor in your decision to grant the charter. A. Yes.

Q. In that connection, I would like to ask you, can you take a rough guess as to how many of the banks that you yourself chartered as Superintendent, first of all, were organized with assistance from C&S, and then try to guess how many were organized with assistance from other large Georgia banks.

Mr. Hodgson: If Your Honor please, I rather object to "try to guess". If he wants to ask his best recollection, if that is what he is really saying——

Mr. Kinkaid: Well, that's what I mean, sure.

The Court: Try asking him.

By Mr. Kinkaid

Q. As best you can recall, can you give us a [909] figure on that? A. No, I will have to get that question again.

Q. Okay, sure. First of all, well, perhaps I could try to shorten it for you. It might be easier this way. Wasn't it true that most of the banks that you chartered as Superintendent were not started with assistance from C&S? Wouldn't that be a fact? A. I think that would be a fact, that most of the banks, sure, were not affiliated with the C&S system, sure, yeah. I would say, now getting back to your question, probably there might have been as many affiliated with other major banks in the state or more than the C&S five percenters. See, I only dealt with the C&S five percenters, that is, affiliated with the C&S system.

Q. Yes, sir. A. But there were more, probably, banks chartered with other affiliation of major banks in the state than just C&S, sure.

Q. I gather from what you say, you can recall chartering banks that, for example, were started with the assistance of Trust Company? A. Yeah. See, all the major banks are affiliated with some banks one way or the other as the correspondent relationship. So, the far majority of them were [910] chartered with the correspondent relationships and help from other major banks than the C&S system, yeah.

Q. Yes, sir. And wouldn't that be a favorable factor, also, in your decision to grant the charter to a new bank, namely, it has—is getting assistance from, say, Trust Company and at formation is going to have Trust Company as its correspondent bank? A. Well, as a general rule, you see, a new application, you have got to know who the—is going to be the active management of that bank, you see. As a general rule, in these five-percent banks, well, the C&S—the proposed or the proponents of the bank have asked C&S to help them organize a bank or furnish management for the bank, you see, and, as a reward, I guess, they let them have five percent interest in it. And the C&S furnishes the management for that bank. Now, the correspondent relationship of the banks, sometimes one of these major banks will allow one of their men to go into one of these new banks and run it, which experience would have to meet the requirement for management factor as to experience and so forth, you see. And so they do—it operates both ways. But, I think in most cases the proposed applications that's not a five percenter, they furnish their own man, you see, and he may not be with a correspondent bank; he would [911] come from some other bank.

Q. Well, now, did you have cases where—now, these would be banks not being started with C&S assistance? A. Yeah.

Q. In those cases, weren't there cases where the new banks, the new bank's management was found with assistance from the correspondent bank? A. That is possible, yes, yes, sure.

Q. And in those cases, would that be a favorable factor in your eyes, not the only one, but would that be one favorable factor in granting the charter for the new bank? A. Favorable factor because the correspondent suggested somebody to run it?

Q. Uh-huh. A. Well, there again, we're going to base the decision on ability of that man that is proposed to run the bank; of course, the help of a correspondent would be a help, no doubt, to strengthen the management of the bank.

Q. Didn't you, as a matter of fact, check out the people who were going to be running the banks that were formed with C&S assistance? You didn't just take C&S' word? [912] A. No, we check out each man that is going to be executive officer of the bank.

Q. Whether he comes from C&S or some other bank? A. Or someone else, yes. We have got to know what his experience has been. If the C&S proposes some installment loan clerk to run a bank, we wouldn't approve it. See, same way with any other correspondent.

Q. Do you recall chartering the Peachtree Bank & Trust Company in Chamblee back in about 1960? A. The Peachtree Bank & Trust Company happened be be chartered before I was Superintendent of Banks, and I'm not as familiar with the details of the chartering of that particular bank. I think W. D. Tripp was the Superintendent of Banks at that time, but I feel that—and I think that that was a close affiliate of the Trust Company of Georgia. How much stock they had in that bank at the beginning of the business, I am not familiar with it.

Q. I forgot, you started in '63; is that right? A. '63, yes. But, I do know that I chartered a bank in Sandy Springs for them, and that was an affiliated bank with the Trust Company. In fact, they owned all of the stock in that bank, the directors of the proposed bank, and they furnished management for the [913] bank, and that bank was subsequently merged with the Trust Company of Georgia.

Q. Yes, sir. Mr. Jackson, do you take into consideration the board, the proposed board of directors for a new bank that is applying for a charter? A. Yes, we do.

Q. What do you look for in the board of directors for the new bank? A. Well, our examiners that make these investigations of charters are trained in their investigation. They meet with the proponents of the new bank, have a lot of information to get to fill in to complete the report, and so forth. And then, they interview each proposed director individually, separately from the group, and they have a lot of questions they want to know and find out what—if there are any affiliations with any other bank; if any agreement has been made to resell or repurchase stock in his bank; how he is going to finance the purchase of this stock, and if there's going to be any repurchase agreements we find out all of that information, as well as his financial standing in the community and whether he has had any, of course, connection with any unfavorable business or dealings; whether he has ever been convicted of any crime or fraud. We don't want men like that on the board of directors. [914] so we go into every phase of a man's life nearly. His education, his family life and everything. Sometimes a man's family life might disqualify him because of family situations. That applies to management even, you see. Yes, sir, we go into all of those factors.

Q. Is one of the things you are looking for in directors of a bank that is being considered for a new charter, is one of the things you are looking for in that bank's board independence of thought, a group of men who will run that bank independently in the best interest of that bank? A. Sure.

Q. Is that a factor, sir? A. Why, sure, sure, absolutely. That is a responsibility of the directors. If he doesn't carry out and meet his responsibilities and the bank gets into trouble, he could very easily have a liability suit attached to him.

Q. I would like to show you something and ask you if you can recall this particular little booklet. Do you recall that, sir? A. Yes, sir. We send that to every proposed director of a new bank when it is chartered.

Q. I note that this appears to have been written in 1967; is that your recollection also? [915] A. About that time, yes.

[916] Q. Do you recall whether the directors of C&S South DeKalb and C&S North Fulton were given copies of this booklet? A. Well, as to the end, the particular bank, I couldn't recall. Our men had instructions at a certain stage of the chartering of every bank that this book be mailed to every director of every bank. Now, if they missed one, I wouldn't know. But, as far as to my knowledge, it was mailed to every director of every new bank, that is my men's instructions.

Q. Excuse me. Why were your men instructed to see to it that each new director of a new bank got a copy of this book? A. Well, we want the directors of every bank to realize their responsibilities, know what the responsibilities and duties are. The law doesn't excuse ignorance of the directors from approving something that's unsound and unsafe. You've got a responsibility to all of the rest of the stockholders as well as the public to operate that bank, see that it's operated in a sound and safe manner.

Q. Do you recall when you wrote that booklet, indicating that the directors of a new bank would most likely need help and advice from a lot larger banks, primarily the correspondent banks in the various respects? A. Sure, that's one of the essential and important [917] things that an independent bank or small bank should, who doesn't have expertise, management expertise, to consult his major correspondent for advice.

Like a customer of the bank would go to the bank and ask for advice on a certain matter, sure that's an essential thing in our banking industry, common practice all over the nation.

Q. Now, on the other hand, you didn't want your Board of Directors to get too dependent on somebody else for that kind of advice, did you? A. Well, if the Board is not familiar with certain phases of banking, I think it's their responsibility to acquaint themselves with it. I know of no better way than correspondents.

Q. Excuse me, Mr. Jackson, maybe we could just take a look and there are an awful lot of things in this book that are very interesting. I don't want to take up your time. A. Thank you.

Q. I enjoyed reading it. Could you look at 14, sir? This would be down, last paragraph where the heading is "The Individual Director." And it says, "A great number of bank directors when they are first elected have no technical knowledge of banking and feel that they must depend on someone who does." That's what you have just [918] been telling us; right, that these people have to get help and advice somewhere? A. Since they are really not bankers themselves, that's right.

Q. This is what you have in mind in this passage? A. Sure, a lot of successful businessmen in the community never had any banking experience, and have to rely, naturally, on somebody to know something.

Q. The next sentence, you say, "This should not become a habit." What did you have in mind with that expression? A. Well, it shouldn't become a habit of relying on someone else to make the decisions for you continuously. I think you should acquaint yourself as far as possible with banking transactions and matters and act upon your own judgment.

Q. Now, when you say relying on someone else, by someone else do you include there another bank, as well as the president of the bank, of the small bank itself? Would you include both of those? A. President of the small bank itself has to consult and confer with its major correspondent many times on banking matters. He doesn't know all the answers himself. His investment policies, loans, credit information [919] on major borrowers, loans in excess of his legal limits, naturally, the major bank is in a position of all that knowledge and credit information and can be helpful to him.

Q. Did you have in mind here that—— A. Frequently they participate with the small bank in loans and what have you, and even sell them loans.

Q. Well, on the other hand, you don't think the Board of Directors should become, should make a habit out of relying on its correspondent bank? A. Well, I don't think a man that knows what he is doing will rely on somebody else to act for him.

Q. Do you think—was it your intention that the Board of Directors of the small bank make its own competitive decisions? Was that one of the things you did not want them to rely on someone else for?

Mr. Hodgson: I would appreciate it if Mr. Kinkaid would explain to Mr. Jackson what he means by competitive decisions. As I see it, it can go all over the ball park.

Q. (By Mr. Kinkaid) I feel a little funny advising a former State Superintendent what competitive decisions are. I will give it a whirl.

I'm not trying to be presumptious with you, I would think of things, you could think of many more, the setting of interest rates on savings accounts, determining [920] the amount of charges on checking accounts, setting of interest rates on various types of loans. Would you consider those competitive decisions made by banks? A. Well, of course, the interest on savings deposits is a matter determined by regulations under the FDIC. They have no choice in that.

Q. You mean the maximum determined? A. Yes.

Q. Do all banks pay the maximum? A. To my knowledge, as far as I know. I don't know of any that are under the maximum.

Q. What type of accounts are you thinking of, sir? A. I'm thinking about savings.

Q. Passbook or regular savings accounts? A. Savings, passbook, certificates of deposit, all that's governed by regulations with the FDIC as to maximum interest rates they can pay.

Q. Do you happen to know offhand what the maximum interest rate on passbook savings accounts is today? A. I guess it's four percent on mine. I think that's about the maximum on passbook savings.

Q. Are you aware that C&S National pays three and a half percent on such accounts? A. Well, we don't check every bank to see what the [921] minimum interest rates they charge on, pay on savings deposits and time certificates. We don't, as a general rule, as long as it's not over the maximum rate, we are not concerned whether it's under. That's a matter for the Board of Directors of the bank to determine.

Q. Would you consider that a decision that—— A. Would have to be made by the Board.

Q. The Board would have to take into consideration, among other things competitive, what competition the bank is getting; is that right? A. Sure, of course, banks are placed at a disadvantage, competitive-wise, for deposits with savings and loans. Banks can't compete with them.

Q. Do the banks compete with each other nonetheless for savings accounts? A. I don't think that's something that—two banks in the same locality generally pay the same interest rates, as a general rule. You might have one single bank in a community that might have a minimum under the regulated amount or the maximum. But, it's almost reasonable for banks to compete equally on savings deposits by the same interest rates.

Q. If in the City of Atlanta, if there were—if the interest rates paid on savings accounts, for example, ranged anywhere from three and a half to four percent, what [922] would you say as to competition in that regard among those banks? A. Let me say this. You're talking about paying interest rates in the City of Atlanta, and as I said a while ago, we, as a general rule, don't check every bank to see if they are paying interest under the maximum rate, minimum, whatever minimum they are paying. But, you do have a savings bank here in Atlanta, and I don't know what the interest rate is paid on savings, but I would think that it would be equal to the commercial bank savings account, passbooks. There is a bank that's four to five million dollars less than it was fifteen years ago. I don't know what is the competition there, lack of paying maximum savings for savings bank or not, but there again, it's a matter of your Board of Directors, the management of the bank. If a bank is going to grow and expand, meet competition in its community, it's got to meet competition and if you don't branch, if you don't do this in your major cities, you are going to dry up, more or less. The fact that management is one of the most major factors of banking. That is one of the greatest problems we have today is banks have grown so large and we have got so many banks, new banks, it's very difficult to find management for all these new banks, I mean suitable, experienced management. That's why you have problem banks. Where you have banks [923] getting in trouble is resulting from management. You have had some testimony right in this case here that pinpointed some of that. You only heard one side of the coin, that management is their problem. When a bank gets into serious problems and you can't get it corrected, what are you going to do with it, liquidate it or merge it? Which is better for the public?

Q. Earlier, when you were talking with Mr. Hodgson, you indicated that one of your primary functions as Superintendent was to check to see that your banks were complying with state banking laws. Do I remember you correctly in that regard? A. Right.

Q. Did you check to see whether your banks were complying with any laws other than state banking laws? A. Well, if we have any reasons to believe that they aren't, of course, we would check into it. I don't know of any laws other than regulations of the Federal Reserve Bank and FDIC that they would be in violation of.

Q. Mr. Jackson, what I have specifically in mind was the Federal Anti-Trust laws. A. Yes. Yes, sure, we take that into consideration, as I gave you one of those factors, six major factors, competition in the locality. Sure, we take that into consideration, and I will say this, that in twenty-five [924] years that I have been with the Banking Department, we have never chartered a bank that ever got into trouble for lack of business because of competition. Every bank we have chartered exceeded our estimated projections and we take competition into consideration.

Now, value in mind this, that we have rejected more applications than we have approved because the lack or weakness in the needs and convenience in the community. There again, competition comes into it. Sure, we take that into consideration.

Q. In other words, if I understand you correctly, by competition, you mean—— A. Banking competition.

Q. There is too much competition for the new bank or whether there is too little competition and, therefore, a new bank is needed? A. I think very definitely that the needs of the community factor outweighs the competition that you are speaking of. But, nevertheless, the competition is such that you can't warrant the needs and necessity, you can't grant the charter.

Q. And that's what—that's all you have in mind when you speak about looking into competition? A. The Federal laws, yes, we take the competitive factors in mind.

[925] Q. Do you take into mind—are you familiar with the Sherman Act? A. Yeah. I don't know of any—any law that we are in violation of there.

Q. No, perhaps you didn't understand me. Do you check to see whether your banks are complying with the Sherman federal Anti-Trust Statute? A. Yeah, yeah, we checked 'em all. See if they are complying with the Federal Reserve Board Act as to the interlocking directorships and all of that. There's no phase that I know that we overlook.

Q. Did you check—have you checked in that regard with respect to the state C&S banks that you, yourself, have examined that are defendants in this case? A. We give the C&S applications the same type rigid investigations that we give all the rest of them, of all the factors very definitely.

Q. In what regard? A. As a matter of fact, we restrict—place restrictions to some extent on the C&S five-percent banks. We place restrictions that are not in the law on all the charters of banks.

Q. I am not sure if I understand what you have in mind by restrictions. [926] A. Go beyond just what the law calls for. Well, our state law limits C&S Holding, any holding company to five percent of the stock. Well, there again, if a holding company has got five percent of the stock, we don't allow other associated members of the family to own controlling stock in that bank, you see. The law—the Holding Company Act did at one time, prohibit stock ownership by the associated families of holding companies, but the '60 Act repealed that law completely. Now the law does not prohibit stock ownership by members of the families of the holding company, and it doesn't prohibit, although we limit the amount that a holding company can have less the stocks of the members of its family to not more than twenty-five percent of the stock in that. And the same thing would apply to any other bank or independent bank. We don't want the board of directors of any new bank to own controlling stock in the bank. And I have never granted a charter during my superintendency of office where they owned more than that, perhaps—except in one instance, and that was the one you approved the merger, the Trust Company of Georgia at the Sandy Springs bank, and your own Division approved it.

Q. This is the one—you mean the federal board approved and we did not sue; is that what you mean? Is that what you have in mind? [927] A. No, it wasn't a member of the Federal Reserve system—well, the Trust Company was, that's right; but the affiliated bank at Sandy Springs was not.

Q. Incidentally, Mr. Jackson—— A. What difference does it make whether the Federal Reserve Board approved it or not with your department?

Q. You are absloutely right. It doesn't make any difference to us. A. Why wouldn't you act on the non-member, a member bank the same as the non-member bank?

Q. We try to treat all alike, sir. Incidentally, Mr. Jackson—— A. Of course, we can—wait a minute now; we are all professionals and we can agree or disagree, and I disagree with it.

Q. You certainly have that right, and I respect it. Mr. Jackson, in your experience as State Superintendent, can you say whether or not small banks tend to rely on advice given them by their correspondent banks? A. Sure they rely on it to a large extent and degree, yes. When they ask for information and advice, sure, they rely on it. A small bank in the rural communities don't have the—as I said a while ago, the [928] equities that your banks in Atlanta have.

Q. Well, in your experience as State Superintendent, would you say that that reliance by the small bank on its large correspondent results in the small bank being operated virtually as a branch of the large correspondent? A. Well, not as a correspondent, no, but as an affiliate bank, yes. When you take——

Mr. Kinkaid: Your Honor——

A. When you take these five percenters bearing the name of C&S, the general public looks at that as the C&S Bank. They don't know whether it is an independent bank or not, and the C&S management is in with that bank with the C&S name. Now, that is more of an affiliate bank than a correspondent relationship, and it makes little difference in the public's point of view whether it is a C&S independent bank or a C&S branch bank or a C&S National Bank. It makes little difference; that don't change the competition—competitive factor one iota.

Mr. Kinkaid: Your Honor, at this time, I don't know what number we are up to, but I would like several parts of this little booklet that I think are relevant to various issues here, I would like to introduce this [929] as our next exhibit.

The Clerk: 216.

The Court: It is so admitted.

Mr. Kinkaid: May I have just one moment, sir?

By Mr. Kinkaid

Q. I think you were just indicating that these C&S banks, as long as they have the C&S name and management that has been provided by C&S, they are all the same from a competitive standpoint. Are the C&S correspondent associates, nonetheless, were they not nonetheless chartered by you to be independent banks? I am thinking primarily of South DeKalb and North Fulton.

Mr. Hodgson: If Your Honor please, I object to the form of the question, not knowing what independent means; if he means chartered as separate corporations, of course, that is a fact. It is an undisputed fact. But as to what he means by "independent" is another question.

Mr. Kinkaid: What I have in mind is the thing that we have been talking about that you had in your booklet as to the duties and functions and responsibilities of the directors of banks.

[930] The Court: Why don't you ask him if he expected the directors of those banks to live up to what is outlined in the booklet?

Mr. Kinkaid: May I ask your question, sir, just use your question?

The Court: I assume his answer is yes.

A. Yes.

By Mr. Kinkaid

Q. Thank you, sir. A. Now, let's see just one minute.

The Court: Mr. Jackson, I think you have answered, but he threw you a question that could take us a year to answer, I'm afraid. You put it all in a book, and presumably you expected the directors to live up to the obligations that are set out. Your answer is affirmative, and I think that is sufficient for his purposes.

Mr. Kinkaid: Thank you, Mr. Jackson.

Mr. Hodgson: We have no further questions, Your Honor.

The Court: All right. Thank you very much, Mr. Jackson.

Mr. Hodgson: Thank you, Mr. Jackson.

The Court: We will stand in recess [931] for fifteen minutes.

(Whereupon a recess was had.)

[932] Mr. Doyle: Call Mr. Evans Bruner.

Whereupon,

EVANS BRUNER

was called as a witness by and on behalf of the defendants, and having first been duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination

By Mr. Doyle

Q. Would you state your name for the record, please? A. W. Evans Bruner.

Q. By whom are you employed? A. Trust Company of Georgia Associates.

Q. In what capacity? A. Executive vice president.

Q. Is Trust Company of Georgia Associates a registered bank holding company? A. It is.

Q. Mr. Bruner, were you the man at Trust Company and Trust Company Associates who primarily had contact with Peachtree Bank & Trust Company? A. Commencing at about 1961.

Q. All right, sir. And the bank had begun approximately a year prior to that time? A. Right.

Q. Focusing on the time when Mr. Charles Ginden [933] was first made president of that bank, which I believe he testified was sometime in 1967, focusing around about that time, did you regularly attend meetings of the Board of Directors of Peachtree Bank & Trust Company? A. Pretty regularly, yes.

Q. Could you tell us at that time whether you attended all of their meetings or was it on the basis of when you were invited? A. Well, it was sort of a standing invitation, but I did get out there most times, but I suspect it is about that time when our own attorney said, "Let's just you don't, don't be constantly in attendance."

Q. All right, sir. And then, thereafter did your attendance change so far as Trust was concerned? A. Yes.

Q. Can you describe it or characterize it thereafter? A. Well, it was when they asked me to attend.

Q. And it was on a frequent or infrequent basis? A. Infrequent.

Q. All right, sir. Did you—or, beginning at that point and continuing thereafter, did you or Trust Company or Trust Company Associates routinely provide regular supervision of the management of Peachtree Bank? [934] A. You say before or after?

Q. After. A. After?

Q. Yes, sir. A. No, if they asked us questions, we would hop on the telephone, and if they wanted to talk about something, I would talk.

Q. You responded to the requests as they came? A. Oh, yeah, yeah.

Q. The negotiations were with the bank and—— A. Oh, yes.

Q. ——not with the Trust Company associates? A. (Witness shakes head negatively.)

Q. At that time, their pension plan, I believe, was that the same or different from the Trust Company Bank? A. It had never been the same, as far as I know. It was one they adopted of their own.

Q. When Peachtree Bank hired a man—— A. Wait a minute; it's not a pension plan, it is a profit-sharing plan.

Q. The profit-sharing plan; they didn't have a pension plan? A. No.

Q. When Peachtree Bank hired an employee or a [935] junior officer or an officer, if they hired a Trust Company man, they approached him just the same as if a stranger would have approached that man? A. Well, there are certain courtesies that any business extends to another. When he is going to talk to somebody working for him, if there is a reasonable sort of relationship, they would call up and say, "Listen, you have got a man working with you and I would like to talk with him." They would say, "Well, he is open".

Q. The Peachtree Bank & Trust Company had a board of directors of its own. Would you characterize that as a strong, independent board or as a weak board, or how would you tell us about it? A. It was strong and it was independent.

Q. All right, sir. From your relationship—— A. And we encouraged it, or at least, I encouraged it.

Q. Yes, sir.

From your vantage point at Trust Company Associates, you knew that there was the Citizens National Bank of Chamblee, which is now the C&S Bank of Chamblee, Citizens & Southern Bank of Chamblee? You were aware that it was there? A. Oh, sure, very much.

Q. And you had a familiarity, from your vantage [936] point or a view from your vantage point of the relationship between that bank and the C&S National Bank downtown? A. It was generally through the eyes of those at Peachtree Bank & Trust.

Q. All right, sir. Would you tell us how you saw the relationship and characterize the relationship between Trust Company Peachtree Bank, on the one hand, C&S and C&S Chamblee, as you have told us you saw it, on the other hand. A. Well, the Peachtree Bank & Trust was one where we—to display the relationship, you sort of have got to say what each—what the one was in Peachtree Bank & Trust, I mean the differences. It was not certainly one of domination. It was a matter of advice and assistance. We did not direct business, redirect business. If somebody was out there and they called and wanted to know who they can do business with in Chamblee, why, of course, we would say Peachtree Bank & Trust. But it wasn't a matter of directing business to that bank. In other words, existing customers; whereas, through the Peachtree Bank & Trust Company's eyes, why, it was fairly open knowledge that at least they said that the C&S would say to customers living in that area that might be doing business with some of their [937] banks downtown, says, "Listen, you live out in Chamblee; why don't you do business with our bank out in Chamblee? They can take care of you, and as far as your capacity is concerned, if they need any more, why, they can get it here, and we know you. But let them wait on you." They, reportedly, would sell portions of even their credit card to that bank for them to own. I don't know whether that is true, but that was the report.

In earlier days, before Gordon's time, why, I remember one occasion when a rather large deposit showed up in the figures, and it looked like a million dollars. Since they don't just appear out of the thin blue, it either was a factor—was accepted as a fact that their major correspondent had made a substantial deposit with them in order to give them some monetary support. Folks in Peachtree Bank said, "How come Trust Company doesn't do something for us like—". You know, we sort of would like to, but they said, "No, we don't operate that way." That was sort of the difference.

[938] Mr. Frisbie: Your Honor, if I understand Mr. Bruner's testimony correctly here, he is testifying not through his own knowledge at all and not through his contacts at all, but what, through what is heard from various unidentified persons at Peachtree Bank & Trust Company, what they believe is the occasion, relationship over at Chamblee Bank. As such, I would consider that it becomes double hearsay. I object strongly to his testifying any further than from his personal knowledge.

The Court: I overrule the objection. I suspect the appraisal of competition, the way people may react may depend upon double and triple hearsay, in fact. That's what the businessmen have to act upon in situations like that. But, you can point it out on brief the nature of the testimony. You may answer.

Q. Mr. Bruner, based, then, on your vantage point and position where you were and the relationship as you knew it between your position and Peachtree Bank, can you characterize for us the difference, if any, between the relationship of Trust Company and Peachtree Bank on the one hand and C&S, C&S Chamblee on the other as to whether or not it was a closer relationship or more distant relationship?

[939] Mr. Frisbie: Your Honor, again, if I may, we have not established that Mr. Bruner knows anything at all about the relationship between C&S Chamblee and the C&S system, and it would be the same objection, again, this is the fact that we are talking about and not the competitive effect of something that becomes—this should be a fact that he should testify to and establish that he has personal knowledge of.

The Court: Well, I don't think he can testify as to what it actually is, but the effects to the extent that it motivates his actions, Peachtree Bank & Trust Company, he can testify.

The Witness: As I said in the beginning, I have to look at all of these things from a standpoint, through the eyes of Peachtree Bank & Trust because they were my point of contact.

Q. Yes, sir. A. Very definitely, there was an at-arm's-length relationship among friends as correspondents in the Peachtree Bank & Trust. Whereas at the Chamblee Bank, from every source that I've got any information, it indicated a much more inter-working relationship, exchange of business to direction of business, and support of it through employees transferred and that sort of business, even to [940] the extent that we, everything we did was almost measured by it. This is not as much as what the C&S Bank does at the Chamblee National Bank. I said, "Well, that's as far as we're going to go,"

Q. Yes, sir. Thank you, Mr. Bruner. He's with you.

The Court: Does the entire Trust Division join the enemy? I've noticed two, now.

Mr. Frisbie: Just for the record, these ties were——

Mr. Hall: ——bribes.

Mr. Hodgson: We tried to supply enough for the whole division, if they needed more.

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Frisbie

Q. Mr. Bruner, is it the substance of your testimony that the Peachtree Bank & Trust Company enjoyed the same relationship with the Trust Company of Georgia that its regular correspondent did? A. Closer.

Q. Closer? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have stated that somewhere in 1967, some—'68, somewhere around there, you stopped attending regularly the Board meetings at the Peachtree Bank & Trust [941] Company and that was on the advice of counsel? A. As well as their agreement with the—I say agreement—with the understanding of Peachtree Bank & Trust, I would not be going there.

Q. All right. A. Except as they called.

Q. Was the advice given you at that time strictly to have less attendance or have more infrequent attendance at the directors' meetings or did it extend beyond that? A. That we should do no more for them than we would do for a correspondent bank.

Q. Then, it would be a fair statement to say that one of the main reasons that your relationship with Peachtree Bank & Trust Company lessened, the main reason that your policies and relationships diverged was because your attorneys advised you of this? A. I was having a lot of fun doing it, yes.

Q. Does the term retail oriented bank have any particular meaning to you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Could you explain what a retail oriented bank as opposed to a wholesale oriented bank would be? A. I can explain what my idea is, having to do with consumer banking more than it would be, as a greater proportion of your business, I think, where you have, [942] certainly, if your larger customers, where your livelihood depends on the walk-in customers and the ordinary man on the street and you must do business with him.

Q. Is there any one bank in town that is generally known as a retail oriented bank as opposed to the other? A. More so?

Q. More so. A. Yes, I think—again, this is just my understanding—I would say that the Citizens and Southern is certainly more retail oriented even though it does have a sign out there at the airport—what is it—seventy or some eighty of the largest firms do business with us—

Mr. Frisbie: I have no further questions.

The Court: You may step down.

Mr. Doyle: Mack Robinson.

J. MACK ROBINSON, was called as witness by and on behalf of the defendants, and having first been duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination

By Mr. Doyle

Q. Would you state your name for the record, please, sir? A. J. Mack Robinson.

[943] Q. Mr. Robinson, you are appearing here pursuant to subpoena, are you not? A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Robinson, you have ownership interest in various banks located in Fulton and DeKalb Counties; do you not? [944] A. I do.

Q. All right, sir. With regard to those, could you identify them for us, please, by name? A. What percent ownership do you——

Q. No, sir, just name the banks. A. Well, I have stock in Roswell Bank, Fulton Exchange Bank, DeKalb Exchange Bank, Citizens Bank of Clarkston, DeKalb County Bank.

Q. Are any of those banks located within the city limits of Atlanta? A. No.

Q. Could you tell us why this is so, sir? A. Competition is very keen in Atlanta, and I chose to operate outside the city.

Q. Could you give us a general description of the geographic area in which each of these banks compete? A. Well, of course, we are in the unincorporated area in most places; however, Roswell and Alpharetta are both incorporated, and so is Clarkston, but DeKalb Exchange Bank and DeKalb County are unincorporated areas, and we compete with the nearest bank. In some cases it is only two miles away; some cases, it is as far as five or six miles away.

Q. Would you say, then, that within that kind of [945] mileage radius is the area where your banks are most effective competitors? A. Yes. A few of our customers bank where they work, downtown Atlanta, but the majority of them, we think bank where they live.

Q. All right, sir. With regard to the Roswell Bank located in Roswell, Georgia, could you tell us the other banks that are also located in the Roswell area? A. At the present time, Fulton Exchange Bank has a bank in Roswell, and then the C&S Bank of North Fulton has a bank in Roswell.

Q. Now, in competing against that C&S Bank of North Fulton, can you tell us whether you compete against it the same or differently as if it were a branch of C&S National? A. Well, I would never know the difference if I didn't read the newspapers, because the sign looks the same to me.

Q. All right, sir. Do other factors go into it, in addition to the sign, other factors go into your answer? A. Yes.

Q. Could you describe those for us, as well, just as you see it from the competitive vantage point? A. Well, I think C&S furnished the president [946] to the bank. I think he came from the parent company. And I just consider them very tough competition, and I consider it just the same as a branch of the C&S Bank.

Q. Can you tell me, then, sir, if C&S Bank of North Fulton were merged pursuant to its application into the C&S Emory or C&S East Point Bank, whether or not you believe there would be any difference in banking competition in the Roswell area? A. I can't see as it would change at all, if they left the sign C&S out front.

Q. With that, Mr. Robinson, you do believe that there is a place for independent unit banks, such as you have named that you are interested in in the Atlanta—in the area, is that correct? A. Yes, I do.

Q. You believe they have a future? A. Yes.

Mr. Doyle: No further, questions, Mr. Robinson.

Cross-examination

By Mr. Frisbie

Q. Mr. Robinson, taking the DeKalb Exchange Bank for a minute, does it not have a branch? A. Yes, it does.

Q. Would you please name for me, taking the main [947] office of DeKalb Exchange first, who it is, which banks are considered its chief competitors? A. Well, it is apparently outside the City of Atlanta, and you run into a number of banks. The Trust Company of Georgia, C&S, First Bank of Glenwood, or First National Bank of Glenwood, National Bank of Georgia, and possibly another one that I can't think of right at the moment. They are all about two miles away.

Q. And these are the chief competitors? A. Okay.

Q. Taking the branch now of that same bank, could you also name which would be the chief competitors for the business that that branch has? A. C&S Bank has one or two; First National Bank of Atlanta has one in Decatur. Of course, Citizens Bank of Clarkston is only two or three miles away, and I am sure there is another one that I can't think of the name.

Q. Taking the Citizens Bank of Clarkston next, could you also name the bank or banks that would be its chief competitors? A. A couple of C&S Banks, one at Avondale Estates, one at one of the exits on the perimeter; I am not sure which one, the name of it. But it is about [948] two to three miles away. Now, a couple of other Atlanta banks have opened on Memorial Drive; First National Bank has opened and still another bank that I can't recall the name. It is one of the large Atlanta banks.

Q. Now, going to DeKalb County Banks which bank or branches of banks would be its major competitors? A. Peachtree Bank & Trust Company, C&S Bank, both, on both sides, or C&S Chamblee, I guess. And then, C&S on North Druid Hills; Fulton, I think, has a bank there. First National has one on Cheshire Bridge Road. Those would be our main competitors. And Toco Hills is not far away. That bank has a branch, too, and you run into another group of banks, but it is still about the same ones, Trust Company and C&S.

Q. Are all of these banks you have just named within this two- to three-mile radius that you talked about as being the area within which you get the majority of your business? A. I don't think any would be over three miles; they are all within two or three miles, yes.

Q. Do you consider them competitors only because they are within a certain distance or do these banks also draw customers out of this area? A. Both. They have large advertising budgets, far larger than we do, and any of the big Atlanta four [949] or five banks can attract people easier than we can because of their enormous amounts of money they spend on advertising.

Q. You stated that you could not tell the difference, words to this effect, that you couldn't tell a difference between a correspondent associate bank and a C&S Bank or branch, except for the sign out front; is that substantially correct? A. Being in the banking business, I read and I keep up with what is going on. But were I not in the banking business, it would be very difficult; I couldn't tell one from the other.

Q. You personally understand the legal distinctions then? A. Personally, yes, but——

Q. Do you know of your own knowledge the exact relationship or operating policies carried on between any of the correspondent associates and the C&S National Bank? A. No, none whatsoever.

Q. So, then, actually what you mean then is, from appearances, from the outside appearances you really can't tell the difference between these banks? A. And from competition.

Q. Do you feel that the Roswell Bank is able to [950] compete with the C&S North Fulton Bank? A. Yes, but let me clarify it. Roswell Bank is seventy-one years old and well-established and has thousands of customers. And this helps us. But, as far as the new people coming into the community now, I am sure C&S gets more than 50% of the people because of their enormous advertising budget.

Q. Can the Roswell Bank compete on terms of prices paid for services for loans, interest rates, service charges, things of this sort? A. Oh, yes, I think we are competing in all those areas.

Q. Is the North Fulton Bank generally known as a rate-cutter in that area? A. No, it is not.

Q. From your experience, generally, in banking all around in the Atlanta area here, can you characterize competition generally with C&S banks and branches according to prices? A. Well, I have never known C&S to get involved into cutting rates. I will add this, if you want—if you are asking me this, I think they are as tough competition as any bank in Atlanta.

Q. Can you tell me any one main difference that you know of between a corresponding associate and a [951] branch of C&S National, in your experience? A. I am just not aware of their internal operation. I can't answer that.

Q. Would the board of directors bring anything to mind? A. Well, they do have a board at the Roswell bank, C&S Bank of North Fulton. I am under the assumption if it was a branch they would not have a board.

Q. Does the existence of a board of directors at a competitor bank affect, say, the Roswell Bank competitively? A. It hurts us.

Q. In what respect? [952] A. Well, they pick some of the most prominent men in the community, put them on the Board, and it's customary they do their banking with that bank. If my memory serves me right, several of them moved their banking from Roswell to C&S. When they went on the Board of C&S, of course, they have friends and I'm sure they solicit their friends to be customers of C&S. So, having a Board there does hurt us.

Q. Would it be a fair statement to say that the requirements of having a Board of Directors on a bank and a competitor, as opposed to a branch, would make that bank more competitive in regards to your bank business if it was a branch? A. Well, it's more competitive from a standpoint of having a Board, but if they didn't have the Board and called it another name, they would not be as competitive. I didn't state that exactly right. As long as they have the C&S name, they are very competitive, and, of course, the Board even makes them more competitive because of the friends of all the Board members, they are able to influence them to bank with C&S.

Mr. Frisbie: Thank you, sir.

Mr. Doyle: No further questions.

The Court: You may step down.

Mr. Doyle: I call Walter Eaves.

[953] Whereupon,

WALTER EAVES,

was called as a witness by and on behalf of the defendants, and having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination

By Mr. Doyle

Q. Would you state your name for the record, please, sir? A. Walter A. Eaves.

Q. What is your occupation, Mr. Eaves? A. I'm president of Roswell Bank, Roswell, Georgia.

Q. How long have you served in that capacity? A. About fourteen and a half years.

Q. Is the Roswell Bank that you are president of now the one that was just described by Mr. Robinson on the stand? A. It is.

Q. Would you tell us what other banks are located in Roswell, Mr. Eaves? A. A branch of the Fulton Exchange Bank and C&S Bank of North Fulton.

Q. From your vantage point as a competitor at the Roswell Bank, tell us how you view the C&S Bank of North Futlon as an independent bank or as the C&S Bank. [954] A. Well, I've always viewed them as a C&S Bank.

Q. Would you tell us why, please, sir? A. Well, according to the information I had available at the time, C&S organized it and started it.

Q. Is it fair to say, then, that your view today is the same or different from the view when the bank was organized? A. I had no reason to change it.

Q. When the application to merge was filed, were you contacted by any of the bank's regulatory agencies to see if you had any opposition to the merger? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would you tell us what your response to them was and why? A. I had no opposition.

Q. Would you tell us why you had no opposition to it? A. I didn't think there would be any overall change in the operation of the bank as far as the competitive standpoint is concerned in competing with us.

Q. Do you believe that your bank can compete with the branches of large, downtown banks? A. It is tough, but we have been able to so far.

Q. Can you tell us what competitive posture the Roswell Bank takes so far as competing against C&S North [955] Fulton is concerned? A. I'm not sure I really completely understand your question. If you mean what do we do in trying to compete, basically we feel that we have to go to the customers themselves, retail oriented type of thing. We don't have many large depositers. We are not in the wholesale bank field. We are not large enough to be there. We have to go out and try and do it with personal service with the customer. We contact the customers. I have a lady that does nothing but this. We ask for their business. We don't have an advertising budget that compares with C&S or Trust Company, or First National either. So, we end up trying to do all ours through personal relations, first class service. This is the idea we use.

Q. Does the community identification enter into it at all? A. Very definitely.

Q. I wonder if you would elaborate on that. A. We have been there for seventy-one years and this has a big effect on the people who have been living there many years. Also it has an effect on newcomers when they found that the bank had been established that long.

Q. You regard that as an important element in your competition? A. It's helped us tremendously.

[956] Q. All right. You told us what your response was to the regulators and why. Is that your same view today with regard to the merger application? A. We still have no objection to it.

Q. Because, and because why? A. We feel like it would be practically the same operations that we are competing with now.

Mr. Doyle: That's all.

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Stern

Q. Mr. Eaves, are you familiar with any other banks up around your neck of the woods that have a relationship with the C&S system which, to your belief is similar to that of C&S North Fulton? A. Not my personal knowledge, no, I do not. The closest thing we would have would be the C&S Sandy Springs and also C&S of North Springs, one of them is related to the East Point Bank and the other one is a separate organization, separate corporation.

Q. Right. When you were talking about how you viewed the initial organization of North Fulton, you mentioned that your opinion was based in significant part, as I understand it, on the information you had available at the time? A. Yes.

[957] Q. That's things you saw and perceived; is that it? A. Yes.

Q. Would you say that this was similar to the situation when Sandy Springs opened up? Is this the kind of thing you are talking about? A. No, Sandy Springs was, I'd have to say would be different from what the North Fulton was as far as what knowledge I had.

Q. It was different. Did it have the C&S name? A. Sandy Springs started off, I believe, with the name Citizens National Bank of Sandy Springs. I'm not sure, I think that was the name.

Q. Now, do you not personally recall it held itself out a number of years as an independent bank? A. For several years it did.

Mr. Stern: Yes. All right, no further questions.

Mr. Doyle: We have no further questions.

By the Court

Q. How is the bank run? Is it enlarging, growing, or what? A. We have been growing, yes, sir.

Q. Are you still growing? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that in part due to the phenomenon of people [958] moving to the suburbs? A. Yes, sir, this is a great part of it.

Q. Moving from without the central city into the perimeter area? A. This is having some effect. We are also having the effect of many new people moving into the Georgia area, Atlanta area, locating in our situation. The highway's got a lot to do with this.

Q. Despite what competition you're receiving, do you think your bank is in a healthy position, growing, has a good future? A. We certainly hope so.

The Court: All right, thank you.

Mr. Hodgson: We have no further witnesses available at this time. We will have Mr. Dunn after lunch.

The Court: Any particular time in mind as to after lunch as to when he's going to be here?

Mr. Hodgson: We can have him any time, any time after about 12:30. He will not have had his lunch by then. One-thirty, 1:45 is all right with us.

The Court: Do you intend to put on your economic witness after that, because I imagine Mr. Dunn will take only a short time?

[959] Mr. Hodgson: Yes, sir.

The Court: How long do you anticipate Mr. Dunn will take?

Mr. Hodgson: He should be relatively brief. I should think we would have him only on the stand maybe five or ten minutes and the Government not very long, I would guess. Dr. Baxter will be at the mercy of the Government. We have some preliminary points we want to make through him. I presume we'll put him on in order not to——

The Court: As I get it now, we have only Messrs. Williams and Munford to go.

Mr. Hodgson: Yes. Mr. Williams cannot be here until early in the morning. So, we are ahead of schedule. I understand from Mr. Kinkaid the Government's rebuttal is going to be quite brief also.

Mr. Kinkaid: That's correct, sir.

The Court: Well, maybe you can make a decision about Dr. Baxter at lunch. I hope you will make an affirmative decision. I hate to waste an afternoon.

We will stand in recess until 1:45.

(Whereupon, court was adjourned at 12:20 o'clock P. M. to reconvene at 1:45 o'clock P. M. the same day.)

[960] (Whereupon, at 1:50 o'clock, p.m., the Court reconvened the proceedings.)

Mr. Hodgson: Mr. Dunn.

E. D. DUNN,

being first duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Direct Examination

By Mr. Hodgson

Q. What is your full name? A. E. D. (Jack) Dunn.

Q. Mr. Dunn, I am going to ask you questions in two compartments, if I may, the first related to circumstances before you became Commissioner of Banking and Finance, and the second after.

Before you became Commissioner, what was your principal occupation? A. I was president of the bank known as Glenwood National Bank, now known as First National Bank or First National Bank of DeKalb.

Q. Where is it located? A. Located at the corner of Glenwood and Candler Roads, the southern part of DeKalb County. Has a branch at Belvedere, which is at Memorial and Columbia.

Q. When was that bank formed? A. 1952.

[961] Q. When did you first become connected with it in any fashion? A. I was elected a director in 1953.

Q. What was your next position with that bank? A. President in 1961.

Q. How long did you remain president? A. Until 1969.

Q. Why did you cease being president at that time? A. We sold controlling interest in the bank to a man here in Atlanta, and I was moved up to chairman of the board.

Q. Did you remain with the bank for any period of time after that? A. Approximately a year and a half.

Q. Until what date, approximately? A. Well, officially until the board of directors' meeting in December of 1971.

Q. At Glenwood National, during your tenure as president and, subsequently, as chairman of the board, who were your competitors? A. The nearest competitors were two C&S banks, one at Belvedere and one at South DeKalb. And, then, to the east of us approximately some four or five miles, was the Trust Company in East Atlanta. Then to the north [962] of us in Decatur, the First National Bank and the Fulton National. Then a little east of that, C&S in Avondale. Then to the direct east of us, Lithonia, Conyers and Covington. The nearest bank south of us was McDonnough.

Q. What did you consider to be your trade area at that time? A. Well, over into East Atlanta, because we were only about a thousand feet outside the city limits of Atlanta in DeKalb County. Then, Decatur, Avondale and then all the way to Lithonia, Conyers and Covington, to the east, and south to McDonnough.

[963] Q. What determines your trade area so far as you are concerned? A. Well, unfortunately, of course, that's how my trade area was limited in one respect because of the branch banking laws. We were only allowed to have a branch two miles from our home office. As far as the trade area itself, it was any place where there was not another bank or bank system that did not allow us to actively compete in those areas in which there were not in those areas at that time other than two C&S.

Q. Now, the area involved was determined by the proximity of competitors around you; is that what you're saying? A. Yes.

Q. The fact that competition moved into, within that circle, served to circumscribe the area further or to affect it at all? A. No, it just made it a little more competitive. It didn't affect the trade area.

Q. As chief executive officer of the Glenwood National over these years, how did you look at C&S Belvedere, competitionwise, as it related to other C&S Banks such as the National Bank, Emory Bank or the DeKalb Bank? A. Well, of course, they were our only very close [964] competition. We consider them more or less like the public did, that they were a part of the C&S Bank. Most people thought they were actually branches of the National Bank.

Q. Did you know whether or not they had C&S trained people in them? That is to say, Belvedere and later C&S South DeKalb? A. Yes, sir, I was aware of that.

Q. When C&S Belvedere merged into C&S DeKalb, did you observe or experience any change in your competitive environment as a result? A. No, sir.

Q. Why not? A. Well, it was still the same system as far as we were concerned.

Q. Did you ever consider affiliation with the Citizens and Southern system? A. We never considered it, no, sir. Mr. Mills Lane come out and visited us one day and offered to buy us out. But, we never considered it other than this particular meeting.

Q. Why not? A. Well, we were independent and had wanted to remain independent. As far as we were concerned, we were happy the way we were. We had known, if we had sold out, they would more or less end up with control from the [965] standpoint of management and usually they wanted enough stock that they could let some of their friends have it. As far as we were concerned, we just preferred to remain independent.

Q. Eventually you sold out, though, didn't you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why did you do that? A. Well, as I mentioned a few minutes ago, we at first in DeKalb County were not allowed to branch at all and not even have one branch. We ended up actually going to the Comptroller of the Currency and contending there was no law in the State of Georgia that would keep us from having branches anywhere in the State of Georgia. The Comptroller agreed with us and gave us a branch at Belvedere. Then, the Georgia Legislature hurriedly passed what is known as the Village Banking Bill. The only trouble, it restricted us to one branch no further than two miles from the home office. I still contend the law should have been no less than two miles rather than the extent of two miles. Then, we realized we would not be able to expand, grow and compete and serve our customers, and we did not feel like there would ever be a county-wide branch banking law, so we sold out because we did not feel like our future was so good. We could not compete.

Q. And subsequently, the county-wide branch banking [966] law was passed? A. Yes, about six months too late.

Q. Now, Mr. Dunn, turning to the second compartment of your testimony, what is your present title and job? A. I'm known as Commissioner of Banking and Finance for the State of Georgia. It used to be the Superintendent of Banks, of course, the Banking Department.

Q. What are the functions of your office? [967] A. Of coure, we are the regulatory authority for all state banks, several other institutions, but, basically, state banks.

Q. And trust companies? A. And trust companies, and credit unions and state savings and loans. And, of course, our basic responsibility is to be sure that banks are examined on a regular basis, which is once a year, be sure they are solvent for protection of the public and stockholders, and all of the many other facets of a regulatory authority as far as approval of charters, mergers, branches and charter applications for new banks. I could go on in detail, but if there's anything you want to ask me——

Q. As a result of all of this, does this bring you into more or less contact with bankers around the state? A. Yes, sir, I think I last month toured the entire state on group meetings, and I met some three thousand bankers.

Q. Do you receive telephone calls and letters from them in some regularity? A. Yes, sir, daily.

Q. Have you had such regular contacts with people at the C&S? [968] A. Yes, sir.

Q. Primarily whom? A. Well, as far as—now, you talking about the C&S National or are you talking about the affiliates, five percenters, or what?

Q. All of these. A. Well, of course, the bankers who are state bankers, five percenters or affiliates or whatever you want to call them, make their formal requests to us, and then at times I talk to some of the people in the National Bank who assist them in either filing branch applications, or increases in stocks, or mergers or anything in that category. You want me to name some of the people, is that what you want me to do?

Q. No, sir, not particularly, as long as you include Mr. Hall. A. (Nodding affirmatively) He has been there a long time.

Q. Yes. A. Excuse the joke.

Q. Have you found your prior conception of the C&S five percenter relationship to be changed as a result of your new position as Commissioner of Banking and Finance? A. No, sir, I think all bankers, particularly me [969] being a direct competitor or they being a direct competitor of mine, I had pretty common knowledge of exactly how it worked, and it hasn't changed. Now, other than, of course, I have more information available now, I know.

Q. And your opinion about them has not changed? A. No, sir. I think a little more of them now than I did before, Mr. Hodgson.

Q. Mr. Dunn, in your official capacity as considering applications for branches by non-C&S banks, let's take, for example, Trust Company of Georgia, into market areas where C&S five-percenter banks are located, let's take C&S Sandy Springs or Chamblee, did you consider the C&S five-percenter bank, Chamblee or Sandy Springs, for example, more able or less able to withstand branch competition from the major Atlanta bank, let's say Trust Company, than if they had been independent unit banks? A. No, they would definitely have an advantage as far as competition is concerned.

Q. Why would you consider that to be the case? A. Well, of course, as you are well aware, and most of the people in the room are, banking is a very competitive business. And the bank who is closely affiliated, whether they are a five percenter or [970] independent and well-affiliated, not from a managed central control standpoint, with one of the larger banks, is much

A. No, they would definitely have an advantage as far as competition is concerned.

Q. Why would you consider that to be the case? A. Well, of course, as you are well aware, and most of the people in the room are, banking is a very competitive business. And the bank who is closely affiliated, whether they are a five percenter or [970] independent and well-affiliated, not from a managed central control standpoint, with one of the larger banks, is much better able to serve the community simply because they are more knowledgeable. They have the resources of the larger banks in order to make larger loans that they would not be able—allowed to make, as far as their own capital structure would be. And, also, of course, the day of the computer is here and this sort of thing. They are better able to serve their banks, whether it be a five percenter or another type of affiliate.

Q. Would the existence of the common name have any effect on this? A. On the public?

Q. Yes, sir, insofar as its ability to compete with this Trust Company branch coming out is concerned? A. Well, it certainly is an advantage to a C&S affiliate. Let's use a state bank for an example.

Q. Yes. A. To be able to just display the "C&S", to compete with, as you mentioned, a Trust Company.

Q. And does the fact that it has continuity of C&S management help it or not? A. There's no question about that it helps them.

Q. With respect to the merger applications that [971] are at issue before this Court, Citizens & Southern North Fulton and Sandy Springs into Citizens & Southern East Point, and Citizens & Southern Chamblee, Park National and South DeKalb into Citizens & Southern Emory, do you believe that there would be any competitive impact one way or the other from these mergers? A. Mr. Hodgson, not at this time, simply because people have always felt that these were C&S banks, and I think I mentioned earlier, most people thought they were branches of the C&S National. Most of my competition with them in the past, people thought they were dealing with basically C&S National, rather than a state bank.

Q. Might it be an advantage to the banks being merged? A. Well, it would be an advantage to the banks, yes, sir.

Q. Why is that? A. Well, they would be able to make larger loans, they will be able to simplify a lot of their operations. They could better serve the customer.

Q. Mr. Dunn, do you regard the Atlanta area banking market or any part of it either to be overconcentrated or not competitive? A. Not at this time. It has been times in the [972] past when it was, but at this time it is not overconcentrated. Of course, we have had a—since 1971, we have had some 125 branches, I think, in metropolitan Atlanta since countywide branching went in, but up until that time, we had some areas that needed additional banking.

Mr. Hodgson: No further questions, Your Honor.

Mr. Kinkaid: One moment, if Your Honor please. Your Honor, we have no questions.

The Court: Thank you, Mr. Dunn, you may step down.

A. Thank you.

[973] Mr. Hodgson: Dr. Baxter, take the stand. I need to do a little housekeeping, Your Honor. It will take me only a moment.

Mr. Kinkaid: Excuse me, Your Honor, while everybody is getting set up, there's one point I'd like to raise here. Perhaps we can get some indication of the scope of whatever dialogue Mr. Hodgson and Dr. Baxter have planned in view of the fact that it's our understanding that so far as direct testimony was concerned that was already in the form of the written report.

Mr. Hodgson: That's exactly right. The way we propose to do this, Your Honor, I believe it would be appropriate, is that Mr. Kinkaid is exactly right. We intend to go into none of the direct as such. I thought it would give Mr. Kinkaid and the Government overall a better bull's eye to shoot at, however, if Dr. Baxter did these things. He, first, of course, has to authenticate his report and highlight his methodology because this has subsequently been attacked by Dr. Skogstad's second affidavit clarifying the reasons for data, all in response to that affidavit, and the Government's trial brief and Dr. Skogstad on testimony.

I would intend to keep this within as [974] brief a period of time as possible. I really think that perhaps Mr. Kinkaid would be better served by this. I'm quite certain it will give us a better cohesion to Dr. Baxter's testimony if that is all right. That will be my goal, in any event, and if I may say so, Your Honor, since matters have gone along so nicely for which the Government is certainly very much a part of and we appreciate it, the case proceeded so quickly, we propose to move this as fast as possible, and assuming we may even be able to finish today, we have called Mr. Williams and told him there is no need for him to come up in the morning. We are going to make every effort to finish today.

Whereupon,

NEVINS DENNIS BAXTER

was called as a witness by and on behalf of the defendants, and after having first been duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination

By Mr. Hodgson

Q. Dr. Baxter, state your full name for the reporter, please. A. Nevins Dennis Baxter.

Q. Your report contains your complete credentials, Dr. Baxter, but would you tell the Court, if you don't [975] mind, the areas in which you have attempted to specialize? A. Well, for the past several years I have spent almost all of my time consulting in the banking field with large and small banks on a variety of management problems, and a good deal of regulatory, consulting, branches, mergers and charters.

Q. We have previously filed, Dr. Baxter, in this court, an economic report supported by a volume of exhibits and a second volume being analyses, analyses of the competitive and convenience and needs, effects of the five individual mergers. Were each of these prepared by you or under your direct supervision? A. They were.

Q. And are the facts and data included therein verified by you and the people under your direct supervision? A. Yes, sir, they were.

Q. Are the conclusions reached yours, reached as a result of your expertise and the data which had been gathered and tabulated in these reports? A. Yes.

Q. There is a customer survey, Dr. Baxter, which has been objected to on the grounds that the results were too incomplete to be adequate, on the further grounds that the questions may be misleading. Referring to your [976] customer survey, which is part of your report, were the questions included in those surveys designed in accordance with generally accepted actuarial principles, sampling matters and procedures which, in your opinion, insure reasonable reliability of the responses, were of the size sufficient to satisfy reasonable reliability of the responses and were the numbers of responses as proportionate to the number of questionnaires mailed, and were all of these sufficient to make the result, so far as you are concerned, statistically reliable and significant? A. Yes, sir, they were. We used, probably a much larger sample than was necessary so as to insure given the response rate that we expected, which was about what we got, that we would have a sufficient number of questionnaires returned in each category to do the detail of analyses that we want to. Samples were very carefully designed to get results to a high degree of reliability.

Q. Dr. Baxter, since your methodology and that of Dr. Skogstad seems to have differed, would you please tell the Court how you set about to analyze what you considered to be the economic issues of this case? A. Well, my first interest was learning what I could about the banking in the Atlanta area, who the main competitors were, what methods they used to compete; how they identified themselves in the public's minds; what [977] types of services they offered; where they were located; historically, how they had developed and how they had obtained their market positions.

I look at banking very much as a people business. It's one that is very difficult to analyze by mere statistics, published data, concentration, numbers of banks. These have to be examined and I do that, but clearly they can't tell the whole story about competition. For this reason I conducted a very large number of interviews of C&S people, competing bankers, customers, business customers, large and small, mostly in the Atlanta metropolitan area, and specifically, in the trading areas of the defendant banks.

I also did some interviews and specifically in Belvedere and also in Savannah and Augusta to see what the competitive impact, if any, of the merger of five percent banks there, which had been concluded, to see what the competitive impact was. Of course, in addition to these interviews, I wanted to gather some primary data about where these banks compete and where they do business. And, to do this, we studied very carefully the break out of the source of business accounts by zip code. Then, we refined this to account address because zip codes can often be misleading.

Q. Business of what banks? [978] A. The defendant banks as well as other banks in the metropolitan area, data from which was derived from the answers to the Government's interrogatories.

When we received those, we looked at what their service areas were, as well. As I pointed out, these were later extended to get a better definition of where the accounts came from because zip codes can often be much larger than the real market area.

Finally we conducted the customer surveys to understand some of the reasons behind why people choose to bank where they do.

Q. With regard to the forms of statistical studies you conducted, please explain their purposes and indicate the results. A. The main purpose of the statistical study was to compare banking in the Atlanta metropolitan area with other areas around the country. I think it's very difficult to learn very much from a concentration measure, number of banks, population per bank, per banking office in a vacuum without reference to that meaningful comparison of other market areas around the country.

And, so, we made these comparisons and concluded as the Court describes in detail, that Atlanta really is not, in relative terms, a concentrated market at all, but population, per bank and per banking office is [979] lower, that is, than other bench marks, Atlanta being well-banked. These population per office figures are really indicative of how hard banks are forced to compete because no bank voluntarily puts out branches unless its competitor forces it to do so to get the business and keep up. The branches serve as the convenience to the public. They serve as a competitive measure whereby banks can chase after business against each other. So, we looked up the source of indexes of market structure relative to comparisons.

Q. Dr. Baxter, a very large portion of the report, as I recall it, very much of the middle part deals with issues of, as the statute puts it, any section of the country. This is commonly known as the relevant market or geographical market? What is the relevance of all that investigation and all of those data to the issues in this case? [980] A. Well, frankly, Mr. Hodgson, I think that the market area here is of really no relevance. If it is found, as I believe to be the case based on my investigations, that these banks are C&S banks, they compete as such; they are competitors; they are customers; they themselves view themselves as C&S banks; they provide C&S banking services; if that is the case, there's not really much competition between them and the precise areas in which they draw their business is not really very important.

However, I felt it was necessary to investigate the situation fully to assume that this wasn't—that my finding about competition was not based on the fact that they were C&S banks, although I think that is the overriding factor. I wanted to see where they draw their business, would they be competitors, given their location, if they were not all C&S banks.

Q. And how did you go about determining that issue? A. First, from analysis of where their customers come from, based upon zip-code data; then, as I mentioned, a refinement of this to street addresses, so that we could draw approximate service areas, market areas of these banks to see where their customers come from. Finally, given the results that we had found about the [981] distribution of customers, based on these data, I wanted to determine what caused the banking patterns that emerged.

We found that the customers were quite closely clustered around the offices of the bank. I wanted to see if this was really a matter of convenience, if most people choose a bank based on convenience. One of the things that the questionnaires were directed to was to determine why people chose to bank where they did. Indeed, proximity to home is very important to a majority, about half, as I recall, of the customers.

Then given the fact that there was some scattering of accounts outside the concentrated market area that we had defined, I wanted to determine what factors called for the scattering of accounts. Was it the fact that these banks were out competing beyond the two- or three-mile radius where they draw the bulk of their accounts, or was it something germane to metropolitan-area banking patterns?

The questions were designed to determine that, and, indeed, we concluded that the commutation patterns in the metropolitan area, and that the desire of many customers, I believe it was about 80%, to use more than one office on a continual basis, more than one C&S office, indicated that where they maintained [982] their precise account for customers dealing with a branch, and, effectively, a branch-banking system, wasn't the critical thing. They could maintain an account at one location, bank at many others. People who moved around the metropolitan area often kept their account relationship where it had been.

Perhaps many corporate customers indicated that this was because they had had a relationship with an individual at the bank as they moved around the area and kept their account there where it had been. They were able to continue to transact conveniently by using other C&S offices. This was a conclusion that explained, in effect, why this account spill-over had occurred throughout the area.

Q. Dr. Baxter, in comparing your methodology to that set forth in Dr. Skogstad's two affidavits and referred to in his testimony, how would you characterize his as compared to yours? A. As I understand it, Dr. Skogstad started by looking at where the banks were effectively and saw that the banks involved, defendant banks here, were in various locations in DeKalb and Fulton Counties. He then said, "Can we explain why this broad area would be the market,?" because it is where the banks were located, and he did so by trying to show interactions [983] between them through transmission effect, as it was referred to.

I believe that this constituted basic definition of the market, and it was not based on where customers of the individual banks are located, what customers the banks are competing for, which was the thrust of my analysis.

Q. Doesn't the fact that there are or may be other banks not part of the C&S system which intervened between C&S banks, nevertheless, as he says, bring the C&S banks into competition with each other? A. I don't think it brings the C&S banks into competition with each other, because they are dealing—well, first of all, because they are C&S banks, and, second of all, even if they were not, given their locations, because they are going after different customer bases; they are looking for different customer groups by virtue of their location.

Q. What is your response to the government pre-trial brief which asserts that, on the one hand, your economic report contends that Atlanta banking markets are highly localized and each defendant bank is in a separate market, but, on the other hand, your report apepars to state that the only meaningful market for banking that can be defined from an initial investigation [984] is the entire standard market statistical area for Atlanta? Can you reconcile these? A. Yes, I think that when one is looking at locally-defined markets, narrow markets, one is asking where these individual banks compete as individuals; and, looking at each bank separately, in terms of the competitive effects of these mergers, when one takes a broader view and looks towards a statistical analysis of competition and looks at structural measures, one then has to broaden the market in order to make reasonable comparisons and look at banking patterns around metropolitan areas; see where people commute from; bring in these types of factors. On this basis, it seems to me to be artificial to take the outlying counties where many have, for example, North Fulton draws business from Cobb County, and Tucker draws some business from Gwinnett County, East Point from Clayton County, it seems artificial to stop at the DeKalb and Fulton County boundaries rather than looking at the broader picture, all of the mergers together. And, indeed, for looking at convenience and needs one needs this broader metropolitan area.

Q. Is this to say then that the entire five-county area is the section of the country to be examined for relative market purposes? [985] A. The five-county area can be a section of the country in this case, that's correct. I don't think it tells where the individual banks could compete were they not C&S banks, nor do I think it tells where the competitive impact of each individual merger, taken separately, could be felt. But it could be a relevant section of the country, based on all these economic factors about the metropolitan area.

Q. How does it relate to the needs of individual groups of customers, the five-county area? A. Well, metropolitan banking customers have banking needs which have developed from their own habits, from where they commute, from where they live and work, from their policies of transacting on many offices at the same time. And, therefore, that area which describes the economic relationships is relevant in those terms.

Q. Do the five individual banks named as defendants herein, the smaller banks compete throughout this entire five-county metropolitan area? A. No, they do not. They compete in their own localized service areas from which their own customers are derived.

Q. Why is there any interrelationship among them all then? A. Well, there's no competitive relationship [986] among them, except that they do draw some accounts, what we refer to as spill-over from outside their immediate area, and the spill-over results from these metropolitan banking patterns that I have referred to.

Q. Have you considered the possibility of there being relative markets somewhere in between the very confined areas you described for competitive purposes and the larger area you described for convenience and needs and understanding the circumstances purposes? A. I considered the various intermediate areas, especially those alleged in the complaint and felt that they had little significance, really no significance for competition or for convenience and need purposes, because of the factors I have described.

Q. How would you feel about a combination of DeKalb and Fulton County markets, as it has been asserted by Dr. Skogstad? A. It seems to me to be an artificial place to stop when one talks about banking patterns in the metropolitan area. Of course, far too broad, as Dr. Skogstad himself admits, when one talks about the areas in which the individual banks compete.

Mr. Hodgson: If Your Honor please, there is one issue somewhat made in the Government's brief that Dr. Baxter's testimony [987] is, perhaps you might say, is in elastic fashion, and he may not always be consistent. We think this is irrelevant. Dr. Baxter himself is prepared to show his consistency if he is cross-examined, but we thought we would not go into it on this presentation at all.

Q. Doctor, your report contained a concept known as spill-over, which you used defining markets for various banks involved as defendants, and this seems to have created significant interest in the Government's brief. Would you explain what you mean by "spill-over" as compared to over-lap and other such words in your analysis? A. Well, the concept of over-lap is based really on where primary service areas are, on where the banks draw the bulk of their business from. If two banks are really fighting for the same customer base and competing actively for them, then there is an over-lap in the geographic markets that they serve. In the analysis, as I have pointed out, these five defendant banks are not seeking the same customer base; they are geographically separate. Spill-over results from a scattering of accounts outside of the area where the real concentration is. It is basically customers for whom the bank is not aggressively seeking. It is [988] customers who come to the bank because of commutation patterns, perhaps, because they may pass the bank's location on the way to work or shopping, on some regular basis, very often. Because the individual account address reflects a previous condition, a business has moved, it had maintained a good relationship with this banker, it will continue at that location. Although, it will transact at other banking offices, these often—especially where the relationship is due to a tie to a particular individual, these are really accounts that you can't compete for. They are loyal accounts. It is the accounts that are based on geographic proximity that are the ones that you can compete most effectively for, because they have chosen a bank because of location rather than because of some particular need or loyalty or service that had been performed in the past, or a long-standing customer relationship in the case, especially, of businesses.

Q. What has complementarity got to do with this? And perhaps you can tell us what that word means in your presentation. A. By complementarity, I mean that many individuals who use more than one C&S bank office, branch or five-percent bank, or whatever, do so for varying purposes, not because one competes with the [989] other, but because they can make use of multiple offices, make use of the variety of services offered by the different C&S banks, and, especially, the variety of locations with only one account relationship. In that sense, these banks are complementary to each other, rather than substitutes or competitive. If you give an example of a business which moved, say, from downtown Atlanta with a long-standing C&S National relationship, say a borrowing relationship, if it moved out to Sandy Springs, it might not move its account, so it would have a Sandy Springs address with a National bank, on a National bank account, but, yet, it would use the Sandy Springs office all the time to make deposits, to have checks cashed, get funds for its business or whatever.

Q. Dr. Baxter, in the Department's trial brief, it has asserted that you didn't really direct yourself to the matter of competitive interaction among the C&S banks and other banks in the metropolitan area. Did you or did you not direct yourself to this? A. In terms of the banks which intervene between the C&S banks, this was a basic part of my analysis. Since the change in the branching law early last year, there have been many branches opened up in suburban areas. These branches are often between C&S bank [990] locations. As such, they intensify competition, and this was part of my analysis.

Also, I spent considerable time having developed a series of exhibits which showed the branching patterns in the Atlanta area relative to other areas that allow branch banking, and showed the importance in the suburban communities of the branches of the downtown banks, reflecting what I called a rational banking structure or a rationalization of the banking structure.

Q. Do you care to illustrate any of your views from these maps and overlays, which I believe Your Honor may recognize as having been here once before, but which have been brought up-to-date, and I show you the Sandy Springs area marked as it was December 30, 1970. [991] A. Well, at that time there were exactly two banks. There was the C&S Bank of Sandy Springs and Trust Company Bank of Sandy Springs.

Q. The green being C&S in every instance and blue being—— A. Other downtown banks.

Q. And a year later from December 31 of 1971, what happened? A. After one year of change in the branching laws, the Roswell Bank, Mr. Eaves' bank, opened an office in north—well,——

Q. North Springs? A. In the North Springs area as did the C&S Bank of East Point, a branch that was opened out of East Point rather than out of Sandy Springs simply in anticipation that the banks would all be one.

National Bank of Georgia opened a branch in Sandy Springs and the Trust Company merged its Sandy Springs five percent bank into the main bank.

Meanwhile, out in the Perimeter Mall area, National Bank of Georgia, First National and Trust Company all opened branches. So, the intensity of the competition——

Q. August 31st of 1971, the following eight months, what had happened? A. Two more Sandy Springs branches, every one is [992] now represented there—First National. Every one meaning the five largest downtown banks, First National and Fulton and in the Perimeter Mall area, C&S National, Fulton National over to the east and Dunwoody Park and Peachtree Bank & Trust opened a Georgetown branch right near this Dunwoody Park branch.

Q. I'm talking about exhibits, Defendants' Exhibit 275, for the court reporter's benefit.

Now, moving to the far opposite end, the South DeKalb area, which is Defendants' Exhibit 274, remember at the end of 1970 it looked like this. I don't know how much detail you want to go into, Dr. Baxter. Feel free. There is no need to go into it all. A. Let me just say that the same pictures emerged. There were more banking offices in this area before the law was changed, but—and, therefore——

Q. Where is Decatur on this map, Dr. Baxter? A. Right in there (indicating).

Q. All right, sir. A. These were the old branches of First National and Fulton that had been established there earlier.

Q. All right. And then, the end of 1971, what has been added? A. Three branches, a C&S Emory branch at Covington-285, and Trust Company and First National [993] down in South DeKalb. The First National was a merger of the South DeKalb affiliate and Trust Company.

Q. In the first eight months of this year—— A. C&S Decatur Square, C&S National Decatur Square and C&S South DeKalb, Candler Road—that's not open yet, but that's approved —and, well, Trust Company branch, National Bank of Georgia branch, Peoples Bank of Lithonia, Fulton, same pictures. There were more offices to start with. So, proportionately, there was less intensification than Sandy Springs, but nonetheless very striking.

Q. Finally we have the North DeKalb area, Defendants' Exhibit 273, which is a good bit thicker. Here's the picture December 31st, 1970 just before county-wide branch banking. What does that show you? A. Well, note the independent banks com-area relative to other areas that allow branch banking, and showed the importance in the suburban communities of the branches of the downtown banks, reflecting what I called a rational banking structure or a rationalization of the banking structure.

peting alongside with the affiliated banks and again the blue being the non-C&S downtown bank branches and affiliates and then the C&S Banks in green, and the independent banks in orange.

Q. Then, turning, if you will, to the first full year of county-wide branch banking, what happened? A. Well, during this first year, every downtown bank but C&S entered most of these markets in the Perimeter Mall. I believe I have talked about these [994] Perimeter Mall offices. They were on the other side of the Sandy Springs map. In Chamblee, First National now has a branch as in Doraville. That was through a merger. Again, the same type of picture on Memorial Drive. Stone Mountain, Mountain Industrial Park area, Trust Company and Fulton, First National of Atlanta.

Here in Toco Hills. In all of the areas where C&S five percent banks had been, there has been an intensification of competition through the liberalization of the branching laws.

Q. Do you count in the area of eighteen blue circles on there, Doctor? Would you count them for me? A. That's correct.

Q. Eighteen. How many green ones? A. None.

Q. Commencing the first eight months of this year, tell us the developments in the North DeKalb area. A. There is one green one, Perimeter Center. I might add, several were applied for and not approved. This one at Hairston Road, there was a hearing held, opposed by the Stone Mountain Bank, Citizens Bank of Georgia. No action yet.

Junior College has been approved, not open. Most action has still been by the other downtown Atlanta banks entering all of these markets.

[995] Q. Doctor, if you will, resume the stand, please.

Doctor, the Government contends in its trial brief that the banking in this area, or however you define it, is highly concentrated and reflects congressional concern with a trend towards concentration. What is your opinion with respect to this? A. The analysis that I have conducted indicates that relative to any bench mark, Atlanta is not highly concentrated nor is the State of Georgia. The trends are very much the opposite. The number of new banks and banking offices have increased substantially in the past decade and this reflects intensification of competition but the level of concentration is much lower than the standard for banking. Banking must be judged against the standard for banking.

Q. Have you studied the Government's exhibits delineating market areas of various defendant banks? A. I have.

Q. In your opinion, are those reasonable representations of the market areas claimed by the Citizens and Southern in their application for these mergers filed way back, indeed, approximately two years ago today? A. That's correct; they are reasonable representations.

Q. Do you have any opinion as to the divergence [996] between the market area proposed in those applications and the market areas which you conclude are the relevant ones? A. Well, the explanation, Mr. Hodgson, is that when I attempted to analyze what market was served by the banks, where the competition effect would be felt, I started not from what had been done before by the application, but rather by an analyses of where the business was and what explained the origin of the accounts.

In certain cases the market area is conformed reasonably closely to what I have come up with. In others, particularly the North Fulton area, there are broader market areas in those applications. I think that one of the reasons is that in the two years that have intervened, there has been a substantial compactness created by economic development. When you are talking about a sparsely populated area, you are going to have a broader market area to be served.

When you are talking about a denser area where more banks and branches come in, create new convenience alternatives, perhaps are closer to customers, your market area is going to have to become more compact because of the availability of alternatives. I think that those two factors, the analysis, detailed analysis I did, plus these changes, account for the difference.

Q. What is your view with respect to the theory [997] that the amount of competition is determined by the number of competitors in the market and concentration of the number of competitors in that market? A. I don't think that one can say very much about competition in banking by looking only at concentration or numbers of competitors. One can make broad theoretical statements to the effect that, 'all other things being equal, it's going to make more competition. It's not necessarily the case because the issue depends on how banks compete. They don't compete simply by being there. How aggressive they are in seeking business, what range of services they offer in banking where you have to achieve a certain size to be able to provide modern banking facilities, clearly, if the banking resources of an area is diluted over a very large number of banks, you can't get as competitive an effect as you can if each bank is of significant size and part of the banking system that can do the job.

Q. Do you agree with the Government's contention and its trial brief that these five percenter banks are vigorous significant competitors to C&S National Bank and other affiliated banks? A. I do not believe that they are competitive at all to the C&S National Bank and its affiliates because they are C&S Banks.

[998] Q. Do you believe if these banks, these five banks, were forced to be independent entirely of C&S they could continue to be vigorous competitors in the market place at all? A. I think that they will be much less vigorous competitors than they are today and that they would lose a substantial portion of their customer base, which was attracted to these banks by virtue of the fact that they are C&S Banks, provide that range of services and have had these past relationships with C&S. I think the customer survey supports the fact that many accounts were attracted to these banks for precisely those reasons.

[999] Q. In several areas of your report, you assume an inevitable disaffiliation of the five banks from C&S if these mergers are enjoined. Did you make these assumptions—this assumption based in any degree upon your interviews with bankers or other persons in your investigations? A. No, I did not.

Q. What was the basis of that assumption then? A. Well, I wanted to consider the possibilities for convenience and needs in light of the only possible assumption that would make these banks potentially competitive with C&S, and that assumption was if the mergers were denied and the relationship of these banks to C&S which has existed were permanently enjoined and the banks were forced to compete. It is only on that type of assumption that the banks could become or would be potential competitors, and under that assumption, I concluded, as the report states, that C&S National and its affiliates and its—close to wholly-owned affiliates would be forced to establish branches in the markets served by these other banks.

Q. And then what would happen to the convenience and needs of the community? A. Well, the customers who had been using these other banks would be—many of them would be at a [1000] serious disadvantage, because, as I have indicated, they chose these banks because they could get the range of services and the complementarity of services that C&S provided.

Q. Assuming for the purpose of giving me an answer that the geographic market areas, the several ones proposed by Dr. Skogstad, DeKalb County, North Fulton County, DeKalb, Fulton, Atlanta, as the case is in the complaint, which are identical, as a matter of fact, to those alleged the complaint; assume you accept those as relevant, would that alter your determination with respect to the competitive effects of these mergers? A. No, it would not.

Q. Why not? A. Because these banks are C&S banks and compete as such. They offer the same range of C&S services, and, whatever market area one assumes, the inevitable conclusion about the competitive effects is not altered.

Q. Are you generally familiar with services offered by correspondent banks around the country? A. I am.

Q. And you have heard the testimony of various witnesses here, including Dave Padgett and Bill Farr and Herb Megar and the others in this case? [1001] A. I have.

Q. Do you agree with them that the correspondent services offered by the banks those three gentlemen represent are typical of correspondent services offered by major, big-city banks? A. I do.

Q. How would you distinguish those packages of services from those which the C&S offers and which are relied upon by these five percenters? A. These are much—I might say these are much the same type of services that C&S offers to its normal correspondents, but, when it comes to the five-percent banks, as we have heard, placed on top of the support services is a management involvement of providing personnel, managing the managers, auditing, controlled performance, evaluation, as well as identification, as being part of C&S and reaping the benefits of C&S system in that light. So, these really are C&S banks as opposed to banks that are buying support services from C&S.

Q. Now, if you took away those aspects of the services which are unique in this case, as distinguished from the regular correspondent relationship, over and above it, what would do to the capacity of these banks to compete in the market? [1002] A. They would be much less effective, because of all of the things that their customers had been relying on.

Q. Would the fact that they had always relied upon these services have anything to do with your opinion? A. Well, it would be critical because independent banks are—there's a role for independent banks in suburban communities, probably less so than there is in the free-standing small towns, but clearly the independent banks that have been there a long time and had appealed to a certain segment of customers and had grown up with these customers have no trouble competing and surviving. But banks that were born into C&S and went after a customer base that was looking for this complementarity and looking for the type of services that branch banks offer, and many larger customers that were really C&S customers, clearly, if these banks suddenly woke up and found themselves independent, their customers would—many of them would look elsewhere.

Mr. Hodgson: That's all, Your Honor.

Mr. Sims: Your Honor, we really didn't expect quite as extensive testimony from Dr. Baxter on the stand. I wonder if we might have about a fifteen-minute recess before we [1003] start our cross.

The Court: All right.

[1004] Cross-Examination

By Mr. Sims

Q. Mr. Baxter, I assume you can see that I am wearing a tie with some local identification here. Are you familiar with these ties? A. I've seen them in the courtroom yesterday and before.

Q. Are you aware of who passes out these ties or who wears these ties in and around Atlanta? A. Yes.

Q. Who would that be? A. C&S people and their friends.

Q. Well, if I was walking down the street of Atlanta and somebody saw me wearing one of these ties, do you think he would assume that I was either a C&S man or a friend? A. I think so. I think he would think you have money to lend. He might go after you for a loan.

Q. It shows you how impressions can be deceiving, I suppose.

Dr. Baxter, I have been a little confused by a couple of portions of your report. But, there is one passage that completely escapes me. I wonder if I could get you to explain it for me. If you've got a copy of Volume I, the narrative, if you'll look on page 125 of [1005] that, the first paragraph there, fifth line down, most customers cannot recognize the distinction between the correspondent associate and any branches of C&S National, although larger customers may be aware of the legal distinction. It's in no sense apparent to them operationally, yet these observations are entirely consistent with the fact that many customers view the correspondent associate as independent entities.

I must admit I don't understand that. Can you explain that to me? A. Yes. The types of questions that elicited this response, and these conclusions were as follows: Do you view these banks as C&S Banks? The answer was overwhelmingly, yes.

Do they behave? Do you get services from them as though they were branches of the C&S National?

Can you recognize any distinction in the way they operate, in what sort of services they have to offer to the public, and who is managing them, and so on.

And the answer was, no.

Yet, many customers indicated that these banks have a local identity that they try to orient their approach as to the particular market they serve. This is precisely the same sort of thing that I found in interviews in the areas served by C&S branches where we talked to [1006] some people in the Buckhead area and in the South Moreland Avenue office area. And answer was, "Well, these people have a sense of community." You don't have the problem you often get in branch banking of a fellow coming from another part of the city or, in the extreme, out of the state and not being able to tailor the services he is offering to the particular needs of that community. [1007] A. I think C&S branch people are conscious of being able to do that, to identify with what their customers need and that the five-percent people, five-percent bank people have the same interest, appealing to what Chamblee customers need in Chamblee and identifying with them and learning what they can do for them.

Q. Okay. Let's look at Chart No. 67, if we could, in your exhibit, and if I read that correctly, are you with me? A. Yes, sir.

Q. If I read that correctly, about 52% of the commercial customers responding to your survey thought the correspondent associates and other banks you had listed here, I guess the subsidiaries, were local banks with independent identities, and about 48% or maybe 49% thought that whatever relationship there was between C&S and those banks was not important; is that correct? A. The second part of your sentence, of your question escapes me.

Q. 52%, as I read this chart, 52% of the responders thought that the correspondent associates were local banks with independent identities; is that right? A. Right.

Q. And 48, almost 49% of the commercial customers [1008] responding thought that whatever relationship there was between C&S and those banks was not important? A. Right.

Q. Okay. Let's look at No. 60, if we can. Now, 60 is the same chart for individual as opposed to commercial accounts, I believe. Now, on No. 60, as I read the chart, about 61%, slightly less, thought that the relationship was important for various reasons? A. Right.

Q. But about 43% still thought that these banks were local, independent banks; is that right? A. Right.

Q. Okay. Let's try looking at the letter now that elicited those responses. One, as an example, let's use Exhibit 43, that is titled "Survey Questionnaire Sent to Commercial Customers of C&S Affiliates and Correspondent Associates". The particular example we have here is the Chamblee Bank. A. I am with you, sir.

Q. Do you know how many times the name Citizens & Southern or the initials C&S appear in that letter? A. The letter covering it?

Q. The letter and the questionnaire. A. In the letter, it just goes on the letterhead, which is the normal letterhead used [1009] by the Chamblee Bank. In the questionnaire it appears a number of times, yes.

Q. Would fifteen sound right to you? A. I haven't counted; I assume that's correct, if you say so.

Q. Okay. Now, let's look on Page 3 of Exhibit 43. We are into the questionnaire. Do you find the sentence marked No. 5 in the middle of that page? A. Yes.

Q. Could you read that sentence for me, please. A. "Please check which of the following banking services you use regularly for your business at some C&S banking office or offices, other than the C&S Bank of Chamblee in the Atlanta area."

Q. Okay. Now, let's go down to No. 6, right below that list there. Could you read that sentence for me, please. A. "In terms of meeting the total banking needs of your business, do you consider the relationship that the C&S Bank of Chamblee has with the C&S National Bank and its affiliates in the Atlanta area as being important? Not important? If important, tell us why."

Q. Now, the very next question on that—in that survey on the next page is the question dealing with whether they consider the bank independent or just like [1010] any other branch; is that right? A. Right.

Q. Now, despite the language you just read, let me ask you first, would you agree that the language in Sentence No. 5 and Sentence No. 6 suggests the existence of some kind of relationship with C&S National Bank? A. Well, it suggests—6 suggests some kind of relationship, but certainly less so than the name of the bank does.

Q. And 5, where it talks at some C&S banking office, other than the C&S Bank of Chamblee, would that suggest some kind of relationship? A. It suggests that C&S has other offices that are called C&S.

Q. Other than the Bank of Chamblee? A. Yes, that is has such offices, but not necessarily that they are used.

Q. All right. Now, despite the language in those sentences, despite the fact that the name Citizens & Southern or C&S appeared fifteen times in the letter, in the questionnaire, despite the publicity that you heard referred to earlier in the trial in terms of newspaper ads and notices sent out to customers, so on and so forth, concerning this trial, and despite all the testimony that we have heard about the correspondent [1011] associates being operated just like branches of C&S National, despite all of this, in Exhbit 67, the commercial customers, the ones you would assume would be more knowledgeable, I take it, over 50% of the responses, on the average, from those customers indicated that the bank they were talking about was an independent bank; is that correct? [1012] A. The bank which appears or competes with a local identity, independent bank with local identity—underline that—which really works to say that the C&S bankers there can differentiate their approach to particular markets, to half of them, approximately the same half that said that the C&S, the same number, not necessarily the same people, that said the C&S relationship was not important to them. You wouldn't expect that this would be important to all customers. Half is a rather substantial number.

Q. Now, on page 123 of your narrative, Exhibit 1, you state, and I quote, "Because the correspondent associates are managed as C&S Banks, they are identified as such in the minds of the customers. Most of their customers look at these banks as C&S branches through which to avail themselves of the advantages of the entire C&S organization."

Now, considering the numbers we have just seen on your charts 60 and 67, isn't that statement a little exaggerated? A. I don't think so. I think that the interview resolves, talking to people about this, the vast majority of the people we talked to made this statement and also said, but they do orient their approach to the particular needs of this local area.

[1013] Q. The vast majority of the people you talked to? A. That's right.

Q. That's different than the people who you mailed these questionnaires to? A. No, I think it's a representative. I think that both are representative cross-sections. When you talk to people and explain precisely the ramifications of some of the things you are asking, some of them may say, for example, they look at this particular market they are serving and they serve it locally. They really recognize what the local needs are. If you follow up with a question, well, if they are still C&S Banks, you may very well get the answer, yes, without any inconsistencies at all.

Q. Don't the surveys, aren't the survey results equally—couldn't they support equally the conclusion that people understand there's some kind of relationship between C&S National and the correspondent associates, that at the same time the correspondent associate is in fact a separate, independent bank? Wouldn't those statistics we are talking about support that conclusion just as much as the one I have just quoted from you on page 123? A. Absent interview results and having discussed this, yes, they could support it for half of the customers. Perhaps the same half who would choose to bank independent banks, perhaps not.

[1014] Q. Now, let's look at some of your other charts, if we could, Exhibit 1 in Volume II of your report, headed, "The Relative Size of the Largest Commercial Banking Organizations by State." A. Yes, sir.

Q. Could you explain the significance of this chart, please? A. This is really a background exhibit designed to show what has happened to concentration in the United States as a whole. How large a share of the market, the largest bank has in most states in the country.

Q. Now, I think you have broken down Exhibit 1 into three areas titled, "State-wide Branching, Limited Area Branching and Unit Banking"; is that correct? A. Yes. Yes.

Q. Now, Georgia is listed in the limited area branching state. If I read the chart correctly, the largest bank or bank group is noted as having 19.95, about twenty percent of the commercial bank deposits in the state; is that right? A. Right.

Q. Do you know what bank group that is? A. C&S.

Q. Isn't it true that C&S has a larger share of Georgia deposits than the leading banking organizations in [1015] five of the states you listed in a state-wide branching part of that exhibit? A. That appears to be.

The Court: You mean 19.95 is greater than the percentage shown in the first column on the first page?

Mr. Sims: That's right.

The Court: We can get that.

Mr. Sims: All right, Your Honor, I'm trying to build up to a point slowly. I will try to go a little quicker.

By Mr. Sims

Q. On page 28 of your report, you noted that the Georgia —— A. The text.

Q. The text; I'm sorry, yes. You noted that the Georgia concentration was higher than the averages in limited branching states as a whole. In fact, it's considerably higher than the average, isn't it, about thirty percent higher? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And, in fact, you explained that, and here I'm quoting, many of these states permit less branching and holding company activities than does Georgia; is that correct? [1016] A. Yes.

Q. How much holding company activity does Georgia permit? A. At the present time, holding company acquisitions are limited to five percent.

Q. How many of these states in your limited area branching list allow, just to pick, one state wide holding company activity? A. I can go down the list. Alabama has an emerging holding company. Indiana does not. Kentucky does not. Louisiana, I think, is still one banking holding company. Massachusetts does. Michigan is developing theirs. Mississippi does not. New Hampshire, I'm not sure. New Jersey does have wide spread. A couple starting in New Mexico; very wide spread in New York, Ohio; Pennsylvania does not.

Tennessee and Wisconsin do. More than half have.

Q. So, ten of the states in that list do permit state-wide holding company activity? A. If that's what you counted. I believe I am correct on that.

Q. You're right on those. Do you still stick by your statement on page 28 that many of these states permit less holding company activity than does Georgia? You [1017] explained that Georgia was relatively unconcentrated by pointing out, by comparing it with all these states and tried to explain away its relatively high concentration among limited branching states, by pointing out that holding company activity is less allowed in other states than in Georgia. In fact, there is more holding company activity allowed in ten of these states; is there not? A. Well, in New Jersey, New York, except for the Midland, this has all been in the last few years. The concentration figures in 1970 reflected this thing developing. Georgia's holding company growth occurred before 1956, so that's the major difference. It's happening in these other states. I think that the figures will reflect it in five years.

Q. In fact, in any of your charts in here, trying to compare Georgia with the other states, Atlanta with the other SMSA, did you take into account at all the fact, the ability of banks to operate through holding companies? A. Well, on some of these, yes, others not. It depends on what comparison you're able to make. You will have to be specific in your question.

Q. Okay. Let me try to run them down. How about Chart No. 2; did you take it into account there? A. That's based upon banking organization, largest [1018] banking organization, holding companies will be included, yes.

Q. But, in terms of comparing Atlanta with these other SMSA's, you don't find any difficulty in comparing Atlanta with SMSA, which allows state-wide branching or state-wide holding company activity? A. This is only limited area branching. If the question is, are all limited area branching states the same and are all holding company developments the same, can you make precise comparisons, one against the other, without taking into account the specific laws, I would say, of course, not. If you are going to compare Atlanta with Kalamazoo, you have to know something about Atlanta and Kalamazoo, which is one of the criticisms I levied at the structural measure from the start.

But, if you are comparing our SMSA in the United States and you are trying to get a ranking and you are trying to see what creates a competitive norm, and you come out with Atlanta ranking very close to the bottom, then the question is should it be five notches higher or lower? My answer is, of course, it can be five notches higher or lower at a point.

[1019] Q. Well, I don't want to belabor this point, but you rank Atlanta in this chart No. 70. If I read it correctly, and by my calculations, of the 69 states or higher SMSA's, 47 of those are located in states which allow statewide holding activity. Now, since you did not compare it with SMSA's in states which allow statewide branching, I am unclear as to why you didn't take into consideration statewide holding activity. A. Well, first of all, virtually one can divide these states by that category, that is true. But, in most cases, the holding companies operate in different markets around the state rather than having that many affiliations in the specific standard metropolitan statistical area, and these do have this most limited area branching states. You can branch throughout the metropolitan area, and so it is essentially equivalent to statewide branching states where one looks at metropolitan areas. It is only in a statewide concentration basis that you are going to get a different result.

Q. All right. I won't spend too much more time on these charts. Just look at No. 5 for one minute, if you would, and No. 5 is a comparison of SMSA's in states where unit banking is prevalent. I take it there you did not take into consideration statewide [1020] holding company activity either? A. Yes, because it's banks or bank groups, percentage held by largest banks or bank groups.

Q. But, in terms of ranking, that wasn't a factor in your decision? A. Well, this is the way it was ranked. It was ranked by the percentages held by banks or bank groups.

Q. Are you likely to find a higher concentration in states which have statewide branching as opposed to states which have unit banking? A. You will find higher concentration on a statewide basis, that is correct.

Q. All right. A. But, in local markets such as metropolitan areas, you need not find higher concentration at all.

Q. Would that statement still be true if, in fact, the unit-banking states allowed statewide holding company activity? A. It would not—there are many unit banking—there are several unit-banking states that, when holding companies are accounted for, you get very high concentration. Minnesota is one example; Montana is another.

Q. Do you believe the state is an appropriate section of the country or a relevant market in this case? [1021] A. I most certainly do not.

Q. Are you asserting now, based on your direct testimony, that the SMSA, Atlanta SMSA, is an appropriate section of the country or a relevant market? A. For convenience and needs aspects, it is an appropriate section of the country to look at the structural considerations.

Q. How about for determining the competitive effect of the merger? A. I think you have to look the way the competitive impact of each of these banks is separately.

Q. Okay. If we can talk a little bit about the phenomenon you call market spill-over. On Page 59 of your report, you give an example of market spill-over. I am quoting here from the last line on the page, going on to the next page: "A spill-over effect typically occurs when the location of a customer as identified by the zip code of his address on the bank's records is an inaccurate indicator of where it is convenient for him to conduct banking business."

Then, on Page 60, a little later down here, you state that: "These spill-over effects have no significance for competition, either actual or potential." Some of these questions may not sound—may sound a little simple, but I am confused by this. Do you mean [1022] that such customers are in no market at all? A. No, I don't mean that. I mean when you look at the market, this is why the metropolitan area, as such, comes into play and has to be examined. I mean that when you look at where a bank is going out and is aggressively seeking its business, the area it serves, you have to look at where the concentration of where its accounts are. It may have a scattering throughout the metropolitan area that appear there for all sorts of reasons. One of them is because of this complementarity aspect that I discussed. Another is because that these customers may have moved around the area. Another may be a partciular tie to an individual officer. Many of these result from the C&S relationship. Others of them result from simply metropolitan banking patterns, but it is not where the base of business is being conducted by this bank.

Q. Could these spill-over effects result from different prices offered by different banking institutions? A. Let me see if I understand your question before I answer yes or no.

Q. Okay. A. You were saying, are there certain customers who may be attracted to a particular bank and willing [1023] to travel a great distance because of price——

Q. No, we are not on the same wavelength. We are not on the same wavelength. A. That's why I wanted you to explain it.

Q. Could this, what you call spill-over, account, the scatteration of accounts, could this result in the Atlanta area in any place that you find it as a result of competition on the basis of price, quality of service, between banking organizations? A. I don't understand why it would result from that. I believe I have explained why I think it results.

Q. Let me see if I understand you correctly. Are you saying——

The Court: Well, if you will, go back one step, will you.

You say a spill-over effect typically occurs when a location of a customer as identified by the zip code or his address on the bank's record is an inaccurate indicator of where it is convenient for him to conduct his banking business.

Now, I had assumed that the address would be—would be their home address.

A. Often, but not always, Your Honor. There are a substantial number of addresses that are business [1024] addresses, and yet they may bank where they live.

The Court: Well, but when you consider the bank's forms, what does that typically call for?

A. I believe that—I would have to check this, but I believe that the bank often asks for both addresses, but the accounts are sometimes mailed to business address and sometimes mailed to home addresses, and it is the mailing address that is on the computer.

The Court: On the bank statement.

A. On the bank statement.

The Court: Well, now that would be an indication of where it is convenient for somebody to do his paperwork, his reconciling his bank statement, wouldn't it? A. That's correct, that's correct.

The Court: Somebody who may have considerable office time could do it at the office, but if he worked for a large corporation where his time was accounted for, he would hardly ever have his bank statement sent there, would he?

A. That's correct. I would say the vast majority is sent to home, but certainly there could be a substantial number that appeared to be banking at a [1025] distance from home, because they think——

The Court: And he has the bank statement sent elsewhere?

A. That's correct.

The Court: I was thinking in terms of a bank such as Park National. Now, I would assume that with a bank like that, that the great majority of the customers of the bank bank there because of business, convenience to their business location, rather than their home location?

A. I think that's certainly for the business location; for the business customers, it would be sent to the business anyway. The corporate customers, in large part, and it would be the business address that the statements would be sent to, and that would appear in the zip-code analysis.

The Court: Why would that be the case? Why would they be sent to the business address?

A. I think most business customers, most firms do have the business accounts sent to the business.

The Court: Oh, I can understand if it is a business account, but as to the employees, who is the individual person who banks at [1026] Park National, is there any reason that they would have their address given as somewhere in Executive Park rather than their home address?

A. Some might, if they bank near where they work, and they want their statement sent there. Others might have it sent home.

The Court: But would someone who lived in North DeKalb and banked at Park National, because of the convenience of a business address, be a spill-over customer in your definition?

A. If he lived in North DeKalb and banked at Park National because it was convenient to business, it could be a spill-over customer, yes.

The Court: Well, wouldn't he invariably be a spill-over customer in your definition?

A. Yes, yes, if he lived far enough away.

The Court: If he didn't live in what would be the area of where Park National was, the convenient office as far as his home location was concerned, then he would be a spill-over customer every time?

A. Yes, that's correct.

[1027] The Court: Under your definition.

A. That's correct.

The Court: Now, would you go ahead? I think I understand this man.

By Mr. Sims

Q. Okay. The point I was trying to get at, is it possible, in your mind, that this kind of a scatteration of accounts could result from something other than convenience, if you indicate here? Could it result from competition among banks? A. To some customers it could, although some customers have a definite preference for banking either where they work or where they live, and the two are not really substantive.

Q. Okay. Following up, if I understand what you just stated to the judge, if a person lives in Chamblee and receives his bank statement in Chamblee and banks downtown, he would be a spill-over effect, right? A. Outside of the service area of the downtown bank, yes.

Q. Is he competitively insignificant to Chamblee banks? A. He most likely is, because he wants to bank where he works, and banking where he lives is not a real alternative.

[1028] Q. You assume that from the fact that he banks downtown and no other facts? A. I assume that from the fact that he banks downtown, together with a lot of work which has been done in the area of why people bank where they do, and pretty consistent proportions turn up. Twenty-five or thirty percent of people bank on the way to work cycle. This is sort of a generally—it comes up in various surveys and has been confirmed, generally confirmed result. People want to bank where they work.

Q. Then, I assume that you would think that Chamblee banks don't care where he banks; they have no interest in him. Is that what you mean by competitively insignificant to Chamblee banks? A. I would not state it as strongly as you did. I would say that Chamblee banks would better spend their resources going after the people who are in their immediate area who want to bank there.

Q. Do you further assume that this particular customer would not consider Chamblee banks if his downtown bank treats him badly and he decides to leave? A. Some might. Most would want to bank downtown and would look elsewhere downtown.

Q. Do you know how many customers C&S National, let's take as an example, has whose addresses, their [1029] statement addresses, are in DeKalb County? A. I don't have a figure at hand. I am sure it is substantial.

Q. Does 15,000 sound correct to you? A. I really don't know.

Q. In any event, these customers would all be spill-over effect as far as DeKalb County is concerned? A. Some of them who would be large customers and who may have had long-term C&S National relationships would not really be spill-over effects; for larger customers, C&S National certainly serves the entire metropolitan area and beyond. Others may actually be banking at C&S affiliates in DeKalb County and never bother to move their account from the National Bank. So they may appear on the National Bank's records and they may never go into the National Bank because of these complementarities that I refer to.

Q. Now, in your report, I think on Page 88 and 89, you say that spill-over, such spill-over as you have been talking about, appears to be substantially more prevalent at branch-banking systems than among local independent, suburban banks.

Is this a general conclusion, or is it relevant merely to the Atlanta area? [1030] A. I think it's a general conclusion in the metropolitan area based on banking patterns in the metropolitan area.

Q. Have you done any previous studies in other metropolitan areas that support that conclusion? A. I've not done surveys of the sort I have done specifically here. But, I've worked with branch banking organizations and with independent unit banks and I think that the distribution of their accounts reflects this general conclusion. Most definitely it does.

The Court: Let me get a question in here. You indicated earlier that the primary competition would be in the area of, as I understood it, geographical convenience where you put a branch here in order to compete for the customer in that area. And then, I got the idea that you said that apart from that, then there was a certain insulation from competition because they are banking for other than convenience reasons which would indicate that competition wasn't really effective; is that in any way a statement of what you said?

The Witness: Yes, for certain customers who may be dealing with a particular office. They are the hardest customers to get away from the bank.

The Court: What I wanted to find out was [1031] whether you were identifying that type of customer with the spill-over customer or complimentary customer, or simply a unique individual.

The Witness: Well, he may be reflected in the spill-over data.

The Court: But, it's not coincidental?

The Witness: There are other types of spill-over customers than the type who were loyal to particular offices and one of the types who haven't, who have moved their location and haven't moved their accounts. What I am saying is, there are a number of reasons that there is a scattering of accounts around away from the primary service area. I'm trying to elaborate on some of these reasons for it.

By Mr. Sims

Q. Dr. Baxter, can you cite me to any professional journal or book by a recognized economist which describes or utilizes the concept of translating over-lapping into spill-over such as you have done? A. I'm not aware of any.

Q. Can you cite me to any such journal or book in which the word spill-over is used in the context you have used it? A. I'm not sure that I can.

Q. Now, on page 60, 60 and 61, you attempt to [1032] distinguish spill-over from over-lapping. Market overlapping implies over-lap of identifiable geographic markets, thus the two banks draw part of their customers——

A. Excuse me; I want to find out where you are.

Q. Down at the bottom of page 60. A. Market over-lap implies——

Q. ——implies over-lap of identifiable geographic markets. Thus, the two banks draw part of their customer base from the same area. A. Primary customer base.

Q. Primary customer. Market spill-over on the other hand tends to be widely scattered outside any such definable market area. Does this mean you must determine a market before you can find spill-over, or do you first determine spill-over and then determine the market? A. I think you look and see where your customers come from, and you see a concentration of customers in a particular area. And when you see that your customer base thins out, the accounts become much more scattered, that is what we refer to as spill-over.

Q. Okay. Now, on page 8—I don't think you need to look at this, I'm not going to quote you—states that no reasonable expansion of defined geographic market can significantly reduce much less eliminate the number of accounts from these outside markets. [1033] A. Right.

Q. Would two-thirds reduction be significant to you? A. Yes, but I'm not sure that one can have a reasonable expansion. If the accounts become so thin outside of the primary service area, then this is not your market.

Q. I'm going to get to that. Are you aware that for all banking offices located in DeKalb County, approximately ninety to ninety-two percent of their small accounts come from within DeKalb County? A. That's about correct. I'm aware of a similar figure to that; yes.

Q. Then, I assume that since that would indicate two-thirds reduction in the amount of spill-over, you would note DeKalb to be a reasonable expansion of the defined geographic market? A. That's correct, because you are getting a scattering of accounts when you get more than a couple of miles typically away from these offices. So, you are going after that sort of business in a very different way. It's coming to you for different reasons than proximity.

The Court: Why do you say that, Dr. Baxter? Because, it seems to me even home-to-business travel, if the bank is located at some point along that line, [1034] he can be coming to that bank because of proximity, maybe proximity to the automobile's line of travel?

The Witness: Oh, yes, indeed. That was in fact one of the alternatives that appeared on the questionnaire. There was a significant portion of people who banked because it was on the way to work. In fact, the market areas typically extend away from the center city, from the location of a bank, indicating people pass the bank on the way to work and tend to bank there. That's clearly the case.

But, I feel, I think what I was pointing out was when you get accounts totally scattered without any concentration of accounts from the extremities in the metropolitan area, then these accounts occur for reasons other than convenience because there are more banks that are convenient. This is—if there are other alternatives that are more convenient, then they can't be choosing this particular bank based on convenience factors.

By Mr. Sims

Q. Could they be choosing it based on the fact it does business better for them than the other banks that are more convenient, offers them lower price, offers them better service? A. They could.

[1035] Q. Doctor, how do you define a banking market? This is a broad definition. How would you define one? A. I would define the banking market in terms of the area in which banks seek out their customers and which customers find these banks relevant alternatives or reasonable alternatives.

Q. Did you testify for the defense in the Phillipsberg Bank case? A. Yes.

Q. Do you recall it? A. Yes.

Q. Let me show you—this is the appendix, Supreme Court appendix. See if you recognize this particular paragraph on page 507, where I believe Mr. Weinberg asked you the same question I just asked. A. I look at a banking market just as I look at any other market—do you want me to read this?

Q. Yes. A. ——as an integrated area where there are buyers and sellers and where the operation of the buyers and sellers determine the quantity of sales and the price in that market, and the people in this market are all interacting to effect the price and people outside the market are not significant factors or products outside the market. I believe you can define a market in a reasonable sense only in [1036] terms of a specific product that is sold.

Q. Now, does that say the same thing as you look, I think you just said you looked at where the banks get their business? A. Where they are inter-acting, yes.

Q. That's what you mean by where they are inter-acting, where they get their business? A. Yes.

Q. Would you agree that the market in which a customer buys includes the sellers that the customer could reasonably have chosen or reasonably choose as well as the bank he did in fact choose? A. Yes.

Q. Dr. Baxter, did you have anything to do with the preparation for the application for the mergers which are the subject of this litigation? A. No.

Q. Have you ever assisted in the preparation of bank merger applications? A. Holding company acquisitions.

Q. Holding company acquisitions. Holding company acquisitions is fine. Are you familiar with the regulatory aspects of the prime service area? A. Yes.

Q. Are you aware of how that's defined by the FDIC? [1037] A. Most defined in terms of seventy-five percent. The language has been changed in the national banks. I'm not sure of the FDIC.

Q. Seventy-five percent of what? A. Of the business where you get your deposits.

Q. Where you get seventy-five percent of your deposits. In complying with the instructions in all bank merger applications, to delineate the primary service area for a particular bank, is there any consideration given to other customers of area banks? A. You will look at where the bank involved derives seventy-five percent of their business. You are also asked to indicate who are your competitors in another section.

Q. To determine what the primary service area would be of a bank, do you give consideration to other banks in determining primary service areas of one of the parties of the merger? A. No, you do not.

Q. Do you give any consideration to the location of other banks? A. No.

Q. Is it correct to conclude, then, that a determination of primary service area of a bank is not necessarily a determination of the banking market in which [1038] that bank competes? That the primary service area and market are not synonomous? A. They are not necessarily synonomous.

Q. Isn't it true you use these terms as if they are synonomous in your report? A. No, it's not. I'm saying, in determining the competitive effect of a merger involving essentially suburban banks, one has to look where the service areas are to see if there's any significant over-lap between them. That's how I would determine a competitive effect.

Q. Look at page 19 of your report, Doctor, the second paragraph. You begin to tell us how you undertook to define the geographic service areas. If I might read that, "The second study involved the definition of the geographic service areas of the C&S affiliates and correspondent associates in Fulton and DeKalb Counties and the determination of the degree, if any, of geographic market over-lap among these banks. It thus addresses directly the issue of the markets in which actual and potential competitive effects are to be determined."

Then, over on page 20, up at the top, in the first sentence, "However, for a variety of reasons, zip code area definitions do not adequately describe bank service areas. Thus, for a number of zip code areas samples of accounts were analyzed by street address in order [1039] to test further for geographic market over-lap."

Aren't the terms service areas and over-lap used relatively synonomously in that language? A. No, I don't think so. What I'm saying is that we are looking at the area, market area served by an individual bank and the market area served by another bank to see whether or not they are drawing, they are addressing themselves to the same customer base. This is the service area and the area of market over-lap, if any.

Q. In determining those markets, did you pay any attention at all to the customers of other banks other than the banks, the C&S Banks that you were drawing markets for? A. There were other banks who drew customers from these areas.

Q. But, did that have anything to do with drawing the market for, say, Park National? A. No.

Q. Did location of other banks have anything to do with drawing that market? A. No, because you would consider the location of the other banks when you're asking whether or not Park National, which other banks Park National is competing with. In the Phillipsberg case, if I may go back to that, the question was which banks were Phillipsberg National [1040] and Second National competing with. So, you had to look at their customers as well as the customers of the two banks involved in that case. In this situation you are not asking who these other banks are competing with. I wasn't asking that question. I was asking whether these two banks compete with each other and, therefore, I looked at the areas that they served.

In the Phillipsberg case, there was no question but that those two banks competed with each other. They were right across the street. Therefore, the question was who else do they compete with? Who else is an alternative to the customers that they serve?

[1041] Q. So, in your mind, in terms of determining the market areas for the defendant banks, it was irrelevant who else they competed with other than the other defendants? A. In looking at the market areas alone in this case, that is correct.

Q. Isn't it true, then, that what you describe as markets in your report are, in fact, something less than primary service areas, as would be defined by the regulatory authorities? A. In which to judge the competitive impact of two banks located apart from each other. That is what these markets—that is what these markets were based on, what areas they served.

Q. Well, now, if we could, according to your Exhibit 35, which I think is the big exhibit that gives all the market areas for all the defendant banks, according to these exhibits, they run 35A through H? A. Right.

Q. Zip code 30345 is in the market served by Emory, Park National and Tucker, but not in the market served by Chamblee? A. Right.

Q. Is that correct? A. 30345, I will have to check that. Emory, [1042] Park National and Tucker.

Q. But not in Chamblee? A. That's correct.

Q. Are you aware that the Buford Highway office of C&S Chamblee draws some 8% of its small demand-deposit accounts from Zip Code 30345? A. 8% of its——

Q. Of its. A. Of the office accounts?

Q. That's right. A. That is possible.

Q. Would you agree, then, if that was, in fact, a fact that this banking office is a supplier of banking services in a market that includes at least part of 30345? A. Not substantial, though, because we are talking about one branch having 8% of its total deposits. You have to draw a cut-off somewhere.

Q. Substantial or not, it is a supplier, isn't it? A. To an extent, yes. I imagine it has some Florida accounts, too.

Q. Now, if I am not mistaken, the boundary that you drew between the market which you delineated for Emory, on the one hand, and Park National, on the other [1043] hand, in 30345 runs through an area called Sagamore Hills, which I understand is a neighborhood just northeast of Clairmont Road, between Briarcliff and La Vista. A. Well, I will have to check.

Q. Would you check that and see if that is accurate? A. I will have to check and see where we are. 30345?

Q. Right. Now, I think you gave, on Page 86, I believe, you told how to draw that line, and as I followed it through a map, came out between Emory and Park National, and roughly parallel to La Vista and Briarcliff Roads. But, I think that would run through that Sagamore Hills neighborhood, I believe. A. Well, I would have to—I would have to check that on a map.

Q. Well, that is not terriby important. It runs through, approximately, the middle or it is between La Vista and Briarcliff Road, so it runs through whatever neighborhood is between La Vista and Briarcliff Road; correct? A. Okay.

Q. If a resident of this area is banking, say, with Park National and should become dissatisfied with the treatment he was getting at Park National, would you [1044] expect he would be able to find equally convenient alternate sources of banking services? A. He might be able to, yes.

Q. What banking offices, or do you know what banking offices such a customer would be likely to have as a convenient alternative, if you can use your map over here. A. I would have to check the map.

Q. You can use this one over here; it is a big map. A. All right, I will accept your invitation.

Q. Okay. A. It should have the locations of the banks.

Q. Let's see if we can locate this area. Now, Briarcliff Road is here; correct? A. Right.

Q. La Vista Road is here? A. Correct.

Q. Clairmont Road is here. So, we are talking about somebody right in here. A. Okay.

Q. Now, where would he be able to go if he got dissatisfied with Park National? A. Okay, Park National is here.

Q. Right. [1045] A. All right. He has about as close as Park National or closer a branch of the Fulton, of the Trust Company, of the First DeKalb County Bank. Well, he really has two branches of the DeKalb County Bank, Peachtree; I am just trying to draw a rough circle with this.

Q. That is okay, that is fine. A. He has a bank of the National Bank of Georgia branch, of the Trust Company; he has a Northlake branch of Fulton not yet opened. He has a branch of Tucker.

Q. C&S Tucker? A. Yes. And he has a branch of Trust Company at Northlake. I think that that is—I think that these are within a comparable distance.

Q. Now, where is Toco Hills on this map? A. Where is Toco Hills? Somewhere in here, isn't it?

Q. Is that right? A. There it is.

Q. Would Toco Hills be convenient for him, as well? A. About the same distance as Park National, I thought.

Q. And there is an Emory bank and a Trust Company bank and a First National bank, is there; is that right? [1046] A. There is an Emory bank; there is a First National. Trust Company is a little bit away, and so is Peoples American, I guess now called First Georgia.

Q. Okay. Thank you, thank you, Doctor. A. May I make a comment on this?

Q. Certainly. A. It seems like a lot of banking alternatives available to him.

Q. Is that your comment? A. A lot of competition.

Q. In fact, customers anywhere in the area between Briarcliff and La Vista would have convenient access obviously to many more than one source of banking services; is that correct? A. Oh, yes, definitely.

Q. Now, if you could turn to 85-86 in your report, where you describe how to delineate the lines between these markets. If you can use your other book and look at Exhibit 40, if you would. Now, Exhibit 40 lists the zip-code areas where you had more than one of the defendant banks drawing some substantial amount of business, and between which you wanted to attempt to draw lines in order to delineate markets. On Page 2, let's see, Pages 3 and 4, you note that there are six pairs of C&S banks which you tried, or attempted to draw market lines between. That would be Chamblee and [1047] Park National. A. Now, what, what zip code is this?

Q. 30345. A. 30345, okay.

Q. Last one on Page 3. A. Chamblee and Park National.

Q. Then on Page 4, Tucker and Chamblee, Tucker and Park National, Emory and Tucker, Emory and Chamblee. A. Right.

Q. Now, on Page 86, you described, in fact, drawing the boundaries for four of those pairs, Chamblee and Park National, No. 4; Emory and Park National, No. 5; Tucker and Park National, No. 6; and Emory and Chamblee, No. 7. I would like to show you a copy of the map that was included in as Exhibit 71. A. Yes.

Q. In your report. Now, you will notice there are some lines drawn on that map. Can you tell me if the lines drawn on that map through 30345 are essentially faithful to the descriptions on Page 86? A. I would have to check that out one by one.

Q. The descriptions are there on Page 86. A. Right.

Q. Could you do that? A. All right. Park National, I would have to [1048] have a bigger map of the area. Park National and Emory.

Q. Well, okay, Park National and Emory. A. Running roughly parallel to La Vista and Briarcliff. Park National is about a mile north of the boundary.

Q. Okay. Park National-Emory is between, roughly parallel to La Vista and Briarcliff. A. Right.

Q. There is a line on there that is between and roughly parallel to La Vista and Briarcliff? A. Right.

Q. Is that essentially where the line—I am not trying to get precise with you here—— A. Yes, I think that's right.

Q. And then, let's see, No. 4, between Chamblee and Park National, essentially vertical to the Buford Highway, I think there is a line on there that meets that qualification; is that right? A. I am trying to find Buford Highway on here.

Q. These papers are a little small. A. It is your Xerox of Xerox, yes.

Q. Yeah, Buford Highway is up on the left-hand side there? A. Yes.

[1049] Q. Right. That would be the boundary between Chamblee and Park National, or something like that? A. Yes, yes.

Q. Okay. And then No. 6, approximately, essentially coincides with Shallowford and Briarlake Road, that would be between Tucker and Park National? A. Right.

Q. And that would be the other one that is on there; is that essentially accurate? A. Yes.

Q. Okay. And the last one essentially coincides with Briarcliff Road; it is compensating for Briarcliff's winding, and you said that your lines were straight. Is that essentially accurate there? A. Yes.

Mr. Sims: Your Honor, we would like to introduce this as Plaintiff's Exhibit—I am not sure what the next number is.

The Clerk: 217.

Mr. Sims: As 217.

The Court: All right, it will be admitted.

By Mr. Sims

Q. Doctor, can you tell me how many banking markets those lines represent or do they represent any [1050] banking markets? A. No, they do not represent any banking markets.

Q. What do they represent? A. They represent a boundary which divides the customers of the banks in question that are drawn from the zip code, and says on one side of the zip code they are drawn—if we take this as the boundary of Tucker's banking market, and also the boundary of Park National's banking market. If we take that line between them, we then ask how much business does Park National have on the other side of the boundary and how much business does Tucker have on Park National's side of the boundary. This was done to see whether the apparent overlap in the zip codes was scattered throughout the zip code or whether it could be separated from one side of the zip code and the other. And by putting in boundaries here, these boundaries were attempting to make such a separation, and the results in Exhibit 40 simply show that, of course, they are not totally separate. Of course, there are some customers who are drawn from the other side. That would be expected, but, basically those are nearer to Tucker, go to Tucker, and they are getting their business from different parts of the same zip-code area.

Q. Now, if I understood you correctly, are you saying then that those lines which divide, say, Tucker [1051] and Park National, those lines represent the outermost boundary of each's banking market, as you have delineated? A. Essentially, yes.

Q. Okay. Now, in drawing those lines, of course, you didn't consider any other banks at all; is that correct? A. That's correct.

Q. And you didn't consider any other customer of any bank's? A. That's correct.

Q. If the other banks that were sellers in this zip code were included in your analysis, how many more lines would you have to draw to separate all of their banks? A. Well, as many as there were—as there were banks clearly multiplied. This would be one time. You are getting some permutations and commutations there that I have since forgotten. But, it seems to me that that really isn't the question that I would want to ask, because the question is, does one of these C&S banks draw customers from the same area as another C&S bank, which is different from the question, "What banks do each of these C&S banks compete with. It is a very different question, and, in this particular situation, it was the former question that was relevant.

[1052] Q. Let me show you another chart, if I can. Now, this chart purports to show what banks draw the demand deposits, a thousand dollars and under, from the various zip codes which you included in the market of C&S Emory. The last one on there is 30345. According to the chart, all of the banks on this list draw from that zip code. Would you be surprised if this were in fact accurate? A. No, it wouldn't surprise me. That's why we did the boundary analysis.

Q. I'd like to introduce Exhibit No. 218.

The Court: Two eighteen.

Mr. Doyle: If Your Honor please, we object to it. We have not seen it before, haven't had an opportunity to examine any of the figures.

The Court: You may submit your objection later. Admitted.

(Whereupon, Defendants' Exhibit 218 was received in evidence.)

Q. Now, Dr. Baxter, your definition of Emory market includes eight zip codes; is that right, these eight zip codes listed on this chart? A. A portion thereof. I'd have to check it again. I'm assuming you transcribed it correctly.

Q. I hope they are correct. Did you do any calculation as to the market shares within the market which you [1053] outlined for Emory of any of the banks in any of the markets you drew? A. No.

Q. Why not? A. Well, these are very localized markets, most of which have only a few banks. By the nature of this localized market, it didn't seem to me that the market share drawn within that market was relevant to the question of whether one C&S five percent bank competes with another.

Q. If you'll look on page 2 of this chart, Dr. Baxter, that I've just given you, it purports to show that the total accounts drawn by all of these banks listed are some 59,000, that C&S National and C&S Emory together hold some 14,700 or almost twenty-five percent of those accounts and that C&S, and all of its correspondent associates and affiliates, all of the defendant correspondent associates and affiliates hold a total of 41.4 percent.

Now, assuming, if you will, although I realize it's contrary to your opinion, assuming that the correspondent associate defendants in this litigation were in fact independent banks, would the fact that this merger would result in an increase in the market shares merged by the origin of accounts of the C&S system from twenty-five percent to forty-one percent, suggest to you that [1054] competition would be eliminated? A. There's a lot of questions in there. Let me try and break it down in answering. It would not suggest that competition would be eliminated, no.

Q. You are operating under my assumption, now? A. Assuming that these were independent banks, it would not necessarily suggest that competition would be eliminated, this increase in concentration.

Q. Would it suggest to you that competition would be lessened? A. No.

Q. Is there any difference in your mind between those two concepts? A. Competition being limited and being lessened?

Yes, I think it's a gradation. If each of these banks are separate markets from each other, there need not be very much competition eliminated. It's certainly not a significant reduction in competition.

Mr. Sims: Can I have just a moment, Your Honor?

By Mr. Sims

Q. Doctor, if I could go back to your direct testimony today, did I understand you correctly, did I understand you to say that you do not now feel that after these mergers, disaffiliation would be inevitable? [1055] A. It need not be inevitable, no.

Q. Did you not say that in the report? A. Yes, yes.

Q. Are you changing your mind, now? A. No, what I am saying in my report was that this was based on the assumption that if the merger would be denied the relationships between the banks would have to cease because I wanted to look at the situation in which they could become potential competitors. I wanted to ask myself was there any potential for competition. After all, potential competition was one of the things that was alleged in the complaint. That's the only conceivable way that there could be potential competition is that the mergers are denied, that there is disaffiliation, and that upon such disaffiliation each party would be forced to compete. But, we have heard testimony here that officers of the bank don't know what they would do absent the merger.

Q. Now, Doctor, we have had a little talk about concentration ratio, concentration figures. Again, let me see if I understand you correctly. Do you think concentration ratios are at all useful? A. It depends on the purpose. Yes, I think they are useful.

Q. If you were trying to calculate concentration ratios and market share figures in any of the markets [1056] alleged in the complaint, would it be appropriate in your mind to include the total deposits of the institutions found in those markets? A. It would be appropriate to include the total deposits drawn from those markets, divided by the total deposits, total deposits in those markets.

Q. If you calculated—— A. Or of offices within. One can get a very nice concept and then make it operationally impossible when you are trying to calculate it.

Q. When you were calculating the DeKalb market here, would you think it appropriate to take the banks located in DeKalb County and use the total deposits held in those offices? A. It's really the only way to do it. I mean, I could think of better conceptual ways.

Mr. Sims: I have no further questions, Your Honor.

Mr. Hodgson: We have no further questions, Your Honor.
The Court: You may step down.

Mr. Hodgson: The defendants close their case.

The Court: Mr. Kinkaid, how long will you take?

Mr. Kinkaid: Can we have two or three minutes [1057] to chat a little bit about this, sir?

The Court: Do you want a break, or can you do it there?

Mr. Kinkaid: Just a very short break would be all right.

The Court: If you can, do it here so we can all stay rather than disassembling and come back, it'll be fine. Take your time.

Mr. Kinkaid: Your Honor, I'm sure you are pleased to hear we can't think of anything more to do.

The Court: The Government rests. Thank you. All right, now, do any counsel insist on oral closings?

Mr. Hodgson: We think the Court will be best served by being spared that.

The Court: Well, briefing is a month, fifteen days; fifteen days reasonable? Do you want a different schedule?

Mr. Kinkaid: I would request until the middle of November for our briefs and findings would be acceptable, if Your Honor please.

Mr. Hodgson: Judge, we have pressed, obviously, from the beginning. We would still like to press as soon as possible. We would like it to be short.

[1058] The Court: Well, as a practical matter, I don't think —— that I am going to do much reading before December, anyway.

Mr. Hodgson: Well, in that event, we would, at least, like for all of the papers to be completed and in the Court's hands by that time.

The Court: All right. You want to file, simultaneous, say, on the 15th, and then both file rebuttals?

Mr. Hodgson: No, sir, we have considered that, Your Honor, but under the circumstances, we think the Court may get less if we respond——

The Court: All right. Well, okay. Let me split the difference then. I will give you until the end of the first week in November, November 7th, whatever that is. You figure it out, the Monday following that weekend. And, then you take fifteen days thereafter, and then seven days thereafter.

Mr. Hodgson: All right, sir.

The Court: Anything further? One thing that I should note, we have a tremendous record here.

Mr. Hodgson: Yes, sir.

[1059] The Court: Where there is anything particular in the record that you want to rely on, I think it is better if you would do it by quoting it extensively, if you need to, or attaching it as an exhibit to your brief, if you will, because I have a habit of taking stuff home, and I can't check it back and forth with what is in the exhibit here.

And I would also appreciate it if you would have a preliminary section which is sort of like an appellate brief that would be, in effect, a summary of argument or contentions of the party, or something where you would give me sort of a preview of where you are going and how you get there. I think I can understand what may be thereafter a voluminous brief better if I know what point you are attempting to develop.

Mr. Hodgson: Yes, sir.

Mr. Kinkaid: Your Honor, perhaps we had better try to be a little more specific with the date.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Kinkaid: It appears that the first [1060] full week in November starts on the 6th.

The Court: All right. Your first brief will be on—you have got one, two, three, four, five, that is five weeks, so make it on the sixth. You have already got really the heart of your brief in your pre-trial brief, so I am sure you can do it in five weeks.

The defendant's brief would then be due on the 21st. No—yes, fourteen days, the 21st, and I don't want one coming due in that period on—when is Thanksgiving, the 23rd?

Mr. Kinkaid: The 23rd, yes.

The Court: The 21st, all right. Then the rebuttal brief would be due—make it on November 30th. Well, let me stretch it a little bit. The 6th and the 22nd, which would be the day before Thanksgiving and then the 30th.

Mr. Hodgson: Yes, sir. That will suit us fine.

Mr. Kinkaid: Is Your Honor contemplating filing of both proposed findings on the same days?

The Court: Oh, why don't you finish [1061] your briefing, and then at that point I will get the briefs and start reading. That is going to take some time, and then how about, say, on the 15th both of you filing proposed findings of facts and conclusions.

Mr. Hodgson: 15th of December?

Mr. Kinkaid: That is why I asked for more time, because I was thinking of putting it between the findings first before we get the brief.

The Court: I think the important thing is to get your contentions and the arguments in primary rebuttal fashion, and then you are sort of on paper. And then the findings of fact and conclusions will be so competitive, I think you can sort of anticipate in advance what they are going to be.

All right. Anything further?

Mr. Hodgson: Thank you, Your Honor.

The Court: I must say it has been a great pleasure. I have enjoyed the case. I think you all have both done a magnificent job. Thank you.

(Whereupon the Court adjourned this matter until further notice.)

[4] PROCEEDINGS

Whereupon,

WARREN LANHAM BERRY

was called as a witness and, having first been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Kinkaid

Q. Will you state your full name and residence address? A. My full name is Warren Lanham Berry. My residence address is 684 Lakeview South, Milledgeville, Georgia.

Q. During the course of the deposition I will have occasion to use a couple of terms quite frequently, and we might as well get those squared away at this point. One would be "C&S system." Now, when I use that, I will be meaning C&S National, C&S Holding, C&S East Point, C&S Emory and C&S DeKalb. Other times I will just use one name of a particular bank. But if I say "C&S system," I mean those institutions that I just named, and if I use the phrase "a member of the C&S system," that would mean any one of them taken individually. Is that okay? Do you understand that? A. Any one of the ones you just named?

Q. Yes. In other words if I ask a question about "any member of the C&S system," I would mean—for instance if I asked you "Have you ever visited a member of the C&S system," I would mean "Have you ever gone into C&S East Point or have [5] you ever gone into C&S Emory," et cetera. A. I see. But you would not be referring to those banks that the C&S has a 5 percent interest in?

Q. That's right. Those I probably will refer to as "correspondents, associates of 5 percenters." A. All right.

Q. The other term that will probably come up will be "Supplement," and that's the supplemental material that was filed in support of the application for approval to merge. Do you recall that particular document? A. I am familiar with it; yes.

Q. Now, I will just be calling that the "Supplement."

Incidentally, as far as the Supplement is concerned, did you personally have anything to do with the drafting of that? A. No.

Q. Do you recall whether you were consulted with respect to the drafting of any part of the Supplement? A. I do not. I can't recall exactly what part I played in that. I don't—some of the information that is in the supplement I am not as familiar with as other parts of the information.

Q. But you can't recall whether anybody asked you any questions or asked you for any information that would go into the Supplement? [6] A. We may have gotten some of the information from the South DeKalb office. I do not recall specifically. It's been a long time ago that that was prepared, and I don't recall exactly how that information was compiled.

Q. Okay. What is your present occupation? A. Well, I am president of the Citizens and Southern Bank of Milledgeville and also I am president of the Citizens and Southern South DeKalb Bank.

Q. Now, how long have you been at Milledgeville? A. I have been in Milledgeville since the first of 1971.

Q. When did you start in as president of South DeKalb? A. Well, the bank was opened for business in September of 1969, and when I became president, from the legal point of view, it probably was a couple of months before that.

Q. What were you doing at the time just prior to becoming president of South DeKalb? A. I was vice president of the C&S National Bank and branch manager of the South Expressway office.

Q. How long had you been in that position? A. Here again, I'm going to give you approximate replies. I would say two years at the position of branch manager at that office. I was made vice president after I got that office. I can't remember how many months.

Q. Could you take us on back in your positions with [7] C&S, going back from becoming vice president and taking over the South Expressway office? A. May I come forward rather than go back?

Q. Sure. A. And here again, I've been in many different areas, so I might have one before the other, but I can give you a general idea, and if you want to ask me how much time or something, interrupt me. I would say that I started with the C&S Bank, the C&S National Bank, in December of 1957—excuse me; it wouldn't be C&S National Bank at that time. It was the Citizens and Southern Bank of Atlanta, I believe, and it later became the Citizens and Southern Bank, and I started with the Citizens and Southern Bank of Atlanta at the Northwest office here in the city limits of Atlanta, and I stayed there for a year or so and them became under the direction of the Correspondent Bank Division, and I operated an animated, electronically operated display concerning how a bank affects the community, and I took this display throughout the state of Georgia. After that I was in charge of the New Business Department, which had 10, 15 to 20 ladies, and we worked primarily—and we also had a couple of gentlemen in that department, and we worked primarily with new business, assisting calling officers and so on for the bank.

From there I was at one point supervisor-adminstrative assistant over the tellers and savings and various other [8] departments on the main floor of the main office. I was installment loan interviewer. I became assistant branch manager of the Cascade Heights office. I became assistant manager of the Stewart-Lakewood branch. I became manager of the Roswell-Wieuca branch, and then I became manager of the South Expressway branch.

Q. Had you been working for a bank before '57? A. No. I came up out of the service and went to work almost immediately and went to work here.

Q. Are you also a director of South DeKalb? A. Yes.

Q. Did you become a director at the same time you became president? A. Yes.

Q. Were you one of the organizers of South DeKalb, A. Yes.

Q. How did you first become aware of something called the Citizens and Southern Bank of South DeKalb? A. Well,

I was approached by either Dan Handley or Howard Starks with the C&S National Bank, and my memory fails to tell me which one of these right now, but it was someone, either one or the other, who approached me and asked me if I might be interested in becoming affiliated with a correspondent associate bank, a 5 percent bank, of which C&S owned 5 percent of the stock. And I indicated an interest in this, and [9] subsequent to that period of time I was asked if I might be interested in the area in South DeKalb County. And I rode out there and had a look at the area; the bank, the C&S National Bank, had some property out there and they asked me if I might be interested in forming a bank where that property is located. And so that's how I got started.

Q. When you were first approached by either Mr. Handley or Mr. Starks, there was no specific location in mind; is that a fair statement? A. I don't remember whether or not a specific location for the bank was mentioned, although at that point, as I recall, we owned this property. And when I say "we," I mean the C&S National Bank owned this property. I don't know that it was definite that that particular location would have to be the location that we would be talking about.

Q. Actually that was not so much a specific location as the general area or the general portion of the county? A. The general area we were looking at was South DeKalb County.

Q. Are you aware of whether any individuals living or working in the South DeKalb area had approached anyone at C&S with respect to getting assistance to start a bank in that area? A. I'm not aware of that; no.

Are you aware of whether any individual or group of [10] individuals, either at the time you were approached by Mr. Handley or Starks or prior to that time, had attempted to form a new bank in the South DeKalb area? A. I was not aware at that time that any attempt had been made. I was told that an attempt had been made to form a bank; it may have been several years, but previous to us coming out there, that some of the people in the community had attempted to form a bank.

Q. Incidentally, are you aware or can you recall any of the identities of the people who had earlier tried to form a bank in that area? A. I am not sure. I feel like that perhaps I could name a person or two, but I'm not sure at all that that would be correct.

Q. Well, were any of the people who eventually became directors of your South DeKalb Bank, do you know whether any of them had been part of the group that had earlier attempted to form a bank? A. This is what I was going to say. There are one or two directors that might have been in that. It's been—I'm not sure whether they were involved in it or not. I think so.

Q. After the first meeting with either Mr. Handley or Mr. Starks when the subject of a South DeKalb Bank was first broached to you, can you recall roughly how many discussions you had after that with either Mr. Handley or Mr. Starks or [11] anybody else, for that matter, in C&S along the same lines or with respect to the same topic? A. I would like to know what you mean when you say "along the same lines or with respect to the same topic."

Q. In other words, how many discussions can you recall with C&S officers with respect to forming a new bank in South DeKalb? A. I'm taking that as a very broad type question.

Q. Right. A. And I would say that I had considerable discussion with many officers in the bank.

Q. During these discussions, what were you told as to the relationship that this new bank would have with C&S National or C&S Holding? A. I don't recall being told any specific information along those lines.

Q. I think you mentioned earlier that Mr. Handley—or he mentioned something about your being interested in running a correspondent associate in South DeKalb; is that correct? A. Right.

Q. Was that the only discussion you can recall with C&S Officers as to the relationship between this new bank and C&S? A. I'm sorry, but I don't understand your question.

Q. Okay, let me try it again. What I'm getting at is [12] your earlier statement that Mr. Handley asked you if you were interested in running a correspondent associate in South DeKalb would, in effect, be an answer to my question, whether during the discussions you had with these various C&S officers if there was any mention of the relationship between C&S and the proposed bank? A. Not per se. I would say no.

Q. Is all you can recall that this would be a correspondent associate, and C&S Holding would have 5 percent of the stock? A. That's all I can recall.

Q. At that time, what was your understanding of the term "correspondent associate"? A. I really was not too familiar with the term "correspondent associate." I understand that this was an oportunity for me to work with a board of directors and to also be able to make a sound financial investment. But I really didn't have a lot of information about the term "correspondent associate."

Q. Well, wouldn't you at that time have been interested in finding out what you were getting into? A. That's correct. That's right, but I knew what I was getting into.

Q. Well, let me ask it that way; what was your understanding as to what you were getting into? [13] A. It was the formation of a bank whereby it would be affiliated with the C&S Bank; the C&S Bank, C&S Holding Company would own 5 percent of the bank, that C&S Bank would be very helpful to me in the formation of this bank, that they would certainly support me in every way that was possible, that my C&S training would be of benefit to me in going ahead but when that training was inadequate and that experience was lacking that I would be—that the C&S resources would be available to me to help make that bank prosper and grow and to properly serve the community.

Q. When you say the bank would be affiliated with C&S, do you have anything in mind more than the 5 percent, or is that what you mean by "affiliated"? A. Well, from a stock viewpoint 5 percent would be all that would be involved. I do have more in mind than just saying a 5 percent affiliation. I feel like that the C&S influence would be certainly involved in that bank, that C&S trained people would be there, that the C&S style of banking would be used in that area.

Q. What do you mean by "the C&S influence" would be there? A. Well, when I say "influence," I'm speaking of people such as myself who were raised in the C&S National Bank and who have the C&S National Bank's approach to banking and serving the community.

[14] Q. Is that all you mean by "C&S influence"? A. Well, I think that by "influence" we could also include guidance, and, as I mentioned, where my experience was lacking I would have the availability of the resources and guidance of the C&S National Bank and all of its many resources.

Q. You indicated earlier that C&S is the only bank for which you worked; am I right in that? A. That's correct.

Q. As a matter of fact, in running a bank, in running any bank at this point, would you know how to run that bank in any other way than the way in which you have already been trained at C&S? A. I don't believe that I would want to run a bank in any way other than the way I've been trained.

Q. In other words, when you went out to form the bank at South DeKalb, at that time the only way you knew how to operate the bank would be the way you had been trained during your tenure with C&S; would that be a fair statement? A. That would be a fair statement.

Q. During your discussions with C&S officers before the South DeKalb bank was actually formed, can you recall any discussions as to the manner in which the stock in the new bank would be distributed? A. Well, the recollection I have would be that we had [15] many people within the C&S National Bank and its affiliates, individuals who would like to have an investment in that bank out there, and, of course, we wanted people in the community to have a chance to have an investment in the bank also because we felt like that was good business. And, quite frankly, I wanted those people to have stock in the bank who I felt like would support the type management we would have.

Q. Included in that discussion, was there any discussion as to the amount of stock any one individual would be allowed to purchase? A. I think that we generally wanted to keep any one person from having—and when I say "wanted" I'm including directors and everything; we wanted to keep the directors, I believe—and give me a little leeway here—but I believe we wanted to keep the directors to about 600 shares each. We wanted to keep other people, other than myself and the C&S Holding Company, to 50 to 100 shares each. Now, that's a guide. And we felt like that would be the best distribution of the stock for the—to maximize the benefit of those holding stock and also the bank.

Q. Incidentally, what, roughly, in terms of percentage of the bank's total stock, would 600 be? A. I really did not compute it. You could compute it very easily, but I don't know.

Q. The directors, then, were to have no more than what, [16] 600? A. I believe 600 was right. It might be a hundred or so off, but I believe 600 was correct.

Q. What was the reasoning behind keeping sort of a lid or limit on the amount of the stock that any one individual could have? A. Well, simply because we wanted—it was a good investment, and, as I said, we wanted to maximize the benefit to the stockholders and also to the bank, and we felt like spreading it out in the community and also within the officers and employees of the C&S National Bank and its affiliates would accomplish that goal.

Q. When you say "to the benefit of the community and the bank," by "the bank" do you mean South DeKalb? A. Yes, South DeKalb.

Q. To your knowledge, how many shares—or it might be easier for you to think in terms of percentage—of the total stock was actually sold to C&S officers and employees? A. I think that it was probably around 50 percent. I did not look at it from a specific percentage viewpoint, although we did tend to divide it, and I think it came out right at around that amount.

Q. To your knowledge, what percentage of the C&S National or C&S officers and employees who bought the stock, what percentage of them, roughly, would have resided in the [17] South DeKalb area, to your knowledge? A. Let me go back to your previous question. I was—it might not have been as high as 50 percent. You said "officers and employees" of the C&S National Bank and affiliates. I really can't give you a definite percentage in that area. I think that I had at least 50 percent that I knew the people would support the management of the bank, but I don't know that in just those two categories it would be that figure.

Now, if you would ask that second question again.

Q. Let me just back up a second, then, on this one. Insofar as supporting the management of the bank, by that do you mean that the 50 percent who bought the stock and would support the management would support the management in terms of bringing business into the South DeKalb bank; is that what you had in mind? A. Well, no, I had in mind that they would support the type of bank that I wanted to run.

Q. Well, how would they support it, in other words? A. Well, I wanted people that would be knowledgeable about banking, that would recognize a bank's responsibility to the community, that would realize the rules and regulations that the bank has to adhere to and that kind of thing.

Q. In what way would that sort of awareness on the part of the stockholders be important to the functioning of the bank? [18] A. Well, I think it's important because we are a bank that is involved in community service, and we support those things that we feel like are important to the community, and you need your stockholders behind you in that area. We also support pretty close auditing procedures, and these type things cost money, and if you have stockholders that don't support the expenditures of funds or this type of thing, well, then, you've got a problem.

Q. And in your reference there to stockholders supporting various activities, are you referring to activities of the South DeKalb bank? A. South DeKalb bank; that's correct, yes.

Q. Okay, going ahead, then, on the portion of the stock that was purchased by C&S officers and employees, my question then would be, of those stock purchasers do you have any idea what percentage actually resided in the South DeKalb area? A. What percentage of all stock that was purchased resided in the DeKalb area?

Q. All right, that may be an easier way for you to answer it. A. Either way; I just wanted to be sure I was interpreting it correctly. I really can't say. I will say this, that a large percentage —now, this is not a very definite way to answer the question, but I really don't have a definite percent, [19] but I know that the directors sold a good bit of stock, that there were many people that wanted stock in the bank, local people, many of whom I did not know.

Q. Now, can you answer it the other way? I take it that answer is of the total stock? A. Right.

Q. Okay, can you answer it the other way as to the C&S officers and employees, specifically? A. Lived and resided in South DeKalb or DeKalb County?

Q. South DeKalb area. A. South DeKalb area. We did have some that resided in the South DeKalb area. I can't give you a percentage.

Q. Were you interested in trying to get that stock in the hands of C&S officers and employees who also resided in the South DeKalb area? A. It makes sense to have folks have stock who are affiliated with C&S National Bank and live in the South DeKalb area, although, really, that didn't enter my mind at that point. We had quite a people wanted stock in the bank, and that was just—I didn't get to that consideration.

Q. From the standpoint of the bank, did you consider whether or not your bank would be better off if all or virtually all of the stock were placed in the South DeKalb area? A. Well, I really don't feel like it would be better [20] off. I think that if you had it all in the South DeKalb area it certainly would have the advantage of having all local people owning the stock, but it would have the disadvantage of not having people in the banking fraternity owning stock in the bank, which, I think, is just as important. I think it was important that we have people affiliated with the C&S Bank own stock in the South DeKalb bank.

Q. Well, why was that particularly important? A. Well, I thought I answered that previously when I said that because those people have the same goals and desires that I did as president of the bank, and that is the style of banking that we performed out in that area.

Q. When you were talking in those terms, I thought you were referring to the stock that was distributed locally; that's what you were looking for in local subscribers. A. No, I was referring to the stock that was distributed overall and primarily and in particular the stock that was distributed to the C&S National Bank officers and employees and affiliate officers and employees.

Q. Insofar as the limitation on the amount of stock any individual could purchase, was the question of an individual getting enough stock to in any way control the bank a consideration in that regard? A. Well, it's a consideration to me because I certainly would be not a very informed person if I didn't consider who [21] owned stock in the bank that I was president of.

Q. I'm not sure if you understood my question, or I don't understand your answer. Was one reason for limiting the stock that any individual could purchase, was any reason for that your fear that your fear that any one individual, if he got X percentage of the stock, would in some way be able to control your bank? A. Well, I don't know that I really gave that much consideration. My prime reason for that was, as I stated previously, was that I wanted the stock to be spread out because I thought we would get maximum benefit from it at the bank that way.

Q. During these discussions with C&S personnel before the bank was actually established, what was the discussion as to where the bank would be located, the status of the land on which the bank building would be located, whether the new bank would buy the land, buy the building or rent the land and rent the building; what were the discussions generally in that regard? A. Well, the C&S National Bank—and here I say "National Bank," and I'm not sure whether it was the National Bank or the Holding Company—but they owned a piece of property out there; they put together two or three pieces of property, and to me it was just ideal for a bank location. So we—I say "we"; myself and our board of directors wanted to use this [22] piece of property so we negotiated with the C&S Bank regarding leasing this property from them at a rate of whatever amount of charge would be involved, and we accepted this piece of property because it was beneficial to the bank.

Q. During the period of time before the bank actually opened for business, what sort of expenses were incurred in terms of getting a charter and getting the bank ready to open for business? A. This is prior to opening the bank?

Q. Yes. A. And when you say "what expenses," this is not easy to answer for two reasons. One is that it was a long time ago, and number two is that they are varied.

Q. Well, if you could give me just a general idea, that would be sufficient, really. A. I would say that there were some expenses involved in that my salary is one, but at that period of time my salary while I was working on this bank, the C&S National Bank handled my salary for a period of time, and they also did the same thing for my cashier to give us the opportunity to work on the bank. But those would be some expenses. Of course, in the opening we had a lot of expenses involved there, in the celebration for the opening of the bank, and in the hiring of people we ran all of our employees that we hired through the C&S Personnel Division, and they tested them and this kind of [23] thing to see that they would be adequate employees. When you say "expenses," a lot of expenses were really given to us by the C&S National Bank. We had so much advice and so much help in forming this bank that a lot of it wasn't—we didn't pay for. But it certainly would have been expensive had we had to pay for it.

Q. Incidentally, I don't think we established when all these things started. Can you remember your first meeting with either Mr. Handley or Mr. Starks? A. I can't—I would say that probably the first of 1969; I would say maybe in February, But I don't remember specifically. It might have been in January.

Q. When you actually—I think you indicated that it might have been sometime around July of '69 that you formally became president of South DeKalb. At that time, from then on, by whom was your salary paid? A. I can't remember exactly when my salary was paid by the C&S South DeKalb bank, but somewhere along in there they began paying my salary. It might not have been until September, because I think it would probably have been changed over when the bank opened. But I'm not positive.

Q. After the bank opened, was there any arrangement made by which South DeKalb reimbursed C&S National for the salary, your salary, that had been up till then paid by C&S National? [24] A. No, not that I can remember.

Q. What I had in mind there was not only just a—you know, "Here's a check for Mr. Berry's salary for those X number of months," but was there any other kind of payment that would have covered your salary? A. No. And also I'm trying to recollect here, but my salary might have been paid by the National Bank throughout that year, until the end of that year, until December of '69. I said September, but it might have been paid to me and my cashier through December, but I'm not sure about that. You see, we were technically severing our relations with the C&S National Bank, and my cashier and myself had both put in a long period of time, so I don't feel like it was out of order at all for them to pay us for a period of time.

Q. What sort of relationship were you severing with C&S by taking on the South DeKalb job? A. Well, obviously it's a separate corporation, and the board of directors of South DeKalb in effect hired me, and also I employed the employees out there; although I used the C&S Bank and their facilities, I employed the people in that bank. So it was a severance in that sense of the word.

Q. From a personal standpoint, did you have to give any benefits up of any kind that you had with C&S National in order to take on the South DeKalb job? A. No, my benefits remained the same. The board [25] adopted the same benefits that I had with the National Bank, because, quite frankly, if they had not seen fit to do so I would have had to give that serious consideration, because I have a great many benefits now and had at the time when I was at the National Bank.

Q. Is one of those benefits called, roughly, "pension and profit sharing plan"? A. Yes, and, as a matter of fact, if I had given up that benefit, obviously it's—and related it to the profits of the South DeKalb Bank, there for a couple of years I wouldn't have had any profit sharing at all.

Q. Is that one plan, pension and profit sharing, is that one plan? A. Two separate plans.

Q. Could you give us a general idea of how those plans are set up and administered; just roughly what are they? A. Well, of course the pension plan is self-explanatory. When you reach —and I'm not, perhaps, as well versed on the technicalities as I should be—but when you reach retirement you have an income, and it's based on a percentage of your last five years' salary, I believe, or maybe there are a couple of alternatives. And then the profit sharing plan is based on a formula related to the National Bank and its affiliates and their income. The reason for that simply is, as I stated, so that by becoming associated with a correspondent [26] associate bank you would not give up the benefits of profit sharing.

Q. So far as the pension plan is concerned, is that one of these things where a certain amount of your own salary goes into a fund, and then to some extent what you put in is matched by your employer? Is that roughly the way—— A. No. Your pension plan is handled entirely by the bank. You put in nothing. In your profit sharing fund, you have the privilege of putting 2 percent of your salary in at the end of two years, and 4 percent at the end of five years or 4 percent after you reach 35 years of age if it were to be before five years, of your own income, and the bank has a formula, and in this case the South DeKalb bank accepted the C&S National Bank's formula, the board of directors accepted it, and it was based on the profits of the C&S National Bank and affiliates. And whatever income came out after that formula was computed was the profit sharing that was divided between the participants of the plan.

Q. So far as the pension plan is concerned, where do the funds come from that go into the plan for your benefit? In other words, let me put it this way. You indicated that the bank puts the money into your pension fund; you don't put anything in. What bank is it that puts that money in? A. No. The C&S South DeKalb bank puts money into both funds, but it's based on the C&S National, on the formula that [27] we have from the C&S National Bank.

Q. I see. So that the funding for both plans comes from South DeKalb? A. That's correct.

Q. What discussion did you have with C&S personnel before the bank was started as to the name the new bank would have? A. Well, I had discussion with, I think—I believe that I had discussion with the Research Division, and we just arrived at the name. We wanted a name that would describe the location of the bank, and that's the reason we included "South DeKalb."

Q. What were the discussions insofar as including "Citizens and Southern" in the name? A. There never was any question about that. I mean I certainly wanted the C&S name in the name of the bank for the obvious benefits that we would derive from the customers.

Q. Did any of the C&S personnel with whom you discussed this, like Mr. Handley or Mr. Starks, did you have them or anybody in a similar position suggest that you use C&S in your name, or was this strictly your idea? A. Well, I don't think—now, really, when you say whose idea it was, it just wasn't any—it was just understood. I don't think there was any question about it. There certainly wasn't on my part, and I don't think there was on anybody [28] else's part. We were going to use C&S. The only question that came up was, "What other name are we going to include?"

Q. Could you spell out a little bit more your reasons for wanting "C&S" in your name? A. Well, "C&S" stands for progressive banking with normally, I would say, excellent customer service. It has a very fine reputation. I wanted "C&S" in our name because it reflects strength; it reflects integrity. I could take the benefit of all the C&S advertising that's done on radio and television and this kind of thing. Just numerous benefits in using the name.

Q. What were the discussions before the bank started with C&S personnel as to the type of services that C&S would provide in the bank? A. Well, I communicated with some of the people downtown relating to what kind of services we would provide.

Q. Generally speaking, would the services that C&S was going to provide to the new bank when it started, would those services be the type that are ordinarily referred to as "correspondent services," to your knowledge? A. I really don't know what "correspondent services" refers to.

Q. What discussions did you have with C&S personnel before the bank opened for business as to the—for example, the hours that the bank would maintain? [29] A. Well, we talked about what hours might be most beneficial to serve the area, and, as I recall, I probably talked with our research division to try to find out what kind of hours to use. I also talked with my board of directors, and I think that the decision we made has proved to be the right one.

Q. Now, as I understand it, you started opening on Saturday; is that correct? A. Yes.

Q. Whose idea was it to open on Saturday, if you can recall? A. Well, I would have to say it would have been my idea.

Q. And what was your basis for that idea? A. Well, I looked at one thing, and that was how best to serve the community and how to get the most business for that bank, and I felt like being open on Saturday would serve both of those purposes.

Q. Did anybody in the Research Department have anything to say in terms of Saturday hours? A. No, not really. We discussed—I discussed it with two or three people in the bank about what would be good banking hours, because it's a very important in handling customers in order to be sure that we were open at the best times. We had some affiliate banks, correspondent associate banks and [30] affiliate banks that were open until 6:00 on Friday, but there was no bank in that area that was open on Saturday at the time. So I think that almost anyone that I talked to to try to get the benefit of their ideas agreed that Saturday banking would be a benefit to the bank, and when I say "the bank," I mean the South DeKalb bank.

Q. Did you have any discussions with C&S personnel before the bank was open with respect to the service charges that you would have on the checking accounts? A. I don't recall having any specific discussions along those lines. I just used the service charges that I was familiar and had used in the past.

Q. In other words, was that, the initial decision as to the service charges with the new bank, was that basically your decision? A. Yes. I think it probably would be consistent with other service charges within the metropolitan area of Atlanta, though, pretty much, because it has to be competitive.

Q. When you say "competitive" with other banks, what banks do you have in mind? A. Well, any banks in the area there at that time. You had the Glenwood National Bank, I believe—they might have changed names since then—the Glenwood National Bank, and the First State Bank came in subsequently, around the same time that we did. We had another bank that came in out on Glenwood [31] and Gresham Road; I can't recall the name of it. We had the Bank of Georgia right up the street, and I think probably you will find that most of the times those charges seemed to be pretty much the same because competition has an effect on what you charge at the bank.

Q. Did you take into consideration the service charges of the downtown bank in making your decision? A. I took into consideration what everybody was charging.

Q. How about discussions with C&S personnel as to interest rates that you were paying in various types of savings accounts? A. Well, I used my past experience to try to arrive at interest rates that we paid. I don't recall any specific discussions about it. I just really didn't feel like it was necessary to have any discussions, but that was the way I wanted it to be. I will say this, that I would not have used those same service charges and/or interest rates had the competitive situation and the market situation been different. They may have been lower; they may have been higher. As a matter of fact, right now at the Citizens and Southern Bank of Milledgeville, we pay a half percent differential on regular savings from what the—most of the banks in the Atlanta area, including C&S Banks and affiliates, pay. We also have a difference in the minimum balance maintained for [32] the checking account, and we also have a difference in service charges for that checking account, because in our particular locale we have to consider the competition and we have to consider the other factors involved in it there. Our minimum balance in a checking account happens to be higher that it is—in Milledgeville than it is in Atlanta.

Q. When you were managing the South Expressway office, did you have a different service charge and interest rates on savings accounts than other branches of C&S—that C&S National had at the time? A. At South Expressway?

Q. Yes. A. You're speaking about checking accounts and savings accounts?

Q. Yes. A. I believe they were the same as far as I can recall. And when you say "savings" you also get into an area of perhaps time certificates of deposits or large deposits of over $100,000. Well, those can almost fluctuate with individuals. So you're asking me a question that I want to be sure that we are communicating about.

Q. Okay, let's leave aside the large CD's and just consider more the personal type savings account. A. I would say as far as I can recall they were the same.

[33] Q. Did you ever consider changing them because of the competitive situation in your particular area? A. At South Expressway, for instance?

Q. Yes. A. No—I mean when you say "consider," I try to consider anything to improve a particular office or branch or whatever I happen to be working with. I don't recall any specifics about raising them or lowering them or anything like that. Now, I could, and if the situation would warrant it, there might be an occasion or two where a service charge might be waived because of one reason or another. It could be that a person is in a charitable work, and maybe you feel as though you would want to encourage that kind of activity, or it might be for another reason or two, but generally speaking that would be an exception.

Q. Would you have been able to have different service charges on checking accounts and different interest rates on personal savings accounts at South Expressway from those in effect at other national branches in the Atlanta area? A. I don't know. I didn't pursue that. I don't know.

Q. Were there any discussions with C&S personnel with respect to interest rates that you would be charging on the lending side of the South DeKalb Bank? A. I would have to say —or I would say; I don't have to say—I would say that I discussed interest rates with many [34] individuals, and I do that now, simply because it's very difficult to keep up with what kind of interest rates are proper for certain kinds of loans. As an example, within the last couple of weeks I have had a request for a mobile home development loan, and I also had a request for another type loan—I'm trying to remember what kind it was right now—but anyway I've had two requests that I can remember where I—well, for receivables, an accounts receivables loan—and so I made several phone calls trying to find out what a competitive rate should be and what we ought to get for that kind of loan. As it turned out, I didn't charge the same rates from the information that I got. I do that quite often because if you don't handle a particular loan very often, you are not familiar enough with it as to really what is involved in that type lending.

Q. What other banks—Now, this, I take it, was in Milledgeville? A. Yes. But I might call—it might not be C&S necessarily. I might turn around and call anyone that would be knowledgeable about a particular type loan and say, "Look, what would be"—and "What kind of documentation do we need on this, and how much work is involved in it," and, you know, refresh my memory about the risk involved in it and this kind of thing.

(Short break.)

[35] Q. We were talking earlier about the assistance that the South DeKalb bank would receive from C&S. Did C&S expect anything from South DeKalb in exchange for the assistance it was going to give it and actually did give it? A. They didn't ask me for anything. You would have to them if they expected anything. I can't answer that.

Q. But so far as you were concerned, there were no conditions attached to the assistance you received? A. No, none whatsoever.

Q. Did they make it clear to you at that time that you were free to run the bank as you saw best, you and the board of directors saw best? A. I think that they recognized that I didn't have experience in all areas, especially in running a bank that had its separate operations and board of directors. So there was no doubt that I was president of the bank, but I think that I expected to communicate with them in the areas that I was weak in.

Q. So far as savings rates are concerned, since the bank has opened have you had occasion to change any of the rates that you pay on personal savings accounts? A. No, not to my knowledge. And, I might add, when I say "not to my knowledge," the reason I would say that, I am 99 percent sure that that is true. But you see, since I left—I'm not active at South DeKalb at this point on a day-to-day [36] basis because I left there when this merger was in process, and I anticipated that this matter would be resolved at any time, and therefore I accepted another position. So there are some things that I am not as clear on as I would be if I were there on a day-to-day basis.

Q. As a matter of fact, if I recall correctly you were there really less than two years? A. That's correct.

Q. Have there been any changes in the banking hours at South DeKalb, or were there any while you were still there? A. If there were, they were not of a significant nature. We could have changed an hour, an hour and a half or half an hour or something one way or the other, but nothing very significant. We found that our banking hours were just really—as far as people coming and using the bank, that bank is just really very busy, so we didn't see any reason to try to change the hours and still don't, really.

Q. Incidentally—and maybe I left this out—on the rates on savings accounts, did you ever think in terms of or consider changing any of those rates? A. I have considered it, really, and you asked me that question about the branch; I have considered it before on several different occasions, and I believe that perhaps at South DeKalb—and I'm not positive about this—but I believe that I talked it over on occasion, the possibility of changing [37] rates to get the pros and cons of it, but I decided that I didn't think it would be to the best interests of the bank to do so.

Q. With whom did you discuss those possibilities? A. I really don't recall. I just in general seem to remember, and I'm not positive, seem to remember considering the possibility of making some changes, but we didn't do it. We just didn't feel like it was in the best interest of the bank.

Q. Do you have any recollection as to whether or not any people you discussed the possibility of changing the rates on savings accounts with would have been C&S personnel? A. I really don't know. It could have been with the board of directors; it could have been with our own personnel; it could have been with some of my associates with the C&S National Bank; it could have been with some of my peers with other 5 percent correspondent associates. The thought, though, has come to my mind from time to time because I would be pretty naive if I didn't try to consider that possibility.

Q. When—Let's take the same thing with the banking hours. The changes, the slight changes which may have been made, to your recollection, in the banking hours, were any of those changes discussed with anyone from C&S? A. I don't recall. I really don't recall any specific [38] changes, first of all, although there could have been, and if there were I don't recall discussing them with anyone except making up my own mind to do it.

Q. Did you ever, during the time you were at South DeKalb, receive any advice from anyone at C&S with respect to savings account rates? A. Here again, I don't recall that being a real problem or an issue, and I just cannot recollect any conversations along those lines specifically or even—I'm not sure at all.

Q. Can you recall receiving any advice from—or suggestions from anyone at C&S with respect to your banking hours? A. I sought advice relating to the opening—I believe I mentioned this—to the opening on Saturday, which would be banking hours, and I would think that I discussed it with people within the C&S National Bank to get their opinions.

Q. What I meant was after the bank was opened, you mentioned that there might have been a change or you might have considered a change. A. I don't recall.

Q. In view of the fact that it was only a couple of years ago that you were at South DeKalb, would the fact that you can't recall receiving advice from C&S on banking hours or interest rates on savings accounts indicate to you that it's [39] likely that you did not receive such advice? A. I think it would indicate that it was likely that there were no changes in hours, and it was likely that the necessity of trying to change the savings rates didn't seem important to me.

Q. While you were at South DeKalb, did South DeKalb in any way participate in a program to coordinate its banking hours with the banking hours of any other, either C&S system bank or other correspondent associate? A. No.

Q. Are you aware of any program which involved coordinating the hours of C&S system banks and hours of C&S correspondent associate banks in this area? A. No.

Q. This would be particularly with reference to the question of being open on Saturday. The though would be having banks in a particular area—some of the banks in particular are open on Friday, late on Friday, and others are open on Saturday so that all banks in that area did not have to be open both on Friday—you know, late Friday—and also on Saturday. Does that ring any bell with you? A. No, it doesn't. As I said, I sought advice on when would be the best time to be open, and I know that several people mentioned to me that being out in the community, that being open on Saturday would seem to be much more advantageous, [40] and I agreed with that thought, and that's the reason we opened on Saturday. And in fact, I say I agreed; it might very well have been my original thought. But I know that other people felt the same way. But there's no communication or coordination between other banks insofar as hours are concerned.

Q. Well, at the time you were kicking around the idea of staying open on Saturday when the bank opened, was any thought expressed in your discussions with C&S personnel as to the fact that your being open on Saturday would in any way fit into a plan to coordinate your hours with those of any other C&S Banks? A. No.

Q. You may have covered this already, but I'll ask it anyway just to make sure. So far as the service charges on checking accounts is concerned, were any changes made in those while you were at South DeKalb—that is, after you started the business? A. That is difficult to answer. There could have been some changes made. I really don't recall. When you refer to checking accounts, we have several classifications of checking accounts, and you might be referring to many company checking accounts. Well, we change our method of analyzing company accounts fairly often, fairly routinely, depending on what the price of money is and what kind of credit we can give a commercial customer for keeping a certain balance, and also, [41] where as in a personal account we say if it's over a certain amount you don't have to pay any service charges, where on a commercial account it's handled differently. So when you say "changing service charges," you see, it could include the changing of the credits that we give on company—the interest rate credit we give on company accounts and this kind of thing. So to my knowledge, any significant change, no.

Q. So far as the personal accounts would be concerned, can you recall any change with respect to the minimum balance that would have to be maintained in order to have a free checking account? A. It seems that we did have—and here again I'm not positive—but it seems as if we did have a reduction in the minimum balance required for no service charges on a personal account during the period of time that I was in South DeKalb.

Q. Can you recall how that change came about at your bank? A. I believe at that time we had a reduction. Many of the banks in Atlanta—I think that the Trust Company of Georgia came out with a minimum reduction and minimum balance and, as a result, we felt like it would be wise from a competitive point of view to meet the competition.

Q. At that time what was the nearest Trust Company office to your bank, roughly? A. Well, there's one in Decatur. I don't know how— [42] the Trust Company has affiliate banks quite a bit. I do know they have a bank in Decatur. I don't know exactly how far it is. I would say 10 minutes.

Q. Do you know whether the Trust Company Bank in Decatur was in existence at the time you made the change? A. I believe there's a bank in Decatur; I'm not really sure. I think there's a bank in Decatur, but I'm not sure, in answer to your question.

Q. Did you consult with anyone at C&S with respect to lowering the minimum balance? A. I would think that I probably communicated with someone within the bank to get their advice on the situation.

Q. Can you recall what the advice was? A. No, I can't. I think at this time, as I recall, all of the banks in Atlanta either had or it was indicated that there was a drop in the minimum balance. I know that in the past I had been familiar—when I was with C&S National Bank I had discussed it with our comptroller's department about a reduction in this area relating to the cost of the accounts and that the C&S National Bank at that time was studying this particular thing. So I think it was something that many banks found out, that it was as profitable to make this reduction as not. And that's the reason that it came about. They related it to the cost of handling these small personal accounts.

Q. Coud you briefly explain the commercial account that [43] you mentioned a little while ago. A. What are you referring to?

Q. Well, you indicated that on the commercial side of checking accounts that there are changes quite frequently, depending on the cost of money. A. Well, I think it's just related to what used to be referred to as the "prime rate." That's no longer referred to in that area as often now. But I think that when the prime rate changed on the commercial accounts we tried to change the credit that we gave the commercial customer to offset the expenses in handling the account. Does that answer your question?

Q. You are still talking about a checking account? A. Yes.

Q. And if I understand you correctly, you would be attempting through the charge on the checking account to make up for what you might be losing in terms of what you would be getting on the loan side with that account; is that what you are saying? A. Well, we're just saying—let me perhaps rephrase it and see if we're communicating. I'm just saying that if a company maintains a certain collected balance with the bank, that we give him a credit for that collected balance, and that credit is based on the money market at the time and what money is worth, and that credit is used to offset the expenses, per [44] check expenses and the statement of expenses for handling that account, and that is used to offset it, and then that difference either is a plus or a minus, as the case may be.

Q. Well, to what extent did you consult with C&S personnel with respect to the changes that you made on the commercial checking accounts? A. Well, let me say this, the C&S National Bank and affiliates kept me pretty well abreast or informed about what these rates were. Being a small bank, the prime rate really does not mean a whole lot to me, so they would certainly communicate with me in this area and also in many other areas about these things that I really could not keep informed properly about.

Q. Generally speaking, how would they communicate with you on those matters? A. Well, I get memorandums, telephone calls, this kind of thing.

Q. What services did South DeKalb offer its customers on its own that would be in the sense that it did not require any assistance from some other bank to offer the service? A. Well, that's—here again, when you say "did not require," we used assistance from the C&S National Bank for most all of our services if you wanted to look at it that way. We perhaps could have handled certain accounts, like checking accounts, for instance. We used demand account processing, but [45] we paid the C&S National Bank for that service. There is a possibility we could have handled it with our own bookkeeping and proof departments, but it would have been much more expensive and much more difficult to manage. So when you ask me what could we have offered without using the service of the C&S National Bank, I would say that we just did not choose to not use the services of the C&S Bank. It was much easier and more practical to do so.

Q. To your knowledge, could the kind of assistance that you used from C&S in making your services available to your own customers, could you have obtained the same kind of assistance or something very similar to it from other banks or large banks in this area? A. Well, I don't think so. I don't think the other banks have the management that the C&S does, and I think that I could get more expertise from the C&S Bank than I could from the C&S Bank than I could from the other banks.

Q. The use of the computer on your checking accounts that was mentioned, would that be a service that, to your knowledge, would be available from other banks in this area? A. Yes, I would think from the large banks it would be available.

Q. Could you, in just general terms, indicate the categories of services that your bank offers—and when I say "your bank," I mean South DeKalb? [46] A. Well, it offers savings, checking, and, of course, drive-in banking; all different kinds of lending. If we had need of trust services we would refer trust prospects to the C&S National Bank. We do not have our own trust account, but we certainly want to take care of our customers if they have a need in that area, and also that would be true with profit sharing and pension and this kind of thing. We offer just any service that anyone would need. If we didn't offer it at that bank and we couldn't handle it at that bank, then we would see that the customer was served through the facilities of the National Bank.

Q. Are you aware of any other institution in—we'll say in Georgia, other than a commercial bank that offers a demand deposit service? A. No.

Q. Are you aware of any other financial institution in Georgia other than commercial banks which make available to the public the variety of loans that would be available at your bank? A. No.

Q. To your knowledge, from what institution or institutions do businessmen generally obtain the funds they need to operate their businesses? A. Well, they obtain these funds from stockholders, and they obtain the funds from creditors, they obtain the funds [47] from personal savings or personal monies or personal net worth; they obtain the funds from other people who make loans to them; they obtain the funds from—when I say "creditors" I mean suppliers, when I said "creditors" previously —they obtain funds from commercial banks.

Q. What type of loans does a commercial bank make to businessmen, or perhaps I could put it in this term: Is there any type of funding that a commercial bank does for a businessman to satisfy his credit needs, or would a bank be able to provide all the credit needs of a businessman? For example, you mentioned a businessman would get funds from his stockholders. Well, would the type of funding that a businessman gets from his stockholders be available from a commercial bank?

Mr. Doyle: I object to the question. First, it's phrased in terms of "would," which is on the verge of being hypothetical. It calls for speculation and it's objectionable on that ground. I object further on the grounds of vagueness. Would a businessman of a type undefined, from a bank of a type undefined, obtain funds of a type undefined? It's so vague that I don't think it can be answered within the limitation it's framed in.

Mr. Kinkaid: I accept your objection, because——

By Mr. Kinkaid

Q. ——what I'm trying to get across to you, what I'm [48] getting at is a difficult question to ask in five or six words. For example, are you familiar with the term "working capital"? A. Yes.

Q. What does that mean to you? A. Well, it's the capital that the bank uses in its day-to-day operations—I mean that a business uses in its day-to-day operations.

Q. Now, would commercial banks—would your bank, for example, provide working capital to a businessman? A. I believe you're asking me do we make working capital loans, and the answer is yes.

Q. Do you make any other loans to businessmen which would not be categorized as working capital loans? A. Yes.

Q. What would they be? A. Well, we make longer term loans, term credit loans that can be money, that does go into the business on a more—for capital expenditures which would not be repayable from over a—on a seasonable basis but would be repayable from profits over a period of perhaps years. We could get in the area of real estate loans that would be payable out of income. It just depends—there are many, many kinds of loans that we might make.

Q. Does your bank make available to businessmen any type of credit which would not be available from another [49] financial institution? A. What do you mean by "financial institution"?

Q. Well, any institution other than a commercial bank which is involved with money. As examples, savings and loan associations, insurance companies, I guess credit unions. A. I would have to say that all commercial banks make loans that would not be at this time readily obtainable from savings and loan associations and insurance companies. And in that framework, my bank would be one of those.

Q. What type of loans do you have in mind specifically there? A. Well, just what I mentioned before. When you start talking about working capital loans or when you start talking about term credit loans or—well, those receivables loans, inventory loans; those kind of loans.

Q. To your knowledge, are those types of loans available from any other institution other than a commercial bank at this time—I mean to your knowledge, of course? A. No, not to my knowledge. I'm sure any kind of loan is available if a person would look hard enough and would have the proper credentials, from personal investors or a group of investors; just many ways. But generally speaking, we would be the institution—a commercial bank would be the institution that would handle those kinds of loans.

Q. Is your bank's ability to offer the range of services [50] that you have indicated earlier, is that ability of any assistance to you in attracting customers to the bank? A. Yes, very definitely.

Q. Could you tell me in what way that helps? A. Well, as I said, we have assistance from the C&S National Bank in relation to trust services, to payroll processing services, to pension and profit sharing services, to freight payment services, to charge account services, and it certainly enables us to take care of the customer, whereas if we did not have these facilities we could not do it.

Q. Are you saying that the ability, then, to take care of many needs of your customer is what helps you in attracting customers? A. I'm saying that it's certainly a very important factor and that if we weren't able to take care of these needs we would certainly lose customers.

Q. Incidentally, to your knowledge would the services that you mentioned that you would obtain through referral to C&S, to your knowledge would those services be available from another large bank in this area? A. I would say that some of them would. I feel as though the C&S National Bank offers more of these and offers better service. I don't feel like you would get the same service that South DeKalb gets with another bank in the Atlanta area.

[51] Q. Let me understand you correctly, then. Are you saying that you could get the other services, that they would be available, but in deciding from whom to take the services, you would have to take into consideration the quality of the service that is available? A. I think that one of the most important factors would certainly be the quality, but I don't feel as though all of the services would be available. So my response would be that no, all of the services are not available at other banks that are available through the C&S National Bank.

Q. Could you give me any specific examples of those? A. Well, I could say freight payment would be an example that we could offer our customers that—to my knowledge, now—many of the banks don't handle. We have certain services in the pension and profit sharing; investment services, this kind of thing that I'm not familiar with other banks offering. Our charge account service is certainly unique. It's the only one, really, like it in the United States. And that's what the C&S National Bank offers South DeKalb. Those come to mind just readily.

Q. Would your bank's ability to offer these various services be of any assistance to your bank in competing with other financial institutions as to certain types of customers? A. Well, certainly the more services that you can offer provide you with a competitive advantage. If you can take [52] better care of a customer and you can take care of his needs, I think it's obvious that he's going to come to you, as long as you are providing the quality service that is necessary, before he will go to someone else.

Q. Excuse me; I didn't mean going to another commercial bank. I meant going to an institution other than a commercial bank. I didn't make that clear. A. Let me have your question one more time.

Q. Well, would your bank's ability to offer a variety of services be of any advantage or assistance to you in competing for certain types of customers with financial institutions other than commercial banks? A. Well, I think it would be of an advantage. How much depends on many, many things. But to supplement my previous answer, I think that the more services you have, the better position you are in to compete with anyone.

Q. And if I understand you correctly, it's the number of services as well as the quality of services that is important? A. I think so, as long as they are services that are demanded by people within a certain area that you can serve.

Q. I think we have covered this to some extent, but perhaps we can sharpen it up a bit more. When you were at South DeKalb, who were your commercial banking competitors at that time? [53] A. First State Bank and Glenwood National, Bank of Georgia. Maybe you could perhaps include some of the Banks in Decatur, in the square, which would be First National and Fulton, I know; I think the Trust Company.

Q. Can you recall the closest office to South DeKalb of a member of the C&S system or another correspondent associate? A. Sure. I think the C&S Belvedere was probabiy the closest, and it was about 10 minutes away, I guess. I don't remember how many miles. I would say 10 minutes away.

Q. At that time was Belvedere a branch of C&S DeKalb?

Mr. Doyle: At what time?

By Mr. Kinkaid

Q. This would be—let's see, you started—— A. September of 1969?

Q. Yes, sir. A. I really don't remember. I don't think it was, but it might; I really don't know.

Q. Did you consider Belvedere one of your competitors? A. I considered them a competitor in the same sense that I would consider, when I was at the South Expressway Branch, that I considered the C&S Bank of East Point and the Stewart-Lakewood office branch of Atlanta and those people as competitors. I guess you would say they would be friendly competitors in that—but no different from what I would [53A] consider another branch of the C&S Bank when I was a branch manager. We always have had friendly competition.

Q. Do you have unfriendly competition with the other banks? A. I have on occasion. It would be more unfriendly than it would be with some affiliated with the C&S. Let's put it that way.

Q. Except for the element of friendliness, would the competition between South DeKalb and Belvedere be any different, from your standpoint, than the competition between South DeKalb and, let's say, Glenwood National Bank? A. Well, it would have to be different because I would consider Belvedere a member of the C&S family of banks, and I would certainly not hold them in the same light as I would someone who had no interest in the C&S Bank.

Q. If you can, as a practical matter, how would that difference work out in terms of the operations of your bank? A. Well, as I say, it would be the same as a branch. I certainly would solicit business from anyone at any place throughout the United States if I can get them to do business with me. But, in the same light, I would be more inclined to solicit and be more aggressive getting business from someone who did business with the Glenwood Bank or one of the other real competitor banks than I would someone that is affiliated with the C&S Bank. I would not be as aggressive [54] in that area because I would use my efforts in trying to obtain that business that did not benefit the C&S.

Q. When you were at South DeKalb, did you have any understanding with C&S that you would in any way modify your competitive efforts vis a vis other members of the C&S system? A. Well, I just don't think that that was worthy of any comment at all. I didn't feel and don't—I just did not feel the necessity for competing on an aggressive basis with the C&S Belvedere Bank. I had as much as I could do to compete against the other banks there. I might add that the C&S Belvedere Bank would be of assistance with me rather than be competing, and I would be of assistance to them on occasion. We might mutually call on a customer, which has been done, and when one of us might not derive any benefit from it.

Q. Was that pursuant to any program of the C&S system, your mutually calling on a customer with, say, Belvedere? A. I could say any formal program; no, that just happens to be the way I operate. And when I was at South DeKalb, a good friend of mine was at Belvedere, and we were very friendly toward each other and still are.

Q. For example, in soliciting new business for your bank, would you or did you attempt in any way to coordinate your efforts with those of any other members of the C&S system or any other C&S correspondent associate? A. Sure. If I felt like there was someone within [55] my area that I could serve and serve better at my bank, and they had a relationship with Belvedere or had a relationship with the National Bank, and they were not doing business with the C&S South DeKalb Bank, I would use every weapon at my disposal to get those folks into the C&S South DeKalb Bank.

Q. But would you coordinate those efforts with Belvedere or C&S National? A. Not necessarily. I might, because many times in our busines when you are calling on a customer, it also involves credit. I have called on a customer before and he said, "Sure, I'll bank with you if you will loan me a hundred thousand dollars." And you have to take that into consideration. So one time you are a salesman, and the next time you are a credit man. And so we try to coordinate those kinds of activities. Also, I will have to say that on occasion I will coordinate with any bank because most people should not be banking—if they are credit customers they should not be banking with but one bank unless they are very large type customers, because you simply can't maintain proper control or understanding of their credits if they are spread out, and I have with the Belvedere, with the National Bank or with Glenwood National or with any bank. On occasion I have told the customer that he was going to have to bank with one bank because from a credit viewpoint we just simply could not keep up with his activities if he didn't.

[56] Q. So, so far as you're concerned, any coordination from your standpoint would have been in terms of finding out what this man's credit worthiness was and trying to keep control over his credit ability so far as you were concerned? A. Well, there are many kinds of customers. Some are credit customers and some are deposit customers and some are both, and I was just saying—you asked me a general question, and I was replying that there are occasions when you want to communicate and coordinate because they are borrowing customers, and if you don't, you may find out that he has just made a large loan at an institution, competitive or friendly or affiliated, and you might make him another large loan at the same time based on that statement, and both of you would be in hot water and he would be in Hawaii somewhere.

Q. What would be the reasons for coordinating on a deposit customer as distinguished from a credit customer? A. Give me that question one more time.

Q. Well, maybe I had better ask the basic question first. Was there any attempt on your part to coordinate your efforts to obtain deposit customers, coordinated with the members of the C&S system or any other correspondent associate? A. Well, not with a correspondent associate necessarily, but—and I didn't coordinate; if you say "coordinate," I did not coordinate ahead of time, necessarily, or communicate ahead of time. Now, I would on occasion, if the C&S National [57] Bank had information that could help me in making a call, I would get that, and that's a tremendous service that the bank offered us. But other than that, all I did simply was call on the customer. Now, I did report that normally in the form of perhaps just—I say "normally"; sometimes I would report it, sometimes I wouldn't, but I would report the name and who I called on and communicate in the form of a report, just a simple listing through the C&S National Bank. The reason for that is, quite frankly, the C&S National Bank worked with me in doing the best job possible, and I wanted them to know what kind of job I was doing out there, and I would report to them when I made these calls so they would be aware of the job that was being performed.

Q. Did they ask you to make those kind of reports? A. Yes—I mean when you say "ask," I did it when I was with the C&S National Bank, so I just continued doing it. I don't remember anyone asking me, but I did do it.

Q. To your knowledge, when you were there, at least, did South DeKalb have any loan customers who were located outside Georgia? A. I don't know. But it wouldn't be too unusual to have a few. I mean it could have happened. I don't remember any right offhand and outside of Georgia.

Q. Well, how about any personal checking accounts; can you recall any at South DeKalb who were outside the state? [58] A. Personal checking accounts?

Q. Yes. A. I might be misinforming you, but I don't recall any right offhand.

Q. How about commercial checking account customers; can you recall any—— A. Well, when you say "outside the state," now, as I understand it you mean they did not have an office there; they did not have any—if you're talking about home office out of the state, I would have to say yes. But now if you're talking about that had no establishment in our area, then I don't recall any.

Q. Can you recall any savings account customers—first let's take personal savings account customers located outside the state. A. Yes. Now, we had personal savings. I don't know how many now, but we did have some personal savings I know from Florida and maybe perhaps in some other areas. I believe we had some from Tennessee. But those were primarily the efforts of our directors. We had one director who was very aggressive in that area, getting business for the bank, and he got us some savings business, and I think I had a relative in Memphis, Tennessee that opened an account or two with us.

Q. How about on the certificate of deposit side; can you recall out of state holders of your CD's? [59] A. I just can't right offhand. No, I simply don't recall any.

Q. While you were at South DeKalb, did you have occasion to purchase any of these things that I believe are called "Federal Funds" or "Fed Funds" in the trade? A. I did, I think, very seldom, but I did on occasion.

Q. Let me make sure I understand "Fed Funds." Are those funds purchased, technically or actually, from another bank? A. They are funds that—yes, that other banks—I think they are handled—I don't know exactly how they are handled because I called the Bond Division downtown, and they are the ones that would handle this for me, but I believe they are funds that are pooled. When other banks have their excess funds that they don't need to meet the reserve requirements, they put those on the market, and they sell them from one day forward any number of days. And then you would have lenders and you would have borrowers, and those banks who are not able to meet their reserve requirements because of loan demand or deposit shrinkage, then they borrow Federal Funds. And I believe on occasion we borrowed; not often but maybe once or twice we borrowed Federal Funds because we were short of our reserve requirements. I don't believe we put any in Federal Funds but——

Q. I was just about to ask you that. A. We didn't—we were working our money pretty strongly.

[60] Q. On the occasions when you purchased Fed Funds, can you recall the bank from whom they were purchased? A. I wouldn't know. I mean it's just a market, and, as I recall, what I did was I called our—and I say "our"; the C&S National Bank's Bond Division and told them I wanted to purchase whatever Federal Funds that I needed to make me meet our reserve requirements, and they did it for me, purchased it for me.

Q. To your knowledge, those Fed Funds that C&S National would be handling, would they be the excess funds of commercial banks in other states than Georgia or throughout the United States? Do you have any idea or not? A. I think they would be everywhere. I think it's just a market, and I'm under the impression—in fact, they keep up with how much is in the Federal Funds market, so it would have to be a national market.

Q. In terms of your bank's operation, is there any difference in your mind between the term "income" and the term "earnings," or are they the same thing? A. They're the same as far as I'm concerned.

Q. Okay, so I'll use "earnings," then, and it would mean the same thing as "income." From what source, or from what activity, if you prefer, does your bank obtain most of its earnings? A. From loans.

[61] Q. Would loans be the primary source of your earnings? A. Yes.

Q. Are there any other that you can think of? A. Oh——

Mr. Doyle: Now, wait a minute. What's the question?

By Mr. Kinkaid

Q. From what activities of the bank—— A. The primary source of earnings?

Q. The primary source of the bank's earnings. A. And I said loans.

Mr. Doyle: How can you have anything else if you're asking him about "primary"?

Mr. Kinkaid: Okay; all right.

By Mr. Kinkaid

Q. Is there any other source that's not primary from which you also derive earnings? A. We derive earnings from service charges. We derive earnings from bond income. We derive from other income. We derive it from fees.

Q. Now, what would be the source of your bank's—the money that your bank uses in making the loans which you have identified as the primary source of your earnings? A. From depositors and capital.

Q. Would capital and deposits also be the source of the other activities from which you also derive some earnings? [62] A. Not necessarily. It could be related. It's all related, but I would say that you can have—people come in to buy Travelers Checks, for instance, that have nothing to do with deposits.

Q. Has your bank ever been in the position where it could not make additional loans because of the lack either of capital or deposits? A. I would say the answer to that would be no, that it's never been in the position where it could not make additional loans. My bank is in a fortunate or unfortunate position, depending on how you look at it, where they have a tremendous loan demand. I think it's a very fortunate position, and, of course, what we try to do in a case like that, there are lending areas and there are deposit gathering areas in cities, primarily in cities, and what you try to do is if you are a deposit gathering bank you try to increase your loan activity because your deposits come rather freely. And you don't forget your deposit activity, but you try to increase your loan activity because you can maximize profits that way. And the converse is true, too. But I would say this, I don't think that any time that we've had a good loan request, a bona fide loan request, that we couldn't either handle it at South DeKalb or see that it was handled. We would not turn the customer away. We might use our sister banks. We might refer them to a sister bank. This is what I [63] mean. We might do that or we might ask the C&S National Bank to participate or to buy off some of our loans. But I don't think a bona fide good customer would be declined, not to my knowledge.

Q. If you put aside the opportunity to refer the customer or to participate on his loan request, in that sense have you ever been in a position where you could not make a loan because of lack of capital or lack of deposits? A. Well, I've never been in that position. I've always been able to make a loan if I thought it was beneficial to the bank. I've had tremendous assistance from the C&S National Bank in this area.

Q. Is that something that could happen or is that just a fantasy? A. Oh, it's possible, yes. If you don't have an affiliation, you can have a real problem here. There's no doubt about it. If you did not have an affiliation and you had more loans than you had deposits, you couldn't do it. You have a guide; we try never to normally get over 80 percent loans to deposits. That's just a guide; that's no regulation. And most banks are much more conservative than that. But this happens to be my guide, let's put it that way. Because if you have that kind of loan to deposit ratio, depending on where you're located, you can maximize your profits.

Q. What would happen to a bank in the situation where [64] it was lacking the deposits to make additional loans? What impact would that have on the bank's operations? A. And it was not affiliated with the C&S National Bank?

Q. Or not affiliated with anybody. A. Well, it just couldn't make the loan. They would just have to say, "I can't make it. I don't have the money," just like if you don't have money in your pocket and somebody wants to borrow money from you, you can't make the loan. That's what happens. You would have to go out and raise additional capital or raise your deposits or make some of your other loans pay off. Now, you have the alternative, if you have a real good prospect come in, you could say, "Look, I'll make you this loan," and you have some other loans over here that, if you wanted to, that were people that were not as credit worthy, you could require them to come in and pay off, if the loan were on a demand basis or something like that to pay it off. But that's very—I have never been a party to that, and I don't believe that I would be very inclined to do that.

Q. How would the bank go about raising the additional capital on deposits to meet that situation? A. Well, you can sell stock. You see, if you have a loan demand like that, it's obvious that you have a very profitable situation, so you can raise—I say you can; I would think you could raise additional capital to put in the [65] bank. Another way that you can increase your liquidity—which is what we're talking about—is not trying to sell loans so hard. You know if you don't try to sell them, if you don't try to sell, for instance, installment loans, then they will run off, and when they run off you have an increase in liquidity, and you can handle them. This is what management of a bank is all about. And, of course, you have investments that are supposed to help you in this area, so you can sell investments, too, and that's a secondary market to increase your liquidity.

Q. In that same situation, how would you go about trying to increase your deposits to support the additional loan activity? A. In that same situation where I'm not affiliated with the C&S National Bank?

Q. Or, as I said, any other bank. A. Okay. How would I try to increase the deposits?

Q. Yes. A. Well, I would look over my stockholders and see who—there are any number of ways. I would put on a program to try to, from a new business point of view, to try to increase savings. I would do that by working through my employees, by having an employee contest or competitive situation. Then I would work through my stockholders, sending out letters or calling them and asking them to support us. And then I would [66] work through my present customers by cross letters, cross selling through letters, writing your loan customers and asking them for deposits or writing your deposit customers and asking them for more deposits and then go through my prospect list, and that fellow that has been promising me but hasn't been coming in, I would go see him. Okay?

Q. Okay. A. Do you think I would get them?

Q. I think you would. Would you in that situation be not trying to get all kinds of deposits—by that I mean both time and savings deposits as well as demand deposits? A. I would be, but if I have a loan situation I'm a little bit more interested in time deposit money than I am in demand deposit money, because demand deposit money is going to stay with you longer. So I would be more interested in that, although I certainly wouldn't turn down any demand money.

Q. Would one way to get the additional time money be to increase the interest you're paying on time deposits? A. You could do this, yes, but I'll tell you, I normally don't—and this may be incorrect—but I don't normally put as much emphasis on price as I do on service. You could increase it, but I think if you go out and ask for the business, you could probably get it a little bit quicker, [67] maybe. I mean that could be debatable.

Q. Are you familiar with the term "primary service area" or "primary trade area"? A. I wouldn't say that I'm familiar with that term. In any business I think you have an area that you consider the most lucrative area for you to cultivate.

Q. At the time that you were at South DeKalb, could you estimate the area around the bank from which you would have obtained, say, 75 or 80 percent of your deposit accounts? A. When I was in the day-to-day operations of the bank, I had an area that I felt like would be convenient—when you get too far from your bank, then it becomes an inconvenient factor for the customer and it becomes a little bit more difficult, but this does not rule out that you would have customers in other areas. So I can't give you a boundary for a primary area, although I think it would be normal for me to—and it would be true for me to say that when I got out too far that I didn't have the same benefits and convenience to offer the customer as I did closer in.

Q. How far, roughly, would you have to go out before you lose that convenience factor? A. Well, it's difficult to define like that. I don't know; I mean if you've got—you might say, "Well, you've got another bank here, so I'm not going to call on the fellow that [68] is in business right next door to that bank because he certainly is not going to come two and a half miles down the road to me when he can step right next door." But if the other bank—or it could be another type of institution—if they are not taking care of that customer and not serving him properly, then I have been there and I have been able to get some business in that manner. And then, also, sometimes having customers outside of a particular area has to do with the type of service you provide. And I've had customers that do business with me because of that. I've got some customers now —we're talking about areas—that do business with me in Milledgeville that live in Atlanta and borrow large amounts of money and also have deposit accounts with me and are very, very fine folks; not marginal, but I mean good customers, and it's strictly because I've taken care of them over a number of years.

Q. Is this convenience factor you mentioned, is that important only to deposit customers or is it also important to other types of customers, particularly credit customers? A. Well, here again, I think a customer or a prospect is interested in convenience. It certainly is an important factor. It is not the only factor to a deposit customer nor to a credit customer. There are other things that are important also.

Q. Would there be more things important to the credit customer than would be true for the deposit customer?

[69] Mr. Doyle: I object to "the credit customer" because you are talking about a construct that I don't know the dimensions of. You are obviously talking about some sort of a hypothetical, and I don't know which hypothetical item you're talking about.

Mr. Kinkaid: Well, the same one that Mr. Berry has been referring to in our previous discussion. I don't know if you heard it all, but——

The Witness: Well, I think your deposit customers and credit customers are one and the same in many instances, and it's hard to distinguish one from the other. One might be a credit customer and tomorrow he might become a deposit customer. One might be a deposit customer and tomorrow he may become a credit customer. So it's very difficult to really distinguish one from the other.

By Mr. Kinkaid

Q. Within the area, the convenience area that you mentioned a few minutes ago, thinking of that area in a geographic sense, could you estimate the percentage of your loan customers who were located within that area when you were at South DeKalb? A. I just simply could not—the only way that I can say anything about an area there that would be considered the most lucrative area would be to say that the majority of business would normally come from people that are convenient [70] to the bank. But to continue this bit of information, I would say that we had customers—I can think of a customer that we handled some development, building, construction loans and all, for down in Henry County. We had another fellow that did business with us, the treasurer of a local company, who is located down on Lake Spivey. So I know, as I mentioned to you in our casual conversation, we handled the financing of a Little League ballfield right over in Sandy Springs. So I really don't have a definite boundary line or area or this kind of thing that I referred to. To reiterate what I previously said, I think that in the managing of a bank, you think of a particular area as one where you would derive most of your business, but I can't define the geographical location or boundaries of that area.

Q. Are these two or three loan accounts that you just mentioned—the one at Lake Spivey and the one at Sandy Springs, et cetera—were those—did those accounts involve relatively large amounts of financing, to your recollection? A. Yes. The one at Sandy Springs I don't remember how much, but it was considerable. When you say "large," how much—what are you——

Q. Well, excuse me. I was just about to ask you whether you in the operation of your bank ever have occasion to refer to your customers as "large" customers or as "small" customers, or do you use terminology like that? [71] A. I might use it in discussions, but with no meaning at all, and it's a very difficult thing to define. I don't know, really, what you mean when you say "a large customer." I'm sure we could take it to the extreme and say someone who borrows a million dollars is a large customer and so forth, but we might not be communicating in that area. To me, the loans that were made in all three of these areas would be large loans. They would be in the several thousands of dollars category and not in the hundreds of dollars.

Q. Would you consider someone who borrows under a hundred thousand a small customer or a large customer? A. I would say that would be—it depends—in other words, I could not use a hundred thousand dollars as a cutoff. I would say a hundred thousand dollars would be large to me; fifty thousand dollars would be large to me; twenty-five thousand dollars would be large to me; ten thousand dollars would be large to me. I think when you get on up into—and then it's relative again. On the other hand, relating to certain types—and I'm not trying to be evasive here—but relating to certain types of loans, a hundred thousand dollars might be small. For instance, if somebody wants to make an apartment development type loan or a residential development type loan, a hundred thousand dollars is small. Or if somebody wants to put up a medical building, a hundred dollars is small, we've got to talk about a half a million. It just [72] depends on what we're talking about. But if an individual comes in and wants to borrow $10,000, then that's a large loan, if it's just for a personal type loan.

Q. Well, at this point let's limit our discussion to commercial loans as distinguished from personal loans. Did you have any small commercial loans any distance from your bank, say Sandy Springs or Lake Spivey, to use the examples you gave us before? Can you recall having any small commercial loan accounts say in Sandy Springs or as far away as Lake Spivey? A. When you say "small," here again are you using my definition?

Q. Yes. A. You're saying below $10,000?

Q. Yes. A. No, but I'm sure we did—well, yes, I can remember one that a fellow finally got in financial trouble on. But I did handle a little finances for him. He worked out at Lockheed, personal type loan; automobiles and this type thing. Finally went in business for himself and had a problem. But yes, this would be one. It ended up in a large loan, but when we were handling it previously, it was a small loan.

Q. Now, to your recollection would that have been the exception? A. Well, when you say "exception," I think—as I've [73] stated before, I think the majority of the customers would be in the area that the bank primarily serviced, which is a little difficult to define.

Q. In terms of within that area that—well, we're not trying to define it in specific terms, but within that area which you have been referring to, among other things, as the convenience area, would the closeness to your bank involve any factors so far as the commercial customer being able to do business with your bank is concerned? Would his closeness to your bank be a factor in any sense other than strictly convenience? A. I don't understand what you're asking.

Q. Maybe I can ask it a little more naively, perhaps, but so far as credit worthiness is concerned, your ability to decide whether this loan, this prospective loan customer is a good credit risk, would be a good loan for your bank to take on, does distance create any problem in terms of determining whether this prospective loan customer is a good account? A. Distance can be a factor as well as many other factors, but if you have distance, then obviously you don't see the customer as often as if he were next door, because it is not as convenient to him. But that would be one of many factors, and in any credit decision you have many, many, factors to consider, and nobody makes a hundred on all of them.

[74] Q. The farther away he is from the bank, does he become less familiar to you in your day-to-day operations? A. No, not necessarily. I mean I would say this, if he is near the bank, he has the opportunity to come in the bank, because it is more convenient to him, more often. But the further he is away would not—in other words, you couldn't say that because someone is 10 miles away, he's got this kind of credit factor; because he's a hundred miles away he has a lesser credit factor I would not agree to that. I would say that if a man's nearby, it's more convenient for him to come in, and that certainly is one of several factors that you would consider, because at least you see him more often.

Q. Did South DeKalb have a loan committee or finance committee? A. Yes. I don't recall whether we called it a loan committee or an executive committee. And we still have this committee, (but I don't remember whether it's the loan committee) or the executive committee.

Q. What would be basically the function of this committee? A. Well, this committee would review loans in excess of 10 percent of the capital and surplus in the bank.

Q. Would that be it? Would there be anything else? A. No, that would be about the extent of it.

[75] Q. Did you have a committee at South DeKalb that was involved with deciding whether to approve a particular loan request? A. As I just said, this committee has to approve any loan that is over 10 percent of your capital and surplus——

Q. Excuse me; I thought you said "review." I thought that meant the loan has already been approved, and that's simply reviewing it. A. Well, I think we've got a question about terminology here. They have to—in effect it has to be approved at one time or another by this committee. Whether or not it is approved subsequent to or prior to is a different situation. This committee has to be communicated with because of law, and it does have to be approved at one time or another. It could be subsequently, but it does have to be approved by this committee.

Q. Are there any loans—or were there any loans made by South DeKalb that were reviewed by anybody at C&S National or Holding or any other member of the C&S system? A. Well, when you say "reviewed," we have credit meetings on a weekly basis where we got the benefit of the thinking of various individuals, and we would have affiliate, 5 percent affiliate banks and affiliate banks and branch banks, managers and presidents, as the case would apply, get together and discuss various loans that had been made during the week—[76] and I don't mean every loan but large loans and this kind of thing—to try to seek the benefit and help of the other individuals involved. Some could offer more, depending on their experience.

Q. Did you have any meetings specifically with respect to South DeKalb loans? A. The only type meetings that we had that I can recall specifically relating to South DeKalb loans would be—I believe that we employed a credit auditor to come out and audit our loans for the benefit of management and the directors. And so we discussed his particular summary of his audit. I don't remember the details. We might have had a couple of these. But we do use this normally. I use it at the bank I'm at now. It's very helpful as a management tool.

Q. Was C&S or any personnel of C&S involved in the approval of loans made at South DeKalb? A. No. I've never had anyone that had to approve loans that we made, if this is what you mean. We've communicated and we've asked for assistance, but we made the loan with the assistance of our board of directors.

Q. Did anyone from C&S ever direct you not to make a particular loan at South DeKalb? A. No, not to my knowledge. I have never been directed that I can recall. Now, it has been—I've asked for help and assistance, and I have been—things have been pointed [77] out to me; points have been made related to a loan that would indicate that it would cause me a problem, and I, in effect, have made a decision whether or not to make it. But loans are not made by people at the National Bank for South DeKalb, fortunately or unfortunately.

Q. Were you ever directed by anyone at C&S to make any particular loan at a particular rate of interest? A. No. No, not to my knowledge. I might mention in relation to making loans, even when I was with the C&S branches when I was a branch manager. I made my own decision and made my loans. So, I didn't communicate at that time until after the fact.

Q. When you were at South DeKalb, did you receive any suggestions from anyone at C&S with respect to the interest rate on a particular loan? A. Any suggestions?

Q. Yes. A. No, I mean normally it would be the other way around. I would ask for help many times, not just from C&S National but from C&S National sometimes and from other parties to try to establish, as I mentioned earlier what kind of rates should be charged on a particular loan, to take into consideration the servicing factors and the interest rates. Many times, like on a receivables loan, you have a blanket type receivables loan or you can have a specific receivables loan or you can [78] have—you get into an inventory loan, how you are going to audit it or how you're going to check the aging on your receivables, who's going to do it, and many times I would use the C&S Bank to service these loans. And on some occasions we would have to communicate to see what kind of charges they were going to make me pay to have them check the receivables and this kind of thing.

Q. We were talking earlier about the earnings of the bank. Generally speaking, what is done with the earnings of the bank, or what was done with the earnings of the South DeKalb Bank? A. We put it back in the capital and undivided profits—not in the capital accounts but in the net worth section but under the undivided profits accounts so we would have a little bit of money to use and then try to help that bank.

Q. Did you, while you were there, pay any dividends to the stockholders at South DeKalb? A. No, unfortunately I didn't.

Q. While at South DeKalb, did you receive any services from C&S National for which South DeKalb did not pay C&S National? A. Did not pay C&S National? Well, as I mentioned, advertising; we got the benefit of it. It wasn't a direct thing, but being in metropolitan Atlanta we had the benefit [79] of it; primary services we would receive along those lines. Well, I would have to say yes, we did. And here again, when I say "I would have to," that's just a manner of expression; I would say yes. We had a big help from the C&S National Bank in constructing that branch. I'm not very talented in that area, and I asked for assistance, and the Property Division came out and helped me very much in being sure that that bank was constructed properly and in the right manner. That would be one area. Advertising would be another area. Many times we need assistance in relation to loans, how a loan should properly be documented or what kind of information might help us in trying to make a decision. And certainly I couldn't know all the answers and don't profess to and would ask for this kind of help. This is of tremendous help to us. I can't emphasize this too much. And the C&S Bank has just many different areas that I could communicate with and it would help me in a professional manner, arrive at a sound conclusion for my customers.

Q. Outside the area of advice that you just mentioned, did you receive any services from C&S for which you did not pay? A. Well, outside the ones I've mentioned—I don't have a listing of them right now. I can't think of any specifically, but I think that the advice and help that I got was just tremendous. I mentioned, I think, personnel. I don't believe [80] I paid for that. As a matter of example, I believe they helped me in that area of assistance in interviewing personnel, and also the C&S National Bank had what they called a "Traveling Team." This is just coming to mind with the question you asked. They had a "Traveling Team" whereby when banks got real short on personnel, experienced personnel, they offered us the assistance of having someone from this team come in who was experienced, and our system, of course, was so similar to the National Bank's system that they could come in and help us. And we paid these people. But still, to have that kind of person available, if you were not affiliated with the National Bank you certainly couldn't. One day when you have too many people out for one reason or another, have assistance in that area. Those things come to mind right off the bat.

Q. Well, let me ask you this, did South DeKalb maintain a demand deposit account at the National? A. Yes.

Q. Was that in the nature of a correspondent balance, if that's the correct term to use? A. That's correct; it would be a correspondent bank account. Yes.

Q. What was the purpose of that correspondent account? A. Well, to clear our checks drawn on other banks. We would clear them through that account, and then the C&S National [81] Bank would collect them.

Q. Was any correspondent balance maintained at C&S National or any other C&S affiliate for the purpose of paying for services provided by National or an affiliate? A. No. We had one account at one time; I don't believe that we still have it. It was so small; I mean it was really a small account that I don't believe it would be of any significance, that we had at the C&S Emory Bank, and maybe it had, I think, $25,000 in it. But I don't even believe that that's—it might be, but certainly it wouldn't have anything to do with any connection with any services or anything like that.

Q. To your knowledge, is the maintenance of a so-called correspondent balance the usual way of paying for correspondent services? A. Well, I think this, that if you had a large balance in a bank account that the bank wouldn't necessarily tend to send you a bill for services rendered. I think it would depend on the type account you had, really, more than anything else, the type of account you had and how profitable it was to the bank.

Q. You mentioned that while you were there all the earnings of South DeKalb went back into the bank, so to speak. Did any of your South DeKalb earnings in any way end up in C&S National? [82] A. No.

Q. Would there have been any way in which any of your earnings could have ended up in C&S National other than if you had paid a dividend and C&S would have received a dividend would have received a dividend on its 5 percent stock interest? A. Well, I don't know whether there would be another way or not.

Q. When you were at South DeKalb, were you aware of what, say, C&S National and C&S affiliate banks and other correspondent associates were paying on savings accounts or charging for checking account services? A. Yes, sir, generally.

Q. Generally speaking, how did you become familiar with service charges and interest rates applicable at other correspondent associates or at C&S National? A. Well, I also knew what the service charges, generally speaking, and the interest rates, generally speaking, were at not only at the C&S but also at the competitors. You just have to know what other people are doing if you're going to be competing with them. And so I knew that about competitors, and I think also that—of course, I was brought up through the C&S National Bank, and certainly I had to be familiar with its service charges through my experience and also with the affiliated banks, too. We would have customers, for instance, that would come in the bank at South DeKalb and want us to [83] straighten out their checking account which was carried at the C&S Belvedere Bank. So it was very simple that you just had to find out what the situation was and how they were handling it. And many times we would service a customer, even though it was with an affiliate or another bank.

Q. Can you recall whether or not your service charge on checking accounts and interest rates on personal savings accounts at South DeKalb were the same as they were, say, at Belvedere? A. There could be some difference. I think generally they were the same because we were really in kind of the same market area. But, as I mentioned previously, at C&S Milledgeville we've got differences just in several different categories because we've got a different market area.

Q. Does it make any difference to you as president of South DeKalb whether or not your interest rates and service charges were the same or different from Belvedere, as an example? A. Well, I didn't—I mean Belvedere didn't make that—I didn't adjust my interest rates and service charges related to what Belvedere did, quite frankly. I didn't contact Belvedere and ask them what their rates were before I would make a decision on what I was going to do at all. I think that what the competition does, though, or what anybody does, I have to be apprised of that kind of information. If I don't, [84] I've got a problem.

Q. So far as competition for loans is concerned, has it been your experience, particularly since you were at South DeKalb, that the interest rate that you would charge on a loan would be the only competitive weapon that you would use, or would there be other weapons, if I may use that word, that would be available in competition for loans? A. Well, I'm not real happy with your word, "weapon," but we'll live with it; it sounds like we browbeat our customers. But I do think that there are many considerations when you are talking about a credit other than rate. Rate is a factor, but it is one of many factors, and I really feel like that a customer can sense when you are looking after his interests, and that doesn't mean rate; it might mean repayment schedule. It might mean loaning a guy enough money to handle his situation. I look at banking as a profession, and we are really in the banking business—we should be experts in our field, and to be an expert in your field, really, price and rate have to be or should be, if it's a complex field like banking is—and anyone who doesn't agree with that really doesn't understand very much about banking—in a complex field like this, pricing and interest rates are secondary to handling the request or the business in a professional like manner and looking out for the customer's interest.

Q. Looking at the same sort of question with respect to [85] the personal savings account, insofar as personal savings accounts are concerned, would the interest rate be the sole factor that you would use in trying to attract those type of accounts? A. I think that interest rates on savings are an important factor. It's not the only factor, and it depends on the type of account you are referring to. If you are referring to a regular savings account which is one that you go in and out of and the interest is computed on a periodic basis, I think the interest rate would not be so important. That's a rate for a smaller type account, one that you really use to keep the money aside. I think when you talk about money that someone is really going to—or savings that someone is really going to put money into over a long period of time and this kind of thing, then rate becomes a more important type consideration. And that's the reason I wish you would encourage the authorities to allow us to pay more on regular small savings, personal accounts.

Q. I think you mentioned Monday meetings where everybody from all banks—associate banks, affiliate banks—everybody got together on Monday, I think you mentioned. When you first became president of South DeKalb, did you immediately start attending those Monday meetings, or did they start at some other time? A. Well, let me clarify that because I think I did say [86] "Monday meetings." That day might be incorrect. I don't remember what day it was, really, but once a week, generally speaking—and this is not always, but once a week, generally speaking, a group would get together and discuss the credits, larger credits, that went through that particular week, and I did this when I was a branch manager, and I did it for years with the C&S Bank.

Q. Do you recall the "Goal Post Review Program"? A. Yes.

Q. Can you recall when the "Goal Post Review Program" started? A. No, I can't. I'd say three or four years ago would be a guess.

Q. Was it in existence when you started out at South DeKalb? A. I simply don't remember.

Q. Was there any other regular contact or contacts you had with the C&S personnel other than the meetings you mentioned a little earlier and the "Goal Post Review Program"? A. When you say "regular," occasionally. I don't know of any regular meetings that would be applicable here. Normally a group of the C&S presidents and branch managers would get together at the bank employees' place up at Allatoona once a year. We would get together and meet and discuss mutual problems and have a social with the wives and [87] this kind of thing. But I don't recall any specific, routine meetings like that.

Q. The "Goal Post" meetings, were they on a regular basis? A. Yes. As I recall, we got together maybe quarterly.

Q. Was your specific attendance at either the "Goal Post" meetings or the other meetings that occurred on the day that you can't remember, was your attendance at any of those meetings mandatory? A. Well, I don't know that that would be the appropriate term. It was by mutual consent and agreement, and I was never told, that I can recall specifically, to be at a meeting. Our group met at a certain time, and I just was included in that group and was there. And in relation to the "Goal Post" situation, this was just a management tool to try to do the best job for the community and for the bank. And so this is just one means of management by objectives, which is the professional approach to getting the job done.

Q. Did you make any reports to the board of directors on your meetings either with respect to the "Goal Post Program" or with respect to the other weekly meetings? A. When you say "reports," I had no obligations to report to my board in relation to these two type meetings, but I normally made it a practice to report to them. This was a management function, and I normally wanted them to know how we [88] were performing. I did let them know and communicate with them in relation to what I thought the goals ought to be and how well we were doing. So perhaps this would be the answer to your question. I did keep them informed as to what our goals would be and how we were meeting those goals. But I did not report to them technically on any meetings that I had with any particular parties.

Q. That's really what I meant. Did you—— A. Kept them informed; yes.

Q. Kept them informed of the results? A. Yes.

Q. Did you keep them informed or did you make them aware that you were meeting with C&S personnel? A. Well, I think the directors knew that C&S was helping the management of the bank in performing the service to the community. I don't think there was any question about that on any of the directors' parts, that we were using their assistance.

Q. To sort of go back and recap some areas that were discussed a while ago, when you were at South DeKalb, did you have the authority to decide what the interest rates on your savings accounts would be, what the service charges the bank would charge on checking accounts and the like would be; was that within your authority to decide? A. Yes.

[89] Q. From whom did you get that authority, or did somebody give that to you? A. Well, I didn't, like anything else related to that bank, I didn't ask anyone for it. Being president of the bank, it's my job to run that bank, and it's just self-explanatory. The directors elected me president of the bank, and certainly as such I assumed the authority and the responsibility to determine what kind of prices we ought to charge, what kind of interest rates we ought to charge, what kind of service charge we ought to charge and everything else. I many times would keep the directors informed when I felt like it was to their interest but not always. I did not bother them with a lot of details.

Q. Well, what I meant actually was when you were selected by the board as president, did they make it clear to you that you had the authority to make these decisions, "Just keep us posted"; is that—— A. Well, I assumed that authority, and to me it was clear. You will have to ask them if it was clear to them. I can't answer for them, for the board. I think it was.

Q. You may also in bits and pieces covered this, but in general terms, in exercising this authority as to interest rates, service charges, et cetera, what were the factors that you took into consideration in actually exercising it? A. In determining what kind of interest rate—we're [90] talking about loans now?

Q. Well, on any of these; in other words, if I understand you correctly, you had or at least you felt you had the authority to make the decisions on interest rates and savings account service charges and checking accounts. In exercising that authority, what were the things that you took into consideration in making decisions? A. Well, on checking——

Mr. Doyle: Excuse me; off the record.

(Off the record discussion.)

By Mr. Kinkaid

Q. I will rephrase it another way. To put it a different way, in making these decisions did you take into consideration anything other than the competitive posture of your South DeKalb Bank? A. When you say "competitive posture," I don't understand what you mean.

Q. All right, did you take into consideration anything but the well-being of the South DeKalb Bank? Is that a better way to put it? There are many different ways that I can think of. A. Did I take into consideration anything other than the well-being of the South DeKalb Bank?

Q. Right. A. No. The community, but that relates to the well-being [91] of the South DeKalb Bank.

Q. In making these decisions, did C&S ever dictate to you what your decision should be with respect to any of these matters, service charges, interest rates on savings accounts? A. No.

Q. So far as you were concerned, did C&S have the power to dictate to you with respect to any of those decisions? A. No. As a matter of fact, I really feel like that if I had felt that it would be to the benefit of the South DeKalb Bank to change those that I would have done it.

Q. While you were the president of South DeKalb, did you feel in any way that your activities as the president were controlled in any way by C&S National? A. No, I would not—I did not feel like they were controlled. I felt like and do feel like that the C&S National Bank does influence me because I respect their knowledge and experience and background.

Q. We have received from C&S a whole stack of documents that would take about six hours to go through. Let me just show you—just take a quick look at two or three of these. A. Okay.

Q. What I want to ask you is this: Now, some of these I'm showing you may be dated after you left South DeKalb—— A. I think all of them are.

[92] Q. Those particular documents I showed you were addressed to branch managers, presidents of affiliates, presidents of correspondent associates; is that correct? A. Well, one of them, I think, is just for information purposes here, and the other one is addressed to presidents and so forth, branch managers, affiliate presidents, and this one is addressed to specific individuals.

Q. Now, do you recall when you were president of South DeKalb receiving documents similar to these that would have been addressed to branch managers, presidents of affiliates, president of correspondent associates? A. From time to time we did receive information like this, yes.

Q. In some cases these documents appear to have been directed by Charles A. Pfaff, vice president? A. Right.

Q. Others—Who would have been some of the other people from whom this type of document would have come to you? A. Well, probably these would all have come from an area of the bank known as the Branch Supervision Area, and they supervised the branches in the Atlanta area and worked with the—and really supervised the affiliated banks, but the correspondent associates, they worked with those banks.

Q. Okay, so I think we have pretty well identified the [93] type of document that we're talking about, using these just as samples? A. Right.

Q. From your standpoint, what was the purpose of these documents being sent to you, specifically? A. Well, I think primarily it was a communications device to let me know what other banks were doing and to be a helpful management tool.

Q. To your recollection, did some of these memos of this type contain suggestions as to things like interest rates on loans? A. We had a document that came out from time to time that would have a variance in rates; it wouldn't put a specific rate down for a specific loan, but it would be a guide that you could use to have an idea of what would be an appropriate rate.

Q. Well, I don't think I understand when you say "not a specific rate." A. Well, let me clear it up this way. There's no way to indicate what a specific rate on a loan will be. As I have indicated previously, it's just more involved than—there is no way for one person to insinuate or much less to try to dictate any kind of rate, and this simply would not be the case. As a matter of fact, we have discussions within the bank, the C&S Milledgeville Bank now and the South DeKalb [94] when I was there, between bank officers as to what an appropriate rate would be, and we would have information like this about what would be a guide as to a rate and still have considerable discussion, and many times our rates would differ from what any guide would be, because it involves the relationship of the customer to the bank in other areas, what kind of deposit account he has, what kind of credit background he has, what kind of collateral he's going to use, what kind of net worth statement he has. And you have to consider all of these things to try to come up with an appropriate interest rate.

Q. What I meant by—when you said they were intended as a guide, not specific rates, what I had in mind was that you couldn't have—or could you have a guide without having specific rates? A. Yes. You could have a guide without having specific rates. You could say, "Real estate loans, the interest on real estate loans in the market today is fluctuating between 6 and 8 percent." You could say, "The best rate is normally running 6½ to 7 percent," or something as a guide. So you wouldn't pinpoint a specific rate for a specific loan, but you would give an idea or an indication of what the market was doing.

Q. That's what I meant, but in giving that as a guide, you still mention specific numbers; in other words, I just [95] want to make sure I understood what you meant by "no specific rates." You still have to have some kind of numbers? A. You would have some kind of numbers; that's correct.

Q. And if I understand you correctly, so far as you were concerned, these memos were intended as a guide; is that correct? A. Well, to keep you informed, just like The American Banker comes out and on a day-to-day basis tells you what the discount rate is or what the bond market is or what the treasury bill rate is. And this is just another means to try to keep up with what various rates are.

Q. For example, this one dated May 11, 1972 from Mr. Pfaff informs that the best rate is 5 percent as of May 8, 1972, and this goes on to say, "Unless you are notified otherwise, please continue to use the commercial loan rate chart dated April 17, 1972."

So far as you are concerned, would that have been a suggestion to use or to follow the loan rates that had been set down in a particular chart? A. Let me tell you this, Charles Pfaff would not tell me what kind of rate to charge on a loan. Does that answer your question?

Q. Well, would anybody else in C&S tell you what rates to charge on loans? A. No, they would not tell me what rate to charge on [96] loans.

Q. Now, he does say "please," so could that have been a suggestion?

Mr. Doyle: I object. You have asked him innumerable times this afternoon that question in different ways, every different way, and he has told you every time the same thing. And I object on the grounds of repetitiveness. It's not getting us anywhere. I think it's insulting that a question has to be asked again and again and again and again, and I take it as insulting and insultingly intended to this bank officer.

Mr. Kinkaid: Now, Mr. Doyle, I'm trying to go through a whole stack of documents which ordinarily would take a great deal of time, and I'm trying to accommodate Mr. Berry so he can get out of here at 3:00 o'clock, and if it sounds like I'm being repetitive, it may very well be, but I'm being repetitive in order to accommodate him.

Mr. Doyle: I don't understand repetition to be accommodating. The question of whether or not he has been told by C&S National Bank what to charge on rates has been asked and asked and asked and answered and answered and answered. And I don't see that we can get anywhere by continuing that kind of repetition.

Mr. Kinkaid: Many of these documents would appear to contain suggestions. Now, if I could go through 50 of them [97]

one by one, we could reach proper determination of the thing. I'm trying to telescope it so we can get it over with, and I'm trying to see if, from his standpoint, he would interpret these as being suggestions. This is simply all I'm asking the man.

Mr. Doyle: Well, let's telescope it. Let's get on with it.

By Mr. Kinkaid

Q. Can you recall getting documents of this type, which, so far as you were concerned, contained suggestions on things like interest rates or banking hours? For example, this one of November 17, 1969 from Mr. Mathis and Mr. Ingram relate to drive-in banking hours, and this indicates that, "We have been experimenting for some time at several offices with keeping our drive-in windows open until 4:00 o'clock. Let's plan to start keeping our drive-in windows open until 4:00 o'clock at every location just as quickly as this can be arranged."

Now, what I'm asking you is, first of all, does that document contain a suggestion as to drive-in banking hours? A. I would say that it does. I don't know whether the term "suggestion"—it would be a guide. I look at it as though it were a guide. If we are saying that that would be in the same framework, then I would agree. This does not and [98] would not dictate to me that I would have my drive-in window open until 4:00 o'clock. If I didn't agree with this, then I would handle it in the manner that I thought that would be best for South DeKalb Bank.

Q. Can you recall, as a matter of fact, in this particular situation whether or not you did keep your drive-in windows open until 4:00 o'clock? A. I believe that we already had them open until 4:00. I don't think that meant anything one way or another to the South DeKalb Bank, to be honest with you.

Q. With this particular guide—we'll use that work—with this particular guide as a sample, where you received similar guides on various matters, what is your recollection as to whether or not you generally followed them, or can you recall? A. I generally did, and the reason for that would be that—and, as I say again—is that the C&S Bank is a real asset and a real asset to the South DeKalb Bank and a real asset to the Citizens and Southern Bank of Milledgeville, and when they came forth with a guide or a suggestion, I generally gave it and do now give it importance because I feel like they know what they're talking about. If it's going to benefit my bank, no matter where it comes from, I want to give it significance, and I think the C&S Bank gives me the kind of information that I want to pay attention to.

[99] Q. Can you recall when you were at South DeKalb how salary increases for your officers out there were determined? A. Well, they were, of course determined by—the president's salary, fortunately or unfortunately, was determined by the board of directors of that bank. I think it was a little low, but we will go with that. But the salaries of the other officers were determined by me, and the other employees'. Now, I did have some guides to go with that I got from C&S National Bank which were very helpful in making the determination of what salary should be paid. But certainly who put the plan into execution would be myself.

Mr. Kinkaid: That's all.

The deposition of Dr. William M. Cason, taken at the instance of the Plaintiff. Reading and signing of the deposition not waived; signing before any notary stipulated. Taken before William L. Meigs, Deposition Officer, commencing at 9:30 o'clock a.m., July 27, 1972, 12th floor, Citizens and Southern National Bank Building, Atlanta, Fulton County, Georgia.

[4] Whereupon,

DR. WILLIAM M. CASON

was called as a witness and, having first been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Kinkaid

Q. Would you please state your full name and residence address? A. Before I start, do you want my middle name or just initial?

Q. The initial will be all right. A. William M. Cason, 6566 Glenridge Drive, N.E., Atlanta 30328.

Q. Are you a director of the C&S Bank of North Fulton? A. I am.

Q. Excuse me—— A. I am a retired director, Sandy Springs.

Q. Excuse me; Sandy Springs. How long have you been a director of that bank? A. I was one of the original group, and I retired in the spring of '71, last year.

Q. Were you one of the organizers of the bank as distinguished from an original director? [5] Yes, sir. Now, I don't know what difference there is, there; I say "Yes, sir." I may be—I don't know just exactly what you are referring to.

Q. Well, what I meant was were you one of the group that originally sought a charter for the bank in Sandy Springs? A. For a state bank, you mean?

Q. Well, first we'll take the state bank; yes. A. Yes, I was with one group that sought a state bank.

Q. And what happened to that effort? A. Well, as I understand it, we were advised that it would be advisable for us to withdraw our application.

Q. Who gave you that advice? A. One of the other members of my group. I don't recall which one. We didn't all participate completely in everything, especially just getting organized. But actually I understood that there were three group applications, and they were all advised to—I hope I'm not letting anything out of the bag, because you didn't ask for this—to withdraw that. The authorities didn't feel that the situation warranted a bank in Sandy Springs.

Q. After the effort to form the state bank failed, what happened next with your group? A. Tom Cook, the man who became president of the bank, original bank, is a friend of mine. I've been knowing him all of his life. He's from down here at Cochran, Georgia and [6] his father had a bank down there, and he knew me, and we lived in Sandy Springs, so one day he told me that a group was trying to organize a national bank, and Mr. Mills Lane had suggested that they might see if I would be interested in organizing a national bank. And I told Tom, "Well, I'll think about it a little bit." But I didn't feel like I would want to be with the group for a national bank unless Jim Aldredge was also included, because he and I were with a group that tried to get the state bank, and it was withdrawn, and I didn't want to put myself in the position of appearing to squeeze him out, you see, and I felt like I ought to be loyal that much to him in this situation. So they invited Jim Aldredge also.

The deposition of Gus Lockett Connelly, taken at the instance of the plaintiff. Reading and signing of the deposition not waived; signing before any Notary stipulated. Taken before William L. Meigs, Deposition Officer, commencing at 1:30 o'clock, p.m., August 1, 1972, C&S National Bank Building, Atlanta, Fulton County, Georgia.

[4] Whereupon,

GUS LOCKETT CONNELLY

was called as a witness and, having first been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Kinkaid

Q. Would you state your full name and address, please? A. My name is Gus Lockett Connelly, I live at 171 Pine Lake Drive, Northwest, Atlanta, 30327.

Q. When did you become president of C&S Bank of Tucker? A. President in February of 1965.

Q. During the time you have been president, have you also been a director of the bank? A. That's correct.

Q. What was your occupation before becoming president of Tucker? A. I was an assistant vice president with the C&S National Bank.

Q. How long have you been with C&S? A. I started with C&S National Bank in February of 1955.

Q. Were you working with any other bank before then? A. No, I came with them out of the service.

Q. How did you first find out about the opportunity of [5] being president of the Tucker bank? A. Herb Dickson, who was, I think, the executive vice president of C&S National Bank at the time and my immediate superior—well, not my immediate superior but over all of the officers, the main office, called me into his office one morning and told me that the opportunity existed for me to become president of the then Bank of Tucker, in which C&S was buying a 5 percent interest, and he felt like it would be a good opportunity for me and, if I was interested, I could talk further with Bennett Brown, who was in the correspondent bank department and was the one, really, working with Mr. Cofer and Mr. Lane in that position in the bank. And from that point I went forward.

Q. Do you recall at that time any discussions with C&S National officers with respect to the relationship that would exist between the Bank of Tucker and C&S National? A. Well, it was to be similar to some other banks where they had a 5 percent interest, that somewhere down the road they hoped that the laws would be changed that would allow them to merge these banks into the C&S organization, and there would be nobody new until then, and you could just go out there and bank the C&S way of banking.

Q. Did they tell you that you would be free to run the bank the way you saw best? A. Well, we really didn't talk about it. It was just [6] understood that you would have a board of directors that you would account to, and you would make any recommendations that you personally felt needed based on your background with C&S as far as any changes that you thought the bank ought to make; pretty much a free hand in that respect.

Q. Do you happen to know of your own knowledge whether or not the board of directors of Tucker could have asked for somebody else if they had not wanted you as president? A. Well, the only indication in that regard was probably from Mr. Cofer, who ended up with roughly 20 percent of the bank after they sold it—of course, they owned it a hundred percent before that—and that was that if he wasn't satisfied with the way I was running the bank that he had the option to go back to Mr. Lane and say, "We would like somebody else." That came out in the conversation one time. But that was after I had been on the job maybe a couple of months, and apparently he was satisfied because nothing ever came of it.

Q. Were you actually, then, elected formally by the board of directors to be president of the bank? A. Right.

Q. Who selected the other officers and employees, or did you use the same people who had already been with the bank previously? A. Actually I was the only one that went out from C&S [7] initially, and we really didn't bring anybody else in probably until we opened a branch, and, of course, Jim Hardin, the branch manager, came from C&S. And somewhere, I'm sure, in the first year or so we maybe picked up a teller or something that lived out that way and wanted to work closer to home that was C&S connected.

Q. Whose job was it to select additional personnel or the branch manager that you mentioned? A. Well, of course, it would have been my responsibility, working with the cashier of the bank, who really did the interviewing and that type stuff for the bank.

Q. At the time you were told that this opportunity was available, was there any discussion as to the types of services that might be available to you from C&S? A. No, nothing specific. I, of course, you might say just assumed that all of the normal correspondent bank services would be available, and our basic relationship would be that of a correspondent bank with a major correspondent.

Q. Could you tell us from your own standpoint what you would consider normal correspondent services? A. Well, of course, the major one is always the clearing of your checks. That's primary for any bank to have somebody to clear those. Then, aside from that, a bank our size needs to have a strong backup as far as being able to sell off loans that exceed its legal limit, or, if its overall loan [8] ratio gets too high, it needs to sell off to its correspondent this excess. And then, of course, you've got a multitude of other things, of installment loan billing service and things that—and then, of course, you've had your computer services developed whereby they will do your bookkeeping and so forth. That was not available at the time I went out there but became available later on.

Q. How are the salaries of your bank's officers determined or by whom are they determined? A. Well, the officers' salaries, with the exception of mine, are handled by me. My salary is handled through the board, usually with the recommendation of the advisory board member who keeps the board informed as to what they feel is a salary comparable for the type job that I have or that the individual in my position has. And they make the recommendations to the board or the salary committee, and I assume they concur and come that way to me.

Q. Do you have to get approval on the salaries for other officers that you yourself determine? A. Yes—well, yes and no. I'll tell them—I will find out what the salary range is in the C&S system for that particular job, and then I will report to them that I am recommending putting through a salary increase of X number of dollars for a particular officer, and they normally have concurred in whatever we sent through. If they disagreed, then [9] we would talk about it and——

Q. Excuse me; when you say "they" and "them" in that answer, to whom are you referring? A. Well, it would be the advisory board member on our board from C&S, Don Ingram, in this as far as we're concerned.

Q. Why do you run these things through Don Ingram? A. Well, of course, we have had a cross-flow of people from us to them and vice versa. They send a lot of people out for us to train, and if we have a job opening up in our bank, we look to them for the manpower. Therefore, we need to keep the salaries we are paying pretty much in line with what the job calls for throughout the C&S system, so that we not get a job too high or a man too high through the C&S system downtown. That's primarily the reason we are consulted on these things.

Q. When you first went out to Tucker as president, did you continue with the service charges on checking accounts and interest that was being paid on savings accounts and banking hours, or did you make any changes in those? A. We made a change in the service charges not too long after I got out there. They were under an old system where they rendered statements on the special checking accounts every 90 days, quarterly, and this actually was causing the bank a lot of physical problems because if you had 90 days to keep somebody's records, you had to increase your [10] chance of messing it up and that much longer for them to know about it. So we changed that service and went to a monthly statement and then went to a service charge schedule that was pretty—well, it was common in the Atlanta area at that time for special checking accounts. The regular checking accounts we left as they were as far as service charges were concerned, but we did change the special.

Q. When you say that the charges that you instituted on special checking accounts were pretty common, what did you specifically have in mind as a reference point there? A. Well, this is the 10 cents per check with a base charge of 25 cents for the statement itself. If you wrote three checks you paid 55 cents; if you wrote 10 you paid $1.25.

Q. Was that common to the majority of the banks in Atlanta? And when I say "majority of the banks," I mean not just C&S Banks but non-C&S Banks as well? A. Yes. Everybody pretty much did the same thing.

Q. When you first went out, did you institute any changes in the banking hours as such? A. Yes, initially they were open six days a week, a half a day on Wednesday. We started closing all day on Wednesday rather than opening up part of the day, and then—well, probably a year or so later—we dropped Saturday banking and went back to five days a week banking and made our [11] staying open hours on Friday later to take care of a lot of people who couldn't get to the bank by 4:00 o'clock.

Q. Whose idea was it, first of all, to eliminate the half day on Wednesday? A. That was mine.

Q. And what was the—Well, let me put it this way; did you consult with anyone from C&S National or C&S affiliate with respect to closing that full day Wednesday? A. I probably told them that I was going to do it because we kept running into a big overtime problem, because you can't really, when you open up a bank—when you close at 12:00 you are still there until 2:30 or 3:00, so we were really working 45 to 50 hours a week, and there was no way to do it when you opened up that half day on Wednesday. So that was one of the big reasons behind it.

Q. What was your reason for informing C&S that you were going to close the bank on Wednesday? A. Well, just of course —I looked to C&S for advice and counsel on a lot of things, you know, that I would analyze the thing and reach my decision and then, just to get somebody else's thoughts on whether there was something I was overlooking, I would talk with the advisor— well, of course, at that time the C&S people actually directors of the bank rather than advisory board members, but I would talk to them just for their advice and counsel on the subject.

[12] Q. Had you been instructed by anyone at C&S National to keep either National directly or the National personnel on the board at Tucker, were you instructed to keep anybody advised as to what you were doing? A. No, no direct instruction to that effect. They just kind of understood that I would. It was just common sense to do it.

Q. Do you have the authority, for example, to change the interest rates that your bank charges on loans? A. Interest rates on loans, yes.

Q. Would that also be true for the interest that your bank pays on various—or any type of savings account? A. Savings we work through the board. We would recommend to them what the rate should be, and they usually would concur. Right now it would be a legal maximum in all cases on interest rates.

Q. What is the maximum right now on passbook savings accounts? A. It's 4 percent.

Q. That's what you're paying now? A. We pay 4; right. Downtown I think they pay 3½.

Q. By "downtown," who do you mean? A. C&S National Bank.

Q. When did you go to 4 percent? Can you recall? A. Well, they were paying 4 when we went out there, [13] or when I went out there.

Q. In other words, has there ever been a change in the passbook savings rate? A. No.

Q. Now, would you have the authority or would you have to check with the board on changing service charges on checking accounts? A. We would take that to the board.

Q. Would the same be true if you wanted to change the hours of the bank? A. Yes.

Q. So if I understand you correctly, then, the only thing on which you would have authority yourself would be on the—maybe I misunderstood you—— A. Interest rate on loans.

Q. The interest rate on loans is the only thing that you have the authority on? A. Right.

Q. Other than what you have already mentioned—and I guess we can include those, too—have you since you have been president at Tucker changed the—changed any of your interest rates paid on savings accounts? A. Well, the passbook savings remained the same, then you had the 90-day and the one-year certificates that have come along, that have been instituted, but the changes there [14] have been as the law permitted the changes from 5 percent to 5½ for one year, 5¾ for the two-year certificate.

Q. Have you changed any of the service charges on checking accounts since you've been out there? A. Yes, probably about two to three years ago they were changed. The—what we call the "maintenance charge" was changed on—I think it was from maybe 50 cents a month to a dollar a month, if my memory serves me correctly.

Q. Can you recall how you decided or on what basis you decided to change the maintenance charge to a dollar? A. This took place, I believe, when one of your major Atlanta banks lowered their minimum charge balance requirement to $250. We had to lower ours at the same time, or we did lower it, to stay competitive, and at that time we adjusted our service charge schedule to be more in line with what the Atlanta banks were paying—charging, rather.

Q. Do you recall the bank which initiated the lowering of the minimum balance? A. I believe it was the Trust Company. Don't hold me to it, but I think that's it.

Q. If you can recall at that time, what was the closest Trust Company office to your bank? A. Well, it probably would have been their affiliate bank in Executive Park, which was four or five miles away.

Q. Now, when you say that you also lowered your minimum [15] balance to stay competitive, were you thinking there primarily in terms of the Trust Company office in Executive Park or were you thinking of the Trust Company generally? A. Well, we get a fair number of our customers, of course—in most cases the husband is working downtown or in some area contiguous to another bank, and the wife, of course, in our—you know, they live in our neighborhood, and as long as we are competitive we will get the business. If we get out of line, then he will start doing the banking downtown. And so we are really competing with where he works, so whatever bank happens to be close to where the man works—it might be C&S National or First National or whoever it might be; to that extent we felt ourselves part of the Atlanta market.

Q. When you also mentioned that you changed the maintenance charge at the same time to the level that was being maintained at the downtown banks, did you have in mind the downtown offices of the downtown banks? A. Well, their downtown offices and branches. Of course, at that time they were limited to the city limits of Atlanta. Of course they had offices in Decatur at that time, First National and Fulton did. So, as I say, it spreads on out through the area that way.

Q. In making these various changes that we have been discussing, either in hours or service charges on checking accounts or any changes in savings account rates, did you take [16] into consideration anything other than the profitability and growth of your own bank? A. No, that would be your primary consideration, what is best for your bank.

Q. Would there be anything else that would be a consideration, from your standpoint? A. Well, of course, you want to serve your customers as best you can, and sometimes you institute a charge in order to do this, but that indirectly benefits the bank, too, so any way you play it, it's going to get back to the same point.

Q. Have you ever been directed by C&S National or C&S affiliates, for that matter, to change the interest rates that you would charge on loans? A. No.

Q. How about the same question on interest rates on savings accounts of any kind? A. No.

Q. Service charges on checking accounts would it be the same? A. Yes. The reason I'm hesitating, they don't direct us, but, of course, on utilizing their computers, we did adopt their schedule on commercial accounts, of analysis, because the computers were set up for the way they handled it. So they would have had to write a completely different [17] program for us if we elected to go another route. So there was no direction done; we just said well, we wouldn't—you know, instead of the program we were using, which involved a lot of hand work, we elected to use the program that they had available for us on commercial accounts.

Q. Well, as a matter of fact, does C&S National in any way have the ability to direct what your bank charges with respect to loans or checking accounts or the interest it pays on savings accounts? A. Legally, no.

Q. Any other way besides legally? A. Not really; you might say a kind of father-son relationship. They tell you what they think, and as a son you may or may not agree with them.

Q. Since you've been president at Tucker, have you felt in any way that your actions as president were in any way controlled by C&S National or any C&S affiliate? A. No, I've had a pretty free rein to do what I thought was—to run the bank as I saw that it should be run.

Q. Do you attend any meetings with C&S National officers? A. Yes. On Wednesday morning there may be two meetings. In one Dick Kattel has a general type information meeting on occasion, when he calls it, that we sit in on. And then, after that meeting I will preside in a credit group meeting of some other 5 percent bankers and some of the branches of C&S [18] National Bank where we are reviewing credits that have been or are in effect at that time.

Q. Could you give us some idea of the kind of topics that would be discussed at the Wednesday credit meetings? A. Well, these are primarily just reviews of credits, financial statements, and it's a real training tool for the younger officers to have; the officers that are handling the credit talk to the group about, "This is what I see," and "Why I did this" and "Why I didn't do this" as far as the credit is concerned. And then, of course, the other officers in the group may have some suggestions or comments or something that he has overlooked or that needs to be discussed with the customer, and these will be pointed out during the session. And aside from reviewing the credits, occasionally the representative from branch supervision will maybe comment on some program, savings campaign or something that is in effect at the time. Primarily they are credit meetings.

Q. Does someone from branch supervision generally appear at these meetings? A. Yes.

Q. Could you give us the names of some of the people from branch supervision that sat in on these meetings? A. Well, of course, presently Don Ingram is the representative that covers the group that is represented at the meeting that I'm in, and in his absence Paul Ard is [19] another one that is present sometimes if Don's out of town.

Q. Can you recall when you first started attending these regular credit meetings? A. It's probably been going on three or four years. Just when in the last eight, it's hard to remember when they picked up, but——

Q. In other words, it's been since you went out to Tucker? A. Right—well, they've had these credit meetings since I've been with the bank, really, but they changed the format as time went on. There used to be just one credit meeting for the whole bank, and as the bank has gotten larger, they broke them down into groups. And, as I say, initially when I went to Tucker I don't think they had any groups that we belonged to as such.

Q. Well, when you first went to Tucker, did any of the correspondent associates attend these meetings, to your recollection? A. We attended the general meetings. At that time Mr. Lane was having the meeting on Wednesday morning. We attended those the whole time I was out there. But, as I say, they didn't have a credit group structured for correspondent associates at that time.

Q. What I meant, though, was even before they broke this down into groups, did the correspondent associates, to [20] your knowledge, attend credit meetings? A. I don't know. I don't recall whether they—at that time it would have been Chamblee and Sandy Springs.

Q. Well, let me ask it in a different way. When you first went to Tucker, did you immediately start attending credit meetings? A. No.

Q. When you were first—I gather you were invited to attend these credit meetings? A. Yes.

Q. What were you told as to the purpose of these meetings and your reason to be there? A. The main purpose was, as these were a training tool, for the men in the credit department to have an opportunity to have the loan officers discuss credits and help them be trained, because, as I say, all of these loans are on the books; it's not a case of any type approval of the loan. It's already made, and the money's gone, so to speak. So that is, to my knowledge, a training meeting more than anything else.

Q. As a result of going over loans that have already been made, have you changed your attitude with respect to making loans in the future after these meetings? A. No, as far as any of my loans I haven't changed the attitude. I can't speak for any of the other people that [21] presented credits, but it hasn't affected any of our credits.

Q. Is this credit meeting, is this the only time in which you discuss specific loans with anyone from C&S? A. No, we will have—when we get our F.D.I.C. examination and state bank examination, we will have a meeting of the audit committee of our board of directors, at which time the advisory board member from C&S will be present when we have these discussions.

Q. Are any loans made by your bank over a certain amount reviewed in any way by anyone from C&S National, to your knowledge? A. No. Of course, our loan committee at the board reviews or okays loans within our bank over the 10 percent limitation.

Q. To your knowledge, is that something that is required by either statute or regulation? A. Yes, a state statute requires a loan committee on those.

Q. Mr. Connelly, there are six documents here which have been marked as Presidents' Deposition Exhibits 1 through 6. You now have a set of these. Would you please take a moment to just look through these things to familiarize yourself with them.

Do you recall receiving these particular documents? A. Yes, I've seen them all before.

[22] Q. Mr. Connelly, could you look first at the documents that are marked Exhibits 5 and 6, and would you notice that at the bottom—both of these are specifically addressed to "Bank Managers, National Bank," and "Presidents, Affiliates." At the bottom there is an indication that copies were sent to "Presidents, Correspondent Associates, For Information Only." Now, would you look at the other four that you have there? A. Okay.

Q. You will notice that the other four are addressed to "Branch Managers, National Bank," and "Presidents and Managers, Affiliates, and Correspondent Associates." Do you have any ideas as to why numbers 5 and 6 have the notation "For Information Only" on them while the other four do not? A. No, we just receive them all for information only, as far as we are concerned. There is no—Why they dropped it, I don't know.

Q. For example, could you look at number 5. Now, this one deals with drive-in banking hours. Can you recall if at that time whether—well, first of all, do you have drive-in facilities at your bank? A. Yes, we do.

Q. In November 1969, can you recall whether your drive-in windows were being kept open until 4:00 o'clock? [23] A. Yes,

I'm pretty sure we were already doing it. We might have been the ones that started them thinking that way. I'm not sure.

Q. Would you look at Exhibit No. 2. A. Okay.

Q. This exhibit, as do some of the others, refers to something called the "commercial loan rate chart." First of all, could you tell us what this particular chart is all about? A. Well, this would refer—I think we've got one in here; yes, Exhibit 4 is the rate chart we're talking about where they break down the different rates as to loan amounts and so forth, which is a chart that gives you more or less a guideline of what the rates are for each loan classification.

Q. Are the rates that appear here on the commercial loan rate chart, are they geared to the prime rate at the time, so far as you know? A. Yes—well, it used to have a lot to do with it. It probably doesn't as much now since your savings rate has put a floor on a lot of your rates, more so than the prime rate.

Q. To your knowledge, would the rates that actually appear in the commercial loan rate charts, would these be the actual rates that C&S National would be charging on commercial loans? A. Probably in most cases. Of course, there would be [24] differentials from all of these rates within, I'm sure, C&S National because we don't adhere to this one completely. We've got most of ours higher, probably, than theirs.

Q. By "we," you mean the Tucker bank? A. Tucker; right.

Q. But your information would be that these rates are actually the rates of C&S National itself? A. Subject to other factors influencing what the final rate is in a given situation.

Q. Incidentally, in that regard what is the main tool that you as a bank president would use in competing for loans of any kind? Would it be interest rate or would it be something else? A. Your primary tool is your ability to serve the customer and to be acquainted with his needs and his developing the confidence that you can look after his requirements better than somebody else. I think this is the primary consideration so far as the customer and the bank are concerned. The rate—Except when you're talking about fully secured type loans that can be shopped to anybody, rate is not a factor.

Q. Can you tell us what percentage of your bank's commercial loans are secured versus unsecured, roughly? A. We are probably 80 percent secured. We are heavy in real estate construction lendings, which would be the reason for it.

[25] Q. Has that generally been true all the time that you have been in Tucker? A. We've always—It's been more real estate with a lot of banks in a lot of other areas in Atlanta.

Q. Looking at Exhibit No. 2 again, this memorandum from Mr. Ingram indicates that—well, he states as follows: "Let's also remember that this rate chart reflects minimum rates, and there really should not be a reason for handling any loan below this minimum."

To your recollection, at this time were any of your commercial loans below the rates on this chart? A. We possibly had some accounts receivable loans that were maybe at 11 percent, where they're talking about 13 percent. But our construction loans generally are higher than theirs.

Q. How did you interpret the phrase there that "there really should not be a reason for handling any loan below this minimum"? A. Well, interpreted it as meaning that there should be a good reason if you do. But, as I say, we set our rates, so I don't get too concerned with those things.

Q. So far as you are concerned, did you consider that as being any kind of direction to make sure that none of your loans were below the minimums in the loan chart? A. No, no direction as such because our rates were [26] still lower than those.

Q. That example was the accounts receivable that you mentioned? A. Yes.

Q. Similarly, would you look at No. 4. A. Okay.

Q. In the last paragraph where it says, "In some cases, the value of the relationship and the relatively nominal risk will warrant a rate lower than those listed."

What was your understanding as to the phrase, "the value of the relationship"? In other words, what was being referred to at that point? A. That would be referring to balances maintained by the customer in a situation like that.

Q. Well, it goes on to say that, "On the other hand, where the full service relationship does not exist and the risk is greater, you will want to charge a rate somewhat higher than those listed."

Did you interpret that as a direction to you to charge higher rates under those circumstances? A. No. This is just really a more or less kind of a basic pricing formula in banking, not just C&S but in any banking organization, that these factors are weighed in setting the rate and more a reminder that this is so.

Q. In other words, if you had a situation of your own [27] where you wanted to disregard this general wisdom—if you want to call it that—would you have simply gone right ahead and disregarded it? A. Yes, if I had had a situation like that. But, as I say, it's kind of a principal of banking, almost, that you weigh these factors.

Q. To your recollection over the years that you have been at Tucker, can you recall receiving memoranda similar to these on similar topics before 1969? The reason I ask that is the earliest ones we have here are dated in 1969. I was wondering whether you can recall receiving memoranda similar in nature to these before 1969. A. I would think I did. I don't recall, but I know no reason for these years to be significant.

Q. Now, you have indicated, I believe, before that your reaction to these memoranda was that they were—whether they said so or not, they were for informational purposes? A. Yes.

Q. Could you take a guess as to what percentage of these memoranda you have in your own business at Tucker actually followed? Or, to put it another way, how many you have acted upon in the way in which the information was relayed? A. Off the top of my head, I would say 75 percent to 95 percent; just a guess.

Q. Well, perhaps I ought to ask it a different way. [28] Have you considered this type of memorandum to contain recommendations or advice as to how to conduct your banking business? A. Yes, I would consider it recommendations and advice, would be the term, and if it appeared to me that it were best for my bank to follow it, I would follow it.

Q. As a result of following the majority of these recommendations, has your bank ended up being operated in a way that would make it appear to be very similar in operations to other C&S Banks? A. Yes, we would appear to be a similarly operated bank.

Q. But that result, if I understand you correctly, would flow from the fact that you were following most of these recommendations because you thought they were in the best interest of your own bank? A. Right. And also my C&S background influences much more than the memoranda the style of my personal banking or how I run a bank and feelings as far as customer service and how you approach a loan and just the basic things to make banking easier for the customer, and that's a philosophy, and we take off from there.

Q. As a matter of fact, at this moment would you really know how to run a bank other than the way you have already been trained at C&S? [29] A. No—I mean that's my training, and it would be hard to deviate from it unless I were shown something that I thought was a better way to do it.

[53] Redirect Examination

By Mr. Doyle

Q. Gus, do you sell your bank as a C&S Bank? A. Yes, we do.

Q. In doing that, does the C&S name—is that of help to you in the doing of it? A. Yes, as I said before.

Q. During the months of February, I believe, until about June or July when you went out to Tucker and did not have the C&S name, during those months was your style of doing business any different than it was after you put the name up? A. Well, the style would not have been any different. Of course, the old Bank of Tucker did not have a good image in the community for providing service. The quickest way to get the message across to the people that we were under new [54] leadership and new management and to emphasize our affiliation relationship with C&S would be to change the name. And, of course, as you know, it was instigated by the Bank of Tucker at that time to request the name change. We were the first ones to do so, and it was through my efforts in convincing Mr. Reid Cofer that it would be best for the bank if we could more closely identify our relationship, and he agreed with this, and he was, of course, instrumental in convincing Mr. Lane that this should be done. After several tries, Mr. Lane finally agreed to do it.

Q. What has been the result of that name change, in your eyes? A. Well, I feel like it has certainly been instrumental in helping us to achieve the growth rate that we have achieved over the last eight years.

Q. To your knowledge, is your bank regarded as a C&S Bank by your competition? A. By my competition, yes.

Q. Do you yourself regard your bank as a member of the C&S system? A. Yes.

Whereupon,

THOMAS E. COOK

was called as a witness and, having first been duly sworn, was examined and deposed as follows:

Direct Examination

By Mr. Kinkaid

Q. Would you state your full name and residence address, please? A. Thomas E. Cook, 375 Holly Berry Drive, Roswell, Georgia.

Q. What is your present occupation? A. Certified Public Accountant.

Q. Where do you operate as an accountant? A. In the Sandy Springs area. My office is in 418 C&S Bank Building, Sandy Springs.

Q. How long have you been in this occupation? A. Since leaving the bank, which was—oh, I guess August will be eight years ago now. I believe it is.

Q. Can you recall the month and year you actually left? Now, when you say "bank," I take it you mean Sandy Springs Bank? [5] A. Right.

Q. Can you recall the month and year you left Sandy Springs Bank? A. Well, it was in August. I may have worked a few days into September. In other words, I resigned in August. And the bank kept me on salary until the end of December, end of that year. And I stayed in an advisory capacity to Lou Fortuna. May have been the end of September. I'm not sure. And I believe that will be eight years ago this year.

Q. Would that be 1964? A. Right. Here, again, time is a little bit vague.

Q. What was your position when you left the Sandy Springs Bank? A. President and director.

Q. When did you become president and director of the Sandy Springs Bank? A. At the organization of the bank, which was in 1959.

Q. What was your occupation before becoming president of the Sandy Springs Bank? A. I was an assistant vice-president of the Citizens and Southern National Bank.

Q. How long had you been with C&S National? [6] A. Approximately twelve years at the time—you mean at the time that I organized it?

Q. Yes. A. Yes, twelve years.

Q. Was C&S National the first bank that you ever worked for? A. Yes.

Q. Can you recall how you first found out about the possibility of being president of the Sandy Springs Bank? A. Well, here again, it's hazy. But as I recall I was asked by Mr. Mills Lane, president of the C&S National Bank, if I would organize a bank in Sandy Springs. I was serving in the capacity of a lending officer. He just called me in one day and asked me would I organize a bank in Sandy Springs called a correspondent associate. And you don't say no to something like that.

Q. Why not? A. Well, I mean, if you're offered a promotion and you turn it down, you might as well say good-bye to any other opportunities for promotion. In fact, I welcomed the opportunity. I had lived in Sandy Springs for approximately six years prior to that time. I had moved to Roswell about a year prior to that time. Mr. Lane knew I had a lot of friends in Sandy Springs. I had been active [7] in community endeavors in the Sandy Springs area. While I lived there, I was active in the church there. He knew that I had many friends in the Sandy Springs area. He figured that I would be the logical one to organize the bank.

Q. Do you recall whether or not any persons in the Sandy Springs area had come to Mr. Lane seeking C&S National assistance in forming the bank? A. That would be hearsay evidence. I had no direct knowledge of such.

Q. In other words, when you say Mr. Lane asked you if you were interested in organizing a bank at Sandy Springs, your recollection now is that you don't know whether or not some people had in the Sandy Springs area the idea of forming a bank and sought C&S National assistance? A. Let me put my answer another way. It's not a direct answer to your question. But there had been an attempt on the parts of some other parties to organize a state bank in the Sandy Springs area. And they had been denied by the state banking authorities a charter to organize one in Sandy Springs. I had knowledge of this: that there had been an effort by some people that, as far as I knew, were completely independent of the C&S banking system. But they had been denied an opportunity—I mean, denied a [8] charter. And I'm sure Mr. Lane was aware of that fact. I cannot recall specifically how long a time intervened in between the denial of that charter and the application for the national bank charter that we eventually made.

Q. Were the same people involved in seeking the state charter —were they the same people who also—— A. No. Now, some of them eventually became directors. But they were not the original board of directors. They were not, you might say, among the original organizers of the bank that eventually was chartered as the Citizens National Bank of Sandy Springs. That's my recollection.

Q. Were you in any way involved with the group that was interested in seeking a state charter? A. No, except maybe indirectly. I mean, I wasn't offered a position with that bank, if that's what you're implying.

Q. Can you recall what Mr. Lane told you the relationship between C&S Nationl and the new bank in Sandy Springs would be? A. I can't recall the specifics of the conversation. This is just a hazy impression. I don't know the specifics. I expect that he figured that I had intelligence enough to know what the relationship would be. It would be a correspondent associate. As I remember, Sandy Springs was not the first one that the C&S Holding Company owned [9] five percent in. And I knew. Whether he told me or I had it from knowledge, I knew that it would be a five percenter bank, as we call it. And I don't remember whether Sandy Springs was the first one. It was one of the first ones. But I'm not sure that Sandy Springs was the first one.

(Discussion off the record.)

By Mr. Kinkaid

Q. While we're waiting for that document, which we will mark as President's Deposition Exhibit 17, this particular document is entitled "Additional Information Requested in Connection with Application for a Proposed National Bank in the Sandy Springs Area." In this document there is the following statement, quote, "Because of reasons outlined in the interview with Mr. Lane, stock subscriptions have not yet been solicited and will not be solicited until the charter has been approved."

Why don't you look at my copy of that for the time being. Right in that paragraph. A. May I look at——

Q. Sure, read the whole thing, if you like. A. (Reading)

(Whereupon, said document was marked as PD Exhibit 17 for identification.)

[10] The Deponent: Do you have the document that these were answers to?

Mr. Kinkaid: No, we do not.

The Deponent: I don't even know what interview he's talking about.

By Mr. Kinkaid

Q. Do you have any recollection of an arrangement whereby stock solicitations for the Sandy Springs Bank would not be made until the charter had actually been approved? A. Yes. I recall that that was the policy.

Q. Do you have any recollection as to the reasons for that policy? A. This is a recollection. It had a lot to do with the fact that this other bank had been denied a charter—this state bank that we had talked about earlier. They had already had stock subscriptions from many of the people in the area. And we had available the names of those subscribers. And many of them had spoken to me, informing that they would be interested in subscribing to stock in our bank if it were approved. So we had reasonable assurance that we could get all of our stock subscribed. When we used the word "solicited," we had not actually gone out and asked for any or had not actually taken any subscriptions, I don't believe. But we felt that since the other charter [11] had been denied, that there was a chance that ours would be, too. And there wasn't any point in going through the work and disillusionment to stockholders of subscribing to another bank that got turned down. So we felt that it was best just to wait until we had our charter and then proceed, starting with the previous list to actually get it subscribed.

Now, I don't recall anything about this interview with Mr. Lane, if you had specific reference to that.

Q. Can you recall at the time the Sandy Springs Bank was being formed, a charter was being sought, can you recall at that time under the state law in existence at that time how much stock C&S Holding could have purchased? A. The five percent.

Q. Do you recall if there was a period of time when the state rule allowed a greater amount of stock to be purchased? A. Yes.

Q. To your recollection, had that law already been changed at the time the charter was being sought for the bank in Sandy Springs, that is, the national bank? A. You mean the charter we sought for the national bank?

Q. Yes. [12] A. Oh, sure.

Q. Who selected the other officers who went to work at the Sandy Springs Bank after it was approved? A. When you use the word "officers," do you include directors?

Q. No. A. There wasn't but one other officer, and that was James Farr, who was cashier. Now, I'm not sure whether he was selected until after the charter was granted, meaning he did not, as I recall, do any work with me in the organization of the bank. And I honestly don't remember what specific steps we went through in selecting him. But he worked for Citizens and Southern National Bank also.

Q. Were you formally elected by the board of directors to be president of the Sandy Springs Bank? A. I would have to be I would assume.

Q. Do you know whether or not the board could have asked for somebody else if they had not wanted to have you as president of the bank at that time?

Mr. Doyle: I object to the form of the question as calling for speculation—what could have been. It could have been anything under the sun, I assume. I don't think it leads to discovery of relevant evidence. I object to it on the grounds of the form.

[13] By Mr. Kinkaid

Q. Can you recall what Mr. Lane told you so far as your going out as president? Did he tell you that "We're sending you out as president" and that's the end of it? Or did he say that the board of directors would have to approve you as president? A. Well, I don't know that he specifically said to me, "You will be president of the bank." That was implied, I guess. He more or less selected me to organize the bank, to apply for the charter. And he already had five men that he had approached and asked to serve as directors of the bank before he contacted me.

Q. How do you know that? A. Because he told me who they would be at the time that he called me in, as I recall.

Q. Did he tell you that he had approached these five men to be directors, or did he just tell you that these are the five men who will be directors? A. I don't recall the specifics of the conversation. He imparted to me that these men had been—would be directors. Now, I can't be responsible of how he went about it or what he said to them. I'm not sure.

Q. In other words, if I understand you correctly, you don't know whether Mr. Lane asked the five men to be directors or whether the five men came to Mr. Lane asking [14] for assistance in forming a new bank? A. No, I don't know the answer to that because I had no firsthand knowledge of the first selection. As I recall, they had been selected before I was approached.

Q. What was your understanding as to the assistance that C&S National would provide in actually forming the bank? A. I'd rather you be a little more specific about that, if you've got some specific things in question.

Q. Before the bank actually opened for business, what role did C&S National play in obtaining a charter and getting the bank ready to the point that it actually opened for business? A. Well, I was continued on the payroll of the C&S National Bank. I was gradually relieved of the other duties. For a while, I was performing both duties, carrying on the job that I had and sort of on-the-side doing the paperwork it took to get together the charter application. And then, still later, after the charter was granted, setting out and soliciting the stock. I was getting the stock subscriptions. At what point in this phasing out I completely gave up my duties and, more or less, became, you might say, full-time with the new bank, I can't specifically point it down. They provided me with an automobile to use to do this. They continued my salary until the bank actually [15] opened at which time, as I recall, I went directly on the payroll of the new bank. I knew, as I said earlier, Sandy Springs was not the first correspondent associate, as they called them or the five percenters. It was not the first. And I was aware of the things that the C&S National provided for those like assistance in selecting personnel and availability of employee benefits to the people that go to work for the correspondent associate through the facilities of the C&S National Bank. I was aware that there were other insurance programs and various things that could be—let me back up. I was not necessarily aware at the moment that he asked me to do the job. I was not aware that we had other insurance programs and other facilities. This gradually became within my knowledge as I became more and more involved with the operation.

Q. Are the employee benefit programs and the insurance programs that you mentioned, in what way—I think you used the term these were C&S National facilities. Now, I may have misunderstood you. A. The Citizens and Southern system facilities. It wasn't necessarily the Citizens and Southern National Bank.

Q. How were those programs Citizens and Southern system facilities? A. I don't understand your question.

[16] Q. Well, I didn't understand your answer. That's why I asked that. For example, on the insurance programs, how were the insurance programs funded? A. The insurance programs I had in mind, for example, after reading this (referring to Exhibit PD 17) I remembered that for bank bonds and other types of casualty insurance that the correspondent associates could benefit from, you might say, group benefits, through the C&S system. They could get it through the C&S system—more coverage than they could buy directly by themselves. That's the type of thing I had in mind when I spoke of insurance.

Q. How about insofar as the employee benefit programs you had in mind? A. Well, the Citizens and Southern system had certain group hospitalization programs. It had a profit sharing plan. It had a pension and retirement plan. It had C-S-ta at that time, a recreation facility at Allatoona. And those are the big things that I recall at this moment that they were available to the employees of the correspondent associates just as they were for employees of any other C&S banks in the C&S system.

Q. How was the money necessary to fund these various programs: the pension, profit sharing, the insurance programs—where did the money come from to fund those pro- [17] grams? A. You mean after the bank was chartered and in operation?

Q. Yes. A. Each bank had to pay its share. In other words, it was not provided prorata by the C&S system. In other words, in the profit sharing plan, what was the Citizens National Bank of Sandy Springs had to contribute. As I recall, each bank had a formula of how much of their profits had to be put into the plan. And we paid our—When I say "we," the Citizens National Bank of Sandy Springs paid its part under the formula into the profit sharing plan. I'm sure it paid for its share under the pension and other plans, too. I don't recall specifically how those things were funded. And the group hospitalization and so forth, as I recall, we paid our way. It wasn't provided prorata.

Q. These various programs that you mentioned, the various benefit programs that were available to the Sandy Springs Bank, was the availability of any of those programs from C&S National or from the C&S system to your bank conditioned in any way on anything that you had to do? Let me see if I can put it a little differently. Did you have to make any commitments of any kind in order to obtain these various programs that you've just mentioned? [18] A. When you use the word "commitment," I'd rather you be more specific as to whether you mean a signed document or stand up and swear sort of thing. I need to know what you have in your mind by "commitment." It was implied, certainly.

Q. What I meant was formal or informal, whether or not you signed a document. Was there any understanding as to things you would have to do in order to obtain those benefits? A. Not specifically. I think it was certainly implied that it was. Let me back up. It was certainly to the bank's—our bank's benefit to have available these programs for the employees and otherwise. And I don't recall that there was any specific commitment that you've got to do so-and-so and so-and-so in order to have these except the things that were necessarily required by the programs like, you know, paying for them and so forth —filing reports, and so forth, that would have to be done. There was no commitment on our part that you've got to run your bank like we say, for example, or else you don't get them.

There was certainly a moral obligation on the part of the correspondent associates that since they were doing this for us on a grace basis, you might say, that we would cooperate as much as we could with the C&S banking [19] system. And, certainly, they had the right at any time they chose to withdraw these benefits.

Now, the question was "on which side of the bread is your butter on" and you don't deliberately do things that would have your programs taken away from you. And it's more or less I'll pat your back and you pat mine sort of thing. And this was not only true of the correspondent—five percent correspondent associates. C&S banking system made facilities available to other independent correspondent banks, not necessarily the employee benefit programs, but there were certain things that the C&S banking system made available to other correspondent banks in which they had no ownership in.

Q. Can you recall any of these things that C&S made available to correspondents in which there was no stock ownership? A. It would be hard for me to pin down something specifically and delineate in such a way. But I have an impression of many small things that they did. Of course, clearing checks and so forth like that is a natural line of business. But I know that there were plenty of favors that the C&S banking system did for its correspondents which necessarily were not general things that they made available. They did things on request, you might say. They would, for example, the C&S banking system has their [20] own internal auditors. Under certain circumstances, independent banks could ask that C&S make their internal auditors available for a specific task for a correspondent bank. If the C&S bank authorities thought it was of enough importance and the crew was available, they would make the C&S internal auditors available for a fee, obviously. I had in mind things like that.

My father was the president of a small bank in Cochran, Georgia, known as the Cook Banking Company in Cochran, Georgia. And we were a correspondent of—that bank was a correspondent of the C&S banking system. And I grew up in that bank—firsthand knowledge. I know of plenty things they had helped him do through the years. And this program was expanded upon through the years. So some of the things they did for us as five percenters, correspondent associates were available to other correspondents. Now, not the employee benefit programs.

Q. Perhaps it would be easier for you to recall if it were asked the reverse way. Can you recall what things were available to you as a correspondent associate that were not available to a correspondent? A. I wouldn't want to try to delineate that. I know the employee benefits were not. Now, when you get over into the other things, it's too hazy for me to even be—— [21] Q. As a condition for receiving these benefits and programs from the C&S system, were you expected to institute what has been referred to as "the C&S way of banking" in your bank? A. I think that statement is also a little bit too general to answer yes or no. "The C&S way of banking" is too much of a general statement.

Q. Were you expected to run the bank in Sandy Springs as though it were an affiliate or branch of C&S National? A. That's somebody else's expectation that I can't testify to.

Q. Well, did you feel expected to do that? A. Let me put it this way: my directors and myself—specifically the directors—oftentimes specifically the directors—not necessarily me—they went a large degree on recommendations I made. But sometimes they'd do things that I didn't necessarily recommend. They felt, as a general policy, that what was best for our bank had to come first. And on several occasions—really, there were many occasions. But on several significant occasions, it involved serious delineations in policy from what the C&S was doing that we chose or my board of directors chose it was not best for our bank to follow that policy. And we did that.

[22] Now, this eventually got me in hot water with the boys at the C&S Bank and eventually contributed to my mutual departure from the Sandy Springs Bank for I felt an obligation to my stockholders. Also, I felt an appreciation for the benefits that the C&S provided me as an employee and as an officer. And to the extent that it did not contravene with what I felt was first interest of my stockholders, I cooperated with the C&S banking system. It would be foolish not to with the benefits that they provided us. But when it came down to specific occasions where I felt that it was not smart for our bank, as far as service charges are concerned, as far as savings interest rates were concerned, as far as banking hours were concerned, we had our own competition to meet in the Sandy Springs area. And I would consult with my directors. And they would say, "Well, we don't care what the C&S people say. We think it's best for our bank to do so-and-so." And they would proceed along that policy.

And I will pull out some specific cases in point. You will remember back when savings interest rates started going up. For many years they were two and a half, three percent—something like that—open savings account— up to about three and a half percent. Well, I believe it was at the time that they broke up to the four percent rate—up to the five has been in more recent years—our [23] competition was mainly the First Federal Savings and Loan Association who had a branch right there in Sandy Springs and the Roswell Bank from whom we had to get a lot of our potential customers because most of the people in Sandy Springs went to Roswell to bank until our bank opened. And we were trying to win some of them away from the Roswell Bank. And in order to do so, we had to have banking hours—for example, we were open on Saturdays and closed Wednesday, which was not C&S policy, in order to compete with the Roswell Bank.

So when they went to four percent—and, obviously, the First Federal Savings and Loan Association already had a higher rate—when they went to four percent and some of the other banks in Atlanta chose to go to four percent—the C&S chose not to go to four percent. They stayed at three or three and a half—it was a significant jump.

Our directors discussed this and decided that we had to go to four percent. Now, that did not make C&S people happy. But my directors said, "We've got to worry about our problem."

I recall another specific circumstance whereby in later years the Federal Home Loan Association or whatever it is—It's the equivalent of the Federal Reserve Board to the federal savings and loan associations—permitted [24] the federal savings and loan associations to buy five percent savings certificates. That's when five percent savings certificates became available. The regulatory authority for savings and loan associations said "Well, you all can buy five percent savings certificates from the banks if they'll sell them to you."

Well, our main customer (depository customer) was the First Federal Savings and Loan Association in Sandy Springs. I had made a personal acquaintance with George West, who was president of the First Federal Savings and Loan Association. And through this acquaintance and through other means, they kept a $100,000 checking account with us. They were our biggest depositor. And when one of their people called me up and said, "Tom, will you sell us $10,000 in five percent savings certificates" and I felt that could be a departure in policy from what the C&S might choose to do.

I had to hedge at the moment. And I made the mistake of, quote, "mistake," unquote, of asking the people at C&S as to what C&S policy was going to be in regard to selling savings certificates to savings and loan associations. And they said that they were not going to do it.

Well, I put this before my board of directors. And they said that "We have no choice but to sell five percent savings certificates to the First Federal Savings and Loan Association." And I was told specifically by Howard [25] Starks, who was the then—This was in the year that I left the bank. I was told by Howard Starks—The bank had gotten into some other trouble at that time, which we won't go into at this moment. Howard started being—I don't know. I guess he was officially on our board of directors eventually. But he was supposed to be the C&S liaison man on our board of directors. And they had, in effect, put so much pressure on me during that year involved with these other things, that I had just about taken all I was going to. And, so, Howard came in and I said, "Howard, I've just about had it." I said, "I'm going to have to tender my resignation." He said, "Well, I'm glad you see it that way because we were going to ask for your resignation." And he told me later that that was the very thing that was the straw that broke the camel's back, so to speak, was when we chose to go ahead and give five percent savings certificates to the First Federal Savings and Loan Association.

So you might say that the C&S wanted to try to run these correspondent associates like branches. But, as a practical matter, it ran into trouble. And I don't know what happened in later years, but I could no longer operate in a dual capacity; doing what my directors tell me on one side and try to do over here what the C&S expected me to do. So I found there was a better way to make [26] a living. But I was going to be asked to resign, so I was told, because I wasn't willing to run the bank just the way they wanted it run.

Does that answer your question?

The deposition of Edward E. Elson, Deponent, taken at the instance of the Plaintiff commencing at 4:30 p.m., July 20, 1972, at the Citizens and Southern National Bank Building, Atlanta, Fulton County, Georgia.

* * * * * * * *

[10] Q. All right. Thank you. Was there any discussion in those early meetings as to what name would be used for the bank?
[11] A. Citizens and Southern Park National Bank.

Q. Do you know whose idea this was to use this name? A. No.

Q. Were any other names considered? A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Concerning the initial advertising, was there any discussion as to who would do the initial advertising for the bank? A. Who? As an individual who would do the initial advertising?

Q. Well, let me phrase it this way. Would the Park National Bank do their own advertising? A. No. It was supposed to be coordinated through the C&S National Bank. In fact, there was discussion as to the sign, how large Park National's name would be on the total sign.

Q. Was there discussion as to who would pay for this advertising? A. None whatsoever, to my knowledge.

Q. Was there any discussion as to who would perform the duties and handle the charter application, to the best of your knowledge? A. No.

Q. Was there any discussion relative to the [12] correspondent services to be provided by the C&S Bank in these early meetings? A. All discussion centered around the fact that this was a C&S bank, and there was no specific discussion of who would do what. It was just the C&S Bank would be doing it. And when I say C&S Bank, I refer to the C&S National Bank.

The deposition of Louis J. Fortuna, Deponent, taken at the instance of the plaintiff, the reading and signing of the deposition not waived, taken before Alice Ethridge, Deposition Officer, commencing at 9:30 a.m., August 7, 1972, C&S National Bank Building, Atlanta, Fulton County, Georgia.

* * * * * * * *

[19] Q. All right. Mr. Fortuna, I will show you what have been marked Deposition Exhibits 5 through 10 and ask you if you would please take a look at these. (Indicating.)

Mr. Doyle: Let the record show that 5 through 10 are equivalent to—are copies of documents marked in the other depositions as Presidents' Depositions Exhibits 1 through——

Mr. Lehman: Six.

Mr. Doyle: ——6.

By Mr. Lehman

Q. Have you now had an opportunity to peruse them? A. Do you want to go one by one or all of them?

Q. If you'll take a look at them, please. A. Oh. (Reading.)

Q. Do you recall receiving these documents? A. Oh, yes.

Q. Let me direct your attention, then, to Exhibit No. 6. Could you tell us what this document meant to you when you received it? [20] A. Oh, 6.

Q. That would be dated July 28th. A. Now, what's the question?

Q. Could you tell me what this document meant to you? A. Yes. In our operating of a bank, as I indicated earlier, I made a lot of studies and researches, and one of the best places of getting information is from the C&S National Bank wherein they send out information of this kind to let me know that certain changes have taken place in the rate structure of the banking community because this is the Federal Reserve Bank discount rate that we're discussing here and not the C&S National Bank rate. That is how they are telling me of this particular deal.

Now, I used this as a guide only, but it's up to me to decide what rates I'm going to charge. Secondly, this particular rate relationship has to do with prime customers. At the bank out in Sandy Springs we have possibly two or three only accounts that are of this particular category, and we don't have loans outstanding to these companies all the time. So if we do it's up to me to be aware of what the prime rate is because that's what I would have to charge them if and when I made a loan.

Q. I see. Would you then just consider this a [21] suggestion, in other words? A. Not a suggestion. It's just information.

Q. Let me direct your attention, then, to Exhibit No. 10. In Exhibit 6, the one we just talked about, it had in the heading: to branch managers, national bank presidents and managers, affiliates and correspondent associates (sic). And Exhibit No. 10 has at the bottom: copies to presidents, correspondent associates—for information only. Was there a difference between the document we saw as Exhibit No. 6 and this document? A. Most of the documents I get have this notation on them. I don't believe there is any difference. It's just for information only.

Q. Then I would direct your attention to Exhibit No. 9. Do you recall if your bank followed this suggestion about keeping drive-in windows open until 4:00? A. Our drive-in windows were open till 4:00. I got there in '64, and I changed the drive-in windows to the 4:00 o'clock hour shortly after I got there. And when this memo came out for our information, our drive-in windows were already open at 4:00 o'clock.

Q. In other words, Mr. Fortuna, you did not consider these memos as directives? A. No. It says for information only. It's up to me with my years of experience to make decisions.

[22] Q. The same is true for those not saying for information only? A. I'd categorize them the same way.

The deposition of Hubert L. Harris, Deponent, taken at the instance of the Plaintiff, the reading and the signing of the deposition not being waived, commencing at 9:30 a.m., August 3, 1972, at the Citizens and Southern National Bank Building, Atlanta, Fulton County, Georgia.

[4] Mr. Kinkaid: Will you swear in Mr. Harris?

Whereupon,

HUBERT L. HARRIS

was called as a witness and, having been first duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Kinkaid

Q. Would you please state your full name and home address? A. Hubert L. Harris. I live at 765 Douglas Road, Northeast, Atlanta, Georgia, Fulton County.

Q. What is your present occupation, Mr. Harris? A. Retired from the Citizens and Southern Bank in Chamblee.

Q. And what position did you have at that bank when you retired? A. President and director.

Q. When did you retire? A. September 30th of last year.

Q. Were you the original president of the Chamblee bank? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And were you a director for the entire time that you were there as president? [5] A. Yes, sir. And I still am a director.

Q. What was your occupation before going to the Chamblee bank? A. I was vice president of the Citizens and Southern Bank of Atlanta at 140 Peachtree.

Q. Excuse me. I didn't understand what you meant by "one point" (sic) Peachtree? A. 140.

Q. Excuse me. I thought you said one point. Right. And how long were you with C&S? A. 46 years at the time I retired.

Q. How did you first find out about the opportunity to go out and be president of the Chamblee bank? A. I had a call from George McKinnon, and we met together and just talked over the group that was forming the bank, and he asked me if I would go out there and work with them, and I told him I would.

Q. Do you recall the group that was actually forming the bank at that time? A. I had not known them prior to this, but it was a group of—The most active ones were Frank Berry, Harry Finn, Dr. Bill Mosher, Roy Goree, Dr. Harris Minter—well, practically all of those that are directors now. Nearly all the directors now are the original directors.

Q. What did Mr. McKinnon tell you as to the [6] relationship that would exist between the Chamblee bank and C&S National? A. He said any assistance that I needed C&S would be able to give to me.

Q. At that time did you get into any details as to the kind of assistance that C&S would provide for you? A. No.

Q. When, as a matter of fact, did you get into more detail on the types of assistance that you could get from C&S? A. Well, there was more a feeling that the assistance was there if I needed it. That was really the deep feeling that I had, that I had the whole resources of C&S available to me if I needed it but that in the meantime we had a bank there that needed developing. And we went about developing it, and if we needed help from C&S, we asked for it. But in the way of running the bank, there is just not much that you have to ask of anyone else because we had to sell the stock first, then find a location, employees. I mean, there's a right good deal of work to be done so that most of it had to be in the field itself where the bank was to be located.

Q. Did you handle much of the work that you just mentioned? A. Yes, sir.

[7] Q. Formally speaking, how did you actually become president of the bank; in other words, how were you actually selected to be president? A. I met with the directors, the group, and we discussed and talked, and they felt that we could work together. At the final formal meetings I was elected.

Q. Did you select the other officers yourself? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did you go about selecting the employees in the bank when the bank first opened? A. Well, a key employee, who was the operation person, was at C&S but wanted to move away from downtown. Her name is Martha Day. She can run a proof machine. She can run a bookkeeping machine, and we started out with one. So Martha wanted to move out there, and we gave her the opportunity to move. One of the tellers came from Buckhead. And one we hired, as I recall, had been a former banker that lived in the community out there. I mean, it was sort of informal. We used those from C&S that we felt we needed and others we got in from outside sources.

Q. So far as the assistance that you felt would be available from C&S when you needed it, did you have to make any commitments on your own part in order to be assured of getting assistance from C&S? [8] A. No.

Q. Did anyone at C&S—And by C&S generally we'll mean C&S National and C&S Holding. Did anyone at C&S indicate to you that there would be any kind of conditions of any kind attached to the bank's receiving assistance either in forming, in getting started, or in continuing in operation? A. None. Normally, naturally, it would be understood that we would open a correspondent account here, but that would be just a natural thing. The only instruction or agreement I ever had in going out there was just one sentence from Mills Lane when I talked with him. And I've never talked with him but one time. And that was: "Make it easy for the customers to do business with you." That's the only instruction I've ever had from the time I went out there until today.

Q. In effect, are you saying that from your standpoint you felt free to run this bank with, of course, the approval of the board of directors as you yourself saw fit? A. Yes, sir. But when you go out into a new community—and I never even visited the place; everybody was brand new; I didn't know a customer; I really didn't know the directors—you feel in a big world real lonesome, and having the knowledge that the C&S was backing me gave [9] me a great deal of cause to thus enable me to go ahead and make decisions out there based on the fact that I could deliver, that if we didn't have the available lines of credit we could sell them downtown. The services that were needed we could offer them there because the attitude that we took was that we were going to open a temporary building, going to build a permanent building, and we were going to fill that permanent building with customers just as fast as could do it to pay that rent.

And we used every source we knew how to let it be known that we had the resources of the C&S backing us, but we were going to see to it that we were going to give better service out there than C&S gave even, and we did.

Q. How are the salaries of the officers of the Chamblee bank determined? Who sets the salaries? A. When?

Q. Well, if there has been a difference, why don't you start right from the beginning? At the beginning how were the salaries of the Chamblee officers determined? A. I went out at a certain salary level. For a while we had no means really of setting salaries very well, so we finally arrived at a salary committee of the directors, and the salary committee of the directors sets the salaries, has done so for the past eight years, I guess. [10] The cashier and I set the salaries of the employees.

Q. If I understand you then, for something like the past eight years a committee of the directors—— A. I did it before that time.

Q. I see. But for the past eight years there has been a committee of directors who determines salaries of officers and at the same time the cashier determines the salaries of employees? A. I with the cashier; the two of us together.

Q. Right. Do the salaries of employees have to be approved by the board of directors at all? A. Employees?

Q. Yes. A. No.

Q. To your knowledge or recollection, has your salary level at any time been suggested by anyone from C&S? A. We use reference from them as to salary levels of comparable size banks and all. We use it as a reference. And I believe you'll find in the FDIC publications that this is almost nationwide. The size of the bank to a large extent will determine the salary of the president.

Q. And to your recollection, was your salary pretty much in conformance with the findings of the FDIC as to sort of the nationwide average? [11] A. Just a little bit higher for the size of the bank, but our earnings were greater.

Q. How did you decide on the initial service charges on checking accounts when the bank opened? A. We took those that were used by every bank in Atlanta. Everyone had identically the same charge at that time. It would be foolish in getting business to try to raise the charge higher than the other banks. We are very much influenced at Chamblee by what the downtown banks do—all of them. not only C&S but all the banks.

Q. When you say you were very much influenced by all the downtown banks, do you mean all the time that you were at Chamblee or just in the beginning? A. To some extent all the way through. You must be competitive. What I'm trying to say is Chamblee is not Gainesville. It's part of metropolitan Atlanta, so you must be aware at all times of what is going on in the greater Atlanta area.

Q. Did you consult with anyone from C&S at the time you were deciding the initial service charges on checking accounts? A. Possibly I discussed it with George McKinnon. See, I'd just worked with George at 140 Peachtree Street, and possibly we discussed it. I don't know. To me there [12] was not anything to discuss. There was one charge and one charge only. Everybody had the same charge.

Q. Were the initial rates that you paid on the various types of savings accounts determined the same way, to your recollection? A. I think we adopted practically the same thing that was in force in Atlanta banks. As I recall, they were all at the same level at that time. Remember, we've gone a long way in the economic world since 1960. Some of these things I just don't remember positively.

Q. I fully understand that. A. I doubt if you'd remember in May of 1960 what you did, so I'll just have to do the best I can on these things.

Q. Certainly. Can you recall, when you first started, what types of savings accounts and time deposit accounts the bank was offering? A. When we first started, there were only two types of savings in Atlanta: passbook savings and formal certificates of deposits. And that's all we had.

Q. By any chance can you recall when you first started offering—I believe what I refer to as—open savings accounts? I don't know if there is a formal term for it. These are the ones that are on a 90-day basis. [13] A. Savings certificates. When money got tight in '65 and '66 or somewhere thereabouts—I've forgotten just when. But as money became tighter the banks, all the banks, had to work harder to get deposits. And each time that an Atlanta bank, whether it was C&S or the Trust Company of Georgia, came out with a new type of savings instrument, we were forced by competition to take it. In the tight money period I saw a million dollars run off in six months out there because of the real high deposits—I mean, investments that were being offered in the 1968 credit crunch.

For example, we did not go into those $100,000 units out there because it was a small bank. We didn't feel like we could establish the countrywide market that was required. So we always had to remain competitive with the other banks, and when they came out with a new instrument, then we came out with a new instrument.

Q. You've just been talking about certificates of deposits; is that right? A. Yes, sir. But that was another type of savings, the 5 percent savings, where you can increase or decrease and still remain on the 5 percent level. The Trust Company of Georgia originated that under their Golden Savings Plan, and Peachtree Bank used it out there on us. So in order to meet the competition with Peachtree Bank and [14] Trust we had to go it very shortly thereafter, and C&S was offering it, so we adopted their usage of it complete because we could get their forms, their study of the best method of operating, and we adopted their plan to meet Peachtree Bank's competition. But that is the basis for the change that we made.

Q. Can you recall the year in which Peachtree came out with this Golden Savings Account? A. No, sir.

Q. How did you arrive at the initial banking hours for Chamblee? A. There were two reasons for it. I had worked in the industrial area in northwest Atlanta, and late Friday I had seen these poor people that would come by with checks as we were going home. They had no place to get their checks cashed, and I felt sorry for them. So when we went to Chamblee we first considered Saturday hours, and the women said that they just didn't see how they could work Saturday, you know. "You're going to have to get a new bookkeeper," and so forth, "if you're going to open Saturday." So what we did was combine something new that had never been done in Atlanta before. We opened the bank from 4:00 to 7:00, which gave us three hours, which would be the same thing as if we opened on Saturday morning.

[15] And we advertised this very heavily—the after-hours banking—so we could give services to those people. In an industrial area like Chamblee you have 30 minutes for lunch; 45 is the maximum. And you cannot get from your place of business to the bank—all of those people cannot and get their checks cashed in that short a period of time. Here was a way to get more deposits.

So it was just interpreting the needs of the area that determined the hours. And for a long time we were the only bank in the Atlanta area that had banking till 6:00 o'clock on Friday.

Q. Was this strictly your idea, or had anyone from C&S made any suggestion that you stay open? A. My idea completely.

Q. In the Chamblee bank who has the authority to change, for example, the interest rates paid on various accounts? A. I don't think it would be done without a good deal of discussion, pros and cons, the cost of the change, how it would affect your customers. I don't think any one individual would make such a change without a good deal of consultation with all the parties that he could talk with to try to arrive at the best basis for it. I think it would be, like Mr. Johnson used to call it, a consensus decision.

[16] Q. Are you saying, then, that the board of directors of Chamblee did not say to you, "It's up to you to change interest paid on savings accounts"? A. I would not do anything of that nature without discussing it with the board.

Q. And would a change of that nature require approval by the board of directors? A. No, sir. I don't think that we would have formal approval, but they would be fully aware. Remember, the directors out there sell. We've got a selling team, new business team, and they have got to be aware of the services the bank offers, of every bit of it every time a change is made so that they can sell the services. We have a competition out there between those directors with two teams. So naturally any changes made in operating procedures they must be given information about so that they can sell these new changes to the public.

Q. Would that be the same situation so far as changing service charges on checking accounts would be concerned? A. I think so. We would not change without their knowledge. We would try to discuss the pros and cons of any changes. And usually with a change of that nature where the public is affected you wait a long time and [17] you study it very thoroughly because a customer knows what his basic charge would be and then when you go to change it he gets sort of confused and unhappy. So we would give a lot of thought to any change.

Q. Were you given authority to change banking hours? A. Well, we changed them. I don't know whether I was given authority, but I think it was done after we were open on Friday till 7:00 and we found that we had no customers from 6:00 to 7:00 to amount to anything—only a very few scattered ones. And that meant an extra hour's pay or usually overtime. And therefore it became economically more profitable to close at 6:00 rather than 7:00. So after giving the public several months' notice we started changing it to 6:00 instead of 7:00.

Again it was a long discussion as to the practical side of it. Most all of the things we did were from a practical nature.

Q. When you made the decision to close at 6:00 rather than 7:00 on Friday, did you consult with anyone from C&S in regard to that particular matter? A. We reviewed it with them, yes, I feel sure because I would not want to do something that they were not aware of. If we had any printed material, for example, we'd certainly want the printed material to carry the [18] correct hours.

Q. What you just said may be an answer to this question, but I'd better ask it anyway. When you say you wouldn't do something like that without reviewing it with them, what was the reason for reviewing your change in hours from 7:00 to 6:00 on Friday? A. On that particular change I don't think there was much at stake. I don't think there was a great deal of review—more of an information review so they would know what we were doing or a matter of information, but there was very little pro and con regarding the change there.

Q. Before making a change in service charges on checking accounts, would you also review that with C&S? A. Yes. We would, but we have to review more with the area generally than with just C&S because I can't have a charge out there that's too widely—that varies too widely from the other banks because people will move their account from one bank. After all, all the banks have offices around there, and I've got to stay pretty close to what the downtown banks charge.

Now, the downtown banks made one change that we did not make out there, but on the second change which is major we had to go to it, and we went to it.

Q. Could you tell me what each of those two changes was? [19] A. The middle change I don't recall at all. We didn't follow it. The downtown banks followed it. I don't know what it was. But the last change where there was a $250 minimum with no charge, that was citywide and was advertised over every TV program. There was no choice we had except to go to a $250 minimum. I mean, there is no way that you can buck the tide on a thing like that.

Q. Did you review with C&S any changes that you made in the interests rates paid on any of your savings accounts? A. Yes, we did. We wanted to use their forms and their know-how. After all, we had at the maximum 10,000 accounts, and they've got 200,000 accounts. They ought to have more know-how in much of these things than we would have. So we gained all the information we could.

Q. Let me see if I understand what you're saying there. Are you saying that you in deciding whether to make a change in the interest on savings accounts would be seeking information from C&S on whether or not to make the particular change, or do you have something else in mind?

Mr. Doyle: Mr. Kinkaid, I want to object to the form of questions which proceed along the basis of "are you saying" or "are you not saying" because what [20] Mr. Harris has said is what he has said. If you want to find out what he means or if you want to find out what the facts are, that's perfectly proper, but it can read as an unfair characterization of the record in terms of "are you saying" or "are you not saying". On the basis of the form there I object to that question and to those kinds of questions.

Mr. Kinkaid: I'm trying really with those kinds of questions to see if I understand what Mr. Harris is saying. I can see where there is a problem. I'm not trying to put words in his mouth. I think that's your objection really.

Mr. Doyle: And an unfair characterization of the record, yes.

By Mr. Kinkaid

Q. Well, can you explain just what you had in mind as the reasons for reviewing with C&S the changes which you speaking of in interest rates on savings accounts? A. Such things as trends in the money market, also the future availability of money and whether it would be wise to do it. I used C&S every way possible to help in making decisions. I conferred with them on many points there. Then we'd discuss it with the directors and we'd try to get all the information from whatever source we could. We took every banking magazine, periodical, trying [21] to stay abreast of what was going on. So that with many of these things it was just part of the movement in the money market. You had to follow it.

Q. Were you reviewing any of these matters, either interest rates on savings accounts, service charges on checking accounts, with C&S in terms of seeking their approval for what you had in mind? A. Not approval; perhaps concurrence, agreement. It was the wisest thing to do.

Q. It was the wisest thing for whom to do? A. Chamblee.

Q. In making your decisions with respect to changing service charges on checking accounts or interest rates paid on savings accounts or banking hours or interest paid on loans at your bank office, have you ever taken into consideration anything other than the profitability and growth of your own bank; by that, I mean the Chamblee bank? A. We have to stay within the framework of the group that we were working with there, and our profit would have to be considered as an overall relationship that we had. So along the way we found through talking with the public that they wanted the drive-in windows open earlier than 9:00 o'clock, for example, so the change was made there. It was done, and it was found that it [22] was best to give the public a little earlier hours on the outside if they were in their cars so they could get gone. So primarily it was for the profit of the bank but at the same time to stay with the working relationship that helped to make profit.

Q. What do you mean by working relationship? A. Satisfaction of customers.

Q. In your answer when you say working relationship—and I think you also used the word group—tell me who were you including in those terms, group or relationship, C&S National or C&S Holding? A. Well, I know very little about the holding company so far as ever having any day-to-day operation with it. The holding officers are the same as the other officers. I'd deal with the office which would give me the best help. I'd use the devil himself if it would make profit.

Q. Let me ask it a different way, then, and see if I understand you. In making any changes for your bank on service charges, interest rates on loans, interest paid on saving accounts or banking hours—— A. You keep going back to banking hours. We have not made any changes in banking hours except for that one.

Q. Well, then, the other three that I mentioned before banking hours? In making decisions in changing [23] any of those three did you in any way consider your relationship with C&S National? A. Oh, yes, indeed.

Q. In what respect? A. If I'm going to get the benefit of the wide market of people moving in from Savannah, Macon, places like that, I must have something comparable to offer. So I got information as to any changes that were made so that we could be in a position to offer comparable services to the customers because people—Hell's bells, in Chamblee two out of every five move every year of their lives. So we had to be prepared for these newcomers that came in every year so we could offer the services they were familiar with. And that to a large extent dictated many of the actions that we had there. I wanted to get the business; I wanted to satisfy them; I wanted to give them that with which they were familiar. So those are the really basic factors that went into the making of many decisions there. It was a market factor, if you want to call it that.

Q. When you say comparable, you wanted to offer something comparable to these people or these newcomers, comparable to what? A. You have the day-to-day savings where a man could take it and withdraw it tomorrow, like a checking [24] account, and yet we paid a moderate rate of interest. We had other savings certificates that were self-renewing every 90 days without any action on your part. We had those that paid 5 percent or 5½ or 5¾ based on the years that they run, set by the federal government. Then we had the 5 percent savings where you could take in and take out but you could not take it out in less than a 90-day period of time. These were pretty well known throughout the state. We adopted them because they served our needs.

Q. Mr. Harris, I'm still not sure—It may be you are not completely understanding my question, or it may be I'm not understanding your answer. I'm still not sure I understand what you mean when you said that in making decisions, making your decisions, on things like interest rates and service charges one of the things you would consider would be the relationship with the C&S National. Could you try that again and see—— A. Yes. I'd call Bill Thornton. "Look, you're offering a new savings certificate. How is it going?"

"Oh, the public likes it" for so and so reason.

And then I'd call somebody at another office and say, "How is this new program going?" And I'd get either positive or negative answers. And then according to what the competition was doing, if they were offering [25] something we had to meet—But most of these things were done in an easy manner without a great deal of formality. You followed the trade, so to speak, and you put those things in operation.

Q. In other words, were you considering C&S National as a source of market information? A. Yes, sir. They had a larger number of transactions, and I wanted them wherever possible to try anything out to see if it worked rather than me taking it on and spending a lot of money trying it out and have it fail.

Q. Has C&S ever or anyone from C&S ever directed you to charge a particular service charge on any of your checking accounts? A. No, sir.

Q. Has anyone from C&S ever directed you to offer a particular interest rate on any of your savings accounts? A. No, sir.

Q. How about with respect to interest rates on any of your loans? A. No, sir.

Q. Did C&S have the ability in any way to direct you to charge particular service charges on checking accounts or particular interest rates on loans or pay particular interest rates on savings accounts of any kinds? [26] A. We'd discuss with them, and they'd give us the benefits that they found in them, and usually it was a concurrent decision. I didn't say this, but I've been in banking longer than most of them down at C&S, and I got information from them. We worked together real close all through the years there. They were more valuable to me than I was to them. I can assure you that C&S National Bank was far more valuable to me than I was to them, and I used them every way I could.

Q. Could you explain what you mean by these things—if I recall your words correctly—resulted in concurrence or agreement? Could you spell out what you meant by that? A. "We found that the new savings instrument will actually bring in the money, and we think if you used it out there it would bring in money for you."

Q. This is someone from C&S talking to you? A. Yes, sir. I'd call and get information. They'd give us their experience.

Q. Did you always reach concurrence with C&S on interest rates on loans? A. No, sir. I always followed different rates than they did on some particular type of loan. On others like prime rate we followed identically because it's countrywide.

[27] Q. In the instances where you had—Well, for example, if you can recall at this time, could you give us any examples of a loan of your bank on which the interest rate would have been different from that of C&S National? A. On construction loans they used the 1 percent service charge and Chamblee used a 1½ percent service charge.

Q. Did C&S or anyone from C&S suggest to you that you use 1½ rather than 1? A. No, sir. They were aware that I was using it.

Q. When you were active as president of Chamblee, did you feel that your actions as president were in any way controlled by C&S or anyone from C&S? A. My actions were to a large extent controlled by information received from C&S. I made my actions based on reference to material and some of the things that they had tried out in advance.

Q. Well, did you feel that any of your actions were controlled by C&S in the sense that you would not take a particular action unless you had the approval of C&S? A. No, sir. I don't think it went that far. Nobody ever tried to force me at all.

Q. Excuse me. I thought you were going to say [28] something. A. No.

Q. Okay. From your standpoint could anybody have forced you to do anything at Chamblee? A. You just don't know how damn stubborn I am.

Q. I take it, then, your answer is no? A. (Nods head affirmatively.)

[4] Whereupon,

T. ROBERT HAZELRIG

was called as a witness and, having first been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Lehman

Q. Mr. Hazelrig, how long have you been president of C&S Executive Park National? A. Since July 14, 1967.

Q. Were you the original president of the bank? A. Yes, I was.

Q. Could you tell me, please, what your prior banking experience was? A. Yes, I'll be glad to. I came to work at the C&S during the summer of 1951 in what was then known as the executive training program, junior executive training program. My first job was checking tapes in the proof department and getting acquainted with bookkeeping operations. After about three months in that area I was transferred to the installment loan area where I learned to handle installment loans, and I advanced during the next two and a half years to manager of direct installment loans. Shortly thereafter I went to the credit department where I stayed almost a year. I then went to the Tenth Street Branch of the C&S National, where I [5] served in various capacities. I set up the credit files for that bank, organized them in accordance with the way the downtown files were set up and made loans and was a customer service person, just sort of a jack of all trades at that branch.

From that point I was chosen to be one of the first members of the Buddy System that C&S was starting where two or three officers, a junior officer, worked with a senior officer in various areas.

And I came down and after a short term became assistant real estate officer at the C&S National Bank. During that time I also handled all the bank's placement of insurance. I also established a C&S-wide, Atlanta area sort of moral and efficiency organization known as the "CS Stars." The main purpose of this was to help the morale and the efficiency of all the employees in the Atlanta area as well as to help us in our competition for the Mills B. Lane trophy for the best bank in the C&S system. Well, the first year, we placed very high; the second year, we won the award. Various other odd jobs which included calling on business developments in the insurance and real estate area principally, and, after about a year and a half in that area —well, about two years, I sort of doubled in brass and went into the national accounts area. I served as a commercial loan officer, real estate officer and did a lot of other things, [6] but I also began to travel up in the area of northern Virginia and eastern Ohio, including Canada, making calls on national companies, both there and locally, for their Atlanta counterparts.

I stayed in that position until June of 1962, when I was transferred to the New York service office of the C&S where I concentrated principally on calling for the bank in the New York area but also pretty strongly in the same area I mentioned before, northern Virginia and eastern Ohio, including Canada.

In 1964 I returned to Atlanta, at which time I continued to call in that same northeastern area and locally and took on a few additional minor jobs.

I had expressed an interest while I was in New York—since I was in national accounts for such a long time and I felt that I might utilize my talents in other areas better—an interest in setting up a bank of my own as I knew that C&S was sponsoring a number of banks around in areas where they could not locate branches, and in November of 1965, on Thanksgiving Eve, I was approached by the chairman of the board, Mr. Glenn, and Herb Dixon, who then, I think, had the title of vice president, about the fact that Mr. Handley and Mr. Starks wanted to talk with me about starting a bank for C&S. They also told me they would like for me to stay in a more important position in national accounts but that they [7] would let me make up my own mind about that.

I talked with Mr. Starks and Mr. Handley, and, after much thought, I decided that I would like to start a bank of the sort, the 5 percenter type, and I began in about February of 1966 to do so. And from 1966 to 1967, in early July, I continued to sort of work in national accounts; I did a lot of trust work and organized the bank all at the same time.

And that brings us up to the point of my becoming president of the C&S Executive Park National Bank.

Q. In these early discussions with Mr. Handley and Mr. Starks, what was discussed concerning your relationship between the two banks, what the relationship would be? A. That, I don't believe, was discussed. I knew that this was a C&S sponsored bank, but I don't think that we discussed it at all. The C&S could not go into the Executive Park area with a branch by the existing laws at that time, and a lot of our customers, a lot of the C&S National Bank customers, had moved out there, a number of which I had solicited when I was in the national accounts division. The Sinclair account, which I happened to solicit, the American Oil, all these people wanted to have banking close to them. And I understood that that was one of the things that C&S National was trying to do. But we really didn't go into a lot of detail about that. I don't remember anything other [8] that reference that we needed banking in that area and that the customers wanted C&S banking out that way.

Q. Now, you had been with C&S National for approximately 15 years when you made the break to Executive Park National? A. Yes.

Q. What prompted you to leave C&S National to go into Executive Park National? A. I didn't really feel that I was leaving. In fact, I made the remark that, although technically I was resigning to take on a new position, I made it quite clear that if my talents could be ultilized downtown in a more important job for C&S than as president of that bank that I would not be forgotten. I made it clear because I didn't want to be forgotten if there was something better for me to do downtown.

Q. Did they make it clear that you would not be forgotten? A. That is true.

Q. Would you consider, then, your becoming president of the Park National Bank a stepping stone in your career with C&S National? A. Yes, I felt that it was a very good career for Bob Hazelrig, who had a liberal arts background, an A.B. in English and a Masters in English Literature, to become a banker and to see, really, what he had learned in 15 years [9] and also an opportunity to do something that maybe I and C&S would be real proud of.

Q. Who selected you as the president of this bank? A. Legally, the board of directors. However, I'm not really sure; Mr. Starks and Mr. Handley were the ones who told me that I would go out to this bank as head of the bank, but actually the board in June of 1967 elected me president just prior to the opening of the bank.

Q. Who selected the other management employees of the Park National Bank? A. I did myself.

Q. How did you select these people? A. I first figured out the positions I would need, and then I started going for the best people I could find. I was told that people would be available from C&S. I wanted C&S trained people if possible. Actually, my cashier I went outside the bank to get, a young man who had been, maybe—at least he felt he had been overlooked at C&S and had left the bank a year before, but C&S was very sorry he left and they were delighted to see that I was interested in getting him. I got him back for the bank. He was C&S trained; I think at that time he was with a finance company, I don't know the—or Westinghouse Electric Credit Corporation, I believe. But he was a C&S trained person, and I got him because he had been highly recommended to me. Various other people I just [10] got in my talking with various people around the bank. Sometimes I went around circuitously and found good people, and if they wanted to volunteer for the job, the bank looked with favor upon their working with me.

Q. Were some of these people selected not C&S trained people? A. No. Since the bank has opened we have hired other people outside the bank, but we have hired them through the C&S National Bank. We pay them a fee to do that for us.

Q. Are you presently a director of the bank? A. Yes, I am; chairman.

Q. Have you been since—— A. Yes, always since the beginning.

Q. When the bank was forming, did you make any type of commitments to C&S as far as obtaining their assistance in helping form the bank? A. No, I did not.

Q. By the same token—— A. I assumed that I would get quite a bit of cooperation from them, and I got it. But we never discussed it. There were never any written or verbal agreements of any sort.

Q. I would also ask that question as to the continuing assistance as opposed to the organizational assistance? A. The same answer would apply.

Q. Did C&S attach any conditions to the formative [11] assistance given to your bank? A. No. If I understood the earlier question, we did enter into a number of agreements after we opened for such things as bookkeeping service, computer service and so on, data processing.

Q. The normal correspondence service? A. Yes, the normal correspondence service.

Q. Did you utilize any other bank as a correspondent bank? A. Yes, we did; the C&S Emory—first of all the C&S DeKalb Bank and then later the C&S Emory Bank.

Q. Any bank outside the C&S family? A. No. We had a lot of them who called on us, but we didn't feel that they offered good services.

Q. Now I'll get back to my second question as far as were there any conditions to the C&S continuing assistance? A. No, there were not.

Q. Does the board of directors in your bank fix your salary? A. Yes, they do.

Q. Do they fix the salaries of the other officers in the bank? A. No, they do not.

Q. Who does that? A. I do.

[12] Q. Are you also the approving authority for the salary as to the other officers? A. Yes, and also the employees.

Q. Does the board of directors play any part as far as the approval is concerned of the salary of the other—— A. No, only in the election of officers and the promotions of officers, titularly.

Q. Is it proper to say that you are the final approving authority for the salaries of the officers other than yourself? A. I'm the originator and the final approving authority in that situation.

Q. Is this approval given by you subject to C&S approval at all? A. No, it is not. Sometimes—I would like to add this—sometimes I discuss with them what I'm planning to do. I don't always do this. I remember one situation where I was going to do it, but—I think it was something like a very healthy raise, and, realizing that this person had come to the bank with the understanding that he would stay and accomplish a good job at C&S Park National, he also had been given an understanding—not any type of legal, written agreement, but he had hoped to do big things in the C&S National Bank, and before giving this rather sizable raise to this young man I wanted to consult with them so that they [13] would be happy with my choice. I felt that it was well for them—we had two advisors on our board, and I really think I consulted with the advisors rather than the C&S National Bank, but they were people who knew a little more about the salary situation in banking than I did.

Q. Who recommended your salary, if you know? A. The board of directors.

Q. Is this subject to any C&S approval, C&S National approval? A. No, it is not. However, the board usually defers to one of our two advisors for an appropriate amount. In such situations I have been asked to leave the room, and I am told—well, let me put it another way; I understand that they do defer to either Mr. Handley or to Mr. Don Ingram as to what would be an appropriate raise for me. Those advisors, incidentally, are advisors to the board.

Q. Do they have a vote? A. No, they do not.

Q. Who decided on the initial rates as far as interest paid on savings accounts and services charges at your bank? A. In our meeting in June, in the last meeting of the organizing directors, I was given authority to make various management decisions, which included rate setting. I made these decisions based on competitive situations in the area. I made these rate decisions on loans, savings and all other [14] types of things—within the limits of the law, of course.

Q. Did you also make the decision as to your initial banking hours? A. Yes. I did. These were approved at the last meeting of the organizing directors in July 1967, just prior to our opening. They were approved by the board of directors.

Q. Is it safe to say that the board of directors, then, in these instances ratified your decisions? A. There was always discussion. They have always approved my recommendations. Perhaps once or twice there were some changes based on what they thought or what they wanted.

Q. They've given you pretty much free rein as far as the bank is concerned? A. Yes. Yes, they have.

Q. Did you have the authority—Are you the one vested with the authority to change the interest rates now on savings accounts, paid on savings accounts? A. Would you repeat that question?

Q. Okay. Are you now still the one that changes the interest rates paid on savings accounts if there is to be a change? A. Yes, I am. We've made very few changes in the five years.

Q. Can you think of some changes that you have made as far as interest rates? [15] A. Yes, but I don't remember the dates. We did add a package of loans, so-called 5 percenter loans, and there were some changes in the certificates, or they varied by length of time. But these, once again, were done because they were being done by C&S and also by C&S competitors and by C&S Park National competitors, too.

Q. Are you also the one who has authority to change interest rates charged on loans? A. Yes.

Q. And the same as far as service charges on checking accounts? A. Yes.

Q. Perhaps we covered this area before, but from where did you derive this authority? A. From the board at our meeting in June 1967 before the bank opened.

Q. Have you had an occasion to change the interest rates paid on loans since the bank's inception? A. Yes.

Mr. Doyle: I assume that means charged on loans?

By Mr. Lehman

Q. Yes, excuse me; interest rates charged on loans. A. Charged on loans, yes. In fact this is done sometimes daily. We are in a rather highly competitive area. The Trust Company of Georgia came out last year with—oh, 5¾ percent [16] add-on rate on automobile loans or some of the finance companies were lowering their rates. We needed loans very badly. We've been strictly a—we have not been strictly, but we have been a pretty good depository bank, but loans have been very hard to get for us, and so in an attempt to increase our loan volume we have many times altered rates according to the individual and according to the competitive situation in our area. And we do this regularly now.

Q. In making these changes that you have made over the years at your bank that we've been talking about, have you ever taken anything into consideration other than the best interest of your bank at Park National? A. Yes, the best interest of our customers and prospects.

Q. Anyone else? A. No.

Q. Has C&S National ever directed you to change interest rates charged on loans? A. No, sir.

Q. I'll ask the same question as to service charges on checking accounts? A. No, sir.

Q. And interest rates paid on savings accounts? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you feel that C&S National has the ability to dictate any policy or program in your bank? [17] A. No, sir. However, I was a C&S trained person; I liked the way C&S did business. I was very largely influenced by them while I worked here, and I have been largely influenced by them since I have been president of the C&S Park National Bank. It's a desirable influence. I feel that C&S does more to try to help the people in Georgia than any other bank. If I left the bank today I couldn't go to work for another bank in Georgia, because I feel that strongly. And I've sold it. It's my job. As you probably can tell from my resume, I have been selling most of the time. I'm a pretty honest fellow, and I don't think I could—one time C&S, when I was at C&S National Bank, came out with a savings package which was not competitive, but that's the only time in my 20 years of being associated with the C&S Bank that I couldn't sell because I didn't believe in it. I believe in C&S, and I sell C&S. I sold C&S while I was at C&S National, and I sell C&S and C&S Park National where I am now.

Q. Do you feel their programs are competitive now, the various programs? A. C&S National?

Q. Yes. A. Yes, I do.

Q. Are your bank's programs competitive? A. Yes, sir. I hope so, and I think so.

Q. Do you attend these Wednesday morning meetings, I [18] it is, at the bank? A. What do you mean by "these Wednesday morning meetings"?

Q. The Wednesday morning meetings. A. I do happen to attend a Wednesday morning meeting, but I used to attend a Monday morning meeting, and I think it has been on various days. I'm not really sure which meeting you're talking about.

Q. Well, these are the meetings of the presidents of the various correspondent associate banks and affiliate banks. A. Well, I come to two meetings on Wednesday. Since I left the C&S National Bank I have been invited to attend the presidents' so-called Wednesday morning meeting, which starts at—it's a 7:30 or 8:00 o'clock meeting which starts at 7:00 o'clock. I have tried not to miss any of these meetings because I think Mills Lane is an amazing man, and even if the meeting lasted only three or four minutes, they were always worthwhile to skip breakfast and come down and hear him.

I might clarify further that not only was I as president of an associate bank there, but all the officers of the C&S National Bank came at various times; they had various people. They even had a few regulatory authorities and may even have had some Justice Department people there on occasion. It was a meeting to which the general public was—well, the general public was not invited except upon a formal invitation. [19] This usually was over—and I have continued since Mr. Kattel became president and I don't like to miss those meetings because I always learn something of economic value about what's going on in banking, and they are a worldwide banking organization, and I find out a lot of things I am very much interested in. At 8:00 o'clock, if the Lane or Kattel meeting were over, I then, as of the past six months—these meetings would vary from time to time—attended a credit meeting which was attended by the presidents of some of the other 5 percenter bank. Sometimes one of the C&S National Bank officers would be there. Usually that person would be a person who was in an advisory position to the banks, and we would swap ideas and review some credits and compare notes and, after the fact, get a reading of the minds of the other presidents and sometimes cashiers and various management associates, and it's a swapping of ideas.

A lot of the young men—I think I had a pretty strong credit background, but there were a lot of the young men who were presidents of the banks who—it was all sort of a relative situation as to the degree of experience these men had, and some of the guys with more experience imparted ideas and helped to educate the younger guys with less experience, and then some of the younger guys would give us some real bright ideas, also, and I was not invited to attend this—I didn't know about this meeting until the first year or so that [20] my bank was open. But since I found out about it I've tried to attend that every time it comes up, which usually is weekly.

Q. Is your attendance at the earlier meetings, is that a mandatory attendance? A. No, sir.

Q. As to the second meeting on Wednesdays, in the credit meeting, just what is the purpose of this meeting? A. Well, I thought I answered that. The purpose of the meeting—the major purpose would be to impart ideas for presidents—well, for the officers of the 5 percenter banks, to impart ideas to each other regarding lending policies of the banks, of the respective banks, and to benefit from actual reviewing of loan situations.

Q. You actually review loans that were already made? A. Yes, sir, we do, I think our guideline is loans over $25,000. We review these. I feel reasonably sure that certainly all of us have benefited from the—oh, analyzing financial statements; various of us analyze financial statements and put emphases on certain things in different ways, and I think that all of us have learned from this. And, of course, this has been very educational to all of us. I think the main value of it is to help each other to edify ourselves in the area of lending and also to keep—one of the benefits I find is that occasionally one of our associate banks or [21] sister banks would be banking a mutual customer, and we are always interested in this because we generally don't like to—we like to keep up with our customers, and occasionally we can find that somebody we thought banked exclusively with us banked at one of the other C&S associate banks, and this gives us an opportunity to put some curbs, if necessary, on that situation.

Q. In this discussion of credit, do you establish guidelines to be followed at these meetings as far as—— A. Do I establish them?

Q. I mean the people at attendance at the meeting, various people.

Mr. Doyle: I'm sorry; I didn't hear the question. Do you establish guidelines for what?

By Mr. Lehman

Q. For your credit programs in the banks.

By Mr. Doyle: Establish guidelines for your credit programs?

Mr. Lehman: Yes.

The Deponent: Shall I proceed?

Mr. Doyle: Yes.

The Deponent: Yes, we do, but these are changing guidelines which we ourselves change. There usually members of the C&S National Bank Credit Department there; we utilize them to spread statements. I can't, with the various things [22] I do, spread all the statements, financial statements, and get various information ready for these meetings or for reviewing their own credit prior to making loans. They are there. Most of these men are relatively new with the bank and are sometimes head of the credit department. Through them sometimes the advisory C&S banking officers, occasionally the head of the C&S National Bank Credit Department attend these meetings to bring us up to date on new angles in lending, and we change our guidelines. They are pretty well cut and dried, though; it's not all that complicated. We vary them according to what's most beneficial to us, we think.

Q. I have some documents here that were produced in response to our interrogatories, and if you would I would like for you to take a moment and just look through these (presenting). A. All of these? Do you want me to take them one at a time?

Q. No. I just want to ask you some questions about them afterwards. A. All right.

Q. First of all, have you received documents such as these? A. Yes, I have.

Mr. Doyle: Wait a minute; I object to that question. [23] What is a document "such as this"?

Mr. Lehman: As the ones I've shown him.

Mr. Doyle: Well, I object to the question as being vague and ambiguous. I don't know what a document "such as this" is. If you mean "Have you received copies of the same piece of paper," I think that's an appropriate question and we could reflect it accurately in the record. I don't know if that's your question. I'm not trying to suggest your question, but I don't know what a "document such as this" is.

Mr. Lehman: Well, I'll change it, then.

By Mr. Lehman

Q. Have you received copies of these documents, to the best of your knowledge, at Park National? A. I have received memoranda similar to these, and these may well be copies of the ones I have received.

Q. For what purpose do you receive such memoranda? A. I noticed on these that there were—out of these eight or nine, there was only one that had "For information only, correspondent associates." The C&S, as an aid to us, since we opened our bank, I didn't like the thought that I would be leaving the C&S National Bank and just getting completely out of touch with what they were thinking about and doing. We get copies of the "Southern Citizen," the house organ; we get copies of their memoranda, certain [24] memoranda which they feel may be helpful or of interest to us. I think probably—I see now that there are two that say "For information only" as pertains to correspondent associates. I assume these are being sent to me as guides which I myself would use for that purpose in thinking about interest rates and banking hours and so on. It's of interest to me to know what's going on in the C&S National Bank. I like the way they do business. It's also of interest to me to know what the people across the street are doing. They have several competitors, and I like to know these things.

C&S is nice enough to keep me apprised of what's going on, and I use this information that they send me. Mr. Pfaff, I think, has written most of these. Before, other people have sent other memoranda that they felt would be helpful to me, and I have used them to good advantage. But I use them as information only.

Q. We discussed the one——

Mr. Lehman: Excuse me, Mike.

Mr. Doyle: I object to the testimony proceeding in this way because we are talking about documents which are not presently identified in the record. Unless these documents are made a part of the record and for that purpose, I object to this entire line of questioning as to a matter of form on the ground that it is ambiguous and misleading unless the documents which are basically the subject matter of the [25] testimony are also made a part of the record. And if that is the case, then I ask that they be so marked and identified at this time in order that Bob's answers will be keyed in on the record for the sake of clarity, and we will all know a month from now what it was we were talking about.

Mr. Lehman: Off the record a minute.

(Off the record discussion.)

(Documents were marked as Presidents' Deposition Exhibits PD-EX 1 through PD-EX 6 for identification.)

Mr. Lehman: The documents that we have been previously referring to have been marked Presidents' Deposition Exhibits 1 through 6. The two exhibits we were discussing containing "For information only" to presidents, correspondent associates were Exhibit 5 and Exhibit 6.

By Mr. Lehman

Q. Mr. Hazelrig, I will now show you what has been marked Presidents' Deposition Exhibit No. 2 for identification. This one has no "For information only" on it, and I notice in the heading it's to the branch managers, presidents of affiliates and presidents of correspondent associate banks. For what purpose would you receive this document? A. Am I on record with my previous answer, the last answer pertaining to some of these documents?

[26] Q. Right. A. For information only. That is the reason for receiving this, I assume for sending it, and I certainly considered it as a helpful aid.

Q. If you know, why would one memorandum be termed "For information only" as far as the presidents of correspondent associates? A. Well, I assume for about the same reason my secretary frequently forgets to put a copy to somebody. I think this may be very likely just an error of omission. But the C&S National does not dictate rates to us. This is for information, as an aid to us. I'm sure that's the reason they send it.

Q. If I may summarize as to the correspondence that has been marked Deposition Exhibits 1 through 6, the purpose of your reception of these is merely for information only purposes to keep you apprised of what—— A. C&S is thinking and doing; yes.

Q. These are not directives, then? A. Absolutely not.

Q. Is there any time that you have followed the advice contained in these memoranda that you have received, to the best of your knowledge, as to rate changes, perhaps? A. I don't know. I read the Wall Street Journal and I read the American Banker; I read these memoranda and I try [27] to keep up to date on what's going on in banking, and I could well have followed the advice, if you call it advice. I call it information.

I have heeded the information to the extent that I felt it would be beneficial to our bank and to our customers.

Q. As president of Park National, do you feel that you were controlled by C&S National in your workings as president of Park National? A. I'm not controlled by anybody, personally; as an officer of the bank I am controlled to the extent that I want to do things by the board of directors. Because I like the influence of C&S, if they ever asked me to do something that would be helpful to them, I would do it. Once again, I say I like the C&S style of doing business, which I think started with Mills B. Lane, Jr., and I am not a controlled person. I have a little creativity of my own, and I don't really like to think of myself as controlled by anything but maybe God.

Q. In this last answer of yours, you have stated in the first portion of it that if C&S asked you to do something, you would do it——

Mr. Doyle: I object to that characterization of the testimony because that is not the way it was put, and I object to the characterizations of testimony when they are not accurately reflecting the testimony on the record. The [28] record shows what it does show, and I have no objection to your referring to prior testimony, but I do object to your attempting to summarize it when you do summarize it incorrectly as you did in that last question. The record speaks for itself.

Mr. Lehman: Could you read back his last answer?

(Reporter read back last answer.)

By Mr. Lehman

Q. Based on your last answer, Mr. Hazelrig, if C&S were to ask you to do something that would be helpful to C&S, yet would not be in the best interest of your bank, would you do what C&S requested? A. No, sir.

The deposition of Dr. W. Andrew Irvin, Deponent, taken at the instance of the Plaintiff, reading and signing of the deposition not waived, before Roberta Newberry, Deposition Officer, commencing at 3:30 p.m., July 27, 1972, at the Citizens and Southern National Bank, Atlanta, Fulton County, Georgia.

[12] Q. Did you also discuss in these earlier meetings as to what name the bank would take? A. As far as I was concerned, it was always the C&S Bank. That's all we've ever had up there. We've had a big sign, "C&S".

Q. Who came up with the original idea for the name? Was this the thought of the three directors? A. Well, as I said, when Archie Lindsey called me, he said, "Would you like to help form a C&S Bank of Roswell?" And I said, "Sure." So that was it.

Q. Do you know who handled your charter application? A. No, I don't. As I say, as far as I was concerned, this was the C&S Bank of Roswell.

Q. Was there also discussion at this time as to which bank or banks you would seek to act as your correspondent banks? A. As I said, we were a C&S bank.

* * * * * * * *

[18] Q. From the time the board of directors met after the opening of the bank, has there ever been a C&S National person sitting on the board? A. We've had an advisor at all times.

Q. From the beginning? A. From the very beginning.

Q. What is his function? A. Advisor. He has no vote.

Q. He has no vote? A. He's an advisor.

Q. Do you request advice or does he offer advice? A. We expect advice when we need it.

Q. In other words, he would offer you advice? A. Oh, yes. That's what he's there for—to help us in anything we need. We don't profess to be bankers.

Mr. Lehman: In our discussion today I will probably be referring to C&S National, and when I do, I will probably also be referring to their affiliate banks and C&S Holding Company. I will probably be using them interchangeably as opposed to the correspondent associates, the five percenters, which I shall call the five percenter correspondents.

Mr. Grant: Excuse me. So I can understand this, when you say C&S National, that means C&S National?

Mr. Lehman: Branches and affiliates.

Mr. Grant: Branches and affiliates?

Mr. Lehman: Yes.

The Deponent: In East Point and DeKalb?

Mr. Lehman: Right.

Mr. Grant: Does that include C&S Holding?

Mr. Lehman: I may use them interchangeably, but I'll spell it out when I use the correspondent associates. I'll try and be as specific as I can.

The Deponent: Fine.

Whereupon,

HUGH F. LANE

was called as a witness and, having been first duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

[5] Direct Examination

By Mr. Lehman

Q. Would you please state your name. A. Hugh F. Lane.

Q. What is your present home address? A. 5555 Wright Road, Northeast, Atlanta, Georgia.

Q. What is your occupation? A. I'm president of the C&S Bank of North Fulton.

Q. How long have you been president of this bank? A. Since the bank was originated. We opened for business in June of 1967.

Q. Prior to your becoming president of North Fulton, what was your occupation? A. I was an assistant vice president with the Citizens and Southern Bank of Sandy Springs.

Q. How long had you been with the C&S organization? A. Since May of 1960.

Q. How did you happen to find out about the position of president of C&S North Fulton, if you recall? A. Yes, I recall. I was called in by Mr. Louis Fortuna, who was the president then of the Citizens and Southern Bank of North Fulton—I mean—excuse me—Sandy Springs—and he informed me that we had a group interested in organizing a bank in Roswell, and that I [6] had been selected to run the bank, if I so desired.

Q. By whom had you been selected? A. By the Board of Directors.

Q. Had you met the Board of Directors prior to that time? A. I had known them, most of the Board of Directors. The originators, I might call them, were customers of C&S Bank that lived in Roswell. For instance, Dr. Andrew Irving, Archie Lindsey, Harold Benson. All of these fellows banked with the C&S Bank, and I had known them personally before.

Q. Did you also discuss this fact of your going to North Fulton with anyone from C&S National? A. No, I didn't. I was delighted to have the opportunity to serve in this capacity. It was a real challenge.

Q. Why did you consider it a challenge? A. Well, any new business in an area like Roswell, which was rapidly—Well, at that point in time it was not growing as rapidly, probably, as Sandy Springs, but it was inevitable that it would be a future growth area, primarily because it's a bedroom life community, as is Sandy Springs, bedroom industry, but a lot of influx of newcomers.

Q. Would you consider the opportunities for North [7] Fulton as good as they would have been in Sandy Springs? A. Yes.

Q. Speaking in a business sense, promotions, things like that? A. Yes.

Q. Were you also one of the organizers of C&S North Fulton? A. Yes. Well, the decision to attempt to charter a bank in Roswell had been made when I was brought in, and from that point on I was given the ball to carry, to get together the charter application, submit the charter application to the state and FDIC, and start the bank from scratch, build the building, locate the property, name the bank.

Q. Were you told of what the relationship between C&S National and C&S North Fulton would be by Mr. Fortuna? A. Of the relationship between C&S National and C&S North Fulton by Fortuna?

Q. Yes. A. I don't think it was necessary. I had been with C&S long enough that if it was going to be a C&S bank, I felt that I knew what the relationship should be.

Q. Were you also one of the original directors? A. Yes, I was.

Q. Are you chairman of the Board of Directors? [8] A. No. I was acting chairman until recently, and we elected Dr. Andrew Irving as chairman of the board.

Q. When was Dr. Irving selected? A. This was the early part of last year, '71, and re-elected at the annual stockholders meeting, at the first directors meeting after the annual stockholders meeting in '72.

Q. Now, you have mentioned you were selected by the Board of Directors as president? A. As I understood it, they were given a choice of people. They knew me. They knew that I had lived in the area, and that I had worked in Sandy Springs for four or five years, and they felt that of the choices, I assume, they were given, that I was the man.

Q. Do you know who the others were, the other selectees? A. I have no idea.

Q. Did they also—did the Board of Directors also select the other management of the bank? A. No, they did not. I did.

Q. From where did you select these people? A. There was only one other officer of the bank to be selected, and this young man came from C&S National.

Q. What was his name? [9] A. Ted Mackey, who at the time was not an officer of the bank. He was in the auditing department, and operation oriented.

Q. Had you also selected the other employees of the bank? A. Yes, I did. I had each one of them—I interviewed them and had them screened through the Personnel Department of the C&S National Bank, because they were better equipped to do this, naturally, than I was. Then we put them to work in the various branches after an orientation period and screening period until our bank was ready to open.

Q. Excuse me. Did C&S train these people also? Is that my understanding? C&S National? A. Yes, they did.

Q. Did you pay for the service, as far as this training was concerned? A. Yes, for each person that they screened or interviewed or orient or train, we pay them for the service.

Q. I see. How would you make—What was the procedure, that you would make it known to C&S National Bank that you needed, say, an officer or employee? Was there a set procedure that you would go through? A. No set procedure. I just simply let it be [10] known through the Personnel Department that there was a need.

Q. What banks are your correspondent banks? A. C&S National Bank and the affiliates of C&S National, all affiliates, although we have one that we had an account with other than the National Bank, and this was at my discretion.

Q. Did C&S National offer you or give you formative assistance in starting the bank in North Fulton—excuse me—at Roswell? A. Yes, they did.

Q. Whom did you request this assistance of, or did they offer it, if you recall? A. Well, I requested the assistance. I had never chartered a bank. I was familiar with the feasibility studies and things of that nature that were required by the State Banking Department to justify a competitive bank in a town that had only one bank, but I needed all the assistance from the Marketing Department and Personnel Department at C&S National that I could get, and I didn't hesitate to call on them.

Q. Were there any commitments made by you in order to receive this assistance from C&S National? A. None whatsoever.

Q. I might ask the same question as to the continuing assistance, rendered you by C&S National. [11] A. Yes. I have never hesitated to call on the C&S National Bank for any reason whatsoever, relating to personnel, to loans, to procedures, security procedures, policies that I was not clear on.

Q. I think my question was as to the continuing assistance, and not as opposed to the formative assistance. There were no conditions attached to the C&S providing you this assistance? A. Would you define your conditions.

Q. Okay. For example, would you have to keep a cash balance with C&S National, or you would have to use them solely as your participants in loan participations? A. No. I would, of course, prefer to use it.

Q. There has been some mention by other presidents as to the C&S style of banking. Are you aware of the C&S style of banking? A. Yes, I am. I would like to think we are the most aggressive, most qualified. We try to find ways to make things happen.

Q. Do you know of any other style, any other trained in any other style? A. No, I haven't. I had no desire to be.

Q. When you left Sandy Springs to head North Fulton, C&S North Fulton, were you expecting to run that [12] as a branch of C&S National? A. No. It was the C&S Bank of North Fulton, a separate entity. However, I did allow it to follow as closely as I could the C&S procedures for running a bank.

Q. Right. But you were free to run it as you saw fit to run it? A. That is correct, with the directors behind me, of course.

Q. Who fixes the salaries of the officers in the bank? A. Our directors.

Q. Who fixes for all officers—— A. No. Excuse me. I am the president, and I fix the salaries of the other employees, including the officers.

Q. When you fix the salaries of the other officers, do you have to seek approval from the Board of Directors before any increase? A. No, I do not. Routinely I do for the officers, but they only have one officer, and as far as other employees are concerned, it is left to my discretion.

Q. So in recapping as to the final approval to the officer's salary, that would lie with the Board of Directors? [13] A. Not necessarily, but as a courtesy I recommend to them, and if they have some qualms about my recommendation, then of course they are very vocal, and they can express their own opinion.

Q. How was your salary determined? Do you know? I would imagine that it would be determined by the Board of Directors based on the job that was being done. A. You mean originally or presently?

Q. Presently. A. Presently I think it would be based on what we had accomplished.

Q. Now, let's go to originally. Do you know how it was determined? A. Well, they knew what I was making. I assume it had been discussed, and I would say it was a nominal increase for taking this additional responsibility.

Q. When you left Sandy Springs, did you have to forsake, for instance, your pension plan or your profit sharing plan? A. I did not.

Q. Were these carried over when you went to North Fulton? A. Yes, they were.

Q. Were these plans—— A. They were adopted originally by our bank.

[14] Q. Okay. A. We elected to go with the C&S National Bank's profit sharing and pension fund, so that those that are leaving C&S banks and going to other opportunities like C&S North Fulton do not have to give up these.

Q. Do you know if your salary or the salary of any other employees of the bank is subject to any kind of approval from C&S National? A. I know for a fact that it is not. My board might from time to time ask for recommendations, but whether or not they abide by these recommendations, I couldn't tell you.

Q. From whom would they ask these recommendations? A. I would imagine it would be the advisory board member from C&S National.

Q. Who is it presently? A. Presently it's Charlie Hoskins.

Q. I take it he has not been with you from the beginning? A. No, he has not. Would you like them in——

Q. No, it won't be necessary. Somewhere along the line we've referred to most of the advisory directors. Who decided the initial rates on interest to be paid on savings accounts? A. Well, generally the rates—there are guidelines for savings accounts that are set up by the state [15] regulatory authorities. However, having been familiar with the C&S systems rates and whathaveyou, I elected to go along with the rates that they were charging at the time.

Q. Now, as to the rates set by the regulatory agencies, the payment on maximum—— A. Maximum.

Q. Maximum? A. Yes. And I think you'll find that most of the banks in town to be competitive have more or less stayed very much in keeping with the maximum allowed.

Q. Did you just look to the C&S savings interest rate that they were paying, or did you look to what your competition in the area was paying? A. Well, the competition in the area certainly had a lot to do with it. I might explain a little about the competition in the area. North Fulton, as the name implies, encompasses Roswell and the City of Alpharetta. There was one bank in each town, one finance company in each town, and one savings and loan association in Roswell. At one point in time, at the point of origin of our bank, all of these banks were owned by the same person. All of these institutions were owned by the same man, with only enough stockholders outstanding to have a board of directors.

[16] Q. Was this man Mac Robins? A. No, it wasn't. It wasn't at the time. Later it became Mac Robins and the same situation exists now. Not having had a competitive situation, I then used more or less as a guideline what the competition was doing, and this did not necessitate possibly my paying the maximum, charging the minimum, or whathaveyou.

Q. But your rates were competitive, as far as interest? A. Correct.

Q. Who decided your initial banking hours? A. I did.

Q. How were these determined? A. These were determined again. You were going into a new situation in a town, I felt that we should have at least as much to offer the public as they had, plus possibly a little more. Our hours are different from any other C&S bank, although they are similar in a sense. We open at 9:00 o'clock. That day's work ends at 2:00. We then open from 2:00 until 5:00. Both drive-ins and inside windows from 2:00 until 5:00. The competition was open until 2:00 and closed. They then started opening until 4:00. Still we were open till 5:00 on Mondays, Tuesdays, Thursdays, and on Friday we were open till 6:00, from 9:00 until 6:00, straight through. [17] On Saturdays we're open from 9:00 until noon. And that's the difference there. It started that way, and it has stayed that way.

Q. So, again, you looked at what your competitors—what their hours were? This was one of the deciding factors? A. We start with the country banks, and that is the correct terminology, I believe, for banks in the outlying area. They stayed open on Saturday, so they were open on Saturday, and I certainly wanted to offer as much if not more.

Q. Did you ever consult with C&S National as to the determination of these initial banking hours or initial rates to be paid on savings accounts? A. Savings accounts?

Q. Yeah. Well, let's take savings accounts, if you recall. A. I don't think it was necessary. I was competitive.

Q. Did you consult with C&S National as to your initial banking hours? A. No, I did not. I think that you'll find in the beginning, when Sandy Springs opened up, they were open on Saturday, closed Wednesday, had similar hours, and with the possible exception that they were not open [18] the additional hour each day, I felt that this was in keeping with a town that was on the move, that was still considered at this point a country bank.

Q. How did you go about determining your initial charges on checking accounts? A. Well, having been C&S oriented, I felt that the competition in Roswell that I was competing with and the competition downtown was very similar, the charges were very competitive, as I had been familiar with.

Q. Did you consult with C&S National before establishing a service charge on checking accounts? A. No, I didn't.

(Discussion off the record)

By Mr. Lehman

Q. Do you have the authority to change the interest rate paid on your savings accounts? A. Within the legal limitations, yes, I run the bank.

Q. As opposed to your board of directors? A. Well, certainly I would have their advice and direction on any recommendations that I might make.

Q. You also have the authority to change the interest rates charged on loans, or to set them, is that correct? A. Yes.

[19] Q. And also as to service charges on your checking accounts? A. Yes.

Q. And as to banking hours? A. Right.

Q. Again, this would be in the context of with the approval of your board of directors? A. It would be discussed, certainly, before I made any drastic changes.

Q. Have you made any changes as to your banking hours since the inception of the C&S North Fulton Bank? A. No, we have not. We've had the same hours since we opened June the 10th, 1967.

Q. Have you made any changes with regards to interest rates charged on loans? A. Yes, we have.

Q. Do you recall when your last change was made and what the change was? A. Well, our situation is such that it's been—although we have generated funds, time deposits, demand deposits, we have a ratio of time deposits that's almost twice as large as demand deposits, so our cost of money is higher than the average bank. This would dictate to me—it would necessitate in order to make a profit [20] our charging a higher rate, possibly, but still trying to be competitive, so this is really the rate that we had charged, and we've never charged, of course, more than the legal limit, but I would say that it hasn't fluctuated a great deal, except on special accounts or loans, primarily real estate loans, real estate acquisition type loans, development loans, construction loans.

Q. Do you recall what the change was on these real estate loans? A. Yes. The state law changed, and I believe that they allowed you to charge an individual up to nine percent simple interest on a construction loan. If you were incorporated, you negotiated the rate with the corporate resolution agreeing to pay whatever rate was charged, plus a fee, if necessary, if required. We did go up at that point, and we have since tried to go back down, but we're still higher than I would imagine some of the other C&S banks, for instance. We are charging 8½ percent on construction loans, and we also charge a fee of 1½ percent. There are only two officers in the bank.

Q. Is this a higher interest than that charged by the Sandy Springs C&S on construction loans? A. I don't really know what Sandy Springs is charging on its construction loans. I haven't consulted [21] with them, with Mr. Fortuna.

Q. Is this a higher rate than what C&S National is charging on construction loans? A. I would think that it would be a half a point to one point higher.

Q. Prior to making this change, did you consult with anyone at C&S National? A. No. I don't think that was necessary as long as we're a profit oriented bank and we're doing our job. I did not consult with them, no. I have my board.

Q. So you would feel no need, then, to check with C&S National? A. No.

Q. Have you had an occasion to change the service charges on your checking accounts since the inception of the bank? A. Yes. We elected to do this in 1970, early 1970, I believe. If I recall, we had a major bank in town change their service charge. As it happened, my competition—whom I consider my competition in Roswell and Alpharetta were correspondents of this particular——

Q. By "town," you mean Atlanta? A. Atlanta, right. They were correspondents of this major bank, and as a result, I believe they might have changed theirs or lowered theirs, and so I lowered [22] mine, in a sense, that we reduced the minimum balance required on a checking account, and at the same time we made a nominal change in the regular checking accounts.

Q. Prior to making this change, did you confer with C&S National? A. No. I have other things that I do that I'm not sure what C&S National does. For instance, we have student accounts that are free accounts. Any college student has a free checking account. Any aged citizen, Social Security—that are eligible for Social Security or retirement has a free checking account.

Q. This is one of your own programs? A. Yes, it is.

Q. Are you aware if your compeitors in the Roswell area have the same type of free checking accounts? A. No. I have no idea. I believe our charges might be a little higher.

Q. Has C&S ever directed you to change interest rates on loans? A. They never have advised me of any changes, possibly in prime rates and whathaveyou, but I have never been directed——

Q. Are such advisements there for quote information only purposes? [23] A. That's correct. That's the way I consider them.

Q. Has C&S ever directed you to change your interest rate paid on savings? A. No, they have not.

Q. And has C&S ever directed you to change your service charges on your checking accounts? A. No, they have not.

Q. Does C&S National have the ability to dictate any policy or program of your bank? A. No, they do not. I would think they have the right to recommend, because we have an adviser on our board and would like to have his recommendations. That's why he's there. We listen to his recommendations, but we don't always go by them.

Q. Is that his primary purpose for sitting on your board, to make recommendations? A. Yes. And also they have been of great assistance to us in loan participations, and they like to be familiar with our loan portfolio, what type of loans are we making, and what will they be expected to participate in, if they are called on to do so.

Q. At whose request does he sit on your board? A. From the beginning it was my request. I don't believe we would have the C&S Bank in Roswell if we had [24] not been very closely allied with the C&S Bank. Other groups had started and had approached my originators to start another bank, because of the city's need, they were interested in starting another bank, but when they were approached by C&S, they were very interested, so it behooves me to stay as much in keeping with C&S as possible.

Q. Do you feel in your situation out there at C&S North Fulton that any of your actions as president of the bank would be controlled by C&S National? A. No.

Q. Do you presently attend—I believe it's a weekly credit meeting of C&S National people and correspondent associate people, maybe affiliates, too? A. This meeting happens to be on my day off, and I attend when I have something that I feel might be important enough to forego my day off.

Q. What day is that? A. That's Wednesday morning, and I did not attend this morning.

Q. Your attendance is not mandatory? A. If it is mandatory, I have not been so advised by my board or by my friends at C&S.

Q. Do you send someone in lieu of your presence? A. No.

[25] Q. Each week? A. No.

Q. Those times that you have been to these meetings, what is the purpose of these meetings? A. Well, I like very much to review my credits with other officers, five percenters, of the C&S National who are astute lending officers, people that have had possibly more experience than I have had in certain areas. If I have a credit that I feel needs reviewing, a sizeable credit, and I would like to have it reviewed and aired by the expertise of the officers downtown.

Q. By reviewing, I take it, say, for instance, this loan would have already been made? A. No, not necessarily.

Q. Are they sometimes prior to approval? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are considered also? A. Right. Most of the loans that we discuss are after the fact, not necessarily a trouble situation, but different loans, $25,000, say, and over.

Q. How long have you been in attendance at these meetings? A. Regularly.

Q. Well, let me rephrase the question. Have you been in attendance at such a meeting since from the time [26] you became president at C&S North Fulton? A. In the beginning we did not have these type reviews, to my knowledge. Later we did decide that we would have a group-type meeting, and I elected to attend.

Q. Excuse me. Go ahead. A. I was not required to attend, though.

Q. The Goalpost Review Program, could you tell me a little bit about what that is? A. Well, I'd like to think that everybody sets goals for themselves. That's the way we achieve our end, is at the beginning of the year, or prior to the end of the previous year, we set goals and projections and I'd like to think all companies do the same thing, and we have the Goalpost, which is simply nothing more than to see how you have—what you have actually achieved as opposed to what you projected you would do, and we review this with our employees and with our board of directors, and if they would like to know what we're doing downtown, it's a matter of record.

Q. Are these goals—I'll rephrase it. As to this Goalpost Review Program, are these goals also discussed at these weekly meetings? A. I haven't discussed my goalpost in weekly meetings. To my knowledge, I haven't, and I haven't heard anyone else either. I would think this would [27] probably be a more individualized type thing. I mean, we all want to know what the other is doing, but it is not necessary that I sit down and review someone's—someone else's goalpost. It wouldn't be as meaningful to me as it might be if I did it individually, based on what I had projected.

Q. As to the times at these weekly credit meetings when you have been in attendance and also discussed a loan that had not been approved, what would you discuss about this loan? A. Well, you say it had not been approved. I would normally approve the loan myself.

Q. Right. A. I have the right to do that.

Q. Right. It was my understanding, though, that you said there were certain—— A. I don't want to get involved in a situation without first exploring all the possibilities with as many people as I can, and we have a credit department, that would be invaluable as far as feeding into a computer, and these type of things are reviewed with the group, and if you determine the man is credit worthy, first of all, and that the figures justify his source of repayment, then you can make the loan and sleep nights.

Q. So, basically, you were looking just at the [28] creditworthiness of the individual and you wanted the advice of the people there that had had more experience. A. Yes.

Q. Do any criteria—Are any of these things established at meetings, criteria policies? For example, does a criteria come forth as to what steps you will follow in making the loan, like you look to the man, you look to his credit rating, background, and you look to X, Y, and Z, before you make the loan, anything like that? A. These are things that you learn as you come up through the banking business, and I would think at this point in time if you don't know yourself what the criteria is for making the loan, you have no business making them. I don't think we look to the committee for the very basics, rather for possible problem situations that they have been exposed to and I have not. There may be a particular type of loan, it may be financing an airplane, it may be financing a yacht, or something that requires a special documentation. It could be a type of construction loan with a permanent takeout, permanent takeout meaning does it correspond with the same commitment that you are planning to make for eighteen months or six months, or does it expire tomorrow, these sort of things are things that you might [29] not have thought about, but you should before you committed the loan.

Q. Do you receive correspondence from C&S National in the form of sales memoranda? A. By the pound.

Q. Mr. Lane, you mentioned that you started going to these credit meetings sometime after the bank's beginning, but not—it wasn't from the very beginning of the bank, is that correct? A. That's correct.

Q. Do you recall or do you know whether or not these meetings were in existence prior to your bank's beginning? A. Well, the C&S National Bank has a large supervision-type department with the key people in the C&S Bank that are very familiar with the lending situation, and I think they become more spohisticated each year. In 1967 it was not geared up to handle this type of committee review; '69, possibly; '70 it became more and more sophisticated, so that we could do this type of thing.

Q. By "we," do you mean your bank, or do you mean C&S National? A. I mean C&S National and my bank if I elected to be there.

[30] Q. So, then, is it my understanding you do not know whether these meetings were in existence? A. Fortunately, or unfortunately, as the case may be, my tenure with the bank since 1960 has been shortlived with the National Bank. I have been in the Credit Department with the National Bank, and I went to orientation and had a brief training program with the National Bank. Since that time I moved to an affiliate, and worked in a unit bank, and then went to Sandy Springs, which is a correspondent associate. The correspondent associate is itself a unit bank, a separate entity, and that more or less explains why——

Q. I already asked if you if you do receive correspondence from C&S National, and I will show you now what has been marked President's Deposition, Exhibits 1 through 6, I believe, and will ask you if you will please take a look at these exhibits.

(Discussion off the record.)

By Mr. Lehman

Q. Now, do you recall receiving these documents? A. Yes.

Q. You keep this copy. We will refer to ours. Let's go to the President's Deposition, Exhibit 2, that would be letter dated July 20th, 1971. For what purpose would you receive a document such as this? For [31] what purpose would you have received this document? A. For information only, and I believe you will find on the other exhibits it has information on it, in fact, the last two or three——

Q. That would probably be my next question. I was wondering—I noticed in the document dated July 28, it has a heading "To Branch Managers, Presidents and Affiliates and Presidents, Correspondents, Associates," and I was wondering why in Exhibit 2 they would have that on the heading, and on Exhibit 6, at the very last line, for information only, at the bottom, correspondents and presidents. A. Any of these memorandums are guidelines that you may or may not elect to use. It is for information only. That's the way I interpret it.

Q. Do you recall at any time when you followed these guidelines that they set forth in the memorandum? A. By the numbers Exhibit 1, has to do with prime rates, or the best rate—we have very few instances where the prime rate becomes involved in our loans. We have a few national concerns in our neighborhood, that would be the only one I could think of that —might be Georgia Power Company, or somebody like that, Southern Bell. The only one that I am doing any business with would be Georgia Power Company.

[32] Q. In the exhibit marked Number 5 regarding drivein banking hours, I count—Well, first of all, do you have drivein windows at your bank? A. Yes. We have two. One originally, and we've added one since.

Q. Do you recall whether or not your windows—drivein windows, when they were opened? A. Let's see. I believe—my drivein windows were open the same hours that we discussed earlier, from 9:00 until 5:00, Mondays, Tuesdays, Thursdays, 9:00 until 6:00 on Friday, 9:00 until noon on Saturday.

Q. So, actually—— A. This was to give them a little more flexibility.

Q. Are you aware of any coordination as to banking hours among the C&S named banks whereby, say, for instance, a bank would not have to stay open both late on Friday night and on Saturday mornings? In other words, another bank would stay open on Saturday, in order for the other bank to remain open on Friday night? A. No. We don't have any branches as such, and so I'm not familiar with any coordination between banks to service another bank's accounts or what have you.

Q. What types of personal loans does your bank offer? [33] A. We're very flexible. We have just about any type of personal loan you would need.

Q. How about—Do you have various types of commercial loans that you would offer? A. We do have this.

Q. Would you list some of them, please. A. Well, we have in our area, because of the very nature of it being a bedroom community, the largest and the most demand we have is for acquisition, development and construction type loans to builders. We have also had requests from time to time for working capital loans or term credit loans, equipment type loans.

Q. For these loans that you have mentioned do you know if a commercial loan is the primary, say, source for these types of loans as opposed to, say, savings and loans and many other type of financial institutions? A. Well, in connection, of course, with the construction loans, a commercial bank would not be the only source. We have a savings and loan who is a major source of competition.

Q. How about as to working capital? A. I think—I would think commercial banks would be the most feasible place. It's not the only place.

[34] Q. Did you also mention plant modernization loans? Would those be the same as construction loans? A. This could be property improvement type or plant improvement type loans in the case of a term credit.

Q. Would a commercial bank be more likely to be the institution making this type of loan? A. It would. I think that they are very competitive in this field.

Q. To what extent does your bank utilize the services of a correspondent in providing the service of checking accounts to customers? A. Would you repeat your question? I'm not sure I follow you.

Q. Perhaps I will rephrase it. Does your bank utilize the services of a correspondent in providing a checking account service for your customers? A. Only in the sense that in the beginning when we originally opened our bank, we had our own bookkeeping service. Of course, we have since become more sophisticated and needed the space that was available for something else, so that we have gone to the computer accounting system, and to that extent——

Q. Do you utilize a correspondent service for providing savings accounts to savings customers? [35] A. For providing savings accounts, no; for accounting purposes, we do, relating to savings programs.

Q. How about—Do you also utilize a correspondent service in the bookkeeping of your loans made to your customers? A. Yes, we do.

Q. Has this always been the case since the inception of your bank? A. Yes. Not to the extent that it is now. Again, it was more of a manual posting procedure in the beginning, and it still is on certain types of loans in our bank.

Q. At the beginning in your bank you did utilize the correspondent service? A. Yes, we did; on installment loans only. On the short term, 30, 60, 90 days term loans we still post in our bank and do not use a correspondent service.

Q. Earlier in this questioning we were discussing savings accounts. Have you always utilized a correspondent service with regard to your savings accounts in the bookkeeping? A. Well, there are still certain types of savings certificates or CD's that we do not utilize a correspondent for, such as a large CD of $100,000, we do our own computation and whathaveyou in accounting. On [36] all other types of bonds, CD's, savings accounts, we do utilize the services of the correspondent.

Q. To compute interest and to render statements, you cannot do it as cheaply yourself inhouse as you can to buy the service from the C&S correspondent service associate—C&S Bank source—excuse me. So it's actually an economic factor rather than not being able to do it inhouse? A. Yes, it is.

Q. Does your bank offer any services to your customers which it can only provide by the use of a correspondent service? A. Yes. We have—we do not have a Trust Department. We encourage wills, profit sharing, appropriate profit sharing, estate planning, we would recommend that they use this service. We have, of course, charge account service. We are charge accounts merchants, and we use that service, of course. We've mentioned that the accounting system, the computer accounting system, International Department—we don't have an International Department, but we can issue a traveler's letter of credit, or commercial letter of credit through the Trust Department.

Q. Do you pay for these correspondent services that you've mentioned? [37] A. Yes, we do.

Q. Are there any received free? A. Yes. The trust interviews and things of that nature. A representative will come out and will talk to your customer, and whether he goes along with the service or whether he doesn't, it doesn't cost me anything.

Q. Are there any others that you think of? A. Most of the others that I have mentioned there is a charge. I could think of a dozen.

Q. To your knowledge of the services that you have mentioned, can these services or are these services offered by any of the other large banks in Atlanta? A. Some of them are not, I'm sure, and if they were, I would elect not to use it. I like to offer the best I can to my public, to my community, and I feel that that, C&S, would be the place I would direct them.

Q. Would you consider your correspondent relationship with C&S National mutually beneficial to both banks? A. Yes.

Q. Do you maintain funds, do you keep funds with C&S National, an account? [38] A. I believe that we had established that earlier that yes, we do.

Q. All right. I covered that. I apologize. What is the purpose of keeping these deposits with C&S National? A. We have to have one somewhere, and I would prefer that it be handled by C&S, because they are efficient, and no problems.

Q. Do you utilize this account to pay for your correspondent services provided by C&S National? A. No.

Q. How are these paid for? A. They are fees, service charges, what have you, for various services.

Q. But I mean you do not draw a check on this account or on this balance that's maintained with the C&S National to pay for the correspondent services pro—— A. To pay for the correspondent services provided to my bank?

Q. Right. A. We have, yes.

Q. Have you participated with the C&S National on loans that would be above your legal lending limit? A. Yes, we have.

Q. Do you recall how many times you have done so [39] in the last year? A. Approximately from the very day we opened we had more loan demand than we had funds to lend, and as a result we had participated loans, and we have been as high as a million-five, and it's been a continuing situation. Otherwise, I would spend all my time out looking for the money instead of making loans.

Q. Have you also had an occasion to purchase participations received? A. No, I have not. I don't believe I have ever purchased any participations from C&S Bank within the five-year period—there could have been a short account deal of some sort, but as a rule, I have not.

Q. From your knowledge of—in these participations would you receive or perhaps retain a higher rate of interest rate on the sale of a participation than from a non-C&S named bank? A. Run that by me again. I'm sorry.

Q. In these instances where you participated with a C&S National, do you know if your bank would receive a better rate as far as—I believe it's interest retained than would a non-C&S named bank, say another correspondent bank of C&S National? A. Yes. You're asking if the correspondent associate—— [40] Q. Yes. A. ——receives preferential rates on participations as opposed to a regular correspondent?

Q. Yes. A. I don't know.

Q. Are you aware of any other financial institutions in the Atlanta area other than a commercial bank that can offer demand deposits? A. No.

Q. Are you aware of any other financial institutions in Atlanta other than a commercial bank that can offer the variety of loans that a commercial bank does? A. No.

Q. Are you aware of any financial institutions in Atlanta other than a commercial bank that can offer the full range of services that a commercial bank can? A. No.

Q. Do you feel this ability of your bank to offer a full range of services has been of any assistance to you in attracting customers? A. Very definitely.

Q. Do you feel that this ability to offer a full range of services has given you a competitive edge over other financial institutions, meaning other than commercial banking institutions? [41] A. Yes, it has.

Q. Do you encourage your customers to utilize more than one service within your bank? A. Yes, we do. We would like for them to be—have a total relationship with our bank.

Q. Do you find that this normally would occur, that they would use multiple services in your banks? A. Very often.

Q. I think we discussed your competitors earlier, but who would you consider—which banks do you consider to be your principal competitors in your area? A. The Roswell Bank and the—what was formerly called the Citizens Bank of Alpharetta, which is now the Fulton Exchange Bank, and in connection with the real estate, we have the Fulton Federal Savings and Loan.

Q. These are non-commercial banks? A. That's right. This is a savings and loan, all of which at one time were owned by the same person.

Q. Is that located in Roswell—— A. Yes, it is. Fulton Federal Savings and Loan, the former owner retains a position on the big board of that institution.

Q. How close are these competitors that you have named to your bank? [42] A. In mileage? Well, the savings and loan association is 300 feet, one branch of the Roswell Bank is 600 feet. The others are half a mile. The Fulton Exchange Bank in Alpharetta is 6.8 miles. The branch of the Fulton Exchange Bank in Roswell is 1 mile.

Q. Do you consider a bank to be in competition to be in C&S National and its branches, affiliate banks? A. No.

Q. Why not? A. Well, I would think that we work together, but there's nothing that says I can't solicit a customer and in many instances you will find that their company or their livelihood is downtown, and they may bank with a bank, C&S bank next door to their place of business or whathaveyou, although they live in Roswell, and it would not behoove me to waste my time trying to solicit this account away from the C&S Bank, because basically we offer the same service. I don't feel I have a competitive edge over any other C&S Bank. I do my competition in Roswell, or what I consider my competition.

Q. What is the closest correspondent associate to your bank? A. The Citizens and Southern Bank of Sandy Springs.

Q. Do you consider them to be in competition with [43] yourself? A. No.

Q. Do you have any customers in the Sandy Springs area? A. Yes. I've lived in Sandy Springs for fourteen years, and I have a lot of friends from the Sandy Springs area that bank with me, not because my services are that much better than the C&S Bank of Springs. As a matter of fact, their resources are much greater than mine, and the cost of money might be less because of this. Their ability to generate deposits has been much better than mine, but a lot of people elect to bank with a friend.

Q. Even though you're both drawing customers from the same area, you don't consider yourself in competition? A. No.

Q. Do you consider a bank to be in competition to any extent with the downtown offices—with the downtown banks? A. I'd like to think I was, yes. Every opportunity I get to solicit another account, I certainly don't pass it up.

Q. Even though—— A. If they live in Roswell, I would do my utmost, [44] for the general area of North Fulton, I would do my utmost to solicit the account.

Q. In my reference to downtown banks, I am including C&S National, would this apply to C&S National? A. No, not necessarily. I think I explained that earlier.

Q. I just wanted to make the deposition clear. Do you know if there are any arrangements in the Atlanta area between C&S National and its affiliate banks and the correspondent associate banks not to solicit customers of another C&S named bank? A. No.

Q. Would you feel free to do so if you felt you had a potential customer? A. I have in the past, yes.

Q. Is there any geographic area in which you confine your solicitations for business? A. No, there's not. However, the community that we serve has such a demand that it would not behoove me to go out of this general area to solicit business, because I couldn't handle it.

Q. I think perhaps we've covered indirectly this area, but I'll ask you this question. Is it my understanding you would have a reluctance to service a known customer of the C&S Bank? [45] A. Can you qualify the question a little more, maybe?

Q. Take for instance—— A. What service specifically are you talking about?

Q. Say, for instance, if he comes into your bank and wishes to, say, open an account or make a loan, however, he's already an established customer of another C&S Bank, would you have a reluctance to deal with such an individual? A. In the very beginning I may have some reluctance, but after I had had sufficient opportunity to check the situation out, it really would depend if you had a large private customer at one of the national banks, branches of the National Bank main office, it could be that I couldn't handle the situation, so I wouldn't actively solicit his account, knowing in the beginning that I couldn't service it as he expects it to be serviced. I would be reluctant in that instance.

Q. But if you could handle it? A. And he has come to me?

Q. Yes. A. I would have little reservations about it, about taking care of his need, if I could.

Q. Do you have any out-of-state loan accounts? [46] A. To my knowledge, I have never made a loan out of state originally. However, I have made loans to people who has been transferred, and they ask my permission to keep the loan in effect or the account open, and it was perfectly all right with me.

Q. How about as to commercial loans, rather than personal loans? A. Offhand, I don't know of any commercial loans out of state.

Q. Do you have any out-of-state checking account customers? A. Yes.

Q. Both personal and commercial? A. With personal, I'm sure we do. Commercial, again, I don't believe so. I assume you're referring, when you say out-of-state customer, are you referring to national accounts where the home office might be in Chicago, and they have a local operation in Roswell?

Q. Yes. A. In that instance we might have an out-of-state account, but the local office is the——

Q. Right. A. ——operation with which we bank.

Q. How about—do you have any out-of-state savings customers? [47] A. Yes.

Q. Both commercial and personal—primarily personal? A. I don't have any commercial savings, CD's, from out of state; personal, yes. I think again you'll find that that was a situation where they lived in the community and your maturity dates on bonds are such that it did not behoove them to cash the bond in and move it with them, so they kept the account open.

Q. You mentioned earlier that you had within your board of directors a loan committee. What is the function of this committee? A. I don't recall mentioning that, but we do have——

Q. I think you mentioned—you were talking about the credit meetings and everything—— A. We do have within our board five men and myself that correspond with the finance committee, and we review all loans prior to each directors meeting. Thirty minutes prior to each directors meeting, this group gets together and discusses all loans which have gone on that did not exceed $25,000 and all loans that are being committed that might exceed that amount that would involve a future commitment are reviewed.

Q. I may be a bit confused. Are we talking about [48] reviewing an already made loan or—— A. We're talking about prior approval. Anything under the legal limit, of course, is to be reviewed.

Q. I see. A. I have the prerogative within the legal limits of the bank without the permission of the finance committee or anyone else.

Q. Other than the possibility of these loans being discussed at the credit meetings and—— A. When you refer to credit meetings, what are you referring to?

Q. Wednesday morning credit meetings, the weekly credit meetings. A. Okay.

Q. Okay. Other than these instances or perhaps where C&S National might be participating in a loan with your bank, does C&S National review any loans of yours? A. Do they review any loans of mine? Well, of course, we have—we employ the local auditing department of the C&S Bank, which is another correspondent service, to review the entire bank's operation, and they review it, of course, the loans.

Q. Including an audit function? A. Would you rephrase your question?

[49] Q. All right. Are there other than those instances whereby you might discuss a loan at a weekly credit meeting or those instances whereby you might be participating in a loan with C&S National? Does C&S National review any of your bank's loans, and this would be excluding the audit function? A. Yes. There are occasions when I have a loan that might be—I might feel is in jeopardy or maybe approaching some problem situation, and I would ask them to review with me the complete file on the loan and all of the information that I have available to determine the best course of action.

Q. All right. A. If they are not participating in the loan, I would see no need for them to question this information.

Q. Along this line, has your bank ever received, or you ever received suggestions or advice from C&S National as to not making a loan, a specific loan? A. From time to time we may have a memorandum that would come out that would relate to some experience that they had had with a customer which—so that you don't—you avoid the situation and don't get involved with a similar possible loss. Other than that, I can't think of any.

[50] Q. Would you consider a memorandum such as this again, for information only, or would this have the consideration of, say, a directive? A. No. That's information only.

Q. What is the closest C&S National office to your bank? A. A branch? Roswell Wieuca branch.

Q. Are you aware of what interest rate it is charging on its loans? A. I have not had occasion to ask.

Q. Are you aware of what interest rates it pays on its savings accounts? A. I am sure they are competitive and similar to other banks in the area and possibly my bank.

Q. Are you aware of what they are charging on the checking accounts as to service charges? A. Well, yes, I am aware of the exact service charge of the C&S National Bank, by having worked with the C&S National Bank and being apprized of any changes through memorandum type form or for information only.

Q. Would it be any concern to your bank if any of these charges were different than your bank? A. No. I would always do my best to compete in the community in which I serve, and what they do downtown is not my business.

[51] Q. Do you consider that the interest rate charged on a loan is probably the thing that attracts the customer as far as—— A. No. The availability of money, the interest rate, the conditions.

Q. How about the type of service available? A. The related services that a bank can offer.

Q. Would the same be true for interest rates paid on savings account, that it would not be the sole tool to attract a customer? A. I wouldn't think so. I'd like to think that we are a full service bank, that we purport to be, and we can handle your savings, your checking, your loan, your safety deposit box, all of the services that are available through one bank, without having to go from one to the other to provide the service.

Q. At the beginning of our conversation, you mentioned that your bank adopted the pension plan of C&S National and also the profit sharing plan. Who funds these programs? A. We fund the programs.

Q. Who administers these programs? A. The National Bank.

Q. Does C&S National contribute anything to either of these programs? [52] A. They do not.

Q. Do you have other types of benefit programs for your employees? A. Yes.

Q. Such as accident insurance? A. Yes. We have health insurance, including dental, we have—for the officers, for instance, working with me, we have term insurance. We have term insurance—we have cash incentive bonuses.

Q. Could you explain what this cash incentive bonus is? A. That's exactly what it purports to be, a cash incentive bonus for doing a job.

Q. Is this for both employees and officers? A. Yes, it is.

Q. From where does the cash come from? A. From our profits.

Q. Are these insurance programs that you were mentioning, are they funded by your bank? A. Yes, they are.

Q. Are they administered by C&S National? A. Yes, they are.

Q. Is this cash incentive program, is this administered by C&S National, or is this strictly—— A. It's funded by our bank and administered by [53] their bank, with the recommendation of our board.

Q. Has any part of the remuneration received by you for your performances at C&S National—excuse me—at C&S North Fulton been paid by C&S National? A. There was a short time when the bank was first organized that I was carried on the National Bank payroll primarily to keep from cutting off the fringe benefits that were coming out of—the profit sharing program—I was making a contribution to that program out of my income, and this was the reason I continued to do that.

Q. Do you know if C&S North Fulton reimbursed C&S National for that salary paid to you during that time? A. We did not, because this was prior to the actual opening of the bank, and I was performing a dual function, I was employed by the C&S Bank of Sandy Springs still while I was organizing and putting together the charter and prior to opening the bank.

Mr. Lehman: We have been going for about an hour. Why don't we take about a five-minute break, and then you can have your turn.

(Short recess)

[54] By Mr. Lehman

Q. One question. You mentioned—you were talking about your cash incentive program, and you mentioned that your directors recommended, I believe was your terminology, to, I believe it was C&S, as to what the share would be received by the employee? A. Well, the guideline comes from me, and they approve it at a directors' meeting as a routine matter.

Q. So as far as recommending—it has already been decided that the amount will be, and C&S National does not play a part in that? A. No. We have a percentage based on the length of time that they have been there, and the job that they have done, and we use this basically. Officers' cash incentive is different. It's left to my discretion as to what type of job I feel that he has done. If he's excelled, it's 150 percent of his cash incentive, he may not get but 100 or 50, based on the job that we feel he did.

Q. I think that I just may be involved in a question of semantics as to your saying that the directors recommend—in other words—— A. No. I recommend; the directors approve.

Q. Fine. Thank you. I turn you over to Walter Grant.

[55] Cross-Examination

By Mr. Grant

Q. I have just two or three questions. Mr. Lane, first when you became president of the C&S Bank of North Fulton, did you think that you were leaving the C&S system or the C&S family at that time? A. No. I would not have taken the move if I had thought I was leaving the C&S system, although I thought it was an excellent opportunity in a growing area. As far as I'm concerned, it was exactly what I had been doing, except I was heading up the operation instead of——

Q. Do you consider at this time you are running a C&S bank and that your bank is part of the C&S system? A. Yes, and my customers feel the same way.

Q. A little earlier you described the C&S style of banking; as you consider that phrase, do you think that you are bringing the C&S banking to North Fulton? A. If I'm not, I hope they replace me very soon. I would like to think we are, yes.

Q. Let me ask you another question. Of the recommendations that you receive from C&S National, or from your advisory directors, do you have any idea of the percentage of those recommendations that you have followed? [56] A. Well, we have had a lot of discussion at board meetings, but generally, I'd say that practically 80 or 90 percent of all of the recommendations that they have made have been adopted because a director is not a banker. They can listen to a suggestion, but if it's tried and true, they are more inclined to go along with it in nearly every instance, they have gone along with it.

Q. As a past president of a C&S correspondent associate bank, could you tell me what C&S National does for your bank? In other words, what services it—C&S National provides for your bank, that C&S National does not provide a normal correspondent, that is correspondent banks of C&S National that are not five percent correspondent associates? A. Well, of course, we have the advice of the advisory board members once a month, and then we have the facilities of the credit meetings, we have access to the facilities of the credit department as such. Basically, I would say, that's the difference in correspondent associate and correspondent.

Q. Would you say that most of the customers of your bank think that it is a part of the C&S system, maybe just a branch of C&S National? A. Yes. I think particularly our stockholders [57] feel that it's the same as C&S, and that all of our customers, a lot of which have been in the city and moved out to Suburbia, feel that they are banking with the same bank, that it's so similar in service and attitude, that it's one and the same.

Mr. Grant: That's all I have.

Mr. Lehman: I have a couple.

Redirect Examination

By Mr. Lehman

Q. In answer to Walter's question, I think maybe the first or second question, you stated you felt you were running the C&S Bank? A. Yes.

Q. Now, did you mean to say that you felt you were running a C&S bank or that you were running it in a C&S fashion or manner? A. Would you explain the difference?

Q. As a matter of fact, is this C&S National Bank or branch? A. Obviously it is not a C&S National Bank, but it's very similar to the National or a branch, as far as the attitude of the employees toward the customer and the service it offers—not necessarily the prices of the services, because they differ, but I would like to think that the attitude is the same that I have been [58] accustomed to being in the C&S for all these years.

Q. And in discussing the position of the advisory director, you stated that you followed his suggestions on the percentage a large share of the time, a great share of the time. Was this because of his suggestions were in the best interest of C&S National or the best interest of your own bank? A. The best interest of C&S Bank of North Fulton.

Q. And my third question was how were you aware of what people think your bank is with regard to thinkinig it possibly a branch of C&S National? A. Well, we have had occasions to question our people, to poll them, or to survey the customers of our bank, and there's a very little recognizable difference, as far as they were concerned. They still feel that they are banking with the same bank.

Q. Do you question them as to the differences between the two banks? A. We have had market surveys, and that would give us their attitude toward the type of service we are offering, and in each instance we try to improve on the service based on the recommendations of the customers.

Q. And my last question was, how were you aware of what correspondents, what services correspondents of [59] C&S National received as opposed to those services received by a correspondent associate? A. Well, I had never seen a correspondent per se at a credit meeting. I've never, to my knowledge, they don't use the facilities of the credit department if it's available, whether they ask for advice from and receive same from the executive officers of the C&S Bank, I don't know.

Mr. Lehman: No further questions.

Whereupon,

ALVA G. MAXWELL

was called as a witness and, having first been duly sworn, was examined and deposed as follows:

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Kinkaid

Q. Would you please state your full name and residence address? A. My name is Alva, A-l-v-a, (spelling), G., like Georgia, Maxwell. And I'm RFD number two, Marietta, Georgia, on Postoak Road.

Q. Do you have a present occupation, Mr. Maxwell? A. I'm retired. I fish and play a little golf. So that's me. I still come down to the office a little bit. And I help run Young Harris College.

Q. From what position are you retired? A. I was vice-president of Citizens and Southern National Bank.

Q. When did you retire? A. 1956, October 1st.

Q. How long have you been a director of the Sandy Springs Bank? [5] A. I was a director about two months after they opened. And I stayed until—what year? I became an honorary director in about four years ago, I guess.

Q. That's good enough. A. I was there about ten years.

Q. You were then not one of the organizers of the Sandy Springs bank? A. No, not the new bank, no. I was one of the organizers of the original C&S bank. And then I went to Europe for three months. When I came back, the new bank had been organized. And they saved a place on the board for me. That's all I had to do with it. And I had some stock.

Q. Let's see if I had that right. We understand that there was an attempt made by a group of people to obtain a state charter for a bank in Sandy Springs in the late fifties. A. That's correct.

Q. Were you part of that group? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who were the other members of that group, if you can remember? A. Jim Aldrich, Dr. Cason—What's the grocery man's name, Fortuna?

Mr. Doyle: Mr. Maxwell, if you can remember, [6] fine. If you can't, he'll get a chance to ask Lou all he wants.

The Deponent: Lockerman. Mr. Lockerman was one of the directors. That's Doris' husband. Everybody knows her. And I think that was about it. There were about seven directors, but I've forgotten who they were.

By Mr. Kinkaid

Q. This group was not successful? A. Well, we were successful in getting the stock subscribed and getting ready to go. But the State Banking Department declined the charter. They claimed they didn't decline it, but deferred it. But, actually, it meant the same thing.

The deposition of Dalton F. Scott, Deponent, taken at the instance of the Plaintiff commencing at 2:30 p.m., July 20, 1972, at the Citizens and Southern National Bank Building, Atlanta, Fulton County, Georgia.

* * * * * * *

[34] Q. You stated that Mr. Ingram was the advisory director for your bank at the present time? [35] A. (Nods head affirmatively.)

Q. Have you had any advisory directors earlier than this or before him? A. Bill Mathis was the first advisory director.

Q. When did he become an advisory director? A. When the bank was formed.

Q. So ever since the bank has been formed you've had an advisory director? A. Right.

Q. And has the advisory director always been a nonvoting member of the board? A. Right.

Q. Do the advisory directors attend all meetings—— A. Yes.

Q. ——of the bank's board of directors? A. A lot of times committee meetings.

Q. Do you know if the advisory director attends the loan committee meetings? A. No. I really don't because I don't attend those meetings myself.

Q. Okay. In what capacity does the advisory director attend board meetings? What are the functions of an advisory director? A. Just as you've stated there. He is to advise us on anything that might come up pertaining to the bank [36] that would be of interest to the bank for the betterment of the bank and helps us in every way that he possibly can.

[5] ECONOMIC REPORT

ECONOMIC REPORT VOL. I

B. Historical Background of the Citizens and Southern Correspondent Associates*

The Citizens and Southern correspondent associate banks—those banks in which the Citizens and Southern Holding Company owns five percent of the equity, and thus often referred to as "five-percent banks"—must be viewed as a product both of changes in banking legislation in the State of Georgia and of developing banking needs in the suburban areas outside of the State's major cities, primarily outside of Atlanta. They are a result of responses by Citizens and Southern to new and developing banking requirements as permitted by Georgia law.

(1) Georgia Banking Legislation, 1927-1970

Prior to 1927, branching by Georgia banks was geographically unrestricted, during which time the Savannah-based Citizens and Southern Bank branched into Atlanta and other Georgia cities. However, in that year the Legislature imposed a complete prohibition on the establishment of any new branches. Some liberalization of this prohibition was enacted in 1929, permitting branching in some municipalities by banks having home offices within those municipalities. The 1929 law remained in effect until 1960, and effectively prevented The Citizens and Southern National Bank, whose home office remained in Savannah, from establishing new branch offices [6] in (or around) Atlanta. The 1960 legislation permitted branching by Citizens and Southern within the city limits of Atlanta, which by that time included a small portion of DeKalb County as well as much of Fulton County. Meanwhile, the major competitors of C&S whose home offices were in Atlanta had been branching within the city since the enactment of the 1929 statutes. The 1960 legislation, then, effectively restored C&S to potential competitive parity within the city of Atlanta.

The Georgia branching restrictions over this period left the holding company as the only route open to C&S for geographic expansion in the Atlanta area; moreover, it was, until 1970, the only means open to any Atlanta banks for serving customers in that city's rapidly growing suburbs. This led, in turn, to the establishment of one C&S affiliate in suburban Atlanta, the C&S Emory Bank (in 1950), and to the acquisition of two others, the C&S Bank of East Point (in 1948) and the C&S DeKalb Bank (in 1954). In 1960, legislation was passed to the effect that bank holding companies could acquire no more than five percent of the voting stock of a bank. The C&S correspondent associates, then, are in part a product of the 1960 legislation.

The final legislative action relevant to the issues here is the liberalization of the Georgia branching statutes in 1970.* This permitted a [7] bank to establish branch offices within any county in which that bank already had an office. In effect, this permitted Atlanta banks to branch throughout Fulton and DeKalb Counties, and suburban banks to establish branches elsewhere in their counties. This legislation also gave rise to the possibility of mergers between banks in Atlanta and banks in suburban DeKalb and Fulton Counties. Thus, under Georgia law, C&S National could branch into those parts of Fulton and DeKalb Counties outside of Atlanta and the proposed mergers could be sought.

(2) The Development of the Atlanta Suburbs

The second significant factor underlying the development of the C&S correspondent associates pertains to the substantial growth of the suburban areas around the major Georgia cities, particularly Atlanta, both in resident population and in commercial and industrial activity.* This, of course, resulted in a substantial increase in the number of suburban banking customers, many of whom were without the services of a convenient banking office during the early stages of this surburban development.

* Effective January 1, 1971.

At least as significant for banking patterns as this growth itself has been the accompanying change in the character of these areas. Out- [8] lying areas that once had been largely independent of Atlanta increasingly became part of a single integrated metropolitan area, with an observed increase in the complexity of economic relationships among different communities. For individuals, this has been manifested in commuting and shopping patterns, whereas for businesses, it has resulted in changes in and expansion of the number of their locations.

As is typical of metropolitan area development, the suburban development around Atlanta resulted from a residential shift from Atlanta to nearby areas outside of the city and from explosive growth throughout the metropolitan region. With this residential shift came commercial development in the suburbs to serve this new population; freeway development has linked the metropolitan area and has, more recently, enabled other types of business enterprises to establish operations in the suburbs.

The emerging metropolitan area complex has, of course, created a need for banking facilities in the suburbs. This need, however, could not be met satisfactorily without the participation of the large financial institutions which are located in the center city. Suburban development has occurred with a continuing economic dependence upon and orientation toward the center city. Many customers who moved to the suburbs and opened bank accounts there also retained downtown banking connections, both [9] because they valued their prior banking relationships and because they require the services of larger banking institutions. Many business facilities in the suburbs are operated by firms with main offices in downtown Atlanta, and thus require both suburban and downtown banking connections; for business, the services that larger banks can provide are especially important.

Suburban areas thus must be distinguished from free standing communities in terms of their banking requirements. Whereas local independent banks sometimes can perform very adequately in the latter environment, the characteristics typical of growing metropolitan suburbs make it more difficult for local independent banks to attract customers whose requirements include convenient access to many banking offices, regardless of whether competition exists with branches of downtown banks. For this reason, regulatory authorities are careful in granting charters for the establishment of independent banks in the suburbs. Thus, for example, bank charter applications for Sandy Springs and Chamblee were initially turned down by the Georgia banking authorities because, in their judgment, there was inadequate potential business in these communities. Consequently, many rapidly growing communities in the Atlanta suburbs did not have available to them convenient banking offices and services; moreover, where there were local banks, these banks were unable to fully meet the banking needs of many suburban banking customers because these needs were often tied to downtown Atlanta.

[10] The only means by which these developing banking needs could be met fully was through the assistance of the major Atlanta banks, both in establishing new suburban banks and in assisting them in their operations. The Citizens and Southern organization provided the most extensive response to these suburban requirements, and indeed, the pattern of this response closely parallels the development of these areas. The first C&S banks in the Atlanta suburbs were The Citizens and Southern Bank of East Point, The Citizens and Southern Emory Bank (near Decatur), and The Citizens and Southern DeKalb Bank (in Avondale Estates), all affiliates of Citizens and Southern Holding Company in existence prior to the change in the Georgia bank holding company law in 1960. All are located in long established suburban communities.*

In about 1960, the time of the last change in the Georgia holding company statutes, the development of the suburban areas in DeKalb and Fulton Counties began to accelerate. C&S thus initiated a program of working in cooperation with local residents to establish new banks in areas that had been inadequately served. The Citizens and Southern Banks of Sandy Springs and Chamblee were organized in 1959 and 1960 as "correspondent associates" of C&S National. The Citizens and Southern Belvedere Bank was similarly organized in 1966, and The Citizens and Southern Bank [11] of North Fulton, located in a more outlying area that was slower to develop, was organized in 1967. In the same year, The Citizens and Southern Park National Bank was established to serve a business complex, and more recently, The Citizens and Southern South DeKalb Bank was organized to serve a rapidly growing Atlanta suburb. Meanwhile, The Citizens and Southern Bank of Tucker represents a situation that in some ways parallels those in East Point and Avondale Estates. An older bank (in this case chartered in 1919) in an established community was dormant because its owners were unable to provide management which could keep pace with the expanding banking needs of its community; this bank became a C&S correspondent associate in 1965.

(3) The Nature of the Correspondent Associate Relationship with the exception of the Tucker bank, all of the C&S correspondent associates in the Atlanta area were offspring of the C&S organization from their inception. As will be discussed in more detail in Section VI, it was the understanding of their stockholders and directors from the outset that, while each would have its own directors responsible to its own stockholders, C&S would provide the management to establish and to operate these banks. This understanding was a major element in obtaining their charters and in attracting stockholders and directors; moreover, it was understood by the personnel of these banks from the beginning that they would remain part of the C&S organization. Finally, it was expected that the correspondent [12] associates would ultimately be integrated into the C&S organization in a corporate sense should Georgia's branching or holding company statutes subsequently be liberalized to so permit.

Through the vehicle of the correspondent associate, the C&S organization responded to actual and potential growth in suburban communities by providing assistance in making banking services available in those communities. The impetus for this response was the fact that banking services were otherwise inadequate in these communities. While it is not certain that independent charters could not have been obtained, in every instance the local groups organizing the correspondent associates required such assistance. Under these circumstances, it is at least clear that the regulatory authorities gave weight to the assurance of C&S management assistance in granting the original charters. The advantages of the C&S relationship clearly have affected the subsequent performance of these banks: their identification with C&S, the ability of customers to bank at many different offices, and the access of customers to the specialized services available only from large banking institutions, all have served to attract customers by better meeting their banking needs in an increasingly metropolitan environment.

Several additional points, to be elaborated upon more fully in Section VI, should be noted by way of background. First, the correspondent associate banks are located in essentially separate suburban areas in [13] which banking services were otherwise inadequate at the time of their establishment or, in the case of the C&S Bank of Tucker, at the time of association with C&S. Indeed, their subsequent record of growth attests to the fact that they have fulfilled otherwise unmet banking needs. Second, their directors, most of whom were C&S customers who recognized the need for local banking facilities, generally felt a close relationship with C&S. Third, much of the stock of the correspondent associate banks typically was widely distributed within their local communities as well as among stockholders, officers and customers of C&S. This wide distribution of stock has served to attract and to hold customers, as well as to prevent the control of these banks from falling into hands unfriendly to C&S.

Finally, the C&S involvement with its correspondent associates has been operational in nature. The directors of the correspondent associates stress that they are independent of C&S, but have left banking management to C&S. The operational support provided to the correspondent associates has increased commensurately with the demands of technology, particularly in data processing, to centralize operations. The nature of this assistance must be understood within the context of C&S operating policy, which leaves to the manager of each facility decisions respecting rates and service charges, loans, banking hours, and so on. C&S provides the operating tools and subsequently evaluates overall performance.

[14] Summarizing, the C&S relationship of the correspondent associates, which is voluntary for each such bank, has resulted in the banking system better meeting the convenience and needs of customers in the suburbs of Atlanta and elsewhere. The system of correspondent associates, moreover, has been procompetitive in that it has provided suburban customers with more banking alternatives than could otherwise have been economically feasible. Finally, the correspondent associates, like the suburban affiliates, are in basically separate banking markets.

With this background, the remainder of this report discusses the detailed investigation of the issues raised by the plaintiff in this case. The next section provides an introductory description of the types of studies undertaken.

[83] C. Conclusion

The analysis of this section has focused on determining the extent of market overlaps among the C&S affiliate and correspondent associate banks in DeKalb and Fulton Counties. While an analysis of accounts by Zip-code origin of address is somewhat imperfect, it nevertheless strongly suggests that suburban banking markets are quite local in nature. This is even more true of suburban independent banks than of suburban branches of major city banks. Unique to this case, then, is that there are a number of geographic markets in which the competitive aspects must be determined, and the broader geographic area that encompasses these markets is relevant only for weighing the convenience and needs factors.

[84] A more detailed analysis of account origins by address further suggests the quite local nature of these banking markets. Moreover, it indicates very clearly that there is no more than a very minimal amount of overlap among the markets of the C&S affiliates and correspondent associates—too little to be of any possible competitive significance. Moreover, since these banks operate much as branches of a single institution in providing services to customers, the nature of their markets should be similar to those of branches of the major banks. This implies, in turn, that their market areas would be even smaller and more local in character were it not for their C&S relationship.

Spillover effects, on the other hand, are observed to be significant, and this, too, is in large part a consequence of the C&S relationship. It is the task of the next section to investigate this topic further.

Meanwhile, the analysis to this point suggests that there exists no market in which any two or more C&S affiliates or correspondent associates could have meaningfully acted in restraint of trade. Since each serves its own separate market, there exists no area in which the proposed mergers could tend to reduce competition.

[114] E. Conclusions on Suburban Banking Requirements and Customer Behavior

The results of the survey and interview investigations confirm the hypotheses about metropolitan area banking and customer behavior outlined [115] earlier in this report. Despite the apparent complexity of banking patterns in metropolitan areas such as Atlanta, convenience is the primary factor in the selection of banking relationships. Although this is not always defined by the customer in terms of proximity to home or place of business, it is clear that it implies that suburban banking markets are quite local in character. Nevertheless, suburban banking customers generally include access to many offices of the same organization as part of the convenience factor.*

It is clear, too, that the accounts that originate, or appear to originates outside of a C&S bank's own local market area do not in any meaningful sense represent competition or the potential for competition among the C&S banks. Spillovers of accounts are characteristic of metropolitan areas, particularly where customers have access to many offices of the same organization. They thus are largely a result of the complementary relationships among these banks and between them and the C&S National Bank. Such accounts would tend to be lost if the C&S correspondent associates were instead independent.

* Again, Exhibits 28 and 29, showing transmittal items for deposit and check cashing on accounts at other C&S banks, attest to the widespread use of C&S offices other than those where these customers have their accounts.

This complementary relationship, and the C&S identity of these banks is also important to customers who require the services of a large [116] bank as well as convenient access to suburban facilities for their day-to-day banking needs. For many of these customers, the C&S correspondent associates are essentially surrogates for branches of the C&S National Bank, and tend to be viewed and utilized as such. Basically, it is the personal customers of these banks who are more likely to be unaware of the fact that they are not branches; however, it is to the business customers, who more often are aware of the difference, that the complementary relationship among the C&S banks is most likely to be critical.

The analysis, then, not only confirms the local nature of the market areas of the C&S affiliates and correspondent associates, but also suggests that their customer base is largely built upon the C&S relationship and identity. Local independent banks, most of whose customers can be served just as well by branches of the major banks, are unable to meet the needs of a growing number of metropolitan banking customers, and most suburban C&S customers appear to be among those whom these independent banks cannot fully serve. Since it is the complementary relationship and common identity of these C&S banks that has attracted and held the major part of their customer base, it is clear that they would tend to lose much of their market if independent of C&S.

The effects on the Potential competitiveness of these banks as independents should be clear, particularly when it is recognized that even [117] their locational advantages—the primary factor that now distinguishes them from one another—would be lost as the major Atlanta banks, including C&S, branch into their market areas. They would lose many customers because of their inability to serve them; indeed, each time customers are lost, their ability to serve remaining customers would be weakened, resulting in further losses of customers. As a consequence of attrition, they could no longer be significant competitive factors in their own market areas. Moreover, banks thus weakened could not consider opening new offices, nor is there a significant customer base to be served by their doing so. Consequently, there is no reasonable possibility of these banks entering one another's market areas and thereby becoming competitors.

[118] VI. Policies and Behavior of C&S

The preceding section focused on banking patterns from the point of view of the banking requirements and behavior of C&S suburban customers in the Atlanta area. This section will describe the manner in which C&S operates as an organization with particular reference to its correspondent associate banks.

Banking competition is more than the number of banks in a given market—it is their behavior. Since the very purpose of competition is to ensure good economic performance, an analysis of the impact of the C&S correspondent associates on competition in the Atlanta area should be as directly tied as possible to an appraisal of performance. Performance, of course, cannot be measured in a vacuum, for what counts is the extent to which the banking organizations are meeting the needs of customers. For this reason, considerable attention has been devoted to the issue of why a customer chooses a bank and to the issues that are important to banking customers in the Atlanta area. The present section, by means of an examination of the behavior of these banks, will attempt to determine whether the correspondent associates have been successful in meeting these customer needs.

[119] The information in this section draws heavily from the interviews which have been conducted with banking customers, C&S bankers, and competing bankers. Two basic issues are considered. First, the nature of the correspondent associates is discussed with particular attention to their image, their management by the C&S organization, and the competitive impact of their merger into C&S. Second, the prospects for the correspondent associates as independent banks are discussed, for that is the alternative to the mergers presently under consideration. In both cases, particular attention will be placed on the competitive effects as well as on the ability of these banks to meet the convenience and needs of the communities they serve.

A. The Nature of Correspondent Associates

The correspondent associates are C&S banks. Customers and competitors view them as such because they are managed by C&S personnel and are identified as C&S banks. Their competitive behavior conforms to the so-called "C&S style of banking," and they provide customers with the full range of C&S banking services. Indeed, this C&S style of banking is at the heart of the competitive posture of all C&S banks. While no phrase such as this is subject to precise definition, several things are implied thereby. Customers, [120] both of C&S and of other banks in the Atlanta area, generally view C&S as the most competitive and innovative banking organization in Atlanta. C&S normally takes the lead with new services and is somewhat more retail-oriented than are other banks. To competitors, C&S represents a tough and aggressive adversary, termed by many as "the leader" and as the banking organization most necessary to reckon with. To a C&S banker, this "style" implies a delegation of authority to make decisions, an attitude to try to find a way to work out a customer's problem, a positive desire to lend money, and a desire to serve effectively the communities in which C&S banks are located. In contrast to the policies of most major banks around the country, where loan officers must justify their loans in advance, a strong burden is put on C&S officers to justify why certain loans have been turned down. Only one C&S officer is needed to approve a loan, whereas the concurring opinion of two is required to turn down a borrower's request. In short, C&S bankers have the authority and the back-up to be responsive to the needs of the local communities which they serve.

The senior management of C&S has the responsibility for establishing guidelines, assuring that adequate operational support is provided as required, and for appraising the performance of the organization. With respect to the most general types of guidelines, [121] recurring references were made to the ability of the organization to serve the community, the customer, and itself—in that order. The emphasis on independent on-site decision making by C&S branches, affiliates, and correspondent associates is related to the fact that customers react negatively to delays caused by loan committees and other head office reviews. Meanwhile, the C&S organization provides all of its banks and branches with management tools and personnel, with credit reviews, and with operations support. Management control is provided by ex post performance and credit reviews rather than by ex ante directives. In the extreme, poor performance results in management replacement; otherwise, the management of individual banking offices is expected to make its own decisions on lending and on interest rates.

The consequence of the independent decision making by branch managers and by the presidents of the C&S affiliates and correspondent associates is that each is primarily concerned with the performance of his own unit, for it is on this basis that his own achievement, and thus his level of responsibility and compensation, ultimately will be determined. Standards of performance are, in all cases, set by the branch supervision department of the C&S National Bank: the president of the affiliates and correspondent associates, because of their [122] additional responsibilities, also report budgeting items to the C&S National Comptroller's Department.

There is, in fact, no essential difference in the manner in which the C&S approach to management is applied to its branches and to its correspondent associate banks. Employees of the latter regard themselves as C&S employees, and most of the senior management have had previous experience with other C&S banks, particularly the C&S National Bank.*

Meanwhile, senior officers of C&S periodically attend directors meetings of the correspondent associate banks as advisors. For management, the correspondent associates are fully dependent upon the C&S organization, while directors of these banks are satisfied to rely on the C&S management and operating support as long as it produces results. In the area of operations, the correspondent associates are totally dependent upon the C&S organization. In addition to providing management, performance evaluation, credit information and review, and general advisory services, there are a number of other functions that receive internal support. Many of these are listed [123] in Exhibit 69: centralized payroll accounting, purchasing, and personnel services, a single employee benefit plan, and so on. Internal data processing services are completely centralized. Also important is that the C&S relationship is itself a significant incentive to management, providing more opportunities to obtain diversified experience and promotion than would be possible in an individual small bank.

Because the correspondent associates are managed as C&S banks, they are identified as such in the minds of customers. Most of their customers look at these banks as C&S branches through which to avail themselves of the advantages of the entire C&S organization. Interview evidence supports the findings of the questionnaire survey with regard to the importance to many customers of using several C&S offices. Several customers were interviewed who had changed their business location and yet maintained older C&S banking relationships; they nonetheless made use of C&S correspondent associate offices near their present business location. Larger banking customers view the C&S relationship with the correspondent associates as particularly important, if not critical, in meeting their banking needs. Customers feel that they can call upon the total resources of the C&S organization at any of the correspondent associate banks.

[124] Repeatedly emphasized in these interviews was the importance of direct availability of specialized services and the efficiency with which overline loans could be arranged as a consequence of the relationship between C&S National and the correspondent associate banks. At C&S Park National, for example, services such as lock box, freight bill payments and payroll processing are important to some customers, while at the C&S Bank of Chamblee, assistance in real estate lending was cited. The importance of these specialized services to some customers is, of course, supported by the findings of the questionnaire survey.

The importance of convenient arrangement of overline loans is evidenced from data on loan-deposit ratios and loan participations, as shown in Exhibit 70. Notice, for example, that the C&S South DeKalb Bank is responsible for a loan volume that is in excess of its deposit base due to the very heavy demand for installment loans in its service area. In general, the arrangement of loan participations is a regular part of C&S activity. Because of management involvement and responsibility, loan participations within the C&S organization are a very different matter than participations involving outside correspondent banks. This distinction is particularly important when an intimate knowledge of the customer's business is required and when customers requiring rapid loan commitments are involved.

[125] Because of all of these factors, correspondent associates present the image of a C&S bank. Coupled with this management attitude and ability to meet the community's needs with the backup of the C&S organization is the common identification through the C&S logo. Most customers cannot recognize a distinction between the correspondent associates and any branches of C&S National. Though larger customers may be aware of the legal distinction, it is in no sense apparent to them operationally. Yet, these observations are entirely consistent with the fact that many customers view the correspondent associates as independent entities. As with branches of C&S National in local communities, these banks identify with the areas that they serve in their approach to local customer banking requirements.

As a consequence of the needs of the local service areas, and in line with the C&S style of banking, the correspondent associates pursue policies which vary significantly from one another. One example is the Saturday hours maintained by the C&S North Fulton and South DeKalb Banks, which were instituted in order to meet particular banking needs within those communities. Another example is banking hours during the week: the North Fulton, Sandy Springs, Chamblee, and Tucker Banks remain open until 6:00 p.m. on Fridays while the Park National and South DeKalb Banks close at 4:00 p.m.; the Tucker Bank opens its drive-in window at 8:30 a.m. while the other corres- [126] pondent associates open at 9:00 a.m.* A third example is provided by bids for public funds deposits. In one case of state funds placed by the fiscal division of the Georgia Department of Administrative Services (May 23, 1972), the C&S Bank of Tucker was the only successful bidder among the C&S banks. More generally, while there are numerous examples of variations in stated rates, service charges and fees, these can only scratch the surface of the variations which arise in granting loans and in negotiable interest rates. This does occasionally result in two different C&S offices competing with one another for a particular account, but in this regard there appears to be no difference between the correspondent associates and branches of C&S National.

Based on the foregoing, the following conclusions emerge. The correspondent associates are managed as C&S banks and are therefore viewed as such by their competitors and customers. The fact that they are able to offer the full range of C&S banking services in their local communities is very important to them in attracting their customers. C&S banking, in fact, has been characteristically competi- [127] tive and innovative. One innovation was the ability to serve customers in suburban areas through the establishment of correspondent associate banks. In this regard, the operating support provided by C&S is of critical importance to the ability of the correspondent associates to serve their customers adequately. Their customers are typical of a growing majority of suburban banking customers who can be served satisfactorily only by means of metropolitan-wide branch banking institutions. The C&S relationship, however, still involves independence in banking decisions among the correspondent associates, recognizing that they can serve different communities with different banking needs if decisions are made by officers on the scene whose responsibility is to serve their individual communities. Finally, it is clear that the integral relationship between the C&S correspondent associate banks and the C&S organization involves much more than simply that between correspondent banks. Basically, a bank provides correspondent services to another bank only on its request—it does not initiate these services, as C&S in fact does with respect to its affiliates and correspondent associates, nor is there any integration of the services of the banks involved. Similarly, a bank does not provide management to its correspondents, nor is there any integration of management as in the case of C&S.

[128] B. The Experience in Savannah, Augusta and Belvedere

The proposed mergers of the correspondent associate banks in the Atlanta area are not without precedent. As mentioned in Section II of this report, C&S National merged with suburban correspondent associates in Chatham County outside Savannah and in Richmond County outside Augusta in 1971. Similarly, the C&S Belvedere Bank was merged with the C&S DeKalb Bank in 1969, a merger made possible by a redefinition of the municipal boundaries of Avondale Estates. These previous mergers provide good case studies for assessing the impact of the present merger proposals on competition and on the manner in which the convenience and needs of the banking public is served. Interviews in Augusta, Savannah, and in the Belvedere section of DeKalb County confirm the conclusions discussed above. The correspondent associates previously located in these areas were always managed as C&S banks and hence were viewed as branches by their customers. These mergers were largely unnoticed by customers and competitors of these banks. Many customers had scarcely been conscious of the fact that these correspondent associates were anything other than C&S branches. Nevertheless, some larger customers, to whom bank management is important, did notice faster deposit posting as a consequence of these mergers and the elimination of the transmittal process permitted thereby. Also recognized was the ability of [129] the merged banks to arrange larger loans somewhat more expeditiously. Because of the previous relationships of these banks with C&S, no change was noticed in the degree of competition as a consequence of the mergers. Parenthetically, it might be added, customers and competitors in the service areas of these Savannah, Augusta and Belvedere banks indicated that in their judgment, these banking markets were highly competitive both before and after the mergers.

Because the correspondent associate banks are already well integrated into the C&S system, substantial cost savings cannot be expected to result from the proposed merger. Nevertheless, there will be some reductions in operating costs which could result ultimately in lower banking costs or better services to customers. An analysis of expenses of the Richmond and Chatham County offices before and after the Augusta and Savannah mergers suggests some cost savings. Changes in accounting procedures, however, result in many comparisons being of doubtful validity. Two areas in which direct comparisons are possible are with respect to director's fees and bank examinations, both of which are eliminated by the merger (resulting in savings of $2,250 per year by the Chatham County office and $3,100 by the Richmond County office). Some savings are also believed to have occurred for salaries and related expenses and for data processing, but exact amounts of these savings cannot be mea- [130] sured because of the changed accounting procedures.

In any event, the basic conclusion to be drawn from previous experience is clear: no diminution in competition or in the ability to serve their communities was apparent after the mergers of the C&S correspondent associate banks in Chatham County, in Richmond County, and in the Belvedere area of DeKalb County. The mergers were merely a change of corporate form rather than of competitive substance.

[139] VII. General Conclusions

This report has presented the findings of an economic analysis of the competitive impact of the relationships among the defendant banks and of the proposed mergers. It has addressed this issue in light of the convenience and needs of banking customers in the Atlanta metropolitan area. This analysis has included an examination of banking patterns in metropolitan areas, the rational basis of these patterns in terms of the convenience and needs of metropolitan area banking customers, and the resulting implications for competition, actual and potential, in commercial banking in the suburban areas around Atlanta. It has involved a statistical examination of the structural characteristics of metropolitan area banking, a detailed study of the geographic origins of commercial bank accounts in the Atlanta area, an extensive questionnaire survey of banking customers in the Atlanta suburbs, and numerous interviews with bankers and bank customers in and around Atlanta, Augusta and Savannah.

The findings of this study provide no basis for the Justice Department allegations that competition has been or will be lessened by the past and present relationships among the defendants or by consummation of the proposed mergers. On the contrary, the conclusion emerges that the past relationships among the C&S banks have, in fact, promoted competition in these banking markets and have brought better and more convenient banking [140] services to customers in these markets. Prevention of the proposed mergers would have detrimental effects both on competition and upon the effectiveness with which customer banking requirements are met.

The management and operation of the C&S affiliates and correspondent associates in Fulton and DeKalb Counties have been predicated upon an integral relationship with the C&S organization since the initial C&S involvement. Further investigation indicates that these banks are identified by customers and competing bankers with C&S, and generally are viewed as if they are branches of the C&S National Bank. They function within the C&S system much as branches; they meet customer needs by providing multiple office locations to serve customers conveniently.

Examination of the structure of banking in the Atlanta metropolitan area leads to the conclusion that in comparison with similar metropolitan areas, commercial banking in Atlanta is neither concentrated nor is it trending that way. For example, in metropolitan areas in limited-area branching states, the average share of deposits held by the largest banking organization in mid-1970 was 36.6 percent; C&S, with all of its affiliates and correspondent associates in the metropolitan Atlanta area included, held 29.8 percent. Moreover, the C&S share as measured by number of accounts has consistently been far less than this. The C&S National Bank, for example, held 23.6 percent of total metropolitan area deposits in mid-1970, but only 17.2 percent of the total number of deposit accounts.

[141] Furthermore, the proposed mergers would have only a minimal effect on banking concentration in the Atlanta metropolitan area, involving an increase of only 1.7 percent of total deposits. In reality, however, the mergers would be merely a formalization of existing relationships; thus, this small increase in concentration would have no competitive significance.

Additional measures of banking structure have indicated that banking in the Atlanta area is highly competitive, that the intensity of this competition is increasing, and that customers are well served in terms of the number of convenient and competing alternatives. Between the beginning of 1971 and mid-1972, for example, sixteen new banking offices have opened in DeKalb County and suburban Fulton County.

The analysis of banking structure in the Atlanta area also suggested that the major Atlanta banks are becoming increasingly important factors in suburban Fulton and DeKalb Counties. From the end of 1970 to mid-1971, the number of branches of these banks in these suburbs increased from four to thirty, accounting for some 40 percent of all banking offices in that area. This, in turn, indicates the emergence of a banking structure that is characteristic of metropolitan areas in which branching by commercial banks is permitted. For several reasons, this is, in fact, the rational structure for banking to assume within a complex economic environment. [142] Specifically, most suburban customers require facilities at multiple locations at which they can conduct banking business; many, too, require convenient suburban access to the credit resources and the specialized services and expertise that can be provided only by a major metropolitan bank. More generally, such a structure typically brings to suburban customers a larger number of banking facilities and a larger number of competitive alternatives, and tends to result in a better allocation of credit as individual offices have more flexibility in responding to local borrowing requirements. It is within such an environment that C&S was the first Atlanta organization to respond to suburban banking needs by establishing banks consistent with the limitations of state law. This response, in turn, is reflected in the widespread view among bank customers and other bankers that C&S is the most competitive and innovative of the Atlanta banking organizations.

Initially it may appear that a relatively broad metropolitan banking market definition should be taken as the relevant geographic area in assessing the effects of the proposed mergers. While it is indeed a broad area that seems most relevant to the convenience and needs issues of this case, such areas can at best be relevant only to a very few customers. Suburban banking markets are, in fact, highly localized, and this fact is supported by extensive data on the origins of suburban customer accounts by ZIP-code address. Typically, both the suburban C&S banks and the [143] suburban branch offices of the major Atlanta banks draw the bulk of their accounts from only a few ZIP-code areas. Furthermore, the market areas of the suburban independent banks are observed to be even more geographically confined than those of the offices of the major organizations.

Postal ZIP-code data on origins of accounts can provide only a preliminary indication of bank market areas and the existing degree of market overlap. While these data indicate strongly the overwhelming significance of proximity in determining where people do their banking, postal ZIP-code areas coincide very poorly with any reasonable concept of geographic banking markets. Thus, in order to test for overlap among the markets of the suburban C&S banks, a detailed analysis was undertaken of the origins of their accounts by street address. It has been concluded from this analysis that no significant degree of market overlap exists among any of these banks. There is, therefore, no market area in which the potential for competition has ever existed given the present locations of the correspondent associates.

The analysis of market areas has revealed, nevertheless, that there are a number of accounts of these banks that originate, or at least appear to originate, from outside of their service areas. It has been found, however, that these accounts, which are widely dispersed around and beyond the Atlanta metropolitan area, do not represent any form of market overlap and have, in fact, no competitive significance. Rather, they have their [144] source in the complementary relationships among the C&S banks in this metropolitan area and in the banking requirements which this complementarity enables them to meet. Should the relationship of the C&S correspondent associate banks to one another and to the other C&S banks in the area cease, these accounts would tend to evaporate and the market areas of these banks would tend to become even more confined geographically than at the present time. Such accounts thus represent no potential for competition among any of the defendant banks.

Because each of the correspondent associates serves a separate suburban market, their association with C&S cannot have served to lessen competition or otherwise to restrain trade. Moreover, each bank operates with independent decision-making authority. The role of the C&S organization is rather to provide the management and support required to serve each community with maximum effectiveness.

A final issue of potential competition is the competitive posture of the C&S correspondent associates should they be required to sever their relationship with the C&S organization. Just as it has been found that the C&S relationship has allowed them to provide better services for the great majority of suburban customers, severance of the C&S relationship would deprive them of this ability. This indicates that a substantial attrition of their customer base, with no effective means of attracting other customers, would occur. In turn, particularly in light of the fact that these banks have [145] no experience as independents, these banks would be of substantially diminished importance as competitive factors in their suburban markets.

The conclusions regarding the competitive issues of this case may thus be summarized briefly:

— First, commercial banking in the Atlanta area is now vigorously competitive, and C&S is an innovative and competitive banking organization.

— Second, by simply formalizing past relationships among the defendant banks, the proposed mergers, which the Department of Justice seeks to enjoin, can in no event result in a lessening of competition.

— Third, each of the defendant banks serves its own separate market area, and thus there is no market overlap in which the potential for competition could have been eliminated or in which it could be created by prevention of the mergers.

— Fourth, the customer base and the competitive posture of the suburban C&S banks have been predicated upon the complementary relationship of the C&S banking system and upon the particular banking requirements of metropolitan area customers that can be served only by means of such a relationship.

— Fifth, the means by which these banks compete within their local markets are determined by each bank individually and separately.

— Sixth, the C&S correspondent associate banks could no longer serve the banking needs of the substantial and growing majority of suburban bank customers if their relationship to C&S were terminated. Should this occur, as it must if the proposed mergers are enjoined, these banks could no longer be positive competitive factors in suburban Atlanta.

[146] The issues of the convenience and needs of banking customers in this case are closely related to the competitive issues. Indeed, it is apparent that the competitive issues themselves arise from the past efforts of C&S to better meet the banking requirements of suburban banking customers. The mergers themselves would merely formalize what C&S has already accomplished. Prevention of the mergers, however, would deprive many customers of the convenience with which their banking requirements are now served.

The great majority of suburban banking customers require different points of access to their accounts. Indeed, of all personal customers now banking with C&S, over 80 percent now use two or more C&S banks for personal banking transactions, as do about half of all business customers for their business accounts. Furthermore, about 25 percent of the business customers of these banks require the specialized services and expertise and the large credit resources that must ultimately be provided by a major bank such as the main office of the C&S National Bank. Consequently, the overwhelming majority of the customers of the C&S suburban banks have been better served by virtue of the complementary C&S relationship.

Through meeting the convenience and needs of suburban customers, the C&S correspondent associates have acted to enhance banking competition in the Atlanta area. Prevention of these mergers and eliminating C&S [147] management from these banks would substantially inconvenience the majority of their customers and would, in turn, be detrimental to banking competition in these markets.

FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION

Re: Citizens and Southern Bank of East Point
East Point, Georgia
Application for Consent to Acquisition of
Assets and Assumption of Liability to Pay
Deposits and to Establish Two Branches

BASIS FOR CORPORATION APPROVAL

Citizens and Southern Bank of East Point, East Point, Georgia (East Point Bank), an insured State nonmember bank with total deposits of $27,606,000, has applied, pursuant to Section 18(c) and other provisions of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, for the Corporation's prior approval to acquire the assets of and to assume the liability to pay deposits made in The Citizens and Southern Bank of North Fulton, Roswell, Georgia (North Fulton Bank), an insured State nonmember bank with total deposits of $7,013,000, and The Citizens and Southern Bank of Sandy Springs, Sandy Springs, Georgia (Sandy Springs Bank), an insured State nonmember bank with total deposits of $21,001,000.1/ Application is made also under Section 18(d) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act to operate the main, and only, offices of the North Fulton Bank and Sandy Springs Bank as branches of the resulting bank, increasing the number of its authorized offices to five.

Competition. The Citizens and Southern National Bank (C&S National), Savannah, Georgia, is the owner of all the outstanding stock of Citizens and Southern Holding Company (C&S Holding), Savannah, Georgia, which in turn owns 90.25 percent of the stock of East Point Bank, and 5.0 percent each of the stock of North Fulton Bank and Sandy Springs Bank.

The proposed mergers would consolidate in East Point Bank the Fulton County activities of the C&S system outside the City of Atlanta. That system in the aggregate presently controls 30.2 percent of all deposits held at Fulton County commercial bank offices and 28.6 percent of all commercial bank offices in the County, making it the largest banking system in the County.

Because the C&S system has such a large share of the banking resources in Fulton County, proposed new acquisitions of nonaffiliated banks in the same market would raise the most serious competitive problems under the Bank Merger Act as amended and under Section 7 of the Clayton Act. Whether similar considerations require the Corporation to deny the proposed mergers into a C&S subsidiary of two banks in which C&S Holding has only a 5.0 percent stock interest is the question raised by the present applications.

East Point Bank operates a main office and one branch, both located in East Point, a suburban community of about 39,400 population, bordering on Atlanta and about 6 miles south of that city's downtown section. East Point Bank presently holds 1.0 percent of total Fulton County deposits. The two banks it seeks to merge have offices to the north of the city of Atlanta, where East Point Bank also has an authorized but unopened branch.

North Fulton Bank is a unit bank located at Roswell (population 5,430), about 9 miles north of the city of Atlanta along U.S. Route 19. Established in 1967, it has 0.2 percent of the total commercial bank deposits in Fulton County. Sandy Springs Bank, also a unit bank, is about 8 miles south of Roswell and lies just north of the city of Atlanta. Established in 1959, it controls 0.8 percent of the total commercial bank deposits in Fulton County. The authorized branch of East Point Bank lies approximately midway between Roswell and Sandy Springs. These three offices service a combined area in which six other commercial banks, i.e., the second, third, fourth and fifth largest Atlanta banks as well as two local banks in Roswell, have eight authorized offices.

The banks involved in the proposed mergers do not compete today and never have competed in the past. The two smaller banks were both organized under C&S guidance and direction at a time when Georgia law did not permit C&S National or any other Atlanta bank to branch outside the City of Atlanta. A close working relationship has existed ever since and a majority of the stock in each bank has been held continuously by directors, officers and employees of C&S National, directors, officers and employees of subsidiary banks of C&S Holding, and a number of influential customers who maintain significant banking relationships with one or more such banks. The remaining stock is well dispersed, with no significant blocs held independently of the C&S system. From the inception of both banks, their management has been drawn from the C&S system, C&S National has hired all their employees, and these employees participate fully in the various employee benefits provided by the C&S system. Customers seeking services not provided by Sandy Springs Bank or North Fulton Bank are referred to C&S National, and that bank provides credit services, investment advice and numerous other services for the two smaller banks in much the same manner as it does for its own branches or subsidiary banks. Like the other banks in the C&S system, these 5 percent banks use the C&S name and logo and advertise jointly. More than 40 percent of their respective loan portfolios are loans purchased from C&S National, while their buildings have been leased from other C&S entities. When additional capital became desirable, C&S National subscribed to capital notes of each bank. In short, North Fulton Bank and Sandy Springs Bank have been recognized by the public and the C&S National as part of the C&S system since their inception.

Under these circumstances, the proposed mergers of these two 5 percent banks into a majority-owned C&S subsidiary would not eliminate any existing competition between them or between either bank and any other C&S unit. Such mergers would not alter the existing competitive structure of Fulton County in any way or add to the concentration of banking resources now held by the C&S system. The Corporation also finds that the opening of these two de novo banks served the convenience and needs of their respective communities and enhanced competition in both areas without increasing the percentage of Fulton County deposits then controlled by the C&S system.

Furthermore, the Corporation finds no reasonable probability that North Fulton Bank or Sandy Springs Bank would become disassociated from the C&S system in the future if the proposed mergers are denied. This conclusion is based in part on the close working relationship described above and the continuing nature of that relationship throughout the history of both banks. The following considerations also appear relevant.

The relationship between each bank and the C&S system has been mutually advantageous; voluntary disaffiliation would run the risk of significant transfers of banking relationships and official staff, and a consequent weakening of the ability of both banks to compete in the new and intensely competitive climate of county-wide branching.

Neither bank has had significant transfers of stock since they were organized, and there is some evidence that persons who bought shares initially expected a merger into C&S National or a C&S majority-owned subsidiary whenever Georgia law was changed to permit it. The virtually unanimous vote of the shareholders of both banks approving the proposed merger into East Point Bank tends to confirm this expectation and attests to the complete acceptance of C&S direction by shareholders as well as directors of the two banks.

In the one recent example of voluntary disaffiliation by a 5 percent bank from the C&S system--out of more than 30 possibilities Statewide--that bank had a very significant bloc of stock held independently of C&S influence and a history of local independence on the part of its board of directors and top management. Its disaffiliation does not increase the likelihood of disaffiliation of North Fulton Bank or Sandy Springs Bank if the present mergers are denied.

If voluntary disaffiliation represents no more than an unlikely possibility, the Corporation finds itself unable to conclude that the proposed mergers would eliminate any significant potential for increased competition between the two banks or between either of them and the rest of the C&S system banks.

The Corporation concludes that the proposed mergers would not be anticompetitive either as to existing or as to potential competition.

Financial and Managerial Resources; Future Prospects. These factors are satisfactory with respect to each of the banks involved and are so projected for the resulting bank.

Convenience and Needs of the Community to be Served. In view of the close working relationship that presently exists between the C&S system and these two banks, consummation of the mergers proposed would not change in any significant way the ability of Sandy Springs Bank or North Fulton Bank to serve the convenience and needs of Fulton County residents.

Citizens and Southern Bank of East Point

With the various factors to be considered weighing neither for approval nor denial, the Corporation concludes that the management decision to restructure the existing C&S system in the manner proposed should be honored. Accordingly, approval of the applications appears to be warranted.

Re: The Citizens and Southern Emory Bank
Atlanta, Georgia
Application for Consent to Acquisition of Assets and Assumption of Liability to Pay Deposits and to Establish Five Branches

BASIS FOR CORPORATION APPROVAL

The Citizens and Southern Emory Bank, Atlanta, Georgia (Emory Bank), an insured State nonmember bank with total deposits of $34,800,000, has applied, pursuant to Section 18(c) and other provisions of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, for the Corporation's prior approval to acquire the assets of, and to assume the liability to pay deposits made in: The Citizens and Southern Bank of Chamblee, Chamblee, Georgia (Chamblee Bank), an insured State nonmember bank with total deposits of $21,700,000; The Citizens and Southern Park National Bank, Atlanta, Georgia (Park National Bank), which has total deposits of $11,300,000; and The Citizens and Southern South DeKalb Bank, Decatur, Georgia (South DeKalb Bank), an insured State nonmember bank with total deposits of $5,100,000.1/ Application also is made under Section 18(d) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act to operate as branches of Emory Bank: the main office and branch of Chamblee Bank; the sole office of Park National Bank; and the main office and branch of South DeKalb Bank.

Competition. The Citizens and Southern National Bank (C&S National), Savannah, Georgia, is the owner of all the outstanding stock of Citizens and Southern Holding Company (C&S Holding), Savannah, Georgia, which in turn owns 95.14 percent of the stock of Emory Bank, and 5 percent each of the stock of Chamblee Bank, Park National Bank, and South DeKalb Bank. The three offices of Emory Bank and all offices of the three banks it proposes to acquire are located in DeKalb County. The C&S system, including its 5 percent affiliates, presently controls 41.8 percent of all deposits held at DeKalb County commercial bank offices and operates 25.4 percent of the commercial bank offices in the County, making it by far the largest banking system in DeKalb County.

Because the C&S system has such a large share of the banking resources of DeKalb County, proposed new acquisitions of nonaffiliated banks in the same market would raise the most serious competitive problems under the Bank Merger Act as amended and under Section 7 of the Clayton Act. Whether similar considerations require the Corporation to deny the proposed acquisitions by a C&S subsidiary of three banks in which C&S Holding has only 5 percent stock interest is the question raised by the present applications.

1/ Deposit data as of June 30, 1971

Re: The Citizens and Southern Emory Bank

Emory Bank and the three banks proposed to be acquired together serve nearly the whole of DeKalb County; with the exception of South DeKalb Bank, they draw their business from overlapping areas in the County. Emory Bank holds 12.8 percent of total DeKalb County Deposits; Chamblee Bank (organized in 1960) holds 5.8 percent, Park National Bank (organized in 1967) 2.8 percent, and South DeKalb Bank (organized in 1969) 1.1 percent, respectively, of total DeKalb County deposits. These four banks, however, do not compete today and never have competed in the past.

Except that these four banks are located in DeKalb County, rather than Fulton County, substantially the same facts are presented as to the organization of the banks, the close working relationship between them, the lack of competition between them, and the unlikely prospect of voluntary disaffiliation, as were presented by the proposals to merge the Citizens and Southern Bank of North Fulton, Roswell, Georgia (North Fulton Bank) and other C&S Banks in Fulton County, approved today by the Corporation.

Following the reasoning set down in the basis in that matter, the Corporation concludes that the proposed acquisitions would not be anticompetitive, either as to existing or as to potential competition and that since the other factors to be considered weigh neither for approval nor denial, approval of the applications is warranted. See In Re: The Citizens and Southern Bank of East Point, East Point, Georgia; Application for Consent to Acquisition of Assets and Assumption of Liability to Pay Deposits and to Establish Two Branches, decided October 4, 1971.

FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION

Re: The Citizens and Southern Emory Bank
Atlanta, Georgia
Application for Consent to Acquisition of
Assets and Assumption of Liability to Pay
Deposits and to Establish Two Branches

BASIS FOR CORPORATION DENIAL

The Citizens and Southern Emory Bank, Atlanta, Georgia (Emory Bank), an insured State nonmember bank with total deposits of $34,796,000, has applied, pursuant to Section 18(c) and other provisions of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, for the Corporation's prior approval to acquire the assets of and to assume the liability to pay deposits made in Citizens and Southern Bank of Tucker, Tucker, Georgia (Tucker Bank), an insured State nonmember bank with total deposits of $24,738,000.1/ Application is made also under Section 18(d) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act to operate the main and single branch office of Tucker Bank as branches of the resulting bank.

Competition. The Citizens and Southern National Bank (C&S National), Savannah, Georgia, is the owner of all the outstanding stock of Citizens and Southern Holding Company (C&S Holding), Savannah, Georgia, which in turn owns 95.14 percent of the stock of Emory Bank and 5.0 percent of the stock of Tucker Bank.

The C&S system, including its 5% affiliates, presently controls 41.8 percent of all deposits held at DeKalb County commercial bank offices and 25.4 percent of all commercial bank offices in the County, making it by far the largest banking system in DeKalb County.

Tucker Bank was organized in 1919 and did not become affiliated with the C&S system until early 1965. At that time Tucker Bank maintained only one office, holding approximately $4 million in deposits.

When C&S Holding acquired its 5% interest in Tucker Bank, approximately 75 percent of Tucker Bank's remaining stock was acquired simultaneously by holders close to the C&S system. Ever since, Tucker Bank has been operated with substantially the same close working relationship between it and other C&S banks that exists between the C&S system and the 5% banks which it organized de novo. This relationship, and the lack of existing competition between C&S banks, are detailed in the Basis for Corporation Approval issued this date in connection with the proposed acquisition by the Citizens and Southern Bank of East Point and two other 5% C&S banks in Fulton County.

Even as to Tucker Bank, the Corporation sees no reason to anticipate a voluntary disaffiliation from the C&S system if this proposed merger is denied.

1/ Deposit data as of June 30, 1971.

Re: The Citizens and Southern Emory Bank

The close, and apparently friendly, working relationship that presently exists with the C&S system argues against the likelihood of such disaffiliation despite the fact that 17 percent of the outstanding stock of Tucker Bank remains in the hands of the family that controlled the bank as an independent institution when C&S acquired its interest in 1965. As in the case of the other proposed mergers of 5% banks into majority-owned C&S subsidiaries, more than 87 percent of the outstanding shares of Tucker Bank were voted in favor of this proposed merger and only 26 shares (less than 0.1 percent) of the outstanding shares were voted against the proposal. Disaffiliation, if it occurs, would appear to depend on compulsory process to sever the C&S relationship with this bank, rather than the denial of the application now before the Corporation.

While the Corporation finds that existing competition would not be eliminated by the proposed merger, and that future competition through voluntary disaffiliation is unlikely, it subscribes to the following view expressed by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System in its May 20, 1971, opinion on the reconsideration of its earlier decision relating to the proposed merger of Trust Company of Georgia and Peachtree Bank and Trust Company, Chamblee, Georgia:

> "...A merger of two banks which are not significant competitors cannot be regarded as eliminating significant existing competition, and, similarly, if future competition is unlikely -- even though possible -- the merger cannot be regarded as reasonably likely to lessen future competition.
> "This does not mean that every proposed merger before the Board of two related banks receives favorable consideration. First of all, consideration must be given to the question of whether the relationship was anticompetitive in its origins; if so, little weight should be attributed to such relationship, since to do so might encourage evasion of the law." [Emphasis supplied.]

The Corporation took a similar position in its December 1, 1970, opinion approving the proposed merger of The Lone Tree Savings Bank into The Farmers and Merchants Savings Bank, also of Lone Tree, Iowa, and in its December 4, 1970, opinion approving the proposed merger of Embarrass State Bank, Embarrass, Wisconsin into Citizens State Bank, Shawano, Wisconsin.

The following circumstances surrounding the affiliation of Tucker Bank with the C&S system in 1965 appear relevant. Tucker Bank was a small, limited service unit bank serving primarily the credit needs of outside business interests of the Cofer family, its controlling owners. A new national bank was being organized in Tucker, which promised more intense competition. Seeking more experienced banking management and a good price for their stock, the controlling owners of Tucker Bank approached C&S National, with whose management they were personally friendly, and the sale of 80 percent of their stock to C&S interests was consummated shortly thereafter.

Re: The Citizens and Southern Emory Bank

While the C&S affiliation resulted in broadening the banking services offered to Tucker Bank customers, it also resulted in a significant increase in the share of DeKalb County banking resources controlled by the C&S system. At year-end 1964, the C&S system already controlled approximately 24 percent of total DeKalb County commercial bank deposits and a slightly larger share of all the commercial bank offices in the County. Tucker Bank's deposits represented at that time about 5 percent of total DeKalb County commercial bank deposits. Its affiliation with the C&S system not only increased substantially that system's lead over other banking organization in the County, but foreclosed the possibility that Tucker Bank, either as an independent bank under different control or as part of another large banking organization with a less substantial share of DeKalb County banking resources, would become a significant competitor to the C&S system.

Tucker Bank at the time was not in an unsound condition, it had had no experience actually competing against the new bank being organized in its community, and the record discloses no serious effort on the part of its owners to find some other, less anticompetitive solution to the new situation it faced. Moreover, with the growth projected for the Tucker area, the C&S system might have found it desirable and practicable, if not in 1964-1965, then at some later date, to establish a de novo bank in the area served by Tucker Bank, just as it did in other growing secitons of DeKalb County prior to the recent change in Georgia's branching laws.

Based on the increased concentration of DeKalb County banking resources in the C&S system and the elimination of probable future competition with Bank of Tucker had the affiliation with C&S not taken place, the Corporation finds that the present affiliation was anticompetitive in its origins and should not now be ratified by the Corporation's approval under the Bank Merger Act.

Financial and Managerial Resources; Future Prospects. These factors are satisfactory with respect to each of the banks involved and are so projected for the resulting bank.

Convenience and Needs of the Community to be Served. In View of the close working relationship that presently exists between the C&S system and these two banks, neither consummation nor denial of the proposed merger would change in any significant way the ability of Tucker Bank to serve the convenience and needs of DeKalb County residents.

With the various other factors to be considered weighing neither for approval nor denial, the Corporation concludes that the application now before it should be denied in view of the anticompetitive nature of the original affiliation of Bank of Tucker with the C&S system in 1965.

FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION

IN RE: The Citizens and Southern Emory Bank
DeKalb County (P. O. Atlanta), Georgia
Application for Consent to Establish a Branch (DENIAL)

STATEMENT

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 18(d) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1828), The Citizens and Southern Emory Bank, DeKalb County (P. O. Atlanta), Georgia, a subsidiary of Citizens and Southern Holding Company, has filed an application with the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation for consent to establish a branch at the corner of Ashford-Dunwoody Road and Perimeter Center Drive, DeKalb County (P. O. Atlanta), Georgia.

The Perimeter Center Branch would be located in an unincorporated area of DeKalb County which is being developed into an office building park and shopping center known as Perimeter Center. This development will be one of the metropolitan area's largest commercial centers outside of downtown Atlanta when completed. The trade area population is estimated in excess of 25,000 with single family residences priced in the $25,000 to $45,000 range generally, and numerous apartment development complexes in the area are anticipated. Three Atlanta-based banks have received approval to open branches within the Perimeter Center complex and a fourth bank has approval to open a branch approximately one and one-half miles away.

Statutory Factors to be Considered

The Corporation is required by Section 18(c) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1828) to consider, in determining whether to grant or withhold its consent to the establishment of a new branch by a State nonmember insured bank, the financial history and condition of the bank, the adequacy of its capital structure, its future earnings prospects, the general character of its management, the convenience and needs of the community to be served, and whether or not its corporate powers are consistent with the purposes of the FDI Act. The Board of Directors finds favorably on all factors, other than convenience and needs.

Convenience and Needs

Although the statutory factors do not expressly require that competition be taken into account, there are nevertheless compelling considerations that lead the Corporation to conclude that competition is an inherent part of the convenience and needs factor, and must be considered in determining whether the convenience and needs of the community are served by the establishment of a branch.

In Re: The Citizens and Southern Emory Bank

The duty of a Federal regulatory agency to preserve and promote competition, where there is no explicit statutory directive to do so, is typically found to be implicit in the statutory obligation to determine whether a proposal would be in the "public interest" or would be warranted by considerations of "public convenience and necessity." See, e. g., United States v. R.C.A., 358 U.S. 334, 351 (1959); Northern Natural Gas Co. v. Federal Power Commission, 399 F. 2d 953, 959-61 (D.C. Cir. 1968). Although the pertinent provisions of the FDI Act do not employ either of these phrases, the phrase "convenience and needs" is closely akin to each of them and, indeed, has been interpreted to include competition as a relevant consideration in a recent de novo branch application by a national bank where applicable State law, judicially construed as applicable to national banks, required that "convenience and needs of the public" be considered. Clermont Nat'l Bank v. Citizenbank Nat'l Assoc., Civil No. 7987, (S.D. Ohio, filed June 15, 1971). Further, since the preservation of competition is an established national policy, actions by Federal regulatory agencies ought to be consistent with that policy, unless it is clear in the case of a particular agency-administered statute that Congress intended otherwise.

The Corporation's conclusion that competition is a proper consideration in applications for de novo branches coming before it is consistent with the construction placed on the Federal Reserve Board's statutory authority to pass on de novo branch applications, which authority mentions neither competition nor "convenience and needs" as relevant considerations. See 12 U.S.C. §§ 36, 321. Competition was judicially determined to be a proper consideration under the Federal Reserve Board's statutory authority on the rationale that > ". . . when Congress impowers an agency to 'approve' an action, it normally requires the agency to consider the probable effects of the action within the area of agency responsibility. The existence of too much or too little competition may cause serious harm in banking as it may in other areas of business. Thus, it is important for the [Federal Reserve] Board to consider whether an applicant may be seeking to establish a large number of branches in order to give it an undue competitive advantage . . ."

Old Kent Bank & Trust Co. v. Martin, 172 F. Supp. 951, 952, (D.C. 1959), rev'd on other grounds, 281 F. 2d 61 (D.C. Cir. 1960). The statutory authority of the Federal Reserve Board in this respect is similar to that of the Comptroller of the Currency. The Federal Reserve Board currently lists competition as a relevant consideration in de novo branch applications. See 12 C.F.R. § 265.2(f)(1)(iv).

The portions of the FDI Act governing bank mergers (Section 18(c); 12 U.S.C. 1828(c)), as judicially construed, make it clear that the law is directed toward achieving an accommodation between a needed addition to banking services and the maintenance of competition in a relevant geographic market, although the statute lists both competition and "convenience and needs" as relevant factors. A proposed added quantity or range of banking services is only one consideration under "convenience and needs" and the law recognizes that a competitive banking market, with its potential for innovation, improved services and price competition, also has benefits for the banking "convenience and needs" of a community. More particularly, decisions of the Supreme Court under the Bank Merger Act as amended have concluded that an anticompetitive bank merger cannot be justified on "convenience and needs" grounds unless all consumers of banking services in the relevant area for assessing competition are likely to benefit, and unless the benefits in "convenience and needs" cannot be attained through other, less anticompetitive means. See United States v. Phillipsburg Nat'l Bank, 399 U.S. 350 (1970); United States v. Third Nat'l Bank in Nashville, 386 U.S. 361 (1967); see also H.R. Rep. No. 1416, 86th Cong., 2d Sess. 10 (1960).

Given the foregoing considerations, and the principle that the provisions of a regulatory scheme should be construed so as to mesh rather than conflict, the Corporation concludes that the maintenance of a competitive banking market is an appropriate factor to consider in the case of de novo branch applications under Section 18(d) of the FDI Act.

Turning to the facts of this branch application, an additional banking facility in this proposed shopping center would provide some limited benefit to the public. The extent of this benefit is minimized because of the already opened or approved branches of three large Atlanta banks within the shopping center itself and an additional branch of a fourth bank only one and one-half miles east.

Contrasted with this benefit is the fact that the Citizens and Southern system controls 25% of the banking offices in DeKalb County and, as of June 30, 1971, 42% of the deposits in the County, and the fact that the establishment of additional branches by the Citizens and Southern system could cause a further concentration of the banking business in DeKalb County. An opportunity on the part of other banks, however, to open de novo branches and to develop their stake in this particular service area, without immediate competition from the Citizens and Southern system, could have the opposite effect of deconcentrating such banking resources and encouraging a greater number of meaningful banking options for the public over the long term.

Considering all the facts and information relevant to the determination, the Board of Directors concludes that these competitive considerations outweigh the limited benefit that might accrue to the public from the existence of an additional banking office in this location. The application is therefore denied.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

BEFORE THE BOARD OF GOVERNORS OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM

WASHINGTON, D. C.

In the Matter of the Application of TRUST COMPANY OF GEORGIA, Atlanta, Georgia, for approval of acquisition of assets and assumption of liabilities of Peachtree Bank and Trust Company, Chamblee, Georgia.	ORDER ON PETITION FOR RECONSIDERATION.

On February 22, 1971, the Board of Governors issued an Order pursuant to the Bank Merger Act (12 U.S.C. 1828(c)), approving an application by Trust Company of Georgia, Atlanta, Georgia, for prior approval of the merger of Trust Company with Peachtree Bank and Trust Company, Chamblee, Georgia, by means of Trust Company's purchase of assets and assumption of liabilities of Peachtree Bank.

In order to permit study of the complex procedural and substative issues raised by a petition by the United States Department of Justice for reconsideration of that Order, the Board, on March 19, 1971, stayed its operation.

After study of those issues, the Board finds that reconsideration of its Order of February 22, 1971 would be appropriate and in the public interest.

It is hereby ordered, For the reasons set forth in the accompanying Statement and in the Board's Order of February 22, 1971, that the Orders of March 19 and February 22, 1971 be and hereby are vacated, and it is further ordered, That the application be and hereby is approved, provided that the merger so approved shall not be consummated (a) before the thirtieth calendar day following the date of this Order or (b) later than three months after the date of this Order, unless such period is extended for good cause by the Board, or by the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta pursuant to delegated authority.

By order of the Board of Governors, May 20, 1971.

Voting for this action: Chairman Burns and Governors Mitchell, Daane, Maisel, Brimmer, and Sherrill.

Voting against this action (on the merits of the application): Governor Robertson

BOARD OF GOVERNORS

OF THE

FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM

APPLICATION BY TRUST COMPANY OF GEORGIA, ATLANTA, GEORGIA,
FOR APPROVAL OF ACQUISITION OF ASSETS AND ASSUMPTION OF LIABILITIES OF PEACHTREE BANK AND TRUST COMPANY
CHAMBLEE, GEORGIA

STATEMENT

On February 22, 1971 the Board of Governors issued an Order pursuant to the Bank Merger Act (12 U.S.C. 1828(c)), approving an application by Trust Company of Georgia, Atlanta, Georgia ("Trust Company"), for prior approval of the merger of Trust Company with Peachtree Bank and Trust Company, Chamblee, Georgia ("Peachtree Bank"), by means of Trust Company's purchase of assets and assumption of liabilities of Peachtree Bank. As an incident to the merger, the two offices of Peachtree Bank would become branches of Trust Company.

On March 2, 1971, the Department of Justice filed with the Board a petition requesting reconsideration of the Board's Order of February 22, 1971. The petition was brought pursuant to § 262.3(f)(6) of the Board's Rules of Procedure, which provides that the Board will not grant any request for reconsideration unless "the request presents relevant facts that, for good cause shown, were not previously presented to the Board, or unless it otherwise appears to the Board that reconsideration would be appropriate." Opportunity was afforded Trust Company to reply to the allegations of the Department and the Board has given careful consideration to the briefs filed on behalf of Trust Company and the Department. On March 19, the Board stayed its February 22 Order to study the issues raised.

In its petition, the Department noted that, pursuant to the Bank Merger Act, the Board had requested from it a report on the competitive factors involved in the application, but had not been furnished the report within the statutorily prescribed period because of the illness of certain key personnel and incomplete information concerning the apparently unique banking relationships existing in the relevant Georgia markets. The Department urged that the Board consider certain additional information and arguments bearing on the relation between Trust Company and Peachtree Bank, and reconsider the competitive effects of the proposal in the light thereof.

Trust Company has urged that the Board deny the Department's request on the grounds, among others, that the Department is not an appropriate party to request reconsideration. Without deciding that question, or the question of whether the petition presents relevant facts which, for good cause shown, were not previously presented, the Board finds it appropriate and in the public interest to vacate and reconsider its Order of February 22, 1971 in the light of the issues raised by the Department.

In its Order approving the application, the Board indicated that its conclusions with respect to the competitive effects of the proposal took account of the fact that Trust Company was instrumental in organizing Peachtree Bank in 1960, and that the banks had been closely associated since that time. The Department does not controvert those findings, but instead argues that, in attributing significance to them in assessing the competitive aspects of the transaction, the Board applied an incorrect standard. It states that "the mere existence of a 'close relationship' between the two merging banks should not serve to release the merger from the usual competitive considerations applied by the Board (or from the standards of Clayton Act § 7)." It then proposes the following as a test of the relevance of any relationship between two merging banks:

> "[W]here a metropolitan bank in reality establishes a new bank (rather than assisting others in establishing such a bank), the new bank may be in effect an extension or branch of the existing bank. This occurs where it, albeit indirectly, organizes, controls, and finances the new bank. In such circumstances, a subsequent merger of the 'affiliated' bank into the large Atlanta bank is not likely to have competitive significance. Absent this situation of original and continuing control, however, we believe that the new 'affiliated' bank should be considered an independent competitive factor and any subsequent acquisition or merger evaluated according to traditional standards."

At the outset, it should be clear that every bank merger before the Board is subject to scrutiny under the same standards, that is, whether its effect "in any section of the country may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly, or . . . in any other manner would be in restraint of trade." The existence of a factual situation, of whatever nature, which indicates that competition between two banks is not substantial and is unlikely to become such does not result in the application of different standards. However, it may lead to a different conclusion than would be reached if the same standards were applied to a different factual situation. A conclusion as to whether a particular proposal may have the effect of substantially lessening competition must be based on the facts of the particular case, and the Board is not authorized, much less required, to ignore facts which bear on that conclusion. A merger of two banks which are not significant competitors cannot be regarded as eliminating significant existing competition. And, similarly, if future competition is unlikely - even though possible - the merger cannot be regarded as reasonably likely to lessen future competition.

This does not mean that every proposed merger before the Board of two related banks receives favorable consideration. First of all, consideration must be given to the question of whether the relationship was anticompetitive in its origins; if so, little weight should be attributed to such relationship, since to do so might encourage evasion of the law. Assuming, however, that the relationship was not anti-competitive when established or fashioned so as to avoid legal restrictions, its impact on competition - present and future - should be considered realistically in determining whether approval of the transaction would be in the public interest. If the effect of a relationship is to create and sustain cooperation, and not competition, between the banks, their merger cannot reasonably be said to eliminate presently existing competition between them. Insofar as the future effects of the proposal are concerned, that depends on whether it might reasonably be anticipated that the existing inhibitions on competition might be terminated, so that, if the banks were not merged, effective competition between the banks would be likely. It may be that, in a very highly concentrated market, elimination of even a relatively remote possibility of significant future competition would mean that approval of the transaction would not be in the public interest. But in no case does the Board consider it appropriate to regard the elimination of a remote possibility of future competition as being the equivalent of the elimination of a reasonable probability of such competition. 1/

1/ It should be noted that Trust Company of Georgia, in addition to being a bank, is also a bank holding company. Had it established control over another bank sufficiently firm to meet the Justice Department's proposed standard, it would probably be regarded as violating the Bank Holding Company Act. In such case, the relationship between the two banks, being unlawful, would properly be regarded as less durable than the present relationship, not more so. It should also be stressed that, under recent amendments to the Bank Holding Company Act, the establishment of such control by any bank over another requires prior approval of the Board.

Reexamination of the facts of the present case, including those stressed by the Department, do not persuade the Board that its original decision was incorrect. Trust Company was largely responsible for the founding of Peachtree Bank, has supplied it with management (which continues to participate in Trust Company's retirement and profit-sharing plans), and has accorded it all the assistance and cooperation which this relationship implies. While it does not control the bank or its policies, the relationship between them is such that they cannot realistically be regarded as significant competitors to each other. Moreover, while Trust Company apparently does not have the ability to force continuation of the relationship, the relationship appears to have been mutually beneficial and there is no reason to expect that either Trust Company or Peachtree Bank would voluntarily discontinue it if their merger were to be prohibited. The latter has advised that almost 40 per cent of its IPC demand deposits are in accounts whose size exceeds the insurance maximum, and that most of them would likely be moved elsewhere if the relationship were terminated.

Nor do the facts suggest that, if Peachtree Bank were to become truly independent of Trust Company, competition would be so much enhanced that the preservation of the mere possibility of such occurrence should be accorded unusual significance. Peachtree Bank, with $15 million deposits, has the eighth largest share of deposits in DeKalb County (7 per cent) of the 19 banks operating there. As indicated above, it would likely be even smaller were its relationship with Trust Company to be terminated. It is doubtful that, as an independent, it would exert a significant competitive influence on Trust Company or other Atlanta banks.

Based on these facts, the board concludes that consummation of the transaction would not have a substantially adverse effect on competition in any relevant area. As to other factors required to be considered by the Act, the Board incorporates its findings and conclusions as set forth in its Order of February 22, 1971.

On the basis of the record in this case, as supplemented by the petition and supporting documents filed by the Department of Justice and Applicant's response thereto, it is the Board's judgment that the proposed merger would be in the public interest and that the application should be approved.

May 20, 1971

DISSENTING STATEMENT OF GOVERNOR ROBERTSON

At the time the Board first considered this application, I voted to approve on the grounds that the facts were such that no significant change in banking competition in the relevant area would result. However, I am now convinced by the Justice Department position that, since the relationship between Trust Company and Peachtree Bank does not constitute actual control, the banks should be treated as independent institutions in analyzing the competitive effects of the proposal. Considering the facts in this context, I would reverse my prior decision and deny the application, the approval of which will permanently foreclose the possibility of future competition and constitute a precedent that could lead to additional anticompetitive mergers in areas where concentration of banking power is already great.

Moreover, I believe denial is called for even under the method of analysis adopted by the majority - which is to consider all facts bearing on the present and potential ability of the banks to compete, and to weigh the possibility of disaffiliation with the benefits that would result if the smaller bank became independent.

Admittedly the relationship between the banks is such as to inhibit competition between them; however, the possibility that Peachtree would become independent is far from remote. The record indicates that Trust Company's initial offer was rejected by Peachtree, that the two banks have no common officers and directors, that common stock ownership is minimal, and that the two banks have pursued different commercial strategies. Clearly the relationship between the banks is not so strong as to preclude the possibility of disaffiliation.

Peachtree Bank is located in DeKalb County (pop. 414,000). That county is situated to the east of Atlanta and, as part of the Atlanta SMSA, is one of the fastest growing areas in the country. Although DeKalb County was once basically a "bedroom" suburb of Atlanta, the population increase has been accompanied by an even larger growth in the number and size of commercial and industrial firms. Banking in Atlanta is dominated by three banking organizations (including Trust Company). In Fulton County - where Atlanta is located - these three organizations control 73 per cent of deposits; in DeKalb County they control 53 per cent of deposits. Additionally, the three Atlanta banks have relationships with 12 banks in DeKalb County (including Peachtree), which, in the aggregate, control 28 per cent of that county's deposits. If mergers involving those 12 banks and their "affiliated" institutions were to be consummated, the three large Atlanta banks would control 82 per cent of the DeKalb County deposits, and 76 per cent of the deposits in the two-county area.

In my judgment, these "affiliated" banks represent a source of competition for the three Atlanta banks. By approving the present application, the Board has permitted Trust Company to increase its share of DeKalb County deposits from 14 to 20 per cent, and has adopted a policy of removing potential sources of deconcentration for the Atlanta area.

For these reasons, I would deny the application and preserve the realistic possibility that Peachtree might become independent.

Dear Mr. Chairman:

This is in reply to your letter of October 15, 1970, requesting a report pursuant to Section 18(c) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act on the competitive factors involved in the proposed merger of Citizens and Southern Bank of East Point, East Point, Georgia, Citizens and Southern Bank of North Fulton, Roswell, Georgia and Citizens and Southern Bank of Sandy Springs, Sandy Springs, Georgia under the charter and title of Citizens and Southern Bank of East Point.

1. The Banks

Citizens and Southern Bank of East Point ("C&S East Point") was chartered under another name in 1946. The Citizens and Southern Holding Company ("C&S Holding") first acquired an interest in it in November, 1948 and now owns about 90 per cent of the bank's stock. The Citizens and Southern National Bank, which has its main office in Savannah but most of its business in Atlanta, is the lead bank of C&S Holding. C&S East Point operates its main office and one branch in the City of East Point, Fulton County. As of June 30, 1970, C&S East Point had total deposits of $25.9 million (including IPC demand deposits of $10.1 million) and loans and discounts of $24.0 million. Its net operating income in 1969 was $751,000, a substantial increase over its 1965-69 average of $488,000.

E- 24

Citizens and Southern Bank of North Fulton ("C&S North Fulton") was organized with the assistance of C&S Holding in May, 1967. C&S Holding has owned 5 per cent of its outstanding stock since its organization. It operates its only office in Roswell, Fulton County. As of June 30, 1970, C&S North Fulton had total deposits of $5.8 million (including IPC demand deposits of $1.9 million) and loans and discounts of $5.2 million. Its net operating income in 1969 was $141,000, well above its 1967-69 average of $67,000.

Citizens and Southern Bank of Sandy Springs ("C&S Sandy Springs") was organized with the assistance of C&S Holding as The Citizens National Bank of Sandy Springs in December, 1959. It was converted to a state charter and adopted its present name in October, 1969. C&S Holding has owned 5 per cent of its outstanding stock since its organization. It operates its only office in Sandy Springs, Fulton County. As of June 30, 1970, C&S Sandy Springs had total deposits of $17.7 million (including IPC demand deposits of $8.7 million) and loans and discounts of $14.0 million. Its net operating income in 1969 was $505,000, more than double its 1965-69 average of $238,000.

2. The Communities

East Point, Roswell and Sandy Springs are all located in Fulton County, outside the city limits of Atlanta. All three are basically bedroom suburbs and all have benefited from the substantial growth which Atlanta enjoyed in the 1960's.

3. Effect on Existing Competition

These mergers constitute what is essentially an internal reorganization. All three banks are located in Fulton County but they have never represented independent competitive forces in the county. They have all been operated by C&S Holding as part of one banking system. C&S North Fulton and C&S Sandy Springs were chartered independently because Georgia law prohibited C&S East Point from branching throughout Fulton County. These proposed mergers have been made possible by a change in Georgia's branching law which will become effective on January 1, 1971. Since no competition has ever existed between these banks, these mergers will have no adverse effect on competition.

A summary of this report is attached.

Dear Mr. Chairman:

This is in reply to your letter of October 15, 1970, requesting a report pursuant to Section 18(c) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, on the competitive factors involved in the proposed merger of Citizens and Southern Emory Bank, DeKalb County (P.O. Atlanta), Georgia, Citizens and Southern Bank of Chamblee, Chamblee, Georgia, Citizens and Southern Bank of Tucker, Tucker, Georgia, Citizens and Southern Park National Bank, Atlanta, Georgia and Citizens and Southern South DeKalb Bank, Decatur, Georgia under the charter and title of Citizens and Southern Emory Bank.

1. The Banks

Citizens and Southern Emory Bank ("C&S Emory") was organized in 1950. All of the stock of this bank, save for directors' qualifying shares, has always been held by Citizens and Southern Holding Company ("C&S Holding"), a registered bank holding company. C&S Holding is a wholly owned subsidiary of Citizens and Southern National Bank ("C&S National"), the largest bank in Georgia with deposits of $1.4 billion, and itself a registered bank holding company. C&S Emory operates its main office and two branches in Emory, DeKalb County. As of June 30, 1970, C&S Emory had total deposits of $36.9 million (including IPC demand deposits of $14.0 million) and loans and discounts of $29.8 million. Its net operating income in 1969 was $1.0 million, considerably above its 1965-9 average of $464,000.

E-28

Citizens and Southern Bank of Chamblee ("C&S Chamblee") was organized as Chamblee National Bank in May , 1960, with the assistance of C&S Holding. In October, 1969, it converted to a state charter and adopted its present name. C&S Holding has owned 5 per cent of its outstanding stock since its organization. C&S Chamblee operates its main office and one branch in Chamblee, DeKalb County. As of June 30, 1970, C&S Chamblee had total deposits of $16.9 million (including IPC demand deposits of $8.9 million) and net loans and discounts of $13.6 million. Its net operating income in 1969 was $624,000, substantially above its 1965-9 average of $345,000.

Citizens and Southern Bank of Tucker ("C&S Tucker") was chartered as the Bank of Tucker in 1919. In 1965, C&S Holding acquired a 5 per cent interest in the bank; the name of the bank was changed to its present title at that time. C&S Tucker operates its main office and a branch in Tucker, DeKalb County. As of June 30, 1970, C&S Tucker had total deposits of $19.9 million (including IPC demand deposits of $10.4 million) and loans and discounts of $15.0 million. Its net operating income in 1969 was $692,000, considerably above its 1965-9 average of $363,000.

Citizens and Southern Park National Bank ("C&S Park National") was organized with the assistance of C&S Holding in 1967. It is located and operates its sole office in an office development complex in DeKalb County. As of June 30, 1970, C&S Park National had total deposits of $8.2 million (including IPC demand deposits of $5.4 million) and loans and discounts of $6.0 million. Its net operating income in 1969 was $164,000, more than double its 1967-9 average of $62,000.

Citizens and Southern South DeKalb Bank ("C&S South DeKalb") was organized with the assistance of C&S Holding in 1969. It operates its only office in Decatur, DeKalb County and has recently received regulatory authority to establish an additional office. As of June 30, 1970, C&S South DeKalb had total deposits of $3.2 million (including IPC demand deposits of $1.5 million) and loans and discounts of $2.7 million. Its net operating income in 1969, its only year of operation, was $56,000.

2. The Communities

All of the banks involved in the proposed mergers operate offices in DeKalb County. DeKalb County (1970 population 414,000) is a part of the Atlanta Standard Metropolitan Statistical Area ("SMSA"), one of the fastest growing areas in the country, and DeKalb County has actually grown faster than the Atlanta area generally. DeKalb County is basically a "bedroom" suburb of Atlanta, but the population increase has been accompanied by large increases in the number and size of commercial and industrial firms in the county.

3. Effect on Competition

C&S Chamblee, C&S Park National and C&S South DeKalb were organized by parties friendly to C&S Holding, with C&S Holding's assistance. They have always been operated as C&S "affiliates" in DeKalb County, since Georgia branching laws prohibited the C&S system from establishing new branches of any of the banks of the C&S system located in DeKalb County. These banks have never been independent competitive forces in DeKalb County.

POOR COPY

C&S Tucker, however, for many years was an independent and viable banking competitor in DeKalb County. C&S Tucker's branch office is located some three miles from the nearest branch of C&S Emory, and somewhat further distances, ranging up to 11 miles, from the head offices of the other banks involved in this merger. The application states that 13.2 per cent of the IPC deposits in C&S Emory, 43.5 per cent of the IPC deposits in C&S Chamblee, 10.9 per cent of the IPC deposits in C&S Park National and .8 per cent of the IPC deposits in C&S South DeKalb originate in C&S Tucker's "service area." Although there are intervening banks, it is clear that a significant amount of competition which existed between C&S Tucker and other banks involved in this merger (and other C&S banks) at the time C&S Tucker became "affiliated" with C&S Holding, as well as the not insignificant amount which still exists, would be permanently eliminated by this merger.

The competitive implications must be seen in the light of banking structure in DeKalb County (an area which may overstate the market). Twenty-three banks operate 38 banking offices in the county, but most of these are subject to affiliations of various kinds and degrees with leading Atlanta banks. In fact, after making allowances for such affiliations, we find that five banking groups, each dominated by a large Atlanta bank, control over 95 per cent of DeKalb County deposits. There appear to be only four banks not affiliated with these groups and with one exception, these are under $1 million in deposits and less than one year old. The only bank of any size at all remaining in DeKalb County which has no known affiliation with an Atlanta bank is Peoples Bank of Lithonia, with deposits of $5.9 million. Thus, DeKalb County is in reality a highly concentrated banking market, completely dominated by the large Atlanta banks.

C&S Holding controls the largest share of DeKalb County deposits. C&S Holding owns or is affiliated with eight banks with offices in DeKalb County. These include C&S Emory, which holds the largest single share of county deposits (14 per cent), and C&S National the largest bank in the state, which has an office in East Atlanta. Those banks which C&S Holding owns or is affiliated with are: C&S National (one office in DeKalb County - total deposits $1.4 billion); C&S Chamblee (two offices - total deposits $16.9 million); C&S Bank of DeKalb (two offices - total deposits $36.9 million); C&S South DeKalb (one office - total deposits $3.2 million); C&S Bank of Stone Mountain (one office - total deposits $7.0 million); C&S Tucker (two offices - total deposits $19.9 million); and C&S Park National (one office - total deposits $8.2 million). Together, these eight banks hold over 45 per cent of DeKalb County deposits.

C&S Tucker holds about 7.1 per cent of total county deposits. It has a 50-year history of viable and independent banking pre-dating its "affiliation" with C&S Holding. The kind of affiliation, and its relatively short duration, does not preclude the possibility that C&S Tucker could again become an entirely independent competitor in an area where deconcentration is sorely needed.

In many respects, this proposed acquisition has similar competitive effect to those found by the Corporation in its Report to the Comptroller of the Currency on the proposed mergers of the First National Bank of Atlanta, The First National Bank of Tucker, and The First National Bank of Glenwood, dated November 25, 1970 (A-15-70). In that report, involving mergers of former indirect affiliates of another major Atlanta bank, the Corporation said:

> The acquisition by FNB Atlanta of Glenwood Bank and Tucker Bank would eliminate two potentially significant competitive forces in DeKalb County and the Atlanta SMSA and enhance FNB Atlanta's already impressive position in the SMSA. Moreover, approval of these two proposals > would constitute a precedent that could lead to additional anticompetitive mergers and an even greater concentration in the Atlanta SMSA and in other areas of Georgia. The Corporation is of the view that the anticompetitive effect of the proposed merger cannot be ignored on the ground that FNB Atlanta is presently affiliated with Glenwood Bank and Tucker Bank . . . . Since the mergers proposed would enhance the already impressive position of FNB Atlanta in DeKalb County and in the Atlanta SMSA, and constitute a precedent that could lead to additional anti-competitive mergers and an even greater concentration of banking resources in the same areas and in other areas of Georgia, the Corporation has concluded that the proposed transaction would have a substantially adverse effect on competition in DeKalb County, in the Atlanta SMSA and in the State of Georgia as a whole.

4. Conclusion

The Georgia branching laws have recently been changed to allow, as of January 1, 1971, branching in any county in which a bank has its home office or a branch office. Since C&S Emory has offices in DeKalb County, it may now branch further in the county. The mergers of C&S Chamblee, C&S Park National and C&S South DeKalb into C&S Emory are apparently intended to consolidate into one C&S Holding "affiliate" the de facto branches it had established by setting up these other "affiliated" banks. 1/ There seems to be no question that these banks have always been "affiliated" with the C&S system and have never represented independent competitors in DeKalb County banking. Thus, these mergers, standing alone, would have little or no effect on competition.

It seems clear, however, that the creation of the affiliation between C&S Holding and C&S Tucker had an adverse effect on competition at the time it occurred; and that the consummation of this merger would permanently foreclose the potential for future competition between C&S Tucker and the other banks of the C&S system. The consummation of this merger would thus be a significant step toward complete and permanent control of banking in DeKalb County by five large Atlanta banks. Because of these factors, we conclude that the proposed merger of C&S Tucker into C&S Emory would have a significantly adverse effect on competition.

Washington, D. C. 20429

Dear Mr. Chairman:

Except as noted below, this supersedes competitive reports submitted by the Department of Justice, pursuant to Section 18(c) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, and dated November 12, 1970, and December 29, 1970, on certain merger transactions involving subsidiaries of Citizens and Southern National Bank, Savannah, Georgia ("C&S"). These transactions all involve a variety of complex competitive questions, arising out of unusual "affiliation" arrangements between C&S (a leading Atlanta bank) and various local banks in the Atlanta metropolitan area. The transactions are also related to other pending merger proposals involving two other leading Atlanta banks.

I. Background

The pending merger proposals involve C&S, First National Bank of Atlanta ("First National") and Trust Company of Georgia ("Trust Company"). Briefly, these are as follows:

C&S Mergers. The Department of Justice submitted a competitive report dated November 12, 1970, on the proposed merger of Citizens and Southern Bank of East Point ("C&S East Point") with Citizens and Southern Bank of North Fulton ("C&S North Fulton") and Citizens and Southern Bank of Sandy Springs ("C&S Sandy Springs"). The Department submitted a similar competitive report dated December 29, 1970, on the proposed merger of Citizens and Southern Emory Bank ("C&S Emory") with Citizens and Southern Bank of Chamblee ("C&S Chamblee"), Citizens and Southern Bank of Tucker ("C&S Tucker"), Citizens and Southern Park National Bank ("C&S Park National"), and Citizens and Southern South DeKalb Bank ("C&S South DeKalb"). C&S East Point and C&S Emory are both subsidiaries of C&S and their acquisitions therefore should be treated as acquisitions by C&S.

First National Mergers. The Department of Justice also filed competitive reports, dated December 29, 1970, with the Comptroller of the Currency involving applications by First National to merge with four banks in DeKalb County: First National Bank of Glenwood, First National Bank of Tucker, First National Bank of Doraville, and First Bank of South DeKalb. On January 20, 1971, the Comptroller of the Currency approved three of the four First National merger applications then pending. On February 18, 1971, the Department filed suit against First National and two of the banks with which they proposed to merge. United States v. First National Bank of Atlanta, et al., Civil No. 14748 (N.D. Ga.).

Trust Company Mergers. On February 22, 1971, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System approved the application of Trust Company to acquire Peachtree Bank and Trust Company ("Peachtree") and Trust Company of Georgia Bank of Sandy Springs ("Sandy Springs"). When the Board approved these mergers, the Department of Justice had not yet submitted competitive reports; this was a result of pressure on staff resources and the illness of senior personnel. Therefore, on March 2, 1971, the Department submitted a Petition for Reconsideration, asking the Board of Governors to re-evaluate the Trust Company/Peachtree merger in light of the information we had uncovered and our current understanding and competitive analysis of Atlanta area banking markets. A copy of this Petition was forwarded to the Corporation at the time of filing.

In our competitive reports to the Corporation of November 12 and December 29, 1970 (and in the First National reports of December 29, 1970), we attempted to differentiate between the following types of situations:

(1) The type of situation in which a large Atlanta bank apparently established the new bank from scratch by indirect methods. We equated these situations with de novo branching and treated the proposed mergers as mere changes in corporate form having no adverse effects on competition. These situations appeared to include five of the banks for which C&S sought approval and two of the banks for which First National sought approval.

(2) The type of situation in which a large Atlanta bank entered into an "affiliation" arrangement involving a going concern which formerly had been entirely independent. This appeared to be the case with one bank for which C&S sought approval (C&S Tucker) and two banks for which First National sought approval. We objected to these situations on a basically twofold ground: First, that the original "affiliation" was anticompetitive; and secondly, that the prospective "forgiveness" provisions of the Bank Merger Act of 1966 would make the anticompetitive effect permanent and eliminate the potential for future competition.

This distinction obviously rested on our assumption that, in the situations which we had treated as essentially de novo branching, the acquiring bank had in fact established and completely controlled the smaller "affiliated" bank since its creation, and thus the smaller bank had never been an independent competitive force in its banking market. After we had sent these competitive reports, however, we began to receive information which indicated that this assumption might not be accurate. Based on this information, we instituted a field investigation in Atlanta.

That investigation revealed that, in at least one instance, our previous distinction was invalid. One of the C&S affiliates, C&S Bank of Stone Mountain ("Stone Mountain"), which appeared to have been organized and operated in a manner similar to, if not identical with, the other C&S "affiliates," had rejected a C&S merger proposal, broken away from the C&S system and become a truly independent banking entity. Further investigation involving this and other "affiliated" banks in the Atlanta area led us to seriously question our previous assumption that banks organized with assistance from C&S (or others) were in fact completely controlled by the latter. The information which we now have suggests that most, if not all of the so-called "affiliates" of the large Atlanta banks have close working relationships with the latter, but were not necessarily controlled by them. This conclusion is buttressed by the available public statements of the Atlanta banks which unanimously deny the existence of actual control over the smaller suburban banks.

This letter is intended to provide the Corporation with the information developed in that investigation and our analysis of it. No information has come to our attention which would cause us to question our previous analysis of the acquisition of C&S Tucker and, so far as our conclusion as to the competitive effects of that acquisition was based on the affiliation of C&S with a previously independent and viable bank, we feel that conclusion was correct.

II. The Changing Georgia Law and Its Effect

For many years, Georgia banks have been allowed to branch only within the cities in which they are located. Since 1956, bank holding companies have also been severely restricted by state law. In that year, the Georgia legislature prohibited the ownership of more than 15 percent of the stock of two or more banks by a bank holding company. In 1960, the law was broadened to prohibit the establishment of any new bank holding companies altogether and to reduce the stock ownership allowable to five precent.

Prior ownership arrangements, however, were "grandfathered" under both the 1956 and 1960 laws (as they had been under the earlier branch banking restrictions). As a consequence, Citizens and Southern Holding Company ("C&S Holding"), a wholly-owned subsidiary of C&S, was able to retain ownership of three subsidiary banks--C&S East Point in Fulton County, and C&S Emory and C&S Bank of DeKalb in DeKalb County. Trust Company of Georgia Associates, a wholly-owned subsidiary of Trust Company, retained ownership of Trust Company of Georgia Bank of DeKalb in DeKalb County. In addition, First National retained two "grandfathered" branches in DeKalb County, at Decatur.

In response to these prohibitions against geographic expansion, the major Atlanta banks have developed different types of "affiliation" arrangements with suburban banks in the Atlanta area (Fulton and DeKalb counties). These appear to cover at least four banks in Fulton County outside Atlanta and at least nine banks in DeKalb County. The actual "affiliation" arrangements have differed considerably as between the three major Atlanta banking organizations. For example, C&S acquired 5% of the stock of each of its "affiliate" banks; generally it tried to arrange for additional stock to be held in friendly hands; it allowed the affiliates to use the C&S logo; and it provided various types of assistance to them. Trust Company has also acquired 5% of its two affiliates, with additional stock in friendly hands; in addition, its name was associated with its affiliate in Sandy Springs.

During the past year, Georgia branch banking law was liberalized. Effective January 1, 1971, it permits banks to expand directly in counties (formerly limited to the cities) where they already have offices. Since C&S, First National and Trust Company have branch offices in both DeKalb County and Fulton County, both counties are completely open to branching by the three banks.

III. Standard For Evaluating These Acquisitions

In considering the competitive effect of these mergers, the crucial question must be whether C&S established and controlled the banks which it now seeks to acquire so that they could never reasonably be regarded as sources of present or future competition. 1/ This requires resolution of some fundamental factual questions. When, if ever, did C&S have "control" over these banks? What is the extent and likely permanence of that control? Answers to these questions have not yet been developed, either in the merger applications, our previous competitive reports, or elsewhere.

1/ The possibility of these banks as sources of present or future competition should be evaluated with a view toward the importance of preserving or promoting the development of competitive alternatives in Fulton and DeKalb counties to the few institutions which presently dominate commercial banking in the Atlanta area. Where a market is sorely in need of the development of additional competitive factors, even less immediate probabilities become significant in assessing the competitive effects of a proposed merger. Cf. United States v. Penn-Olin Chemical Co., 378 U.S. 158 (1964).

These facts are of crucial importance. We believe that the mere existence of an "affiliate" relationship between merging banks should not serve to release the merger from the usual competitive considerations applied by the Corporation (or from the standards of Clayton Act § 7). For example, where there is a cooperative venture between a leading metropolitan bank (such as C&S) and citizens of an area desiring to establish a new bank, that new bank may still be--or subsequently become--a significant independent competitive factor. Even where the metropolitan bank owns a small percentage of the "affiliate's" stock as part of the cooperative venture, this fact does not prevent the new suburban bank from separately offering and pricing its banking services. Such a new bank, unlike the typical bank holding company subsidiary, normally retains independent decision-making capability--as illustrated by the Stone Mountain situation described above. Accordingly, it is appropriate to treat such a new bank as a separate commercial entity and to evaluate the impact of a subsequent merger in the light of this fact. This approach is consistent with Supreme Court decisions that "affiliated" corporations under some degree of common ownership or control can be treated as separate entities subject to the antitrust laws. See, e.g., Timken Co. v. United States, 341 U. S. 593, 595 (1951). Likewise, the fact that there is a degree of common control between the two merging banks does not mean that there may not be elimination of present or future competition between them. Absent complete control, the "affiliated" bank may decline to follow the wishes of its large Atlanta sponsor.

We recognize that where a metropolitan bank in reality establishes a new bank (rather than assisting others in establishing such a bank), the new bank may be in effect an extension or branch of the existing bank. This occurs where it, albeit indirectly, organizes, controls, and finances the new bank. In such circumstances, a subsequent merger of the "affiliated" bank into the large metropolitan bank is not likely to have competitive significance. Absent this situation of original and continuing control, however, we believe that the new "affiliated" bank should be considered an independent competitive factor and any subsequent acquisition or merger evaluated according to traditional standards. The presumption should be one of independence, with the burden placed on the applicant to prove that it established the new bank and controlled it from the outset.

We reiterate that, for purposes of this analysis, actual control must have some degree of permanence. De facto control by informal arrangements with independent individual shareholders simply does not meet this standard for actual continuing control, since such relationships could change with death or other changes in personal relationships (as in the Stone Mountain situation). Continuing control, by contrast, would have to rest on actual ownership of stock or contractual arrangements that would negate any reasonable possibility that the "affiliated" bank would become independent of its sponsor at some point in the future. If control falls short of this level of stability and permanence, a merger would permanently foreclose the existing possibility of future competition; and, depending on the structure of the market and the banks' position in it, such foreclosure could have a significantly adverse effect on competition. Cf. U.S. v. El Paso Natural Gas Co., 376 U.S. 651 (1964). See also Kohn and Carlo, Potential Competition: Unfounded Faith or Pragmatic Foresight? (N.Y. State Banking Dept. 1970). These factors are evaluated in the specific C&S context in the next section.

IV. The Standard Applied

A. The Parties and the Relationship Between Them

C&S is the largest bank in Atlanta and in the State of Georgia. C&S and its subsidiaries (C&S Emory, C&S DeKalb and C&S East Point) have total deposits in the Atlanta area of over $790 million and account for over 26% of Atlanta area deposits, over 28% of Fulton County deposits, and over 25% of DeKalb County deposits. 2/

C&S owns 5% of the outstanding stock in all six "affiliates" which are the subject of merger proposals. C&S North Fulton and C&S Sandy Springs together have deposits of $23.5 million. The four DeKalb County "affiliates" together have total deposits of $48.2 million.

2/ Unless otherwise noted, all deposit data is as of June 30, 1970.

C&S owns only 5% of the outstanding stock of each of these banks. C&S officers have stated publicly, before the Federal Reserve Board and a Committee of the Georgia Legislature, that they do not control any of these banks. There are no representations to the contrary, either in the applications or elsewhere. Large blocks of the stock in each of these banks are owned by officers, directors, and employees of the banks themselves, and there is no evidence presently available indicating that these individuals are either acting for or controlled by C&S. Thus, the presumption must be that these "affiliates" were not established and controlled down to the present time by C&S. This being so, our previous analysis and conclusions as to the competitive effects of these mergers (except for C&S Tucker) appear to have been inadequate. We now feel that the Corporation should treat all the proposed mergers as mergers between separate banking organizations, unless C&S can establish that it meets the standard set forth in Section III above. 3/

We applied that standard in evaluating the First National mergers. The two First National mergers challenged were situations very similar to that of C&S Tucker, where the Atlanta bank had become affiliated with a previously totally separate banking competitor. As in the case with C&S Tucker, we felt that the affiliation itself had anti-competitive effects which would be made permanent by the merger. The two First National mergers which we did not challenge appeared to be instances of original and continuing control. 4/ First, First National was the moving force in 3/ Of course, there may well be degrees of "control" present in these situations which do not qualify as control for purposes of analyzing the competitive effects of a merger, and yet may raise competitive problems by reducing present and future competition between the banks absent regulatory approval of the proposed mergers.

4/ Letters to Comptroller of the Currency from Department of Justice on proposed mergers of First Bank of South DeKalb and First National Bank of Doraville into First National Bank of Atlanta, dated December 29, 1970.

establishing the two "affiliated" banks in question. Secondly, almost all of the shareholders of these banks, including a substantial majority if not all of their directors, financed their stock purchases with loans from First National. These loans were represented by notes payable on demand and secured by the pledge of the stock purchased; the principal amounts of the loans were not subject to a repayment schedule, and interest on the notes was accrued but not paid. Finally, the shares were subject to an option agreement, either written or based on an oral understanding, in favor of First National. 5/

B. C&S Emory Merger Proposals - C&S Expansion in DeKalb County

1. The Banks

C&S Emory operates its main office and two branches in Emory, DeKalb County. It is a C&S subsidiary in which C&S Holding owns over 95% of the bank's stock. It has total deposits of $36.9 million, about 13% of total DeKalb County deposits.

C&S Chamblee operates two offices in DeKalb County. It has deposits of $16.9 million, about 5.9% of DeKalb County deposits.

C&S Park National operates one office in DeKalb County. It has deposits of $8.2 million, about 2.8% of DeKalb County dep

C&S South DeKalb operates one office in DeKalb County. It has deposits of $3.2 million, about 1.1% of DeKalb County deposits.

C&S Tucker operates two offices in DeKalb County. It has deposits of $19.9 million, about 6.9% of DeKalb County deposits.

5/ See Application of First National Bank of Atlanta to merge with First Bank of South DeKalb, Merger Agreement, page 2; Letter from R. J. Blanchard, Deputy Comptroller of the Currency, to D. I. Baker, October 26, 1970, enclosing letter from McChesney H. Jeffries, Attorney for First National Bank of Atlanta, to Mr. Blanchard, dated October 20, 1970.

2. The Market

DeKalb County (1970 population 414,000) is situated to the east of Atlanta and is a part of the Atlanta Standard Metropolitan Statistical Area (SMSA) which is one of the fastest growing areas in the country. DeKalb County has actually grown faster than the Atlanta SMSA generally, the former having grown in population by 62 per cent over the past ten years compared to 35 per cent for the latter. Although DeKalb County was once basically a "bedroom" suburb of Atlanta, the population increase has been accompanied by an even larger growth in the number and size of commercial and industrial firms. Between 1958 and 1967 the number of retail establishments has increased by 48.4%, total retail sales by 187.0%, employment payroll by 233.2%, and paid employment by 123.8%. Wholesale trade has increased even more impressively. Between 1954 and 1963 the number of wholesale establishments increased by 200.8%, total wholesale sales by 413.1%, total wholesale payroll by 414.2%, and the number of paid employees by 255.1%. More recent statistics would reveal even more dramatic increases. Thus, it now appears that DeKalb is achieving a considerable degree of economic independence from the City of Atlanta.

DeKalb County is a relevant market within which to evaluate the C&S Emory acquisitions for several reasons. First, the acquired banks operate and can only operate in DeKalb County, and DeKalb County has been achieving a degree of economic independence from Atlanta; i.e., its residents have more and more places in the County to work, shop, etc., without going to the city. State branching law now permits county-wide branching, but prohibits banks with offices only outside the County from opening offices in it and prevents banks with offices only in DeKalb County from opening offices outside. Thus, the only area of significant competive overlap is and will be within DeKalb County. 6/ Second, although the banks sought to be acquired at present derive the bulk of their deposits from relatively small portions of the County, they have scattered accounts throughout much of it, indicating that the area in which they compete for business extends beyond their primary service areas. There is, according to the application, competition between the merging banks, even accepting the limited primary service areas advanced in the application.

6/ See United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 360-62 (1963).

Consequently, the extent of direct competition is probably understated by using the county. Third, it seems likely that with the Atlanta banks branching throughout the County, banks like the "affiliates" will be forced to open new branches or merge with other independent banks in order to continue to grow. The broadest area within which they can expand is DeKalb County. Such expansion would increase existing competition between C&S and the "affiliates." It would also increase competition generally among the banks operating in the county and at the same time insure that the county does not become highly concentrated like the rest of the Atlanta area. These benefits which would be enjoyed in DeKalb County will be denied to the county if viable banks like the "affiliates" are allowed to be permanently removed from the scene by the dominant banks. Thus, from the point of view of evaluating the effect of these acquisitions on present and future competition, DeKalb County is an appropriate market. 7/

7/ "[I]n banking [the idea that] the relevant geographical market is a function of each separate customer's economic scale means simply that a workable compromise must be found: some fair intermediate delineation which avoids the indefensible extremes of drawing the market either so expansively as to make the effect of the merger upon competition seem insignificant because only the very largest bank customers are taken into account in defining the market, or so narrowly as to place appellees in different markets, because only the smallest customers are considered."

3. The Competitive Effects of the Proposed C&S Emory Acquisition

The following chart lists the banks which operate in DeKalb County, their total deposits, their share of total county deposits and their affiliation, if known:

/ Until recently affiliated with C&S.

DeKalb County is already a concentrated banking market. The four largest banks hold about 65% of total County deposits; the top three hold 53%; the top five about 68%.

Affiliates	16.7	6.5	5.1	28.3
Total After Mergers	41.9	20.0	19.5	81.4

The "affiliates" which C&S seeks to merge into C&S Emory have total deposits of $48.2 million and, as the chart shows, account for 16.7% of total county deposits. Should the mergers be consummated, C&S would increase its market share to 41.9% of DeKalb County deposits. The share held by the three largest banks would increase from 53% to 81%. In addition, present and future competition between these "affiliates" and C&S would be permanently eliminated.

C. C&S East Point Merger Proposals--C&S Expansion in North Fulton County

1. The Banks

C&S East Point operates its main office and one branch in East Point, in the southern part of Fulton County. It is a C&S subsidiary in which C&S Holding owns about 90% of the bank's stock. It has total deposits of $25.9 million.

C&S North Fulton operates one office at Roswell in the northern part of Fulton County. It has deposits of $5.8 million.

C&S Sandy Springs operates one office at Sandy Springs, also in the northern part of Fulton County. It has total deposits of $17.7 million.

2. The Market

North Fulton County is the area most immediately affected by the proposed C&S East Point acquisitions. Fulton County (population 597,000) is the largest of the five counties in the Atlanta SMSA. Eighty-five per cent of Fulton County's population reside in the city of Atlanta, which has developed into the economic center of the Southeast. Fulton County is bisected by the city of Atlanta and thereby divided into three fairly distinct parts--the city, North Fulton County, and South Fulton County. The county's growth, traditionally centered in Atlanta, has now begun to spread out into the suburban areas north and south of the city. Thus, the portion of the county's population located in North Fulton County has increased from 3.3% in 1950 to 9.2% in 1970 (while that in South Fulton County has increased from 12.4% to 16.9% in the same period).

North Fulton County has many of the same economic characteristics which make DeKalb County a rapidly growing portion of the Atlanta metropolitan area. It seems to be distinct, however, from DeKalb County for purposes of banking analysis because Georgia branching laws allow banks located in either Fulton or DeKalb to branch only within their respective county. Moreover, for purposes of such analysis, North Fulton County has traditionally been separated from the city of Atlanta by branching restrictions; until January 1, 1971, Atlanta banks were prohibited from branching into North Fulton County and vice-versa. For a substantial number of people, North Fulton County banks are the sole reasonable banking alternatives because of convenience of location. Therefore, North Fulton County is an appropriate market in which to evaluate the effect of these acquisitions on present and future competition.

3. The Competitive Effects of the Proposed C&S East Point Acquisitions

The city of Atlanta is a highly concentrated banking market, in which the three largest banks control over 70 percent of all deposits. The suburban areas around Atlanta, including the high growth areas of DeKalb County and North Fulton County, are not now so structured. However, if all pending mergers were consummated, those suburban areas would become the mirror image of Atlanta in terms of banking market structure. This development would foreclose present and future competition.

The following chart lists the banks which operate in Fulton County, their total deposits, their share of total county deposits, and their affiliation, if known:

Bank	Deposits (in millions)	% Share	Affiliation
C&S	$ 705.9	27.4	C&S

Roswell Bank	15.3	0.6	**
Fulton Exchange Bank	8.3	0.3	**
	$ 2,576.6	100.0

*/ We have some information which would indicate that the Citizens Bank of Hapeville is affiliated with C&S.

/ There is some indication that the Roswell Bank and Fulton Exchange Bank have recently come under common ownership, and that the same person or persons also own or control the DeKalb County Bank, the Citizens Bank of Clarkston and a new bank established in late 1970, the DeKalb Exchange Bank, all located in DeKalb County.

Five of these banks have offices in North Fulton County, which seems the more appropriate area to consider. These five include the two which C&S seeks to acquire--C&S North Fulton and C&S Sandy Springs. Between them they hold 45.8% of total deposits held by banking offices located in North Fulton. If C&S were to acquire these two banks, it would immediately assume a dominant position in North Fulton County, and greatly assist in transferring the concentrated market structure of Atlanta to the suburban area of North Fulton County. Cf. Procter & Gamble, supra. In addition, the merger would eliminate two of the very limited number of potential independent bank alternatives existing in the suburban areas of Fulton County.

C&S clearly has the capability to branch de novo into Fulton County suburbs, and since January 1, 1971, it is legally able to do so. Since C&S holds the dominant position in Atlanta banking, any move by it into the newly opened suburbs by acquiring banks with leading positions will have a significantly adverse effect on present and future competition in those areas.

V. Conclusion

The proposed mergers would eliminate present and future competition between (i) C&S and its subsidiaries, and (ii) the banks which it seeks to merge into its subsidiaries. Consummation of these mergers would allow C&S, which already is the dominant bank in Atlanta, to transfer its dominance to North Fulton County, and to increase its share of DeKalb County deposits from 25% to over 41%. (Even within the five-county Atlanta SMSA, an area which clearly overstates the market, these mergers would increase C&S' leading share from 26% to 28%.)

Moreover, this merger must be evaluated in the context of the other pending merger proposals of First National and Trust Company. If all the proposed mergers were consummated, these banks which now dominate Atlanta would, together or separately, obtain positions of dominance in both North Fulton County and DeKalb County. These three Atlanta banks account for 53% of DeKalb County deposits now and would control almost 82% if all the proposed "affiliate" mergers were consummated. The same three banks' control of North Fulton County would increase from 0% to over 50%. These proposed mergers, involving three banks accounting for 54% of North Fulton County's deposits and nine banks accounting for over 28% of DeKalb County's deposits, would forever eliminate the possibility that significant numbers of Fulton or DeKalb "affiliates" of the major Atlanta banks could become independent sources of new competition. 9/ If they were all approved, few significant sources of deconcentration would remain in either Fulton or DeKalb Counties.

For the foregoing reasons, we believe that the C&S mergers would have a significantly adverse effect on competition in North Fulton County, DeKalb County and the Atlanta area generally.

9/ The federal regulatory agencies could affirmatively encourage such independence for affiliates by denying any Atlanta bank branches in any suburban area in which it has an "affiliate" until it has eliminated present restraints on competition flowing from stock ownership, director interlocks, and so forth.

If they were all approved, few significant sources of deconcentration would remain in either Fulton or DeKalb Counties.

For the foregoing reasons, we believe that the C&S mergers would have a significantly adverse effect on competition in North Fulton County, DeKalb County and the Atlanta area generally.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Plaintiff, v. CITIZENS AND SOUTHERN NATIONAL BANK, et al., Defendants.	)	Civil Action No. 15823 Filed: November 2, 1971

AFFIDAVIT OF DR. SAMUEL L. SKOGSTAD

Comes now Samuel L. Skogstad who on his oath deposes and states as follows:

I received B.A. and M.A. degrees in Economics from Florida State University, and a Ph.D. in Economics from Washington University, in St. Louis.

I was employed as "Financial Economist" in the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta from July [illegible] until September 1964. Since September of 1964, I have been a member of the faculty of the Department of Economics at Georgia State University. From August 1966 to August 1968, I was on Leave of Absence from Georgia State, serving as Economic Advisor and later Senior Economic Advisor in the U.S. AID Mission to Chile.

At the present time I hold the rank of Professor of Economics, and I am coordinator of graduate programs in Economics at Georgia State University. My primary teaching areas are Monetary & Banking Theory and Policy. I designed and have taught for the past two years a graduate course called Banking Structure and Competition.

I have served on or testified before a number of economic study and planning commissions, including serving as a member of the Advisory Council on Monetary and Fiscal Policies of the Coastal Plain Regional Commission. The work of the Council included an examination of the role of banks in promoting economic growth. I was also invited to testify before the Georgia Bank Holding Company Study Committee of the Georgia legislature (on the Georgia branch-banking law), and before the President's Commission on Income Maintenance (to prepare a statement for the record giving an economic and demographic profile of the Atlanta area).

I have been asked by the plaintiff to conduct a study to determine what geographic area(s) would be appropriate areas within which to analyze the competitive effects of the proposed mergers which are the subject of this litigation. In order to accomplish that task, I have conducted a rather intensive study of the geographic distribution of banks and bank customers in the Atlanta metropolitan area. The data on which the study is based show, for offices of Fulton and DeKalb County banks, the number and dollar volume of various classes of deposits, by size class and by the ZIP code address to which statements are mailed. The study focused on the place of origin of demand deposits in accounts with balances of $1,000 or less (hereafter "small accounts"). 1/ The small-deposit category was chosen because it is the relatively small, household and business customers who are the most numerous members of banking markets and who are most affected by the degree of concentration in banking markets. Demand deposits were chosen because it is in providing demand deposit services that commercial banks are unique among financial institutions. Moreover, on the lending side of commercial banking, the most likely group of potential borrowers for any given bank is its demand deposit customers.

1/ The data were provided to the plaintiff by the banks pursuant to subpoenas. Because the data were extremely voluminous, I arranged to have them tabulated in a more usable, though still basic, form. The results of these ZIP code tabulations, prepared under my direct supervision, are represented by plaintiff's proposed exhibits GX 42 through 75. I utilized these tabulations in preparing various of the tables set forth herein.

The study involved three essential steps. First, I developed conceptual criteria for determining which specific customers and which specific banks to include in a particular banking market. The second step was to examine available data in the light of the criteria developed in step one, in an attempt to determine a reasonable approximation of the number and sizes of bank markets in and around Atlanta. The third step was to interview bank officials in an attempt to evaluate my interpretation of the data to which I had access, and to gain information on policies and practices with respect to which I had no data.

To put precise geographic boundaries on a market is a difficult--perhaps impossible--task. To draw boundaries that represent a reasonable approximation of a market, however, is somewhat more manageable. One approach is to reach a first approximation by selecting a geographic area that, on the basis of professional judgment, appears likely to contain most of the customers in some market. This approach leads to a customer-oriented delineation of a market. For this first approximation, we can hypothesize that the sellers in this market are contained within the same boundaries as the buyers.

The next step is to apply criteria drawn from the economic theory of markets to determine whether this geographic area is unreasonably small or unreasonably large. 2/ The first approximation of a market area can be adjusted until an area is found that comes as close as possible to a representation of an economic market.

It is worth noting that there is the possibility of the existence of two distinct, adjacent, market areas in which identical terms of exchange are found. In such a case, it may be difficult to distinguish one market from the other. Moreover, it may be found that a single firm sells in both markets. In this case, the firm's market power in one market may influence the terms on which consumers may buy in another. The extent to which events in one market influence buyers and/or sellers in another depends on the physical proximity of the two, the mobility of buyers and sellers in the two markets, and, crucially, the time period of the analysis. In general, as time passes, the effects of causes originating in a given market are transmitted to increasingly distant markets. This may occur because some consumers are able to move back and forth from one market to another, or through communication media, or any number of other factors.

In general, it is reasonable to presume that buyers will spend more time and effort "shopping around" for an item that is important relative to the family budget than for one that represents a relatively minor outlay. Thus, for example, we would expect people to be willing, in general, to travel farther to save 10 or 15 percent on an automobile than to save a proportional amount on a package of cigarettes.

---

2/ The qualification in terms of reasonableness is necessary to prevent markets for most goods and services from becoming indefinitely large. If, for example, an Atlanta bank has 10 customers in the State of Washington, these customers should, in principle, be counted as members of the buyers' side of the market in which that bank sells. However, if the boundaries of that market are drawn to include such customers, the boundary would take in thousands of additional banks. Those banks in turn would serve millions of additional customers, and so on ad infinitum. Thus it is probably impossible, in any meaningful sense, to find perfect correspondence between an economic market and a specific, limited, geographic area.

E-60

The same principle is operative in banking markets. Borrowers (or lenders) of relatively large sums are likely to be more influenced by a given interest rate differential than borrowers (or lenders) of small sums. By the same token, checking account customers would not be expected to travel great extra distances to avail themselves of small service charge variations.

To illustrate, let us examine a plausible example. Consider an account with a minimum balance below $250, on which 25 checks are written. A bank that charges $1.00 plus $.10 per check service charge on such an account would collect a total of $3.50 for the month. Now imagine a bank 5 miles farther from the customer's residence or place of employment, with service charges of $.50 per month and $.05 per check. This bank's charge for the same service would be $1.75 or 50 percent less. However, note that even if the customer's time is valued at nothing at all, and travel cost is calculated at the modest rate of $.10 per mile, 2 round-trips to the bank would more than consume the savings on service charge. On this service, then, the more 5 miles of additional travel is of substantial significance to such a customer.

Thus, economic theory leads us to expect that, from the point of view of most customers, banking markets cover a relatively small geographic area. 3/ However, we need not rely on theory alone. Numerous empirical studies have demonstrated significant differences in the terms of exchange from one small geographic area to another. For example, George Kauffman found significance in one-county banking markets in Iowa. 4/ Schull and Horvitz found that market size is influenced by state banking laws. 5/ Schweiger and McGee found differences in loan rates within cities. 6/ In short, there appears to be agreement among students of banking that the market for small, retail-type commercial bank services is essentially local in character.

Another difficulty is important to note. It is possible to identify two markets that are spatially separated, but that present elements of interaction. This would be expected if there were many adjacent markets. In such a case the banks in one market might adopt a policy that would attract customers from each of several markets. Consider markets 1, 2, and 3 with market 2 separating 1 and 3. If the banks in market 1 should, say, lower interest rates on consumer loans, the banks in market 3 might feel sufficiently insulated from market 1 to ignore the change. However, if the banks in market 2 adopted the policy, the banks in market 3 might then feel compelled to follow suit also. In such a case, there might be sufficient interaction between the markets to make it appropriate to consider the entire area encompassing them as well as the area encompassing each market in assessing the market power of sellers operating in any or each of the markets.

Finally, it should be pointed out that a given customer (or group of customers) may choose among banks in two or more spatially separated areas, while other customers residing in the same area may have reasonable and convenient access to banks in only that area. For example, one group lives in area A and works in area B, while the other group lives and works in area A. Thus, the "market" will be viewed differently by the two groups, and the banks in the two areas may behave differently. Their actual behavior depends on how many customers in area A view the banks in the two areas as alternatives, and how important such customers are to the banks involved.

With this as an analytical framework, my market analysis began with what would, in the context of this litigation, appear to be the largest conceivable realistic banking market, the Atlanta SMSA. The SMSA includes five counties: Fulton, DeKalb, Clayton, Cobb and Gwinnett. If this area is in fact a realistic market, we should find that, at a minimum, there are no significant groups of banks and bank customers which are insulated from market forces in other parts of the area. On the other hand, if there are such groups in significant numbers, the SMSA is not a realistic banking market. In fact, an examination of the pattern of population distribution, movement and banking activity in the SMSA leads to the conclusion that it is not a realistic banking market.

According to 1970 Census figures, the population of the Atlanta SMSA was 1,390,164. Table 1 shows the distribution of the SMSA population.

As these data reveal, the population of the SMSA is heavily concentrated in Fulton and DeKalb Counties, which claim 74 percent of the total.

The socio-economic center of the area is the City of Atlanta. Census Bureau estimates for 1970 show that 287,783 people reside in the SMSA and work in Atlanta. Of this total, 55 percent live in Fulton County, 29 percent live in DeKalb County, 8 percent in Cobb County, 5 percent in Clayton County, and 2 percent in Gwinnett County.

The city limits of Atlanta place most of the city in Fulton County. However, the eastern boundary of the city crosses the county line into DeKalb County. The DeKalb portion of Atlanta contains about 47,000 residents, or 9 percent of the city's population. This "straddling" of the county line by the City of Atlanta is symbolic of the socio-economic unity of the adjacent areas of Fulton and DeKalb Counties. The border between Fulton and DeKalb Counties lies just about 2 miles east of the heart of the downtown business district. Thus, the growth of the city has naturally spilled over from Fulton County into DeKalb County and forms an important bond between the two political entities.

The relationship between Fulton and DeKalb and the three peripheral counties of the SMSA--Clayton, Cobb, and Gwinnett--contrasts sharply with that between Fulton and DeKalb. Two specific characteristics of the contrast are of particular importance. First, the boundaries of Clayton and Cobb Counties are about 7 miles from the downtown Atlanta business district, and the Gwinnett County line is over 13 miles away. Moreover, traveling from Atlanta outward, these boundaries are reached after passing from the high density commercial center of the area through areas of successively lower population density. The boundary between Fulton and DeKalb, on the other hand, is principally inside the City of Atlanta and about 2 miles from the center of the business district.

The second important point of contrast is that the principal towns and cities of the peripheral counties are socially, politically and, to a considerable extent, economically distinct from Atlanta. Thus, for example, a resident of Gwinnett County is likely to consider Lawrenceville or Buford his home, and not Atlanta. The same is true of Austell or Acworth or Marietta in Cobb County, and Jonesboro in Clayton County. Even for many of those who reside in the peripheral counties and work in Fulton or DeKalb Counties, the civic, social, religious and commercial institutions with which they identify are separated by substantial distances from Atlanta and its immediate environs.

Convenience of location is by far the most important factor for most people in choosing where they will bank. Most of the banking market literature I have read on the subject asserts that ordinary ("small") banking customers generally choose a bank that is near their residence or their place of employment. My interviews with local bankers have supported this proposition. For persons who do commute long distances to work, however, it seems possible that banks widely separated in space may constitute convenient alternative choices. Thus, while the geographic and economic facts discussed above tend to suggest that the SMSA is not a realistic banking market, we must test the possible significance of these spatially separated banking alternatives.

The important measure here is not whether it is mechanically possible for workers to bank near their place of employment, but whether in fact they actually find it convenient to do so. The best available indicator of the extent to which they do find it convenient is the extent to which they do actually bank outside the home county.

Data published in the 1970 Census of Population and Housing (Table P-2) show journey-to-work patterns for the Atlanta SMSA. A summary of these patterns for workers residing in Clayton, Cobb and Gwinnett Counties is presented in Table 2 below.

Source: 1970 Census of Population and Housing. Tables P-1 and P-2 were the sources of the data used to prepare this table. Fulton County totals include those residents of the City of Atlanta in Fulton County. Atlanta residents in the DeKalb section of the city are included in DeKalb County totals.

These three peripheral counties supplied 71,408 workers to Fulton and DeKalb labor markets. This represented a relatively small share of all SMSA residents who reported working in Fulton and DeKalb Counties (16 percent). However, from the point of view of the work forces in the peripheral counties, the Fulton job market is of great importance. The DeKalb job market is of great importance only to Gwinnett County residents. Only among workers in Cobb County do we find less than half the labor force employed in Fulton or DeKalb.

These statistics suggest that the Fulton or DeKalb banks may indeed be convenient alternatives for a significant percentage of Gwinnett residents, while Fulton banks could be convenient alternatives for a significant percentage of Cobb and Clayton residents.

In Fulton County and DeKalb County banks, there are 0.93 small checking accounts ($1,000 or less) with known Fulton or DeKalb ZIP codes for each person who resides and works in those counties. Taking this as a norm for accounts per employed person, then census data on employed persons (Table 2) can be multiplied by 0.93 to arrive at an estimate of total small accounts with peripheral county ZIP codes. These estimates are:

Clayton - 37,547

Cobb - 76,869

Gwinnett - 26,959

Based on these estimates, we can calculate the significance of Fulton and DeKalb banks to residents of those counties. Such calculations are shown in Table 3 below.

Table 3

	Number of Small Accounts			Percentage Distribution
County	Total	In Fulton and DeKalb Banks	In Home County Banks	In Fulton and DeKalb Banks	In Home County Banks
Clayton	37,547	14,836	22,711	40	60
Cobb	76,869	17,881	58,988	23	77
Gwinnett	26,959	6,563	20,396	24	76

This table indicates that while many of the peripheral county residents do bank in Fulton or DeKalb Counties, banks in Clayton, Cobb and Gwinnett Counties are the principal suppliers of commercial banking services to the majority of residents of those counties. Moreover, Table 4 indicates that, compared to all small-checking account customers with SMSA ZIP codes, customers who reside in the peripheral counties are quantitatively quite unimportant to Fulton and DeKalb banks.

From these data, one can reach certain conclusions. First, there are many potential banking customers who live in Clayton, Cobb or Gwinnett Counties who, because of regular commuting, would appear to have reasonable and convenient access to banks in Fulton or DeKalb Counties. From the point of view of banks in the peripheral counties, these customers are numerically important. However, many of those potential customers do not actually bank with Fulton or DeKalb banks. This tends to undercut the significance of the actual number of commuters as an influence on the buyers' side of Fulton and DeKalb banking markets.

Second, a very significant number of banking customers in Clayton, Cobb and Gwinnett Counties do not have reasonable and convenient access to Fulton and DeKalb banks since they do not work in those counties. Moreover, those residents of the peripheral counties who do buy from Fulton and DeKalb banks are not of sufficient importance to those banks to induce them to respond to the needs or demands of peripheral county customers.

Third, given these facts, it would seem likely that banks in Clayton, Cobb and Gwinnett Counties would tend to respond only to those banks in Fulton and DeKalb Counties which in fact are reasonable and convenient alternatives for residents of the peripheral counties. My interviews with peripheral county bankers gave the impression that they tend to respond only to the large downtown Atlanta banks, and paid little or no attention to the other Fulton or DeKalb banks. The combination of these interviews and these statistics suggest that only the large downtown Atlanta banks are in fact convenient alternatives to commuter residents of the peripheral counties. Data supplied by Atlanta banks show that of the accounts known to have peripheral county ZIP codes, the four largest Atlanta banks claim 71 percent.

Because of the response of peripheral county banks to large downtown Atlanta banks, the large downtown Atlanta banks apparently do have some influence on price and quality of service in the peripheral counties. This influence, however, is not balanced by reciprocal interaction from Fulton and DeKalb County banks. Because the customers of these banks who reside in Clayton, Cobb and Gwinnett Counties are quantitatively unimportant in comparison to all the customers of Fulton and DeKalb banks, these banks would not be likely to react to pricing changes in these peripheral counties. Bankers in these counties believe, based on my interviews, that their policies can change without inducing a response from the banks in Fulton and DeKalb. These bankers expressed the view that their response to Atlanta banks is made necessary by the broad-area dissemination--through advertising on television and in newspapers--of information on major changes in Atlanta banking policies. The concern they expressed is that their public relations would be damaged if they failed to respond to a significant competitive move. This view is consistent with their feeling that they would not gain an appreciable amount of business if Atlanta banks should adopt a policy injurious to customers of Atlanta banks. What this demonstrates in terms of markets, is that customers may move from one market to another but that a physical banking facility is fixed permanently in one market. The interaction represented here reflects customers moving from one market to another, and not the interaction of the banks and customers of a single market. The distinction is significant if, as in this case, the number of customers who move is significant to one group of sellers and not to the other.

Finally, the pattern of commutation shown in Table 2, suggests that small banking customers in any one of the peripheral counties are almost wholly insulated from banking markets in the other two. In my judgment, each of the peripheral counties has at least one banking market that is largely independent of banking markets in any other county. More importantly, such independent markets encompass most of the banking customers in these counties (see Table 3). Thus, banks in Clayton County, for example, do not compete with banks in Cobb or Gwinnett or DeKalb for significant groups of customers. Only to the extent that the large downtown banks are convenient alternatives for some peripheral county residents do banks outside those counties offer any competition to banks within those counties.

In summary, then, the large downtown Atlanta banks have some influence on banks in Clayton, Cobb and Gwinnett Counties; other banks in Fulton and DeKalb have little, if any, influence. Bank customers in Clayton, Cobb or Gwinnett Counties have little or no influence on banks in Fulton and DeKalb Counties, or on banks in the peripheral counties other than those located in the county in which they live. There are a significant number of banking customers in the peripheral counties who have no reasonable and convenient banking alternatives outside their county. Even of those residents who work in Fulton or DeKalb County, many exhibit a preference for banks near their place of residence rather than their place of work. Finally, those counties are spatially distant and, in various other ways, separated from Atlanta and its immediate environs. Considering these factors, I reject the Atlanta SMSA as a reasonable approximation of a banking market.

It therefore would be inappropriate to analyze the competitive effect of the mergers which are the subject of this litigation in a geographic area approximated by the Atlanta SMSA.

Having eliminated the outer reaches of the Atlanta SMSA, we are left with an area encompassing Fulton and DeKalb Counties.

The combined population of these two counties is just over one million. Fulton is the larger of the two both in area and in population. Census reports for 1970 show that over 90 percent of DeKalb and Fulton workers who reported place of employment worked within the two-county area. Of 166,144 DeKalb residents who reported place of employment, 83,590 (about half) worked in Fulton County, while 70,864 (43 percent) worked in DeKalb County. This contrasts sharply with the movenent of Fulton County workers. Of these, 227,150 reported place of work, and 187,165, or 82 percent, worked in Fulton County. Only 18,939 (8 percent) were employed in DeKalb County.

Of the DeKalb County workers employed in Fulton County, 66,420 (79 percent) worked either in the Central Business District or elsewhere in the City of Atlanta. Thus, the penetration of DeKalb residents into Fulton County is more than a thin spillover across county lines. As indicated earlier, Fulton County relies heavily on DeKalb for workers, and DeKalb residents depend heavily on Fulton employers for jobs.

The journey-to-work data cited in Table 2 lead me to predict that many DeKalb and Fulton County residents buy banking services in the same market. This would reflect principally the movement of people from DeKalb County into Fulton County, and not the opposite flow. There is a natural integration of a significant portion of DeKalb County into the economy of the City of Atlanta. It is this integration with Atlanta that imparts a significant homogeneity to the residents and businesses in a broad area extending outward from the city. I have noted earlier that the outlying counties are only marginally integrated at the present time. The substantial independence they retain is one factor that led me to omit them from the Atlanta area market.

Similarly, it appears that there are peripheral portions of Fulton and DeKalb Counties that are substantially separated from the Atlanta economy. I will return to this point later. The issue is raised here to illustrate that economic-geographic separation from Atlanta is one criterion for excluding an area from the market. I do not, however, mean to argue that the presence of integration defines the entire area as a single market. As we shall see, there is evidence that, in fact, this is not the case.

With the foregoing caveats in mind, let us proceed to a consideration of the banking relationships found in the data for the two counties as a whole.

Table 5 below summarizes the relationship between banks and bank customers in this area, based on accounts whose ZIP code origins were known.

Table 5

*Data adjusted to remove DeKalb branches of Fulton County banks. Deposits in these branches are included in DeKalb accounts in DeKalb County banking offices. Fulton County deposits in this branch are included as Fulton accounts in DeKalb offices.

The data reveal the following pattern of relationships between banks in these two counties and customers in the counties.

1. DeKalb banking offices draw 92 percent of their Atlanta area customers from DeKalb County, and only 8 percent from Fulton County.

2. DeKalb residents in numbers of consequence to DeKalb banks, bank in Fulton County, but are not of great importance to Fulton banking offices.

3. Fulton banking offices draw 77 percent of their Atlanta area customers from Fulton County and only 23 percent from DeKalb.

4. Fulton residents show little propensity to bank in DeKalb County.

These results strongly support the view that there may be a banking market which, in terms of the customers it includes, covers most of DeKalb County. In other words, DeKalb County cannot be considered to be too small to be a banking market. Obviously, banking offices and consumers on the periphery of the county may also be participants in this market. However, the numbers from within the county are of such magnitude that the excluded buyers and sellers are unlikely to be of sufficient importance to alter the qualitative conclusion that there may be a market for small customers that is roughly bounded by the DeKalb County line.

This does not imply, however, that the markets are unrelated. The DeKalb customers who have accounts in Fulton County banking offices are equivalent to 59 percent of all small-checking accounts in DeKalb banking offices. Therefore, we may conclude that these customers are potentially of greater importance to DeKalb County banks than to Fulton County banks. DeKalb small accounts in some Fulton County banking offices are significant to these offices. However, in the aggregate, DeKalb customers are not likely to be of sufficient importance to Fulton County banking offices to influence the policies of these banks.

These observations lead me to several market-related conclusions. First, if Fulton County bank customers, as a unique group, should demand and receive additional bank services or services on better terms, we would expect banks in both counties to respond to those demands. DeKalb banks would respond because DeKalb residents who have Fulton banking offices as reasonable and convenient alternatives would have available to them the additional or better services offered by Fulton banks. Since these customers are important to DeKalb banks, DeKalb banks would be expected to offer the same change to prevent them from moving. Therefore, if the degree of competition among Fulton County banks were lessened, a significant number of DeKalb customers would be among the injured small customers, by virtue of the fact that one of the markets to which they have convenient access has become less competitive. They would no longer be the gratuitous beneficiaries of competitive response to the demands of Fulton consumers.

Secondly, if DeKalb customers, as a unique group, should exhibit dissatisfaction with the present level or mix of services, we would expect DeKalb banks to respond. Since these customers are only a small portion of their total customers, we would expect Fulton banks to be only marginally influenced, if at all. Therefore, Fulton banks may be uninfluenced by either the customers or the banks located in DeKalb, except over reasonably long periods of time.

To illustrate this point, let us assume that all DeKalb County banks took a competitively significant action, such as eliminating service charges on checking accounts. If my conclusions are correct, banks in Fulton County would not make an immediate response to this action. Obviously, this decision would be based on a consideration of whether it would be in their interest to respond, or whether a response would be more costly than silence. Using C&S as an example, I believe the following are the factors that would determine whether the Fulton County banks would in fact respond to such a move by DeKalb County banks.

First, C&S would be expected to make some assessment of the number of checking account customers it would lose if it chose not to respond. If, as I have contended earlier, and as most of the literature on banking markets suggests, convenient physical proximity is of key importance, I would not expect customers to exhibit perfect responsiveness to a change in the price of checking account services.

Next, assuming that service charges exactly cover the cost of providing the service, C&S would be expected to estimate the loss of net income from other services provided to the customers who did leave, and the interest income that could be earned on the deposits of these customers. The sum of these costs measures the cost of ignoring the change.

Finally, C&S would be expected to calculate the cost, in foregone service charge revenue, of responding to the DeKalb banks. This cost will be determined by the extent to which they match the change adopted by DeKalb banks, and the present level of service charge revenue, and the number of customers involved.

If the cost of responding is determined to exceed the cost of ignoring the change, C&S would not respond. Presumably, the other major Fulton County banks would perform the same kind of calculations.

Table 6 shows the distribution and significance of DeKalb deposits in Fulton County offices of the four largest Atlanta banks.

Source: Data supplied by banks. The account numbers under the county headings were found as follows: First, the sum of all small accounts originating in ZIP codes in Fulton and DeKalb Counties was found for each entire bank. Second, the same information was computed for the offices of these banks that are located in DeKalb County. For each column in the table, the DeKalb branch data were deducted from the bank totals. The percentages do not add to 100 simply because these banks have accounts for which the ZIP code is not known, and other accounts with ZIP codes outside these two counties.

These ratios cast considerable doubt on the likelihood of Fulton County banks following a policy adopted by DeKalb County banks to appeal to DeKalb residents, particularly a policy that involved any significant cost to the banks. Clearly, 20 percent of the customers of the Fulton County offices of the major banks is an important proportion. However, any benefit granted to the 20 percent of the customers who come from DeKalb County must also be granted to the other 80 percent. Moreover, there is reason to doubt that, from any reasonably likely policy change, anything like the full 18 or 20 percent would in fact move.

Some evidence is available that there are at present service charge variations among the banks in Fulton and DeKalb Counties. There also appear to be differences between these banks in interest rates on consumer type loans, such as auto loans. In general, bankers I have interviewed were of the view that individual customers tend to fall into one of two categories. In one category, customers are quite insensitive to differences in interest rates and service charges between banks. On the other hand, such customers feel that hours of operation, convenient access, and the probability of success when seeking credit are crucial, and particularly so when there is a competitor bank within a reasonably short distance. The second category includes customers who typically "shop around" for interest rates and other charges. In general, the larger the former group, the more sluggish the response of banks in one market to changes in policy in an adjacent market.

Even if Fulton County banks were faced with a competitively spectacular action initiated by DeKalb County banks, the former probably would not lose a significant number of customers. Some will stay for reasons of convenience; some will stay because they "like" the bank and its service; some will stay with the larger bank because they like to do business with a large bank even though they don't need to; some will stay because they don't know about the alternative; and some will stay for miscellaneous and sometimes undefinable reasons.

The most compelling reason, then, for concluding that DeKalb County contains at least one banking market is that it contains a very substantial number of bank customers (and probably most of the customers) who could be injured if the degree of competition among banks in DeKalb were lessened. Competition among banks in Fulton County affords some protection to such customers, but only with a time lag, and even then, the protection would be less thorough than that derived from vigorous competition within DeKalb County. In the presence of active competition among DeKalb banks we might imagine a move by those banks that benefits DeKalb customers. We have already hypothesized that Fulton County banks would be unlikely to respond quickly. Consequently, the beneficiaries of that policy change would be DeKalb County banking customers. If the possibility of the development of such a competitive environment is made smaller or is foreclosed, then the losers are, again, DeKalb residents.

The data for Fulton County lend even stronger support to the hypothesis that it also encompasses at least one banking market. We have seen that 82 percent of Fulton County residents who reported place of employment were employed within the County. It is not surprising, therefore, that 96 percent of the small checking accounts of Fulton County residents in Fulton or DeKalb County banking offices are in Fulton County banking offices. 8/ In short, the tests that suggest the presence of at least one banking market in DeKalb County, suggest the same conclusion for Fulton County, even more strongly.

There remains the question of whether, even though Fulton and DeKalb contain separate banking markets, their combined area has any relevance to analysis of the competitive effects of the proposed mergers. As I noted earlier, there is some interaction between banks in Fulton and DeKalb. There is considerable economic integration between the two counties. These facts are sufficient to warrant further analysis.

---

8/ See Table 5 for data used in making this calculation.

Certain facts are of particular importance. First, all the banks involved in the proposed mergers are located in, and do the vast majority of their business in, Fulton and DeKalb. Second, the branching laws allow the larger banks to branch throughout Fulton and DeKalb, while the other banks are limited to their home county.

To assess the interaction between markets, time must be introduced explicitly. The theoretical apparatus I have used in this analysis permits some interaction between two or more geographic markets even though the markets, as defined, are neither too small nor too large to be reasonable approximations. Thus, for example, if banks in say, market A adopt a policy favorable to its customers, a few customers in market B may be induced into A. If these customers are not quantitatively important in B, no response would be expected from the banks in B.

Through time, however, the flow of customers from B to A may increase. Eventually, banks on the periphery of B may be induced to respond. This, in turn, may induce customers to move from other banks to these banks on the periphery. This process can conceivably proceed through time until virtually the entire area of the two small markets has been affected. In fact, if enough time is allowed one can imagine the effect being spread throughout a state. Therefore, for purposes of assessing the impact of a specific change in market structure, it is important to recognize the influence of time on the size of the customer group that will be affected. If I were asked to point to one area within which all the proposed mergers might have a reasonably prompt competitive effect, that area would be Fulton and DeKalb Counties combined. In my opinion, such an area would be one relevant geographic area within which to analyze the competitive effects of the proposed mergers which are the subject of this litigation.

Up to this point, I have argued that the Atlanta SMSA is too big to be considered a single economic market for the commercial banking services consumed by most customers. I have argued further that DeKalb and Fulton Counties separately are, at least, not too small to be considered reasonable approximations of markets, and that the interaction between them is sufficient to justify concern for the implications of events in one for customers in the other. There remains, finally, the question of whether these areas may be too large for each to represent a single market.

My analysis of available data, combined with my familiarity with the area, interviews with bankers, and a modicum of professional judgment, lead me to conclude that they are technically too big, when my focus is on the geographic boundaries of the customers' side of the market. It is my impression that DeKalb County contains at least two market groups of banking customers outside of what one might consider the metropolitan portion of DeKalb County. Specifically, I believe there may be banking markets in and around Lithonia in Southeast DeKalb and Stone Mountain in East DeKalb.

In Fulton County, it seems likely that there is one (or possibly two) customer markets in the northern end of the county around Alpharetta-Roswell-Sandy Springs, and one or more markets in the south-southwest section of the county around the East Point-Hapeville-Airport area and in the Union City-Fairburn-Palmetto area.

These small markets, however, are in areas containing a relatively small proportion of the population of the respective counties. In DeKalb, they contain approximately 10 percent of the county's population, and in Fulton about 9 percent. Consequently, while including them in single-county market areas is probably not formally valid, it is not likely to change significantly the results for the entire county. Also, developments in one area are likely to be communicated quickly to the others. Patterns of commuting seem certain to connect most areas of the counties in relay style, and all the banks in each county are able, under existing branching laws to enter any market in the county in which they are located by opening additional branches. Therefore my conclusion is that the counties are reasonable geographic areas within which it is appropriate to analyze the competitive effects of the proposed mergers.

The presence of these small markets does become important, however, when a change in the structure of one of these markets is under consideration. For example, the merger of three of the banking offices now located north of the City of Atlanta in Fulton County would have its effect primarily on customers who live in that area. From north to south in Fulton County above the city limits, the ZIP codes in this area are 30201, 30075, 30338, and 30328. The southern extremity of the area is found at the perimeter highway (I-285) just south of Sandy Springs and a few miles north of the city limits of Atlanta.

The total number of banking customers in this area can be estinated using the procedure I have used earlier. Census data show that, in the census tracts that approximately coincide with this area, there were 20,570 employed persons. If for each person, there are 0.93 small checking accounts, this area has a total of 19,130 such accounts.

About two-thirds of the residents of this area live south of the Chattahoochee River and one-third live north of the river. The percentages in Table 7 result from assigning 65 percent of these accounts in North Fulton to the Sandy Springs area (south of the river) and 35 percent to the northern-most area. The area between the northern-most section of the county (Roswell and Alpharetta) and Sandy Springs is one that displays considerable physical evidence of growth. Banks in the area apparently recognize the growth potential of the entire area. The Roswell Bank, for example, has recently opened a branch in the North Sandy Springs area.

Table 7 shows the deposits held in the banking offices of the 9 banks that are located in the area and the proportion each bank holds of all small checking accounts in the North Fulton County Area. Area codes 30201 and 30075 are the northern-most ZIP codes in Fulton County and ZIP codes 30338 and 30328 represent the Sandy Springs area.

*Includes only banking offices physically located in the 4 ZIP code area of North Fulton County. ZIP code 30338 includes part of DeKalb County that is not clearly convenient to Fulton County. Data in this table, except where otherwise indicated in the text, were compiled from ZIP code data on mailing addresses of accounts, supplied by the banks included in the table.

E-85

These data make it clear that residents of the northernmost section of North Fulton County bank predominantly in the area in which they reside. The three banks in that area hold 92 percent of all small deposits originating in the area. Moreover, these three banks draw the vast majority of their accounts from those two ZIP code areas.

Two of these three banks, however, also draw a substantial number of accounts from other ZIP code areas. The Roswell Bank and C&S North Fulton derive 40 percent and 35 percent of their accounts, respectively, from outside of the two northernmost ZIP code areas. Much of this remainder for the Roswell Bank is drawn from the Sandy Springs area. Moreover, the growth these banks anticipate must come largely from deposits drawn from customers who reside in areas south of their locations. For example. Roswell Bank has a newly opened branch in North Sandy Springs which will compete directly with the C&S East Point branch, and other Sandy Springs banking offices.

In the Sandy Springs area, only 40 percent of the estimated total of all accounts from the area are in banking offices located in the area. About 47 percent of the workers residing in the Sandy Springs area are employed in the City of Atlanta, and it appears that most of those have accounts in Atlanta banks. Thus it appears that the vast majority of such workers have chosen to bank near where they work.

However, it should be noted that until the recent change in Georgia branch banking law, the major Atlanta banks were not permitted to branch in the area. Prior to 1969, C&S Sandy Springs was the only bank located in the area. Thus, for the persons residing in the area and working in Atlanta, the major Atlanta banks represented the only convenient alternative.

In 1969, Trust Company of Georgia Bank of Sandy Springs was formed and since has been merged into Trust Company. Subsequent to the change in the branching law (January 1, 1971), First National, Fulton National and National Bank of Georgia have opened offices in the area. This indicates that they consider it necessary, in order to compete effectively for residents who live in the area, particularly those who do not have convenient banking alternatives near where they work, to be physically present in the market. It also suggests that there are sufficient actual and potential customers in the area to constitute a banking market. And, as the area continues to grow, the market can be expected to grow.

The data and my analysis lead me to conclude that it is likely that the banks in the northern-most section of the North Fulton area are somewhat influenced by the major downtown bank offices but not to a significant degree. The three banks located in the northern area have an estimated 92 percent of all accounts originating in the area. This strongly suggests that the residents of the area do not have convenient alternatives. Thus the sellers in this area are largely insulated from sellers in other areas.

In the Sandy Springs area, the downtown offices of the major banks have already captured a majority of the accounts of residents of Sandy Springs who work in the city. Thus, if Sandy Springs banks adopted a policy injurious to their customers, one would expect few of the customers to be able conveniently to move to other banks. On the other hand, if they adopted a policy of vigorous competition in an effort to capture the business of some of the residents who now bank downtown, it is highly unlikely that the downtown offices of the major banks would respond. Sandy Springs residents are simply not of great importance to them.

As I have indicated, at the present time, it appears that the North Fulton area contains two reasonable approximations of banking markets. However, growth patterns are rapidly tying them together. Also, it can be expected that the most logical places for the banks to branch would be south for the banks in the northern area and north for the banks in the south. Thus, I believe the distinctions between the two markets will disappear in the near future. Consequently, an area within which the proposed mergers would be likely to have immediate and substantial adverse consequence would be in the area encompassing the entire 4 ZIP code area.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Plaintiff, v. CITIZENS AND SOUTHERN NATIONAL BANK, et al., Defendants.	)	Civil Action No. 15823 Filed: November 2, 1971

SECOND AFFIDAVIT OF DR. SAMUEL L. SKOGSTAD

Comes now Samuel L. Skogstad who on his oath deposes and states as follows:

I have been asked by Plaintiff to comment on the Economic Report prepared by Baxter & Co. on behalf of the Defendants. The report is voluminous and addresses many issues relative to the present litigation. I believe that my training and experience qualify me to comment on the economic issues of banking and banking markets. Thus my assessment of the report is confined to the sections that address those issues. 1/ Moreover, in the sections of the report that deal with economic issues, I find many areas of agreement with its author(s). Thus I have further limited my comments to the points at which I believe there is substantive disagreement between my own views and those expressed by the author(s) of the report. It would be incorrect to interpret this emphasis as a judgment that the entire report is without merit.

1/ For example, I know of no way of testing the declaration that C&S was the first to recognize "the fact that local independent banks could not adequately meet the needs of a growing number of metropolitan suburban customers" (p. 41). Moreover, I am not even aware that this is a fact. Since I cannot test such assertions with objective information, I cannot judge whether the praise lavished on C&S is deserved.

In evaluating the Defendants' Economic Report it is important to keep in mind the problem with respect to which it is offered. That problem, as I understand it, is to determine whether the proposed mergers, if consummated, might substantially lessen competition and thereby adversely affect any identifiable group of customers, in violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act. One dimension of such possible adverse effects is an economic dimension. It is this dimension that is susceptible to evaluation with the analytical tools of the professional economist.

Much of the language of Section 7 of the Clayton Act is not part of the jargon of economics. One problem phrase, from an economist's point of view, is "section of the country." An "acquisition", the effect of which "may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly," is a relatively straight-forward concept. However, to give the concept empirical content, the economic dimensions of "section of the country" must be specified.

From an economist's point of view, the "section of the country" in which a lessening of competition would be felt by consumers would be (a) the geographic boundaries of the "market" in which the lessening of competition occurred, and (b) any physically proximate market to which the lessening of competition would be quickly and substantially transmitted.

The primary aim of my own study of Atlanta area banking was to identify the section(s) of the country in which to assess the economic implications of the proposed mergers and to determine which customers, if any, would be likely to feel the effects of the mergers. My assessment of the Baxter & Co. paper is based upon my work in the area of the economics of banking markets and the results of my own study of Atlanta area banking.

E- 90

Key conclusions reached in Defendants' Economic Report were that failure to consummate the proposed mergers would be detrimental to Atlanta area banking customers, and approval of the mergers would adversely affect no group of customers, and would speed the conversion of Atlanta area banking from an irrational to a rational structure.

Findings reported in Economic Report, and interpreted as supporting the conclusions include:

1. Atlanta banking markets are highly localized, and each bank involved in the proposed mergers is in a separate localized market. Therefore these banks do not now compete with one another and their merger can not reduce the extent to which they compete with one another.

2. A questionnaire survey of C&S customers revealed that many of them consider correspondent associates to be branches of C&S National Bank. The survey also revealed that many C&S customers use more than one office of C&S or more than one C&S bank. Therefore it is argued that the mergers would formalize relationships that these customers believe already exist, and that, in effect, do now exist.

3. Branch banking serves the convenience and needs of customers in a metropolitan area, and increases the number of competitive alternatives available to local customers.

4. The Atlanta SMSA is not highly concentrated relative to other SMSAs in which limited branch banking is permitted. Moreover, the Atlanta SMSA is becoming less concentrated.

5. Branch banking produces a better allocation of credit than does unit banking.

6. Concentration ratios in banking markets do not measure performance in these markets. A good measure of performance is convenience, for which the number of banking offices serves as an indication. There are many banking offices in the Atlanta SMSA, therefore the performance of banks in Atlanta is good relative to other SMSAs.

7. Economies of scale in banking may not be realized if policy promotes the maximization of the number of banks.

8. If the mergers are blocked, the banks involved would lose their relationship with C&S and would be unlikely to be able to become "meaningful competitors with each other or with C&S National and its affiliates in the foreseeable future."

9. The relevant "section of the country" in which to assess the convenience and needs aspects of the proposed mergers is the Atlanta SMSA because "the requirements for banking services arise in the context of an economically integrated metropolitan market." (p. 3)

This list of findings is by no means exhaustive. However, it does include the arguments that are, as I interpret the report, most crucial to the conclusion that the proposed mergers are desirable from a social point of view. I will address myself to these arguments in the order in which they are presented above.

1. Atlanta Banking Markets

Economic Report is somewhat ambiguous on the concept of market. On page 33, for example, one reads that "the only meaningful market for banking that can be defined from initial investigations is the entire Atlanta metropolitan area" (presumably, the SMSA) "and this is meaningful only for a small number of banking customers." Yet at other points in the report one finds references to the markets served by the correspondent associates, (p. xiv, p. 3, p. 56), and to "overlap" of markets, (p. 57) and to "market spillover" (p. 59). Thus it is not surprising that the author(s) of Economic Report find that "the definition of a geographic market (section of the country) within which to measure concentration, is, as indicated, somewhat arbitrary" (p. 26).

I certainly agree that precise geographic lines can not be drawn around banking markets. In fact, I took that position in my own direct testimony. However, as I also argued in my testimony, I believe reasonable approximations can be found that do not grievously over-state or under-state the dimensions of a market. Even after only an "initial investigation," for example, it seems to me that one can find a less arbitrary approximation of a "meaningful market for banking," than the entire Atlanta SMSA. Several factors suggest that this is a logical implication not only of my own study of the area, but of the Baxter & Co. findings as well.

First, as Economic Report points out, this broad area is meaningful to relatively few customers. Moreover, data in Table 4 of my own testimony reveal that customers in each of Clayton, Cobb, and Gwinnett Counties represent a very minor proportion of the customers served by Fulton and DeKalb County banks. Finally, there appears to be little interaction among Clayton, Cobb, and Gwinnett banks and bank customers.

Another factor that militates against the entire area of the SMSA as a banking market is the fact that by Georgia branch banking law, banks in Fulton and DeKalb Counties cannot branch into Clayton, Cobb, and Gwinnett Counties, nor can banks in those counties branch into Fulton and DeKalb or into each other's counties. The large Atlanta banks can, on the other hand, branch throughout both Fulton and DeKalb Counties. The banking market literature with which I am acquainted, my own professional judgment and experience, and, I believe, sections of the Baxter & Co. report as well, 2/ suggest that laws governing branch banking influence the geographic dimensions of local banking markets. Georgia branch banking law allows a pattern that establishes a connection between Fulton and DeKalb Counties, but not between these counties and the three peripheral counties of the SMSA.

2/ The report explicitly relates industry structure to the legal environment (p. 39). On page 47 the author(s) write:

> "One item of evidence that suggests the greater convenience of banking structures in metropolitan areas is the fact that in unit banking states, deposits tend to be more concentrated in the city center as opposed to suburban areas. This implies that since the specialized services and credit resources of large banks cannot be made conveniently available in suburban areas, more banking must be done in the city center." (My underlining.)

Another way of saying essentially the same thing is that permissive branch banking policy effectively expands the geographic boundaries of banking markets. In Atlanta, branching is permitted throughout Fulton and DeKalb Counties for the largest banks, but not throughout the entire SMSA.

On the basis of the foregoing and other considerations, I concluded that the two-county Fulton and DeKalb area--not the five-county SMSA area--is a meaningful geographic area within which to assess the impact of the proposed mergers. The arguments offered in Economic Report in support of the SMSA area are:

1. "Common sense would appear to indicate a rather broad geographic area" (p. 3).

2. "the requirements for banking services arise in the context of an economically integrated metropolitan market" (p. 3).

The failure of Economic Report explicitly to reach the conclusion that the Fulton-DeKalb area is relevant, may be explained by the fact that data for these counties separately were not considered. The author(s) dismiss them by simply asserting that they are "basically irrelevant" (p. 33). In my judgment such an assertion has not offset the evidence in favor of the Fulton-DeKalb area as the relevant "rather broad geographic area."

The Baxter & Co. report contends that local banking markets "tend to be relatively concentrated as a matter of statistical definition." (p. 26) I believe the idea underlying this statement is that most banking customers are found to bank at a location relatively close to their residence or to their place of employment, a phenomenon that has been affirmed in numerous studies. I would characterize this, however, as a statistical obervation rather than a definition. The difference, I believe, is that concentration may have a statistical definition, but local banking markets are defined in terms of the groups of customers and banks who interact and respond to one another. Whether a given market so defined is or is not statistically concentrated is an empirical question and not a question of definition. I am acquainted with bank market studies that attempt to measure concentration in local banking markets, but I do not know of any that define local banking markets in terms of concentration ratios.

Whether local banking markets are concentrated by definition may be only a semantic question, and I do not wish to belabor the point. There is a much more important substantive issue to be considered. The Baxter & Co. report provides data on the ZIP code addresses of certain customers of the C&S banks proposing to merge. On the basis of these data, the report concludes that these banks do in fact serve separate, highly localized markets. The author(s) further conclude that this finding precludes the possibility that any adverse competitive effects would attend the proposed mergers.

I agree fully that banking markets are essentially local in character. However, I believe that errors of analysis in interpreting the data have led the author(s) of the Baxter & Co. report to a geographic delineation of markets that is unreasonably small, and to an inaccurate assessment of the influence of competitive conditions in one small area on banking performance in a similar, neighboring area.

In economic analysis, the term market is used to refer to the group of buyers and the group of sellers of a particular good or service whose interactions determine the terms upon which the good or service is sold and the quantity sold. There is room for some quibbling about this definition, but the essential point is that when a given geographic area is denominated a market, then all the sellers who are contained in that area and who sell in that area are members of that market. 3/ This point is easily illustrated.

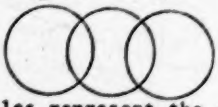
Consider the diagram below:



Let the outer circles represent the areas from which two banks draw most of their customers. The center circle represents, say, a branch of a third bank. The center circle bank competes with both outer circle banks for customers. In the absence of the center circle, one of the outer circle banks might ignore a competitive policy adopted by the other. Given the presence of the center circle bank, however, the policy would be more likely to be adopted quickly by all three banks. Customers in any one of the three areas are affected by what happens in either of the other two. It certainly would make no sense to conclude after examining only the two outer circle banks, that they are in separate markets. Using this criteria, one might easily find that banks on one edge of a suburban neighborhood are not in the same market as banks on the opposite edge.

In Economic Report, an example used to demonstrate the highly localized nature of banking markets does, in fact, ignore the relevance of other banks in determining the market. (p. 81) The author(s) consider those customers of C&S Emory and of C&S DeKalb who have 30030 ZIP code addresses. It was found that most of C&S Emory's 30030 customers came from the side of the area in which it is located, and that the same was true of 3/ There may be sellers or buyers located outside the area who also sell or buy in that market. (Assuming sellers have delivery service or buyers are geographically mobile.) Also, the buyers and sellers in the area may buy and sell in other geographic markets.

---

C&S DeKalb's 30030 customers. The author(s) interpret the boundary between the two sides as providing "a very clear distinction between the two market areas." (p. 81)

The author(s) failed to observe, however, that there are at least two other banks with branches between C&S Emory's main office and that of C&S DeKalb. Data supplied by these banks show the following small (under $1,000) checking accounts drawn from ZIP code area 30030:

C&S Emory (all offices) -	833
C&S DeKalb (both offices) -	894
Fulton National Bank (Decatur offices) -	1,569
First National Bank (Decatur branch) -	1,846

There are other offices of other banks that draw customers from this area as well. The point of these data is simply to illustrate that ZIP code 30030 is served by many banking offices. Consequently, it does not seem reasonable to conclude that the entire ZIP code, much less one or both sides of the boundary drawn through it by Baxter & Co., is a reasonable approximation of a market. Two banks simply do not afford sufficient data to draw such a conclusion.

It should be noted that the author(s) define the market area of each of the Fulton and DeKalb affiliates and correspondent associates, for non-corporate demand deposit business, in terms of ZIP code areas. (Exhibit 35) For example, the market defined for C&S DeKalb includes ZIP code 30030 and six others. The reference on page 81 to the boundary through 30030 as a distinction between two "market areas" is intended to mean that the boundary identifies that part of 30030 from which each bank (C&S DeKalb and C&S Emory) currently draws a substantial number of customers.

From the point of view of a C&S official, in fact, one can readily imagine this boundary being thought of as a boundary of "our market." However, in considering the economic implications of the proposed mergers, it is not reasonable to define markets by confining our attention to the C&S banks and the customers who currently bank at C&S banks. Rather, attention must be directed to all banks who are important suppliers of banking services in this ZIP code and to all customers in this ZIP code area, and any other ZIP code area, who are quantitatively important in determining the conditions on which banking services are supplied. As I have shown, Fulton National Bank and First National Bank of Atlanta both have offices that serve more customers from this ZIP code area than either C&S Emory or C&S DeKalb. Therefore, they are certainly sellers in the market that includes ZIP code 30030. The Baxter & Co. report argues that this ZIP code is also in the "markets" of offices of First National Bank of Glenwood, Trust Company of Georgia, and the North DeKalb branch of First National Bank of Atlanta. Therefore, since the customers of these banks have been ignored, the division of this ZIP code area into two markets is, at best, premature on the basis of the data presented.

In defining the "market" served by C&S Emory, the Economic Report includes ZIP code area 30030 and seven other ZIP code areas. The two from which C&S Emory draws the largest number of customers are 30033, directly north of 30030, and ZIP code 30329, northwest of 30030. Exhibit 40 compares C&S Emory and C&S Tucker in this area (30030) and shows that most of the accounts from the Emory side of the ZIP code are in C&S Emory, and almost half the accounts from the Tucker side are in C&S Emory.

I do not know what this result implies with respect to geographic markets, if anything. However, I found from a quick sampling of data supplied by the Fulton and DeKalb County banks, that C&S Emory has numerous competitors for the small checking account customers in this ZIP code area. A partial listing of banks with accounts from ZIP code 30033 and the number of accounts in each, illustrates the point:

Bank	No. of Small Checking Accounts 4/
C&S Emory (all offices)	2,633
C&S National (all offices)	916
Fulton National Bank (all offices)	942
First National Bank of Atlanta (all offices)	2,000
Trust Company of Georgia (all offices)	1,212
National Bank of Georgia (all offices)	407

Economic Report also identifies, in addition to C&S Tucker, C&S DeKalb and C&S Park National (Exhibit 35), as banks in whose "markets" ZIP code 30033 is included.

4/ Many of these accounts are carried at the downtown offices of the Atlanta banks. The Baxter & Co. report classifies such accounts as "spillover", but does not explicitly define this term. However, it appears to refer to customers who reside in one geographic place and who have banking relationships with banks other than those whose customer's addresses are being examined. The schematic sketch of "spillover" in Defendants' Exhibit 72 suggests that specific geographic markets must be identified before spillover is measured. Therefore, it does not seem to be a concept that would assist in the process of identifying geographic markets.

If "spillover" refers simply to customers who bank in, say, downtown Atlanta and live in, say, Buckhead, it certainly does not follow that these customers or banks in Atlanta are of no competitive significance in Buckhead. Clearly, because the customers may opt to bank downtown or in Buckhead, both groups of banks are competing for Buckhead customers. The "spillover" customers and the banks among which they may choose are of competitive significance.

In ZIP code area 30329, Economic Report, (Exhibit 40), pairs C&S Park National and C&S Chamblee. Thirty-three percent of Park National's non-corporate demand deposit accounts originate in the area (Exhibit 35d), but C&S Chamblee draws only 2.8 percent from this ZIP code (Exhibit 35f). C&S Emory, on the other hand, draws 14 percent from this ZIP code area (Exhibit 35c). Moreover, the absolute number of such accounts in C&S Emory exceeds the number in C&S Park National. Thus there would appear to be competition between C&S Emory and C&S Park National for accounts in this area. Again, various offices of C&S National, Fulton National, First National, Trust Company, and National Bank of Georgia are major competitors for the accounts originating in this ZIP code area. Moreover, as Defendants' Exhibits 38 and 39 demonstrate, DeKalb County Bank and Northeast Commercial Bank are also competitors for accounts from this area.

This analysis could continue for each of the pair-wise comparisons presented in Defendants' Exhibit 40. However, I believe that it is clear that what Economic Report defines as markets are in reality mere descriptions of the areas in which many of the customers of selected banking offices reside. And, the pattern that emerges is neither surprising nor informative. Therefore, I do not believe that the Economic Report has presented any evidence whatsoever that any meaningful market has as one of its geographical boundaries any line drawn through any of the ZIP code areas discussed.

More importantly, the foregoing observations and Defendants' Exhibits 35 through 40, present a description of the process by which banks that draw customers from different areas within an essentially homogeneous community, are linked through other banks and the customers of those banks, in a single market.

The phenomenon referred to in Economic Report as "market overlap" is the phenomenon that establishes the connection, when it is recognized that a geographic market area may--and usually does--include more than two of the sellers located in the area. The phenomenon referred to in Economic Report as "spillover," may also, under some circumstances, assist in the establishment of the connection. Suppose the "spillover" customers of a given group of banks is relatively large in comparison to all their customers. Then those banks may be expected to respond to competitive measures of banks located in the area in which those customers reside. The banks in that area will respond to the other banks, if the actual or potential "spillover" customers are relatively numerous in comparison with all customers of the former banks. Thus, even if these areas represent in some sense separate markets, each will be influenced by developments in the other. Furthermore, the area encompassing both "markets" will be a relevant area in which to assess the competitive impact of changes in the structure of either.

I believe there is sufficient difference between the treatment in Economic Report of the phenomenon referred to there as "spillover" and my own treatment of that phenomenon, to warrant a special digression. I believe such a digression can serve to bring that difference into clear focus.

Economic Report seems to contend that a bank office in, say, downtown Atlanta, that has a customer with a DeKalb County ZIP code address, has a "spillover" customer. Economic Report asserts, without substantiation, that such a bank is of no competitive significance in the ZIP code area in which that customer resides.

In the language of my analytical framework, the same phenomenon would be described more precisely as a case in which either (1) the DeKalb resident has convenient access to banks in two markets; or (2) the market in which the DeKalb resident buys banking services includes downtown Atlanta. The question of which of these statements is to be used can only be answered by determining whether such a customer (1) resides in an area in which there are sufficient banking customers and banking offices, who deal primarily with each other, to constitute a market, or (2) resides in an area in which there are so few banking offices that most of the residents bank outside the area. In the former case, he chooses between markets. In the latter case, Atlanta is in the market in which he buys banking services.

In either case, the Atlanta bank is of competitive significance since it constitutes one of the options among which he can choose. Only if the customer is one of so few such customers that no banks consciously compete for their business could the Atlanta bank be regarded as of no competitive significance.

In conclusion, in treating the problem of delineating the markets in which the impact of the proposed C&S mergers would be felt, the Baxter & Co. report ignores banks that compete with C&S banks and the customers of those banks, dismisses Fulton and DeKalb Counties by assertion, and overlooks completely the connections between markets that can be established, in part, by the phenomena its author(s) refer to as "spillover" and "overlap". The result is that the report establishes no markets at all and no useful criteria for determining the boundaries of banking markets.

c. The Questionnaire

The results of the questionnaire survey directed by Baxter & Co. must be interpreted carefully if they are to provide useful evidence relative to the present litigation.

An example of the pitfalls is given by the interpretation of results presented on pages 95 and 96 of Economic Report. The survey results are interpreted to show that 27.2 percent of C&S main office customers consider banking near home an important factor. The report then assumes that the main office is near no one's home, and therefore that many customers do not actually bank at the office in which their accounts are lodged but at one of the other C&S offices. In fact, a study I conducted in 1969 (using 1967 population estimates of the Atlanta Regional Metropolitan Planning Commission) showed that about 40 percent of the population of the City of Atlanta resided within a square area extending 3 miles in each direction from Five Points (the principal intersection of downtown Atlanta). Therefore, the 27.2 percent may very well represent customers who do in fact bank near their homes.

Much of the survey is devoted to assessing the importance of convenience to bank customers. The results are interpreted by the author(s) of Economic Report as demonstrating that convenience is quite important. I do not for a moment doubt that banking customers would prefer to find it convenient to conduct their banking business rather than inconvenient. However, since (1) it is possible right now for most banking customers in most locations in Fulton and DeKalb Counties to choose a bank with branches, and (2) the Baxter and Co. report asserts that C&S will open de novo branches if the mergers are blocked, and (3) many of the results defy interpretation, it is not clear to me that these results of the survey offer any economic evidence in favor of the mergers.

On page 103, the author(s) report that 25 percent of the respondents found it important to maintain a C&S relationship and 40 percent found it important to bank at the nearest C&S bank. These results are mildly surprising since the questionnaires were sent only to people who are currently customers of C&S. I would have expected higher percentages.

The questionnaires were mailed to 17,334 personal checking account customers. Responses were received from less than one-fourth of these customers. Nevertheless, a sample of 4,000 should be quite adequate if those who respond are representative of the attitudes of all customers. If, however, the respondents represent principally those whose attitudes toward C&S are favorable, then the 25 percent and 40 percent results cited above would be very poor proxies for all C&S customers.

In the section of Economic Report dealing with the survey results and elsewhere, the author(s) suggest that independent banks are not viable in a metropolitan community. Much compelling evidence to the contrary is available. For example, in studying the effects of mergers on competition, Horvitz found:

> "When branching results in a de novo branch competing with a unit bank above minimum size (say, $5 million), the well-managed unit bank can hold its own. This is not to say that the unit bank is not hurt by entry of the branch, but the damage to the unit bank is done by loss of its monopoly position rather than by cost advantages of the branch." 5/

5/ Paul M. Horvitz, "Branch Banking, Mergers, and Competition." In Banking and Monetary Studies, U. S. Comptroller of the Currency, 1963, p. 315.

On the same subject Roland Robinson concluded:

> "... even in the areas of widespread branch banking, some unit banks have not only survived but have prospered. In other words, a well run unit bank can not only survive the competition of branch banks, it can fight them on their own grounds and win." 6/

In my own study in the area of banking markets and competition, I have come across no evidence that suggests that banks of the size of those involved in the proposed mergers can not succeed. Moreover, my interviews with the chief executive officers of several of the many independent banks which do now exist in the area revealed that they expect to survive and to compete effectively.

My assessment of the survey results can be summarized succinctly, as follows:

1. The survey questionnaires were mailed only to current C&S customers, thereby severely limiting the applicability of the results to the question of attitudes of all Atlanta area banking customers.

2. It is not possible to determine the extent of departure of the sample produced by the returned questionnaires from a random sample.

3. The structure of the questions asked was such that the results lend themselves to numerous plausible interpretations.

6/ Roland I. Robinson, "Unit Banking Evaluated," in Banking and Monetary Studies, U. S. Comptroller of the Currency, 1963, p. 2[illegible].

4. In general the arguments the author(s) base on the survey results appear to be arguments favoring de novo branch banking rather than branching by mergers.

3. Convenience and Needs

In discussing the point relative to markets, I pointed out that available evidence, as I read it, flatly rejects the SMSA as a relevant area in terms of the competitive impact of the proposed mergers. Moreover, even if it were the relevant area, there is no evidence that suggests the convenience and needs of customers would be better served if the mergers were consummated than they could be by some alternate approach--de novo branching, for example.

Economic Report also suggests that the banks proposing to merge now receive, and can in the future receive if the mergers are permitted, important services from C&S National. If the mergers are blocked, it is argued, the banks will lose these services. Thus, their customers would be inconvenienced.

However, my interviews with independent bankers revealed that most of the services referred to are available through correspondent relationships. Moreover, other large Atlanta banks are readily accessible in the areas of the proposed mergers so that those customers who require or prefer large bank services would have access to them from those sources. Finally, Economic Report asserts that de novo branches of C&S will be opened in these areas if the mergers are blocked.

Consequently, I would not predict any significant adverse effect on convenience and needs of customers as a result of the mergers being blocked.

4. Concentration of Banking in The SMSA

Again, since I do not consider the SMSA a relevant section of the country in which to assess the competitive implications of the proposed mergers, I see no significance in concentration ratios in the area.

It might be noted, however, that the fact that most SMSAs are relatively highly concentrated does not, in my judgment, lead logically to the conclusion that concentration must be good for SMSAs. Moreover, concentration ratios of the two largest banks do not confirm the view that the Atlanta SMSA is relatively unconcentrated.

5. Credit Allocation

I find the results of statistical studies on the implications of branching structure for the quality of credit allocation, mixed and somewhat ambiguous. Nonetheless, on purely economic grounds I believe that within fairly broad limits legislation that permits branch banks has much to commend it. However, I know of no evidence whatsoever that supports a view that branching by merger in an urban area in which branching de novo is permitted, is necessary to improve credit allocation.

6. Concentration Ratios

I agree that concentration ratios do not directly measure performance of a banking system. However, numerous studies have found a statistical relationship between various measures of concentration and measures of performance. The higher the concentration, the less satisfactory the performance. There are also studies that did not find such a relationship, at least between concentration and rates charged to business customers.

In terms of the present case, concentration ratios may be the best of available measures. I certainly cannot accept the contention in Economic Report that number of banking offices is a suitable measure. If that were the case, one could conclude that a single bank with 200 offices would represent "good" performance in Atlanta banking. This conclusion is incompatible with the traditional suspicion that monopoly generates "bad" performance.

The number of banks is also an imperfect measure, as the author(s) of Economic Report correctly point out. However, in a contradictory statement they argue that the Atlanta SMSA has an "adequate" number of competitive banking alternatives, and that these suggest "the presence of vigorous competition." (p. 52) However, to interpret the degree of competition between a given number of banks it is important to have some indication of the relative importance of the various banks. Concentration ratios are used precisely because they give a more refined measure of competition than one that is found by simply summing participants of widely disparate importance.

In the face of actual current concentration, the only plausible means of relieving that concentration are through the growth of existing small competitors or through entry by new competitors. This is far from suggesting "proliferation of banks" or "maximizing the number of banks," as Economic Report suggests. It simply suggests that to merge several of the potentially deconcentrating banks into the area's largest bank diminishes the possibility of developing more vigorous banking competition.

7. Economies of Scale

Many studies have been conducted in an effort to measure any scale economies that might be present in banking.

Meltzer, after reviewing many of these studies, concluded:

> "If there are important economies of scale in banking, they are hard to detect and to realize." 7/

Horvitz, in the paper cited in point 6, reports that:

> "Most studies of bank costs have found that there are substantial economies as banks increase in size from very small to moderate size, but that the average cost of a $5 million bank are not significantly higher than those of a $500 million bank."

Horvitz and others are in essential agreement that scale economies may be present for banks up to the $5 million size and that beyond that size no economies are realizable until the $500 million size class. He has also argued that four $15 million unit banks can be operated at a lower unit cost than a $60 million branch bank.

All the banks involved in the proposed mergers have $5 million or more in deposits, and since C&S National is now far beyond $500 million, the addition of the merged banks would be unlikely to generate significant scale economies, if indeed any exist. Therefore, it seems unlikely that scale economies, if any exist, have any economic relevance to the mergers that are the subject of this litigation.

I have treated point 8 to the extent that I feel my competence permits, in commenting on the earlier points. I do not feel that it is within my competence to assess the nature of present or past relationships between the various banks.

Point 9 has also been treated in the course of my earlier comments. I should like to turn now to a summary of my reactions to the Baxter & Co. paper.

7/ Allen H. Meltzer, "Major Issues in the Regulation of Financial Institutions," Journal of Political Economy, Supplement, August 1967.

As my earlier observations imply, I consider the sections dealing with banking markets the most important sections in terms of the economic implications of the proposed mergers. By failing to examine aggregated data for Fulton and DeKalb Counties, and by concentrating on areas from which selected pairs of C&S banks only, draw customers, I believe the study missed the opportunity to discover meaningful dimensions of Atlanta area banking markets.

For the reasons given above, I cannot criticize Economic Report's geographic delineation of markets, because it gives none. The remainder of the relevant sections of Economic Report treat "attitudes" of some C&S customers, the relative merits of branch versus unit banking, banking concentration in the Atlanta SMSA, and economies of scale.

The attitude survey, which was conducted by questionnaire, is of limited value because the questions do not elicit answers that lend themselves to clear interpretation, we do not know who responded, and the questions were asked of current C&S customers only. Branch banking versus unit banking is not the question involved in the litigation. The question deals with specific proposed mergers in specific places. Descriptions of banking in the SMSA are not relevant since the SMSA overstates the "section of the country" in which the economic consequences of the mergers would be felt. Economies of scale are not likely to be gained or lost as a consequence of the proposed mergers.

In conclusion, it is my judgment that Economic Report offers no economic support for the mergers and, moreover, fails to provide useful criteria for an assessment of the economic implications of those mergers.

MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF APPLICATION OF TRUST COMPANY OF GEORGIA TO MERGE WITH TRUST COMPANY OF GEORGIA BANK OF SANDY SPRINGS
AND PEACHTREE BANK AND TRUST COMPANY

This memorandum accompanies an application before the Board of Governors pursuant to the Bank Merger Act (12 U.S.C. § 1828(c) (1964)), by Trust Company of Georgia, Atlanta, Georgia, a State member bank of the Federal Reserve System, for the Board's prior approval of the merger of (a) Trust Company of Georgia Bank of Sandy Springs, and (b) Peachtree Bank and Trust Company, into Trust Company of Georgia under the charter and title of Trust Company of Georgia.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

Trust Company of Georgia, Atlanta, Georgia ("Applicant") with total deposits of $463 million, has applied, pursuant to the Bank Merger Act (12 U.S.C. § 1828(c) (1964)), for the Board's prior approval of the merger into that bank of Trust Company of Georgia Bank of Sandy Springs ("Sandy Springs") which has total deposits of $3.4 million and Peachtree Bank and Trust Company ("Peachtree"), which has total deposits of $14.4 million.[1] The banks would merge under the charter and name of Applicant which is a member of the Federal [1] Deposit figures are as of December 31, 1969.

COMPETITION

Applicant's central contention is that neither Sandy Springs nor Peachtree actually compete with Applicant now nor is there any likelihood they will be in competition in the future. First, both Sandy Springs and Peachtree are banks which were sponsored by Applicant and have, since beginning business, been closely affiliated with Applicant. Second, the enactment of the branch banking bill has created a vigorous competitive climate in the Atlanta SMSA in general, and in particular in the service areas of Sandy Springs and Peachtree where there presently exists a significant number of banking alternatives, and this number will in both instances be substartially increased when existing branch applications of other banks are approved. Third, the size of both banks really preclude either from being an effective competitor of Applicant, and although there is some overlap of their service areas, neither bank in any meaningful sense competes with Applicant.

A. Sponsored Affiliation Between Applicant and Sandy Springs and Peachtree. Applicant sponsored the organization of both Sandy Springs and Peachtree, because population and business in the northern most part of the SMSA was expanding rapidly, and consequently there was a serious need in that area for convenient banking service. Since Georgia law prohibited branching in this area, Applicant chose to sponsor the organization of affiliated banks in those areas now served by Sandy Springs and Peachtree.

The Federal Reserve Board has recognized the principle that a sponsor's acquisition of sponsored affiliate banks is not actually anticompetitive with respect to either existing or potential competition. See, e.g., American Bancorp., Inc., 1970, FED. RES. BULL. 391; Citizens Bancorporation, 1970 FED. RES. BULL. 81; Broward Bancshares, Inc., 1970 FED. RES. BULL. 84. The Board reasons that there is no real competition between the sponsored affiliated banks, and that there is, in that situation, no likelihood of disaffiliation. See City National Bank Corporation, 1970 FED. RES. BULL. 367, 369

(i) Peachtree - Peachtree, chartered in March of 1960, was organized primarily by directors, officers and customers of Applicant. Peachtree has been affiliated with Applicant since that time through common ownership and shareholders. Applicant has provided Peachtree with various officers and employees, including three chief executive officers, and Applicant has assisted Peachtree by periodically providing credit surveys, credit memorandum review and advice on large or unusual loans, audit services, accounting systems and automated bookkeeping services. Peachtree has always enjoyed a close relationship with Applicant, which has, since its inception consulted with Applicant on various matters of operations, policy and investments. Applicant has always been the sole local correspondent of Peachtree. At the same time, Applicant has always recognized the independent nature of Peachtree and has not managed or controlled Peachtree. There is no indication that the close relationship which exists between Applicant and Peachtree is likely to change in the foreseeable future, regardless of the Bank's action with respect to the present operation.

(ii) Sandy Springs - Sandy Springs was chartered in November of 1966 and began business in April of 1967. From its inception to the present time, there has always been a close relationship between Sandy Springs and Applicant, including a close similarity of names. The organization of Sandy Springs was guided by Applicant, and Sandy Springs was actually organized by several of the outside directors of Applicant who were and remain its principal stockholders. Applicant and Sandy Springs have been affiliated through common ownership and shareholders since the inception of Sandy Springs. Applicant has provided Sandy Springs with various officers and employees, including two chief executive officers and has offered credit review and advice, auditing and automated bookkeeping since it opened. As with Peachtree, Sandy Springs has always maintained a close relationship with Applicant and Sandy Springs has sought the advice of Applicant on matters of operation, policy and investments. Applicant is Sandy Springs' sole correspondent bank. Nevertheless, Applicant has always recognized the independent nature of Sandy Springs and does not manage nor control Sandy Springs.

From the outset the purpose of the organizers of both Sandy Springs and Peachtree was clear: To develop the substantial new banking market opening up in suburban Atlanta north of its city limits, so that when the Georgia branch banking law permitted, Applicant could apply to the supervisory authorities for permission for the two banks to merge into and become offices of Applicant. Thus, while neither bank has been managed or controlled by Applicant, both banks have benefitted from the sponsored affiliation with Applicant.

In view of the close relationship which has existed between Applicant and Sandy Springs and Peachtree, it may be reasonably concluded that neither present nor potential competition would be foreclosed by this merger of the application.

This application is, from the standpoint of competition, substantially identical to two merger applications approved by the Board on October 27, 1970. See Georgia Railroad Bank & Trust Company, Federal Reserve Board Press Release, October 27, 1970, (two opinions both not yet reported in the Federal Reserve Bulletin). Those two applications arose, as does Applicant's, from the change in the Georgia branch banking law.

The Georgia Railroad Bank & Trust Company, which controls about 49% of the deposits in Richmond County, Georgia, and maintains six offices in Augusta and in Richmond County, Georgia, sought approval to merge with one bank which had 1.5% of the deposits of Richmond County, Georgia, and another which had 2% of the deposits of Richmond County, Georgia. The Board approved both applications, noting that in both instances the small banks were sponsored affiliates of the large bank. The Board stated in both cases that the sponsored banks had been closely affiliated since their inception by common ownership and common shareholders, that the large bank had provided both sponsored banks with offices, employees and chief executive officers, that the sponsored banks had relied to a substantial extent on the large bank in their operations and that the large bank was the principal correspondent bank for the two small banks and assisted both of them with investments, advice on loan applications, handling of money supply, computer operations and solicited customers for the small banks' credit card program.

In the present case, Applicant's share of the relevant market, 15.34%, is substantially smaller than the Georgia Railroad Bank & Trust Company's 49% share of its relevant market. Moreover, Applicant's two sponsored affiliates have a much smaller share of their relevant market deposits than the two affiliates involved in the Georgia Railroad Bank & Trust Company merger. Sandy Springs has .11% of the market and Peachtree has .48% of the market, whereas in the Augusta situation, one of the sponsored affiliates had 1.5% of the market and the other had 2% of the market.

Under the ruling in the Georgia Railroad Bank & Trust Company case, neither potential nor actual competition would be foreclosed by Applicant's acquisition of Sandy Springs and Peachtree.

Major Georgia banks developed the concept of sponsored affiliation because market demands could not be adequately satisfied within the framework of existing branch banking laws.

Early in the nineteen sixties Atlanta banks realized that the rapidly expanding population in the Atlanta SMSA combined with population shifts to suburban areas required substantially increased banking services in those suburban areas.

Since 1927 Georgia enacted a series of statutes prohibiting the establishment of additional branch bank offices outside of the incorporated area where the main office or an existing branch of a bank was located. Furthermore, in 1956, bank holding companies were prohibited by Georgia law from acquiring more than 15% of the voting stock of more than one bank and this percentage was reduced in 1960 to 5%. Since 1964, there has been continuous and substantial efforts made by Georgia banks to liberalize the restrictive branch banking laws. Finally in 1970, a county-wide branch banking bill was enacted and this statute, which will become effective on January 1, 1970, will allow branching throughout Fulton and DeKalb counties, which comprise the heart of the Atlanta SMSA.

B. The Georgia Branch Banking Bill of 1970 Will Greatly Increase Competition in the Service Areas of Both Sandy Springs and Peachtree.

The enactment of the Georgia branch banking bill of 1970 means that in addition to plentiful banking alternatives presently afforded to the service areas of both Sandy Springs and Peachtree, those service areas will be flooded by branches of the major Atlanta banks.

(i) Sandy Springs - There are presently four competing bank ofrices within a three-mile radius of Sandy Springs. Three of these are branch offices of major Atlanta banks and one is a bank affiliated witn a major Atlanta bank. Furthermore, in addition to the existing four bank offices, there are presently pending eight applications for bank offices within a three-mile radius of Sandy Springs. Seven of these eight new bank offices would be branches or predominantly owned affiliates of major downtown Atlanta banks. This means that within a three-mile radius of Sandy Springs, there will be twelve offices competing to some degree with Sandy Springs.

(ii) Peachtree - In the Peachtree service area there are presently five bank offices within a four-mile radius. Four of

For some time we have encouraged all lending personnel to handle as many small time loans as possible on CAS, particularly those under $600. In most instances this is more economical for the customer and much less costly for the bank. In such cases where this is entirely unacceptable to the customer, we for several years have had a policy of assessing a $10 base charge plus interest on all time notes under $5,000 in an effort to partially offset our costs. During the first five months of this year we collected $312,530 in base charges systemwide, however, in cases where we waived the $10 base or used some other figure we missed an income opportunity of almost $150,000.

As the Bank Examiners have questioned our $10 base charge on small L&D notes, it becomes more important than ever that we use CAS wherever possible - as you will see.

Going ahead we will in certain instances operate under the Georgia Industrial Loan Act which will necessitate a flat charge instead of a base plus interest. Loans renewed for six months or less cannot be charged a second base charge, and new loans made to a customer less than fifteen days after a loan pays out will be exempt from the charge. Thus the use of realistic final maturity dates at the inception of the loan is most important. A complete schedule of new charges and rate charts, effective immediately, are attached.

We are trying to devise a system of billing small 30-, 60-, 90-day notes through CAS so the customer will get a bill for principal and charges just prior to maturity date, without involving monthly statements or minimum payments - but this will take a few minutes.

The C&S "Best Rate" was increased from 4 3/4% to 5% as of March 28, 1972.

This increase is indicative of a trend in interest rates which I think we all need to be aware of. The downward pressure on rates appears to have eased and in our judgment rates have bottomed out and will trend upward throughout the remainder of the year. Our best guess is that the C&S "Best Rate" will reach 5½% within the next six months.

One of the best ways to maximize our yield during a period of rising interest rates is to keep time loans on relatively short maturities. At the same time in negotating a fixed rate for term loans we need to keep these trends in mind and aim for a rate higher than if it were floating with the "Best Rate".

We continue to have plenty of money to lend and our rate structure is competitive. Let's be sure that we continue to take into consideration our over-all relationship with the customer before arriving at a rate which is fair both to the customer and to the bank.

Some caution is advisable in the area of real estate loans and commitments where we are lending on an interim basis without the protection of a firm take-out. If we feel that short term rates are firming up there is no reason to believe that the long term rates will get any softer. We should encourage all customers who are attempting to arrange long term financing to do so as soon as possible.

We will try to keep you informed of changes in rates and trends as they develop.

Re: C&S Best Rate

As of Thursday, February 17, 1972, the C&S Best Rate is 4 3/4%. Other rates remain as stated in the commercial loan rate chart dated 1/17/72.

Residential construction loan rates have been lowered by our Real Estate Department from 8½% to 8% plus a 1% fee. Their rate to prime volume builders where we get all permanent loans is 7½% plus 1%, so let's be guided accordingly.

Many of our customers continue to be extremely rate conscious, and we do not want to lose good loans or customers because of rate. Please give me a call if you have any questions.

Re: Commercial Loan Rate Chart

Enclosed are copies of the revised commercial loan rate chart which we discussed at our meeting at C-S-ta. Copies should be distributed to all lending officers in your office.

I think Gordon Trulock's memorandum, which is enclosed, is self-explanatory. We have money to lend, but we want good loans with a proper return. At the present time we're shooting for a minimum yield on short term loans to our best commercial customers of 7¼%. We feel we can be competitive in the Atlata money market with this target; however, we certainly don't want to miss opportunities to make good loans by not giving a little when our relationship with a customer justifies it.

GUIDE LINES FOR SMALL BUSINESS TERM LOANS

These standards are written as guidelines only to help in understanding what are considered to be good lending practice at C&S. Exceptions to any of these guidelines are expected from time to time, but it also follows that they would be recognized as exceptions which should be explained in the memo to file and should be off set by other strengths in the credit.

(1) Maturities - monthly repayment should be required with a maximum maturity of sixty months. Normally, maturities on loans to finance equipment and rolling stock should not exceed 36 months. Quarterly payments are acceptable if it really best suits the source of repayment.

(2) Collateral - because of the extended maturity (more than one year) loans should be secured to the extent possible, preferably fully secured. An alternate method of repayment should be explored in case earnings do not materialize as expected to repay the loan. Look for collateral outside the business (stocks, real estate, etc. of principals.)

(3) Down payment requirement - if we are relying on the collateral, the depreciated value of the collateral should always exceed the outstanding principal balance of the loan. This is particularly true in rolling stock and equipment financing so the actual minimum cash payment requirement would range from 10% to 25% of the cash purchase price of the equipment or rolling stock.

(4) Endorsement of principals - In closely held Corporations, the principals should always be required to endorse to ensure their continuing interest in the company.

(5) New business venture - one-half of the capital requirements should be in the form of equity. In other words, we would not want to lend more than the owners have in the business. There will be many exceptions to this guideline, however, other factors such as personal assets of owners or outstanding chance of success coupled with good management expertise and proven individual performance and character should off set the deficiency in equity capital.

(6) Cash flow adequacy - net income plus non-cash charges should equal 1½ times the total term debt payment requirement. In this, term debt to others should be considered as well as our loans. If the loan is in an individual name then the individual's net income less expenses should be 1½ times the debt service requirement.

(7) Thorough Credit Investigation - On all company names, current D&B reports should be required and on each individual (including principals in closely held Corporations), credit bureau reports, or equivalent information in each case, plus other credit background information, such as bank reports on previous experience and/or direct verification with creditors, where necessary.

(8) Financial statements - financial statements should be obtained which are adequate to support the credit requested. As a rule of thumb, statements should be obtained on any borrower whose debt exceeds $2,500 (whether it is secured or unsecured), and as a general rule in term lending, statements should be reviewed as far back as the maturity of the loan is in the future; that is, in considering a three year loan, three previous years statements should be analyzed to denote trends, progress, etc.

(9) Statement follow-up - Statements should be required annually on all loans that exceed $25,000 initially. Actually, quarterly statements are preferred on term loans because of the additional risk generally inherent with this type loan. Quarterly statements are required on any loans rated three or four and on any loans that exceed $15,000 if any part of the loan is unsecured or for working capital purposes.

(10) Key-Man Insurance - In small one or two man operations, life insurance pledged to the Bank should be required on loans if over $25,000.

(11) Documentation - documentation should be completed before proceeds of the loan are disbursed.

(12) Required information for analysis - this information should always be obtained before decision is made and before proceeds are disbursed.

(13) Term Loan Agreement - A Term Loan Agreement should be considered in any case where the loan is (1) for working capital purposes, or (2) where any portion is unsecured or (3) cash flow does not exceed debt retirement by 1½ times, and the amount financed is over $25,000 (coupled with any one of the first three conditions). Specific requirements and controls in the Term Loan Agreement should be considered such as restrictions on officers' salaries, dividends, control of purchase and sale of fixed assets, etc., rather than just have the customer sign another form.

(14) Information in the file - A memorandum should always be placed in file (the reverse of the Commercial Discount Sheet - Business may be used) stating the purpose of the loan, the source of repayment, the collateral and value, brief financial analysis including an analysis of the cash flow adequacy, collateral benefits and any exceptions to normal policy such as those indicated in these guidelines.

(15) Ask for assistance - lending personnel are expected to know when they need assistance and ask for it, whether in the area of policy guidelines, documentation, analysis, or otherwise.

The discount rate increased from 4-3/4% to 5% effective July 19th. The commercial loan rate chart distributed to you last week carried the old rate of 4-3/4%.

Let's also remember that this rate chart reflects minimum rates, and there really should not be a reason for handling any loan below this minimum.

We're still having too many loans put on at an interest rate below the rates suggested by the new rate chart. Remember, the rate chart indicates the minimum we should be charging.

Let's take a real hard look at what we're charging and get the rates up where they belong.

Many thanks.

Re: Committee Items

It is your responsibility to ensure that on a weekly basis all new loans, lines, or commitments of $25,000 or more are reported to the Credit Committee. This should also include any borrower whose total related debt to the bank amounts to or exceeds $25,000. The Credit Department analysts will continue to screen daily loan Reports for loans that should be reported; however, this is to serve only as a double-check, and it should not be necessary for them to remind you to report your loans and commitments each week.

When reporting a loan or commitment, the following points must be covered in order for the minutes to be complete:

1) Name of the borrower (brief description of business)
2) Amount of loan or commitment
3) Purpose
4) Collateral and/or endorsers
5) Terms
6) Source of repayment
7) Rate
8) Total related debt

If possible, the credit file copy of your memorandum or new loan report covering your loan or commitment should be brought to the Committee meeting. Your memorandum will enable the management associate serving as secretary for the Committee to be much more accurate in his preparation of the minutes.

I have been quite disappointed recently in the lack of preparation and participation that is evident in our credit meetings. At a time when problem loans and losses are on the increase in practically every branch, we cannot afford a lackadaisical approach to credit review and administration. I challenge you to do a better job of credit administration, not only within your own office, but also in your contribution to your fellow managers and the bank as a whole. I would certainly welcome any ideas or suggestions that you may have, which would make our Committee meetings more effective.

Many thanks.

Following our discussion of interest rates at our meeting at C-S-ta, the Commercial Loan Rate Chart has been completed, reflecting a 6% prime rate. The new rate chart is attached.

In general, the suggested rates are those which we feel are proper for the various categories. For financially sound, local companies on short term seasonal loans, we should strive for a yield of 9%, taking into consideration earnings from balances and fees on other bank services used.

In some cases, the value of the relationship and the relatively nominal risk will warrant a rate lower than those listed. On the other hand, where the full service relationship does not exist, and the risk is greater, you will want to charge a rate somewhat higher than those listed.

As you know, in addition to several prime rate changes recently, a few banks have made minor adjustments in consumer rates and some have even reduced savings and certificate rates.

At this time we plan no overall adjustments in either our over-the-counter or sales finance rate structure, as the cost of money is a relatively small part of the overall cost of doing business in this area. In addition we made few if any adjustments on the up side when money was tight, primarily because we were already at the legal ceilings. In some cases where wholesale rates are tied to the prime or where the competitive situation dictates it we may make some adjustments, but they will be relatively few. If you have a specific situation you would like to discuss, please feel free to call Keith Weikle or me.

We have no objection to your looking at new quality dealers who generate desirable retail and whose wholesale requirements are reasonable, provided it means a profitable overall relationship for the bank and where the dealer is in your normal trade area. We certainly want to expand our over-the-counter business on a quality basis, not only as to dollar volume but so that we can serve more people.

Residential Construction Loan Rates

With the recent reductions in the prime rate, some of you with Residential Builder customers have experienced some pressure from your builders regarding constructions loan rates.

The Real Estate Department has recently lowered their residential construction rate for corporate builders to 9½% + 1% fee. For individual builders the rate remains the same as before but the fee has been increased to approximate the yield to corporate customers. The residential construction rate to individuals is now 9% + 1½% fee.

There could be exceptions to these guidelines and if so, they should be cleared through Branch Supervision.

In the case of Commercial Construction Loans please check with the Real Estate Department for the going rate.

Effective today we have reduced our minimum rate to prime commercial customers to 7-1/2%.

Even though we have reduced our prime rate, we have seen no real change in either the supply of or the demand for money. Therefore we expect this reduction in the prime to affect only our prime rate customers and those loans whose rates are tied to the prime.

Other commercial loan rates are just now beginning to reach a level commensurate with today's money market. An overall yield of 10% on short term loans to local businesses should still be our minimum goal.

Certainly we can anticipate a lot of conversation about and requests for reductions in rates we are charging. Our suggestion is that all rates be carefully reviewed and where a reduction is warranted, then do it graciously. On the other hand we still have quite a few rates which still do not measure up and need to be increased.

The reduction in the prime rate should have no effect on our objective of eliminating our evergreen borrowers in L&D and reducing our exposure by tightening our controls over rated loans.

RE: Drive-In Banking Hours

Banking hours will probably always need to be flexible with variations depending upon the community and the area in which the bank is located. We have been experimenting for some time at several offices with keeping our drive-in windows open until four o'clock. Those offices that have tried this procedure report good results, particularly on heavy days when it reduces the amount of inside traffic to a considerable degree.

Let's plan to start keeping our drive-in windows open until four o'clock at every location just as quickly as this can be arranged. If this presents any special problems to any of you, please do talk to us and we will work with you to come up with a solution.

Many thanks.

MEMORANDUM TO: Bank Managers, National Bank

With the present push to improve our liquidity and increase loan yields, some confusion has arisen regarding allowable interest ceilings under the present Georgia law. Briefly, here is a summary of what we can and cannot charge:

I. Individuals, Partnerships, Proprietorships, Associations

A. Loans Less Than $100,000

The maximum legal rate on time and demand loans less than $100,000 is 8% simple unless loan is secured by real estate when we can charge a maximum of 9%. All time and demand loans under $5,000 are subject to a $10 base charge. The maximum legal rate on installment loans is 6% add-on.

B. Loans $100,000 And Over

No legal maximum. We can charge any rate which borrower agrees to in writing. This applies to time, demand and installment loans.

II. Corporations

A. Loans Under $2,500

The maximum legal rate on time and demand loans is 8% and on term loans, 6% add-on. Time and demand loans are subject to a $10 base charge.

B. Loans Over $2,500

No legal maximum. We can charge any rate agreed upon by authorized officials of the corporation. This applies to time, demand and term loans, however, we should have a signed corporate resolution as proof of this agreement.

Generally, on local companies, we are shooting for a minimum yield on short-term funds employed of 2% over the current prime. Term loans carry more risk because of their nature and length of repayment and should therefore carry a higher yield. A current list of suggested yields for term loans is attached.

Please do let me know if I may be of help or if you have any questions.

Enclosed is a memorandum and revised rate chart from Gordon Trulock. As always, the chart reflects the minimum rate which should be charged. All of us are aware of the 8% ceiling on loans to individuals, partnerships, etc. of less than $100,000 and to corporations of less than $2,500. This means we need to continue our restrictions on new loans and put even more emphasis on converting individual L&D's to monthly or quarterly repayment with an add-on rate. Loans to local corporations should carry a rate of at least 10%.

All loan requests should be reviewed thoroughly and any which are not absolutely essential to normal operations of a customer should be discouraged or declined.

Please give me a call if you have any questions.

The recent prime rate increase has necessitated a speed-up of plans we had for L&D loans July 1, 1969, in line with Truth in Lending, Regulation Z.

Obviously, with the prime at 8½%, we should discourage L&D borrowings (at 8%) for the average borrower. We should attempt to place these loans on the quarterly reduction (6 add on) rate chart, or CAS Instant Money.

There may still be instances where a time note will still be to the benefit of the borrower. In these cases, and effective immediately, there will be interest at 8% charged, and a $10.00 service charge. Life insurance, if placed on the note, will be an additional 1.25%. However, 8% is the maximum rate that can be charged an individual as interest and shown on the note.

The same rates will apply to all renewals, also.

With the increase in the prime rate to 7.5% and the maximum rate to individuals at 8%, we really find ourselves in a squeeze. Loan emphasis should be on liquidity and developing deposit relationships which increase our yield.

Rates on all L & D loans except prime customers should be adjusted to 8%. On loans to corporations where the amount borrowed exceeds $2,500, we can exceed 8% by agreement. This should be done where the risk and cost of servicing justify it, and we do not have profitable balances which increase our yield. Of course, any loans to companies not related to short-term or seasonal needs should be placed on an installment basis at an add-on rate.

Permanent or semi-permanent investment-type loans to individuals should be discouraged. Loans to individuals should be placed on monthly or quarterly installments with an add-on rate; except true short-term loans which will definitely be repaid in one lump sum within twelve months. L & D loans to individuals already on the books which are scheduled to be renewed with reductions should be placed on an installment basis..

The rate on real estate development and construction loans is now 9% plus 1% fee. This rate can be charged only to corporations by agreement since even under the new law, the maximum rate on real estate loans to individuals is 9% including the fee. This, in effect,means that we will be unable to extend construction loans to builders operating in their individual names or through partnerships. We are still not making speculative real estate and development loans.

Attached is a term loan suggested yield sheet, together with the converter to convert simple interest to add-on, and a memo from Jim Green discussing term rates in general.

All of you have a January 7, 1969 minimum rate chart. We should be firm in our relation with the customer and in all cases get the proper rate. Remember, of course, that the minimum rate chart is exactly what it says, and that is a minumum. Other factors may well cause you to charge a rate above the minimum. Our monthly yield should begin to move up.

Bill Mathis and Bruce Cowie are working on a quarterly add-on rate chart so that we can transfer a lot of our small 90-day simple interest L&D loans to a quarterly add-on basis. Until you receive their chart, you can get the proper rate from Bruce or Harold Malcolm. There is no reason why we should not begin to switch some of the loans that are currently coming due to the Installment Loan Department on this basis.

None of you should place any new construction loans on your books at a rate below 8% with a 1% fee. Many of you have corporate builders that you should be charging 8½% plus the 1%.

In general, the policy on rates is to take a firm stand and increase our yield.

John D. McIntyre
Vice President

William L. Mathis
Vice President

P.S. As of 1-30-69 L&D states that no Atlanta branches have increased their demand loan interest rates during January, 1969. Pershing Point increased theirs on December 31, and Peachtree Baker and Stewart Lakewood have each increased one rate. This should be done immediately.

MEMORANDUM TO: All Lending Officers

SUBJECT: Suggested Yields on Term Loans

Here is a revised chart of suggested rates for term loans. The smallest category of loans is expressed as an add-on rate and the others as simple interest equivalents. A chart showing the conversion of a simple interest rate to its add-on equivalent is also attached.

As you know, the maximum allowable rate to individuals is 8% simple interest or 6% add-on. We will need to charge our rates to individuals on an add-on basis. Loans to corporations in excess of $2,500.00 are not governed by this regulation provided the higher rate is agreed upon by the borrower. However, where we exceed these limits lending to a corporation, we should obtain a copy of the Board Resolution authorizing the payment of the particular rate.

Although these rates are higher than historical experience, they are not high in relation to today's conditions. Over the past three years, rates to the nation's prime borrowers have increased by 55%. Our term loan charges have increased at a considerably lower rate. Although we do have our banking competitors, our competition is often the commercial finance companies and our rates are below this group.

Certainly, we all have good customers who, because of balances on deposit or possibly other reasons, will warrant a lower rate. However, we should always be certain that the lower rate is in fact substantiated by these other factors. On the other hand, a higher rate is also warranted where the borrower does not offer other benefits or where the risk is above the normal standards.

MEMORANDUM TO: Bank Managers, National Bank Presidents, Affiliates

RE: Current Loan Policy

Here is a little resume of the points we talked about in our Finance Committee meetings this week regarding tight money. The bank's liquidity level is critically low. Until further notice, we must be even more restrictive in our lending activities. This will include further implementation of the following measures:

1. Loan restrictions to include
   (a) the extension of no new lines or commitments
   (b) no increases in present lines or customer's present borrowing level
   (c) no investment or speculative loans
   (d) no portfolio real estate loans
   (e) no land development loans
   (f) no loan participations to be purchased from affiliates or correspondent associates which would be contrary to this new policy
   (g) construction loan guidelines to residential builders should be cut back to approximately one-half of their previous levels

2. We should concentrate on putting all loans on a reasonable liquidation schedule. Special emphasis should be placed on all number 3 and number 4 rated loans by doing whatever is necessary to see that they are paid or substantially improved.

3. Increased attention should be given to increasing our yield on all loans. There is continued upward pressure on the present prime of 7½%. More emphasis needs to be put on placing individual L&D's on a quarterly installment basis with a 6-seasonal add-on rate. The minimum rate to most local corporations should be 9%. All personal loans of $500 and under should be made as instant money advances on CAS.

We all need to recognize the seriousness of our present loan position and work together until it eases. At the same time, we must take care of our customer's legitimate credit needs, charging a fair rate relative to the prime. Remember, we're paying approximately 9% for the funds.

Until further notice, I would like to have a brief memorandum covering any loan requests of $50,000 or more that you either decline or temporarily discourage.

Until our position improves, we will be watching new loans and rates very closely.

Many thanks.

RE: Demand Loans

Our review of demand loans has pointed out how easy it is to lose control of the loan when it does not have a definite maturity date. Very few valid reasons for putting a loan on a demand basis were evident. In addition, the vast majority of the loans we reviewed lacked definite repayment schedules and rates were below the minimums in todays money market.

Based on the results of our review, I believe we need to accomplish the following in the area of demand loans:

1) Place present demand loans, excluding officer loans, revolving accounts receivable lines, and GHEAC loans; on a time basis with a definite maturity date. This also involves putting all new loans on a time basis with a definite maturity instead of demand.

2) Establish a definite understanding with the borrower regarding some established plan of repayment within a reasonable time.

3) Attempt to increase our rate in order to give us a yield which is commensurate with todays money market. This is especially true on those loans that will be repaid out of income which we can place on a monthly or quarterly installment basis at an add-on rate.

Please let me know if you have any questions. Many thanks.

Re: C&S Savings Bonds and Certificates

Amounts less than $100,000 - Non-negotiable, multiple maturity

Our "V" and "SS" Bonds are designed for the individual saver or investor. These rates are 5%, 5½%, and 5 3/4%, guaranteed for ten years. It is our desire to maintain these rates for individuals only. Please do not issue these bonds or offer these rates to corporations, savings and loans associations, or for public funds.

Amounts of less than $100,000 - Single maturity

Our certificates of deposit rates on "S" certificates to corporations, individuals, etc. regardless of the amount will be the rate presently being paid by Money Management for deposits of $100,000 or more.

These rates currently are as follows - but could change from day to day:

30 to 59 days	3½%
60 to 89 days	3 5/8%
90 to 179 days	3 7/8%
180 to 365 days	4½%

Interest should be figured manually on all certificates having a rate of less than 5%.

Amounts of $100,000 or more - Negotiable

Please continue to issue all CD's of $100,000 and over on the negotiable form. Please do not use the "V", "S", or "SS" forms for these amounts.

Emergency Withdrawals to be Acceptable:

Emergency provision for redeeming all our certificates and bonds is now available. A general operating guide for handling these is at the printers. This should add a real sales feature to our 5-percenter account as well as the bonds.

Please refer any unusual situations to the Executive Vice Presidents.

Interoffice Memorandum

Other banks have withdrawn from the market their 5½% and 5 3/4% certificates. This makes our rates most attractive. We are interested in investment-type funds in our territory and not "hot money" from all over the country - So, let's get some now, investment time deposits.

We've recently checked into our procedures for collecting interest on commercial and residential construction loans. We find a number of discrepancies between accepted practice in different departments and branches. In an effort to be more consistent, we want to adopt the following procedures.

Commercial Construction Loans

It is standard procedure in our Real Estate Department not to accrue interest until maturity on commercial construction loans. Rather, interest is adjusted monthly and collected monthly, similar to our procedure on demand loans. This facilitates the use of floating rates, which they use almost exclusively, and which we want to adopt. Our reasoning here is that most of these loans represent rather substantial principal amounts, with maturities in excess of one year, resulting in extremely large interest accumulations if accrued.

On all new commercial construction loans, whether or not the rate floats, we want to bill our customer as of the first of each month, due and payable by the tenth, for interest calculated on the previous month's outstandings.

The current best rate on commercial construction loans is 3½% above the C&S best short term commercial rate.

Residential Construction Loans

These loans normally represent smaller principal amounts and maturities of less than one year. The major risk here is when the house is not sold by the maturity of the loan and accrued interest begins to diminish our customer's equity in the house. We want to continue our procedure of accruing interest until maturity on residential construction loans. However, should the loan remain on our books past maturity, we want to collect all accrued interest at maturity and past due interest monthly thereafter. This will enable us to maintain our customer's equity in the house and protect our margin.

We would like to institute these procedures immediately on all new loans if they are not already being used. Please call me if you have any questions.

Many thanks.

The prime rate increased to 6% effective July 8, 1971. We need to adjust our rates for those customers who are tied directly to the prime, if we haven't already done so.

Many thanks.

MEMORANDUM TO: Presidents, Affiliates

The Comptrollers Department is trying to prepare share of the market graphs for your banks. They propose to issue a semi-annual report showing the share of the market in checking accounts, savings accounts, certificates-U. S. Government deposits, state, county and minicipal deposits, deposits of banks and then graph total demand and total time deposits for the last five years.

It is very difficult to determine the market area for your banks. If you have any ideas or thoughts, please jot them down on the back of this memo and return them to us.

We would also like to know who each of you compete with for the market. It might be that we can total bank figures for all of the banks you feel are your competition and consider that the market.

Please give this some immediate thought and let us have your ideas.

Re: Report on New Loans

As part of our program to automate commercial loans, we have combined the E Report and loan memorandum that were previously required to be completed on commercial loans. A single and we hope more simplified new report has been devised and titled "Report on New Loans", a copy of which is attached. This new form (#15-3045) can now be ordered directly from the supply room.

Going ahead the Report on New Loans will be used in lieu of both the E Report and the credit memorandum. Its purpose will be to capture information on specific loans for your own credit files and on larger loans to relay that information to Branch Supervision and the Central Credit Files. Certainly your own credit files should contain information on every loan covering the purpose of the loan, source and terms of repayment. This new form may be used for that purpose.

A Report on New Loans is required to be completed on all new loans in your office of $5,000 and over where total related direct or indirect debt amounts to or exceeds $20,000. A copy should be sent to Branch Supervision and to any other interested parties within the bank. It is not necessary to send a copy to Central Credit Files, since the Branch Supervision copy will be sent there for permanent filing.

I'd be interested in your comments once you've had an opportunity to use the new form. If you have any questions, please give me a call on 2447. Many thanks.

OPERATING BULLETIN

TOPIC: Service Charge Exemptions

PAGE: 1 of 1 DATE: May 27, 1971

REPLACES COG 4.20 DATED JUNE 24, 1963; SAME SECTION: TOPIC: SERVICE CHARGES - EXEMPTIONS

This bulletin announces the extension of a service charge exemption to customers over 65 in Atlanta, establishes procedures for handling exemptions and reviews the policy. (Effective June 1, 1971)

Unless there is an agreement covering a local situation we should permit service charge exemptions (excepting those based on a balance requirement) only for the following:

United States Government
State, County and Municipal Accounts
Court Funds
Churches and charitable institutions
C&S Directors and Officers, and their spouses
C&S Employees and their spouses
Employees of the Federal Reserve Bank
Persons over 65 years of age

Some offices have indicated a tendency to exempt priests and ministers, civic clubs, scout troops, and others. It is not the bank's policy to do so. Individual offices of course have the authority to exempt specific accounts.

Please adhere to the "Over 65" policy. No exceptions are intended for persons who retire earlier than 65. If one party on a joint account qualifies for exemption the account should be exempt.

There is no intent to exempt persons "Over 65" from charges for fully personalized checks. Every effort should be made to sell checks to these customers.

The procedure to follow in exempting a new account is to record the exemption on the new account slip under special instructions, for example "SERVICE CHARGE EXEMPT, OVER 65." To exempt an existing account, just send a memo to the Bookkeeping Department giving the account title, number and reason for the exemption.

Each branch will be provided with a quarterly listing of all exempt accounts for review. Prompt and thorough review is essential to control this program and to prevent abuses.

Please give us a call if there are any questions.

The Citizens & Southern National Bank
Atlanta, Georgia

Dear Mr. Hall:

I am enclosing a series of questions prepared for the purpose of eliciting additional information with respect to the Citizens and Southern Holding Company's ownership (and possible control) of some 21 banks in the State of Georgia in which a 5 per cent interest in the voting stock is held by the Holding Company.

You should submit replies to the enclosed questions in duplicate to me for transmittal to the Board of Governors. Your responses will be reviewed as quickly as possible so that a determination can be made as to the extent of control exercised by the Citizens and Southern Holding Company in regard to its "5 per cent" banks.

Very truly yours,

R. M. Stephenson

Additional Information Requested
Regarding Possible Control by C & S
of Certain Banks in the State of Georgia

Q. 1. Section 2(d) of the Bank Holding Company Act, as amended by Act of July 1, 1966, defines "subsidiary" as "(1) . . .; or (2) any company the election of a majority of whose directors is controlled in any manner by such bank holding company." The merger application recently filed with the Comptroller of the Currency involving C & S National Bank, Savannah, and Commercial and Savings Bank of Augusta, both in Georgia, contains numerous direct assertions of control of Commercial and Savings Bank by the C & S system.

(a) Specify precisely the nature of control referred to in the merger application and the exact method by which control is exercised.

(b) With respect to the 21 banks in which C & S acknowledges ownership of 5 per cent (10 per cent in the case of American National Bank of Brunswick, Georgia) of the voting stock (hereinafter referred to as the "21 banks"), to what extent does C & S consider that it "controls" these banks, or any of them, in a manner similar to that admitted with respect to Commercial and Savings Bank of Augusta?

Q. 2. (a) With respect to each of the "21 banks", has C & S controlled in any manner the election of a majority of the banks' directors? (This question is to be answered in the context of the definition of "subsidiary" in Section 2(d) of the Act, as amended.)

(b) Does C & S own or control less than 5 per cent of the voting stock of any other bank? Does C & S exercise control of the nature asserted in the Commercial and Savings Bank merger application in any bank in which C & S either owns or controls no voting stock or less than 5 per cent of the voting stock?

Q. 3. The data earlier provided by C & S identifies Hilson & Co. as "nominee" with respect to stock held in numerous banks.

(a) Who are the beneficial owners of stock of the "21 banks" held by Hilson & Co. as nominee? What relation, if any, have any of the identified beneficial owners with C & S interests, personal or corporate?

(b) Identify the nature (partnership, corporation, etc.) of Hilson & Co.; if partnership, its composition; if corporation, its ownership.

(c) Who selected and designated Hilson & Co. as nominee? Identify any other nominee similarly selected and designated, or any other nominee or nominees acting on behalf of or in the interest of C & S.

(d) Who is authorized to vote, and who in fact has voted, the stock held by Wilson & Co. as nominee? If Wilson & Co. votes some or all of the stock held by it as nominee, to whose direction or mandate is it subject? (If Wilson & Co. is free to exercise its own judgment and discretion in this regard, so state.)

Q. 4. With respect to the stock acquired by C & S in the "21 banks", did any other interest related to C & S, whether individual, partnership, or corporate, acquire stock in the same bank or banks at or near the same time? If so, identify the acquiring party or interest, its relationship to C & S, and the amount of stock so acquired.

Q. 5. Data earlier submitted by C & S contain a narrative explanation of the status held by "agents" acquiring stock in the "21 banks". In our judgment, this narrative is at best ambiguous. In order to further clarify this question please advise:

(a) Who selected the agents who have acquired stock in one or more of the "21 banks"?

(b) Are the terms of the agency set forth in writing? If so, please furnish an example of such instructions.

(c) Specifically, for whom is the agent acting?

(d) What is the usual length of time of such agency?

(e) Who designates any entity to whom sales of the stock held by the agent are to be made? Is the agent free to alter any directive given with respect to prospective purchasers of the stocks held by him?

(f) What is the usual practice with respect to payout of the loans made to agents for the purpose of purchasing stocks? From what source are funds derived for payout of the loans?

(g) What is the usual practice with respect to payment of interest on such loans? By whom is such interest paid?

(h) Who receives dividends on stock held by agents?

(i) What relationship generally do designated agents have to C & S?

Q. 6. (a) Kindly identify the relationship, if any, to C & S Holding Company and/or to C & S National Bank of (1) American Southern Insurance Company, (2) Shares Purchase Company, (3) Mills Bee Lane Foundation, Inc., (4) Mills B. Lane Memorial Fund, (5) M. L. S. Corp., and (6) Bibb Manufacturing Co.

(b) Identify the nature of the activity engaged in by each.

Q. 7. Sec. 13-207, Ga. Code Ann., which treats with bank holding companies, defines "company" as including "the shareholders and those persons who otherwise own the 'company'." Inasmuch as C & S National Bank appears to be a bank holding company under the Georgia statute, to your knowledge do any stockholders of C & S National Bank own or control stock in one or more of the "21 banks"? If so, have State authorities expressed a view as to the appropriateness of such holdings under State law? Has bank counsel expressed any opinion on this question?

Q. 8. (a) Identify the amount, if any, of stock of any of the "21 banks" held in fiduciary capacity by C & S National Bank. In this answer, separately identify any stock held for any stock purchase plan, pension fund, or p fit sharing plan administered by the C & S National Bank for C & S employees. If any stock purchase plan, pension fund, or profit sharing plan is administered for C & S employees by any other trustee, please identify and indicate any stock of the "21 banks" held in such trust account.

(b) With respect to any stock in the "21 banks" which may be shown as held in a fiduciary capacity by C & S National Bank, advise as to whether such stock was received in kind or subsequently purchased.

Q. 9. With respect to officers and employees of any of the "21 banks" to what extent do they participate in fringe benefits plans available to C & S employees? For the purpose of this question "fringe benefits" include pension fund, profit sharing fund plan, and group hospitalizatic..

Q. 10. It is our understanding that blanket bond coverage afforded C & S National Bank is similarly available to one or more of the "21 banks".

(a) If this is correct, please explain the exact circumstances under which such blanket bond coverage is extended to the "21 banks", including information as to payment of premium and any proration thereof.

(b) Is any rate paid by the "21 banks" more favorable because of association with C & S than would be the case if such association did not exist?

Q. 11. (a) To your knowledge to what extent, if any, are officers and/or employees of one or more of the "21 banks" shifted between and among such banks?

(b) Similarly, to what extent do such transfers of officers and/or employees occur between or among the "21 banks" and/or the C & S system?

(c) At whose direction do such transfers take place?

(d) In an earlier communication, you made known the fact that C & S "lost control" of two banks, one in Cartersville and one in Pelham, Georgia. At the time or immediately prior to such "loss of control" were there in the employ of either bank any former employees or officers of C & S? If so, did some or all such officers or employees return to the C & S system employ or transfer to other banks in which C & S held an interest?

Q. 12. (a) To what extent are the "21 banks" advertised to be members of the C & S system? The answer should include advertising by both the holding company and the "21 banks" individually. Please furnish a representative sampling of any advertisements which indicate or imply the existence of a relationship between C & S and any or all of the "21 banks".

(b) What distinctions are made in C & S advertising as between subsidiary banks and the "21 banks"?

(c) If the "21 banks" are in fact advertised as members of the C & S system, how is the cost of such advertising pro-rated among the subsidiary and non-subsidiary banks?

Q. 13. The information previously furnished indicates that the Citizens and Southern Holding Company has extended loans to individuals secured by stock of some of the "21 banks". Please list all such loans extended during the past 10 years and furnish a history of pay-outs on such loans not presently outstanding.

Q. 14 List services provided by (1) Citizens and Southern Holding Company and (2)Citizens and Southern National Bank, to the following four categories of banks and indicate cost of each of the four groups:

(a) subsidiary banks; (b) the "21 banks"; (c) those banks, if any, identified in response to question 2(b); (d) non-related correspondent banks.

Q. 15. With reference to those of the "21 banks" that were acquired by C & S as going concerns, please furnish:

(a) A list of directors of such banks elected at the annual meeting prior to acquisition of such bank by C & S.

(b) A list of directors of each bank as elected at the first annual meeting following acquisition by C & S. (Indicate relationship of new directors to the C & S system.)

(c) Please furnish copies of proxy solicitation materials used by management in each of the "21 banks" in connection with the most recent annual shareholders meeting.

(d) With respect to the most recent annual meeting of each of the "21 banks" please state (1) the number of shares outstanding, (2) the number of shares voted in person, (3) the number of shares voted by proxy.

Q. 16. (a) With respect to the "21 banks", was there at any time after C & S's acquisition of 5 per cent of the voting stock more than one proposed slate of directors? If so, by whom was each slate proposed? In any such cases, which slate was elected?

(b) In any cases where there was but one proposed slate of directors, who selected this slate? How and by whom were the selectors chosen, and what relationship did the selecting parties bear to the C & S interests?

Regarding Possible Control by C & S
of Certain Banks in the State of Georgia

Q. 1. Section 2(d) of the Bank Holding Company Act, as amended by Act of July 1, 1966, defines "subsidiary" as "(1) . . .; or (2) any company the election of a majority of whose directors is controlled in any manner by such bank holding company." The merger application recently filed with the Comptroller of the Currency involving C & S National Bank, Savannah, and Commercial and Savings Bank of Augusta, both in Georgia, contains numerous direct assertions of control of Commercial and Savings Bank by the C & S system.

(a) Specify precisely the nature of control referred to in the merger application and the exact method by which control is exercised.

(b) With respect to the 21 banks in which C & S acknowledges ownership of 5 per cent (10 per cent in the case of American National Bank of Brunswick, Georgia) of the voting stock (hereinafter referred to as the "21 banks"), to what extent does C & S consider that it "controls" these banks, or any of them, in a manner similar to that admitted with respect to Commercial and Savings Bank of Augusta?

A. (a) There is no "direct assertion of control" in the application. Rather, as you have quoted it in your report, the relationship is better described thusly:

". . . the common goals and policies, as well as the shared resources (both human and technical) of both banks must be considered in determining whether there is competition between them . . . Commercial Bank is run, and for its entire history as a commercial bank has been run, by management trained and hired by C&S Bank. This management is responsive to the broad policy decisions made by C&S Bank. All its personnel enjoy C&S Bank employee benefits. Commercial Bank would not exist, and could not continue in its present form were it not for the aid and assistance available from C&S Bank."

Commercial and Savings is thus a separate bank with its own management and board of directors. It is an outlet for the C&S philosophy of service in banking, but is not "controlled" by the C&S National Bank or Holding Company.

(b) Some of the "21 banks in which C&S acknowledges ownership of 5 per cent" enjoy the same type of relationship that Commercial & Savings does, and some of them don't. None have a closer relationship.

Q. 2. (a) With respect to each of the "21 banks", has C & S controlled in any manner the election of a majority of the banks' directors? (This question is to be answered in the context of the definition of "subsidiary" in Section 2(d) of the Act, as amended.)

(b) Does C & S own or control less than 5 per cent of the voting stock of any other bank? Does C & S exercise control of the nature asserted in the Commercial and Savings Bank merger application in any bank in which C & S either owns or controls no voting stock or less than 5 per cent of the voting stock?

A. (a) C&S has never controlled nor attempted to control in any manner the election of a majority of the directors of any of the "21 banks" -- nor the election of any single director.

(b) C&S owns less than 5% of the Coffee County Bank of Douglas, Ga. "Common goals and policies" do not exist in this case.

Q. 3. The data earlier provided by C & S identifies Hilson & Co. as "nominee" with respect to stock held in numerous banks.

(a) Who are the beneficial owners of stock of the "21 banks" held by Hilson & Co. as nominee? What relation, if any, have any of the identified beneficial owners with C & S interests, personal or corporate?

(b) Identify the nature (partnership, corporation, etc.) of Hilson & Co.; if partnership, its composition; if corporation, its ownership.

(c) Who selected and designated Hilson & Co. as nominee? Identify any other nominee similarly selected and designated, or any other nominee or nominees acting on behalf of or in the interest of C & S.

(d) Who is authorized to vote, and who in fact has voted, the stock held by Hilson & Co. as nominee? If Hilson & Co. votes some or all of the stock held by it as nominee, to whose direction or mandate is it subject? (If Hilson & Co. is free to exercise its own judgment and discretion in this regard, so state.)

A. (a) See answer to Question 8, which lists fiduciary capacity ownership, all of which is carried in the nominee designation, Hilson &

(b) Hilson & Co. is a nominee for trusts of the C&S National Bank.

(c) The fact that the stock was acquired by various fiduciary accounts resulted in its being in the name of Hilson & Co. The decision to purchase the stock would have been made by the principals in some cases and the bank's Trust Department in others.

(d) C&S National Bank Trust Department or the principal is authorized to vote.

Q. 4. With respect to the stock acquired by C & S in the "21 banks", did any other interest related to C & S, whether individual, partnership, or corporate, acquire stock in the same bank or banks at or near the same time? If so, identify the acquiring party or interest, its relationship to C & S, and the amount of stock so acquired.

A. Most of the stock owned by C&S related interests was bought at or about the same time the C&S Holding Company acquired its 5% interest.

Q. 5. Data earlier submitted by C & S contain a narrative explanation of the status held by "agents" acquiring stock in the "21 banks". In our judgment, this narrative is at best ambiguous. In order to further clarify this question please advise:

(a) Who selected the agents who have acquired stock in one or more of the "21 banks"?

(b) Are the terms of the agency set forth in writing? If so, please furnish an example of such instructions.

(c) Specifically, for whom is the agent acting?

(d) What is the usual length of time of such agency?

(e) Who designates any entity to whom sales of the stock held by the agent are to be made? Is the agent free to alter any directive given with respect to prospective purchasers of the stocks held by him?

(f) What is the usual practice with respect to payout of the loans made to agents for the purpose of purchasing stocks? From what source are funds derived for payout of the loans?

(g) What is the usual practice with respect to payment of interest on such loans? By whom is such interest paid?

(h) Who receives dividends on stock held by agents?

(i) What relationship generally do designated agents have to C & S?

A. (a) The persons who have acted as agents were selected by the C&S Holding Co.

(b) There is nothing in writing about these "agencies." The individuals have been asked to act as such until the stock can be placed in hands of others by the management of the bank involved.

(c) An agent acts for no one. The designation simply distinguishes the person from his individual capacity.

(d) The stock is usually placed within a year; however, where the stock is slow to move it may take longer.

(e) Management of the bank involved attempts to find persons (hopefully in the community served by the bank) who are interested in purchasing the stock. The agent sells the stock to these persons. The agent could disregard the requests of management of the bank involved.

(f) Loans are paid as the stock is sold..

(g) Interest is paid by the agents and paid usually on a semi-annual basis.

(h) Dividends are received by the agents.

(i) Agents have always been C&S National Bank officers.

Q. 6. (a) Kindly identify the relationship, if any, to C & S Holding Company and/or to C & S National Bank of (1) American Southern Insurance Company, (2) Shares Purchase Company, (3) Mills Bee Lane Foundation, Inc., (4) Mills B. Lane Memorial Fund, (5) H. L. S. Corp., and (6) Bibb Manufacturing Co.

(b) Identify the nature of the activity engaged in by each.

A. (1) American Southern Insurance is an insurance company taken over in 1954 by the C&S Holding Co. for a bad debt. All the stock has been sold except 5%.

(2) Shares Purchase Company is a stock purchase plan for C&S officers and employees.

(3) Mills Bee Lane Foundation, Inc. is a group of seven members of the Lane family. It has no relation to or with the C&S National Bank.

(4) Mills B. Lane Memorial Fund

Same as Mills Bee Lane Foundation, Inc.

(5) H. L. S. Corp. is an investment vehicle for our director, Hal Smith and his family

(6) Bibb Manufacturing Co. is a textile manufacturer located in Macon. They are customers of ours and Mr. Mills B. Lane, Jr. is on their Board.

Q. 7. Sec. 13-707, Ga. Code Ann., which treats with bank holding companies, defines "company" as including "the shareholders and those persons who otherwise con the 'company'." Inasmuch as C & S National Bank appears to be a bank holding company under the Georgia statute; to your knowledge do any stockholders of C & S National Bank own or control stock in one or more of the "21 banks"? If so, have State authorities expressed a view as to the appropriateness of such holdings under State law? Has bank counsel expressed any opinion on this question?

A. We have attempted to cross check the stockholder lists of the "21 banks" with the C&S National Bank and attached are lists of common stockholders.

State authorities have never had occasion to express a view as to the appropriateness of such holdings since the state law does not prohibit such holdings.

Bank counsel's opinion is attached.

RE: Georgia Bank Holding Company Act

Dear Mr. Hall:

The Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System has asked questions of you. You referred Question No. 7 to me with the request that I write you with respect to that question.

This question is based on the premise that under Section 13-207(b) of the Georgia Code, the Citizens and Southern National Bank (the "Bank"), is a bank holding company. First, we would say that the Bank is not a bank holding company under Georgia law.

In order properly to understand the present Section 13-207(b) of the Georgia Code, we must go back to the 1956 Act (Ga. Laws 1956, pps. 309-312).

Section 2(a) of the 1956 Act (page 310) defined a "bank" as including national banks doing business in the State of Georgia. (Ga. Laws 1956, p. 310).

Section 2(b) of the 1956 Act defined "company" as "any bank . . .association or similar organized group of persons whether incorporated or not, and includes the shareholders and those persons who otherwise own the 'company' and including any foreign corporation or other organization or association doing business in Georgia . . . ." (Ga. Laws 1956, p. 310)

Thus, a national bank, being a bank, but not a foreign corporation or foreign association doing business in Georgia is specifically included in the definition of "company."

However, since there were self-styled "independent" banks in Georgia which were owned or controlled either by families, individuals or joint venturers, when the state banking holding company provisions were amended in 1960 and in order to eliminate the conclusion, which the Board has reached, that ownership by shareholders of stock in other banks would result in making a bank a bank holding company, the word "bank" was significantly omitted in the definition of "company" in Georgia Code Section 13-207(b) which defined in subsection (b) the term "company" as used in Section 13-207 and as used in Section 13-201.1(e) as "any corporation . . . association or similar organized group of persons, whether incorporated or not, and includes the shareholders and those persons who otherwise own the 'company' and including any foreign corporation or other organization or association doing business in Georgia."

The omission of the word "bank" in the definition of "company" is why this section definitely shows no intent to include as a bank holding company a bank. Also, it shows an intent to regard the word "association" as not including a national banking association for it would not be a "foreign association doing business in Georgia."

The term "bank" as defined in Section 13-201 of the Georgia Code (as amended by the 1960 Georgia Laws) expressly provides that it shall not include national banking associations but does provide that Section 13-207 restricting the acquisition of assets or shares of stock of banks will apply to national banking associations. It goes on to say, in effect, that national banks and state banks shall have the same rights. It is obvious from the omission of the word "bank" from the definition of "company" in Section 13-207(b) that the word "bank" where used in Section 13-207(a) in so far as the ownership or acquisition of shares or assets of a bank was alone meant to include shares or assets of national banks. Thus, a bank holding company could not acquire shares or assets of a national bank where this is proscribed by Section 13-207(a). From this it is apparent that the term "company," either as used in Section 13-207(b) of the Georgia Code or as used in Section 13-201.1(e) cannot mean a bank or a national bank.

There is still another reason why there would be no violation of state law.

In order to be a bank holding company, the company must, under Georgia Code Section 13-201.1(e), "directly or indirectly own, control, or hold with power to vote" more than 5% of the voting shares of each of two or more banks. This definition of "bank holding company" is substantially identical excepting for the percentages, with the definition of bank holding company in Section 2(c) of the 1956 Act. (Ga. Laws 1956, p. 310)

In order to be a bank holding company, the company must "directly or indirectly own, control, or hold with power to vote" a definite percentage of voting stock of each of two or more banks. The Bank clearly does not own directly with power to vote stock owned by its shareholders.

Does it own, control, or hold with power to vote indirectly such stock? Section 2(d) of the 1956 Act (Ga. Laws 1956, p. 310) says "a company will be construed to own, control or hold, with power to vote, stock indirectly whenever any . . .shareholder of such company . . .or any member of the immediate family of such . . .shareholder . . .shall own, control, or hold with power to vote, such stock." Significantly, this definition was stricken from the 1960 Act and was not repeated in any form whatsoever. This clearly indicates that ownership by a shareholder of a bank holding company will not for the purposes of the provisions of Georgia Code Section 13-207 or Georgia Code Section 13-201.1(c) be regarded as indirect ownership with power to vote the stock.

From this you can see both that national banks cannot be bank holding companies under law nor will ownership of stock by shareholders of national banks be indirect ownership attributable to a national bank.

So far as we know, there has been no formal ruling by the Superintendent of Banks with respect to what is said in this letter or as to the propriety of ownership by shareholders of stock of one bank in two or more banks where that ownership exceeded 5% of the stock in the other banks. Certain it is that the Superintendent of Banks has with knowledge of ownership acquiesced in such ownership since the 1960 Act.

Accordingly, we would say that the seventh question asked by the Board would be immaterial because it is predicated upon the erroneous assumption that a national bank may be a bank holding company and that stock owned by shareholders of a national bank may be considered as indirectly owned or controlled by that bank.

Sincerely,

Henry J. Miller

Q. 8. (a) Identify the amount, if any, of stock of any of the "21 banks" held in fiduciary capacity by C & S National Bank. In this answer, separately identify any stock held for any stock purchase plan, pension fund, or profit sharing plan administered by the C & S National Bank for C & S employees. If any stock purchase plan, pension fund, or profit sharing plan is administered for C & S employees by any other trustee, please identify and indicate any stock of the "21 banks" held in such trust account.

(b) With respect to any stock in the "21 banks" which may be shown as held in a fiduciary capacity by C & S National Bank, advise as to whether such stock was received in kind or subsequently purchased.

Q. 9. With respect to officers and employees of any of the "21 banks" to what extent do they participate in fringe benefits plans available to C & S employees? For the purpose of this question "fringe benefits" include pension fund, profit sharing fund plan, and group hospitalization.

A. We offer to make all of the fringe benefits that are available to C&S employees available to employees of the "21 banks." Most of the banks have accepted or are in the process of accepting these offers. This is an important part of the program of making C&S personnel available to these "21 banks" since these benefits are very important to our (C&S) personnel.

Q. 10. It is our understanding that blanket bond coverage afforded C & S National Bank is similarly available to one or more of the "21 banks"

(a) If this is correct, please explain the exact circumstances under which such blanket bond coverage is extended to the "21 banks", including information as to payment of premium and any proration thereof.

(b) Is any rate paid by the "21 banks" more favorable because of association with C & S than would be the case if such association did not exist?

A. (a) Blanket bond coverage is not "extended" to the "21 banks." Rather we were able to get an insurance company to cover most of the "21 banks" as a group, thereby affording them greater coverage at lower premiums. Some could not be included because of their loss experience.

(b) Because of the audit coverage and other "common goals and policies" the insuring company was able to give better rates than otherwise; however, this could be done by any group under similar circumstances. In fact, we are now trying to generate similar coverage for the correspondent banks for whom we perform an audit service and of whose stock we own none.

Q. 11. (a) To your knowledge to what extent, if any, are officers and/or employees of one or more of the "21 banks" shifted between and among such banks?

(b) Similarly, to what extent do such transfers of officers and/or employees occur between or among the "21 banks" and/or the C & S system?

(c) At whose direction do such transfers take place?

(d) In an earlier communication, you made known the fact that C & S "lost control" of two banks, one in Cartersville and one in Pelham, Georgia. At the time or immediately prior to such "loss of control" were there in the employ of either bank any former employees or officers of C & S? If so, did some or all such officers or employees return to the C & S system employ or transfer to other banks in which C & S held an interest?

A. (a) There is practically no shifting of personnel between just the "21 banks."

(b) Almost all new officers in the "21 banks" have been C&S trained and there is some transferring of personnel between these "21 banks" and C&S system banks; however, there is less than between C&S system banks themselves.

(c) Transfers generally are instituted at the request of the bank from whom the person is transferred unless a promotion is involved.

(d) At both Cartersville and Pelham, former C&S officers were in charge of the banks when we decided to part company. At Cartersville, the officer chose to stay, and at Pelham the officer asked to come back to the C&S as well as his assistant. No employees were involved in either instance.

Q. 12. (a) To what extent are the "21 banks" advertised to be members of the C & S system? The answer should include advertising by both the holding company and the "21 banks" individually. Please furnish a representative sampling of any advertisements which indicate or imply the existence of a relationship between C & S and any or all of the "21 banks".

(b) What distinctions are made in C & S advertising as between subsidiary banks and the "21 banks"?

(c) If the "21 banks" are in fact advertised as members of the C & S system, how is the cost of such advertising pro-rated among the subsidiary and non-subsidiary banks?

A. (a), (b) and (c) The "21 banks" are not advertised as being members of the C&S system since they are not. Each of them is a correspondent associate and some few so designate themselves in some of their signs.

Q. 13. The information previously furnished indicates that the Citizens and Southern Holding Company has extended loans to individuals secured by stock of some of the "91 banks". Please list all such loans extended during the past 10 years and furnish a history of pay-outs on such loans not presently outstanding.

15. With reference to those of the "21 banks" that were acquired by C & S as going concerns, please furnish:

(a) A list of directors of such banks elected at the annual meeting prior to acquisition of such bank by C & S.

(b) A list of directors of each bank as elected at the first annual meeting following acquisition by C & S. (Indicate relationship of new directors to the C & S system.)

(c) Please furnish copies of proxy solicitation materials used by management in each of the "21 banks" in connection with the most recent annual shareholders meeting.

(d) With respect to the most recent annual meeting of each of the "21 banks" please state (1) the number of shares outstanding, (2) the number of shares voted in person, (3) the number of shares voted by proxy.

See attached information.

Q. 16. (a) With respect to the "21 banks", was there at any time after C & S's acquisition of 5 per cent of the voting stock more than one proposed slate of directors? If so, by whom was each slate proposed? In any such case, which slate was elected?

(b) In any cases where there was but one proposed slate of directors, who selected that slate? How and by whom were the selectors chosen, and what relationship, did the selecting parties bear to the C & S interests?

A. (a) There has never been more than one proposed slate of directors since C&S acquisition of 5% in any of the "21 banks."

(b) Slates of directors have been selected by either management and organizers in the case of de novo banks or by following the same slate as in case of banks in existence when our 5% interest was acquired. We have always suggested a C&S director to work with and help the bank and to act as liaison with C&S.

Dear Bob:

Jim Smith called me the other day and said that you needed additional information on some of the questions that I answered for you on January 16.

Here is the additional information.

I have added the answer to question 3 d., I have enclosed the list of common stockholders which is asked for in question 7, and I have given you the dates on which the various stocks were purchased in a fiduciary capacity as listed in answer to question 8.

Sincerely,

Joseph A. Hall, III

Q. 3. The data earlier provided by C & S identifies Hilson & Co. as "nominee" with respect to stock held in numerous banks.

(a) Who are the beneficial owners of stock of the "21 banks" held by Hilson & Co. as nominee? What relation, if any, have any of the identified beneficial owners with C & S interests, personal or corporate?

(b) Identify the nature (partnership, corporation, etc.) of Hilson & Co.; if partnership, its composition; if corporation, its ownership.

(c) Who selected and designated Hilson & Co. as nominee? Identify any other nominee similarly selected and designated, or any other nominee or nominees acting on behalf of or in the interest of C & S.

(d) Who is authorized to vote, and who in fact has voted, the stock held by Hilson & Co. as nominee? If Hilson & Co. votes some or all of the stock held by it as nominee, to whose direction or mandate is it subject? (If Hilson & Co. is free to exercise its own judgment and discretion in this regard, so state.)

A. (a) See answer to Question 8, which lists fiduciary capacity ownership, all of which is carried in the nominee designation, Hilson &

(b) Hilson & Co. is a nominee for trusts of the C&S National Bank

(c) The fact that the stock was acquired by various fiduciary accounts resulted in its being in the name of Hilson & Co. The decision to purchase the stock would have been made by the principals in some cases and the bank's Trust Department in others.

(d) C&S National Bank Trust Department or the principal is authorized to vote.

BOARD OF GOVERNORS
OF THE
FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM
WASHINGTON, D. C. 20551

ADDRESS OFFICIAL CORRESPONDENCE TO THE BOARD

March 22, 1968.

Mr. Mills B. Lane, Jr., President,
The Citizens and Southern National Bank,
Marietta at Broad,
Atlanta, Georgia. 30302

Dear Mr. Lane:

This is in regard to the Board's current inquiry, under the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956, as amended, into the legality of existing relationships between and among C & S Holding Company, its officers, directors, and related interests, and banks in which C & S has acquired a stock interest.

Analysis of C & S' response to inquiries made of it by the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta with respect to these relationships does not permit a conclusion with respect to the question of whether such relationships are in all respects permissible under the Bank Holding Company Act, due in part to the fact that, in our judgment, the information provided was not completely responsive to the questions asked. It appears to us questionable whether further written communication would be fruitful in eliciting the information believed necessary to make a determination with respect to the aforestated inquiry. While we could at this time refer the matter to the Department of Justice for any investigatory or related action believed appropriate, because of the possibility that the full scope and intent of our questions have not been fully realized, we are reluctant to transmit the matter to the Department of Justice without further effort on our part to elicit all relevant facts, and to permit reasonable opportunity for voluntary termination of any unlawful relationships that may thereby be disclosed.

To that end, it is proposed that a meeting be held in the Board's offices during the week of April 22, 1968, if convenient to you, for the purpose of discussing all of the circumstances leading to the acquisition by the holding company of its various stock interests; the circumstances giving rise to near simultaneous acquisition of stock in the same institutions by persons and organizations closely related to the holding company; the true status of and relationship to the holding company of the "agents" found to be involved in several of these stock acquisitions, and the dispositions made of the bank stocks held by such persons; the manner by which at least some of the institutions in which C & S has an interest have arrived at "goals and policies" common to those espoused by the C & S System; and, in general, the relationship of a "correspondent associate" to the C & S System, including the method by which such relationship is created and perpetuated. In order that the advantages inherent in the type of "question and answer" conference proposed may be attained, we propose to have the conference stenographically reported, and a verbatim transcript thereof prepared, a copy of which can, of course, be furnished to you.

Accordingly, if agreeable to you, we ask that you, Mr. Joseph A. Hall and Mr. Howard S. Starks of the C & S organization, and Mr. [illegible] J. Fortuna, President of the Citizens and Southern National Bank of Sa[illegible] Springs, who, we understand, has also served in the past in the capacity of "agent", be present at the Board's offices on Monday, April 22, 1963, at 10:00 A.M. You are free, of course, to have any other individuals of your choosing present at the conference. We would appreciate being advised in advance of the conference of the names and positions of persons who will be present. In order to expedite the ultimate determination of this matter, it is suggested that you bring with you such records and other documents as you anticipate may be necessary to permit and facilitate a full and accurate response to any questions on the above-outlined subjects.

Any questions, comments, or suggestions which you may have regarding this matter may be addressed to Mr. Stephenson or Mr. Smith at the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta.

Very truly yours,

Robert P. Forrestal

Robert P. Forrestal,
Assistant Secretary.

June 17, 1968

ATLANTA

Mr. James R. Smith, Counsel
Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta
Atlanta, Georgia

Dear Mr. Smith:

This letter reduces to writing our understanding of the results of our discussions this morning whereat were present Mr. O'Connell, Mr. Lane, Mr. Hall, you and I.

(1) With respect to The Citizens and Southern Community Development Corporation, this is a matter into which the Board desires to take a further look.

(2) With respect to the salvage and liquidation proposal, the Citizens and Southern Holding Company (the "Holding Company") will organize a subsidiary which will operate by a contribution annually of 1% of outstandings of all term loans to small businesses held by The Citizens and Southern National Bank of Georgia ("National") and by all subsidiary banks of the Holding Company. This Salvage and Liquidation Corporation will then purchase from National and the subsidiary banks of the Holding Company such term loan paper, when that paper shall be classified as loss by regulatory authorities and will take over the salvage and collection. In addition, standards of doubtful loans creditwise will be established so that loans, where loss is estimated to occur, although not classified as "loss" loans, may also be transferred to the corporation for liquidation and salvage.

(3) Acquisition and ownership by profit sharing trustees of stock in banks in which the Citizens and Southern Holding Company has a 5% interest. As outlined in our letter to you dated May 7, 1968, the only stock of a five percenter which would be acquired hereafter by the trustees would be in Fund C, would be stock of the employer five percenter, and would be purchased only at the direction or request of a participating employee of the respective employer (see § 10.4(a) with respect to accumulated contributions of the employer and § 10.4(b) with respect to employer contributions during the plan year). Requests to purchase under § 10.4(a) must be made by September 1 of the year prior to purchase and requests to purchase under § 10.4(b) must be made by December 1 of the year prior to purchase. No purchase would be made until after application to the Board during September or December of the year was made for authority to purchase employer five percenter stock. Stock would not be purchased unless both stock were available for purchase and also there was prior approval under § 3(a) of the Bank Holding Company Act. No purchases would be made in contemplation of approval. Should the employee participant of the five percenter desire to transfer his funds out of Fund C into another fund, then the trustees would sell on the open market, if any, or if none then to those suggested as interested by the President and Directors of the five percenter.

The only five percenter stock owned by the trustees would be that which ultimately would go to employee members upon retirement plus that acquired prior to July 1, 1966.

(4) Future acquisition of five percenters. If at the request of persons in a community to organize a new bank or of management of an existing bank, the Holding Company deemed it expedient to invest in ownership of 5% of a bank's stock, it would make such purchase. It would usually furnish a President for the five percenter, acceptable to the five percenter. Also, it would furnish one or two directors or advisory directors acceptable to the five percenter. It would extend its profit sharing and pension plan, other employee benefits and group insurance coverages to the new five percenter and its employees.

~~As is now in process placement of other stock in market;~~ The new President of the five percenter could purchase stock for ~~future employees~~ and the five percenter ~~and others~~. Sales will not be made to National Holding Company, subsidiaries of either or trusts for the benefit of stockholders or employees of any of these except as may be authorized by law. If the new President should have to borrow money, he would borrow from other than National Holding Company or subsidiaries of either. ~~and will be handled the same as outlined with Joe Hall.~~

(5) Personal ownership of stock by Mills Lane and Joe Hall of stock in five percenters which was bought from the C & S Profit Sharing Plan described in Joe Hall's letter of June 12, 1968, will be handled as you advise.

(6) Regulation L. ~~Under state law the Boards of Directors shall fill all vacancies until the next annual meeting (January 1969).~~ All officers of National who are officers of five-percenter ~~state~~ banks in Tucker, Stone Mountain and North DeKalb and of Citizens State Bank of Augusta will not stand for re-election at the next annual meeting, but may serve as advisory directors thereafter. ~~All officers of National, who now are directors of the five-percenter national banks in Chamblee and Sandy Springs, will resign to avoid any future questions arising as to violations of Regulation L, but may serve as advisory directors on the Boards of these banks.~~

Youmans has resigned from the Board of Directors of the five percenter in Forest Park and has been elected an advisory director.

Sincerely,

Henry J. Miller

Urban Investment Corporation

C & S representatives were advised that the matter of their proposal was the subject of current study by the Board and that under those circumstances we believed nothing to be gained by a discussion of the same at this meeting. They were assured that the Board's letter, the substance of which was transmitted by Mr. Stephenson, was transmitted in the context of the newspaper article announcing a proposed corporation. Letter was intended to put C & S on notice in advance of corporation formation as to prior position of Board in a similar case involving a proposal for bank holding company acquisition of a mortgage company. Mr. Lane indicated he understood the purpose and intent in writing the letter and that C & S would await word from the Board on its corporate activity.

C & S Proposal - re liquidation of loans classified "loss" in each subsidiary bank

C & S proposes that C & S National and each subsidiary bank pay to C & S Holding Company 1 per cent of the outstanding balance of all term loans made by each bank, and thereafter, a continuing annual 1 per cent contribution on the unpaid balance of any outstanding loans. This sum, denominated a pooled reserve, would be in the nature of an insurance reserve against bad debts and would apparently operate in the same manner as the characteristic reserve for bad debts. We registered a question with regard to C & S's proposal, under § 4(a)(2) of the Act, pursuant to which C & S Holding Company would itself receive the 1 per cent contribution and thereafter liquidate loans denominated by it as "loss". C & S proposes to make such determination as distinguished from that which might be made by a bank supervisory authority and, after a time, C & S hopes that each of the participating banks would "learn" when to transfer a loan to C & S Holding Company as "loss". We expressed uncertainty as to whether the proposed activity constituted "furnishing services to or performing services for" subsidiary banks as contemplated by § 4(a). Rather, we expressed the view that the proposed activity would be of the nature contemplated by the language of § 4(c)(1)(C) or (D) of the Act. C & S representatives immediately agreed to abandon the Holding Company's role in its proposal and agreed to form a separate subsidiary company to perform the liquidation functions, thus bringing the activity more squarely within § 4(c)(1)(D). They concluded with an expression of desire to expand this function to the C & S 5% banks as soon as an appropriate methodology could be worked out.

C & S - 5% Banks

Our discussion treated principally with C & S's proposal to use its Profit Sharing Plan as a vehicle for acquiring stock in 5% banks for the employees of those banks. In brief, C & S proposes to submit one application per 5% bank per year, wherein Board approval would be sought for the acquisition of a specified percentage of the bank's outstanding stock. The proposal contemplates that each employee of a 5% bank will be given a year-end opportunity to designate investment of his contributed funds and those contributed by the bank for the purchase of the employer-bank stock. In September of each year, an employee is given the opportunity to change previously designated investment plans. C & S hopes to combine the September-December designations into a single application seeking approval of acquisition of the aggregate amount of bank shares designated. Thus, in a given year, C & S may file as many as twenty or more applications, as few as one, or perhaps no application will be filed. C & S was told that each application will be viewed in the light of the standards set forth in section 3 of the Act; that, unless otherwise ordered by the Board, consummation of each acquisition approved will be subject to the usual 30-90 days' time conditions; and that the staff would cooperate with C & S in an effort to permit utilization by C & S of an abbreviated version of the section 3 application form.

Regarding previous practices by C & S reflecting an apparent control over shares of bank stocks beyond and in excess of the 5 per cent direct investment of which we have knowledge, it is our understanding that C & S concedes that certain actions above and beyond the acquisition of 5 per cent of the banks' stock constitutes ownership or control by C & S, and that, accordingly, C & S has agreed to the following limitations upon such acquisition or control action:

(1) C & S will no longer select or utilize individuals as "agents" or "nominees" for the purpose of acquiring shares in excess of the 5 per cent owned by C & S;.

(2) neither C & S National Bank nor System affiliated banks will any longer make loans to officers of 5% banks for the purpose of purchasing stock of such banks. Such loans will be made from nonaffiliated banks, and stock purchased with the proceeds of such loans will not be pledged, directly or indirectly, to C & S Holding Company, C & S National Bank, or affiliated banks;

(3) C & S Profit Sharing Plan will acquire stock in the 5% banks only after receiving prior Board approval for such acquisitions;

(4) Mills Lane will sell stock acquired from the Pension Plan in the DeKalb Bank, Warner Robins Bank, and any other bank the stock of which was acquired by the Pension Plan subsequent to July 1, 1966, and then transferred to Mills Lane. Similar divestment action will be taken by any other individual who is an officer, director, or trustee, etc., of C & S Holding Company or Pension Plan to whom bank stocks acquired by the Pension Plan subsequent to July 1, 1966, have been transferred;

(5) C & S representatives have agreed that, with respect to 5 per cent investments in banks, neither C & S nor the Profit Sharing Plan will utilize the services of a broker, dealer, etc., to acquire or retain for C & S's account blocks of stock above the 5 per cent owned by C & S. It is understood that the Profit Sharing Plan will go into the market for such shares as may be designated for purchase by employees of the 5% banks, and that if sufficient shares are not available, the designating employees will be so notified and will be requested to make other investment designations for the funds contributed by them to the Profit Sharing Plan.

Mr. Miller has been asked to submit a written memorandum of understanding of our June 11 meeting, which will be reviewed by the Reserve Bank's counsel, Mr. James R. Smith, and any points of contest resolved between Mr. Miller and Mr. Smith.

The only commitment to action made by Board counsel was to transmit to C & S as soon as practicable advice as to any Board action taken with respect to the activities of C & S subsidiary, Urban Development Corporation, Inc.

The new President of the five percenter could purchase stock for himself. Sales will not be made to National, Holding Company, subsidiaries of either or trusts for the benefit of stockholders or employees of any of these except as may be authorized by law. If the new President should have to borrow money, he would borrow from persons or institutions other than National, Holding Company or subsidiaries of either. Other stock that may be available for sale would be handled through an independent stock broker.

(5) Personal ownership of stock by Mills Lane and Joe Hall of stock in five percenters which was bought from the C & S Profit Sharing Plan described in Joe Hall's letter of June 12, 1968, will be handled as you advise.

(6) Regulation L. All officers of National who are officers of five percenter banks in Chamblee, Sandy Springs, Tucker, Stone Mountain and North DeKalb and of Citizens State Bank of Augusta will resign to avoid any future questions arising as to violations of Regulation L, but may serve as advisory directors on the Boards of these banks.

Youmans has resigned from the Board of Directors of the five percenter in Forest Park and has been elected an advisory director

PROCEEDINGS

MR. O'CONNELL: If I may, then, for the record, I am Thomas J. O'Connell, Deputy General Counsel for the Board of Governors.

We have identified for the record the other individu... present here this morning.

May I briefly state at the outset the purpose for this meeting.

As we are all aware, inquiry was made sometime ago with respect to the so-called five-percent stock interest in a number of banks held by the C and S Holding Company System.

The five-percent ownership itself was identified by the C and S System but came to a head, as it were, with respect to the proposed merger of the C and S National Bank an... the C and S Bank of Augusta.

MR. LANE: Commercial and Savings Bank.

MR. O'CONNELL: In that statement of application regarding that merger, a pronouncement was made by the applicant with respect to the management talent that had been lent that bank, the other assistance that had been lent the bank by C and S, concluding with the General Position that in all respects, at least as we read it, the operation of the bank was strongly under the guidance, assistance and leadership of C and S.

Now, in our letter to you with respect to this five

Now, in our letter to you with respect to this five percent ownership, we interpreted that as control of that bank by the C and S System.

Directly in your response you controverted this and denied that such control existed. Rather you identified the relationship which you had with this and other five percent owned banks and, as I recall, you characterized it as a correspondent associate and, I believe, that your annual report so terms these relationships.

Well, gentlemen, then back to the purpose of this meeting.

We of the Board Staff, and I believe the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta, looking at the so-called five percent direct ownership of C and S in these some 23 or 24 banks, whatever the exact number, we find additional prima facie evidence in our judgment of possible elements of control.

Now, under the Bank Holding Company Act a bank holding company is entitled to own five percent of the stock or control five percent of the stock of another bank and does not have to come to the Board of Governors under the statute for such acquisition.

However, the statute does prohibit direct or indirect acquisition of ownership of control beyond that five percent limit without the prior approval of the Board.

This is the thrust of our inquiry here. We have directed written inquiries to you. You have responded. But in our judgment the answers weren't as precisely responsive as we desired and I think they are insufficiently responsive to enable us to make a final judgment.

It is important to us that you know this this morning and at this point may I say we appreciate your courtesy in so promptly responding and attending this conference today. Our point is to get information, to get facts, to enable us to make a judgment on the principal issue I have mentioned.

When this record is finished -- and that by the way is why we had a court reporter here this morning. I think in fairness to you you are entitled to know precisely what questions were asked and what responses were given. We will then have a written record of the responses that will enable us to make a judgment as to what extent we have additionally gathered facts toward this decisional function and we will either make a judgmental recommendation to the Board with respect to the status of these banks, or if necessary we will recommend to the Board that it be further referred to an administrative or a law enforcement agency. That is the purpose of this meeting.

I should say that this isn't merely the concern of the Board.

As you may be aware, we have had considerable congressional inquiry both on an individual Member basis and on a committee basis with respect to possible loopholes in the existing Bank Holding Company Act. This is aimed at the Board's recommending, if it feels appropriate, additional changes in the Bank Holding Act to close what we would regard as loopholes. And specifically these inquiries have related to certainly not your operation, namely, but indirect ownership or control beyond direct stock ownership.

A further element of control mentioned is the making of a loan secured by the stock of a bank and to what extent either by agreement or by loan the terms of the loan or by the security terms such stock can be controlled by the lending holding company. These are the areas of inquiry that have been pressed upon us by the members and the Committees of Congress and we have a response to pursue them.

With that background, I would like to ask Mr. Noble and other members of our groupe here who feel that they have questions to proceed and I will ask you gentlemen to answer as you see fit and by whom you see fit.

MR. LANE: Do you think it would be helpful if I tried to set the scene with just a little background of the Bank and its philosophy?

MR. O'CONNELL: I think it would be most helpful and please proceed as you wish, Mr. Lane.

MR. LANE: The C and S Bank has had a continuity of management ever since my grandfather founded this little bank in Balboste in 1866. When my father died in 1946, his estate at the time had some dozen country bank stocks in banks like Wadley, Blackshear, Greensboro, Jessup, Mount Vernon, Early, and as I grew up and as the State of Georgia developed, Savannah was our headquarters office, was the port of the State and that was where the movement of cotton and lumber and tobacco and rice came. And my father followed a philosophy of encouraging the organization of new banks, and this was even during the period when branch banking was permissive in the State of Georgia. And his reason for taking a minority position in a bank was to be able to influence the correspondent bank account.

I grew up in that atmosphere of minority interest in new banks as a means of influencing the correspondent bank relationship.

The development of our five percent interest in a bank has come about in two ways. The first way has been in banks where management had deteriorated through old age to the point that they came to us to seek a relationship with the Citizens and Southern National Bank to provide management. In no case in the entire history of this bank have we ever gone to a community either to buy an interest in a bank or to organize a new one. It has always been the approach has been to us, as in the first case where the management of a bank had deteriorated.

The three outstanding cases of this are the American National Bank of Brunswick, the Bank of Tifton, the Moultry Banking Company, the Jackson National Bank, the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Fayetteville, and the Bank at Pelham.

The only organization of new banks that the Southern Holding Company has taken a five percent interest in has been in metropolitan areas where local business communities wanted to start a new bank on their own and sought us to provide management.

The only way that we could provide management for a bank was to have continuity of the exchange of personnel between banks. The five percent investment followed the identical philosophy of my father of influencing but not controlling the correspondent bank relationship.

The five percent relationship also made it possible for a movement of personnel between any banks with other continuity of all pension, profit-sharing, employees' benefits, so that the man that went to run the bank continued really in the Citizens and Southern family. It if hadn't been for our being able to extend those benefits we would not have been able to get a man to leave the Citizens and Southern Bank, as Lou Fortuna has, to run the Citizens Bank at Sandy Springs. It has been that link that has produced, I think, the basis upon which these banks have been founded.

Both those that we have purchased into that were existing banks or new ones.

Now, throughout all of these we have never sought to control the election of directors, but have sought to have satisfied stockholders because of the progress and profit of the bank, and we have seen here most tellingly, I think, in the last two years a strong desire of a unit bank to be identified with the Citizens and Southern. And that is a great change in philosophy.

There was the time when the unit banks, for example, when we went to Tipton they insisted there be no mention that the Citizens Southern had a five percent interest in it. Today they want to put on the door we are an associate correspondent of the Citizens Southern. I think that is because of the reputation this bank has developed to provide unselfish service.

I can take this one step further. That here we went, this is part of our philosophy, we go to Jamaica and help organize the first home owned bank that the Jamaicans have. Although we own 49 percent of the bank, with the approval of the Federal Reserve, we are not in a control position in Jamaica, even with a 49 percent ownership, and have agreed with the Jamaicans they can buy us out at any time.

That has been true of every minority investment that we have ever had. We had a five percent minority investment in the bank at College Park. Other people went to the other stockholders and bought the majority of the stock and we let them have our five percent too. The same thing happened in Pelham where we had a five percent interest but with the identical same relationship between our parent bank and holding company in that bank as there was in any other five percent bank. They decided they wanted to buy us out and we sold to them.

The same thing happened in Carterville. So in every one of these five percent relationships there has been this underlying philosophy of this bank of serving, of influencing the correspondent bank account, of helping that community have a bank that could join hands with ours to provide better local banking service.

In only one respect have I had any qualm or worry and that was when we bought the bank at Tucker or took a five percent interest in the bank at Tucker, and the former president insisted that the name of the bank be changed to the Citizens and Southern from the Bank of Tucker. And I was a little bit worried about that because that implied the name is unusual and yet there had been a precedent for that too.

Long years ago a bank was started in Philadelphia called the Citizens and Southern Bank. It was the first Negro-owned bank in Philadelphia. The man had come from Savannah and my father wrote him and said, Doctor, why did you name this bank in Philadelphia the Citizens and Southern Bank, and he said, Mr. Lane, that is the best name I have ever known in the banking business and that is why I let it have that name.

I look on the use of the name Citizens and Southern as identity with the strong institution, not with control, but sort of the same relationship that Howard Johnson or Holliday Inn would have in it. We are going to help you run our style of bank and you have in effect got the franchise to use our name so that you will have a better bank.

That isthe background of what we have done, the way we have done it, and I think it is universal to all five percent banks, not just isolating Commercial and Southern of Augusta.

MR. O'CONNELL: May I ask, in any instance where a five percent owned banks uses the C and S title, I will call it, or the C and S name, has it at each instance been at the request of the bank that that name has been assumed?

MR. LANE. No. We were so pleased with what happened at Tucker with the change of name that we suggested to Stone Mountain and to Chamblee that they consider the same thing. Stone Mountain did not want to change their name until they saw what had happened at Tucker. But it was an evolution but it was not -- we suggested it would help them, yes, in a couple of cases.

MR. O'CONNELL: And if I may, to cover those where it appears -- the Belevedere Bank?

MR. LANE: It was a brand new bank, not an existing bank.

MR. O'CONNELL: So the name would be your selection?

MR. LANE: Right.

MR. O'CONNELL: And the North DeKalb Bank?

MR. LANE: The same thing.

MR. HALL: The name wouldn't be our selection. It would be the selection of the Board of Directors of that bank.

MR. O'CONNELL: I understand. But may I assume, from what Mr. Lane said, the suggestion was made, for instance, for the Board of Directors of the business advantages of having the C and S name in the bank?

MR. HALL: We acquainted them with what happened at Tucker and we told them we felt they ought to know that they were actually in competition with Tucker, very close, and we felt that as a matter of courtesy they ought to know ahead of time that the bank in Tucker wanted to change their name to the Citizens and Southern.

I said obviously we are prejudiced, we would think that the name Citizens and Southern means something, but the decision is yours.

The Board of Directors of Stone Mountain voted and decided not to change the name of their bank. A year later, approximately, without anything on our part, they came back and said, Joe, we made a mistake. We think now we ought to change the name. Does the C and S still have no objection? Obviously we had no objection, I told them. And at that time they changed the name to Citizens and Southern Bank of Stone Mountain.

The same thing happened with each one of them, even the new ones, that if they wanted to use the name it was all right.

We have never, absolutely never -- because I think this is something that is their decision -- we never insisted that in order to get any help from us that they change the name to Citizens and Southern. We think it means more to them than it means to us.

MR. STARKS: The case in Chamblee is still under discussion.

MR. O'CONNELL: Are there any banks in which you don't own five percent but for whom you are a major correspondent that carry the C and S name?

MR. LANE: No.

MR. O'CONNELL: If one of them wanted to do so, would you object?

MR. LANE: I think we would.

MR. O'CONNELL: For what reason, may I ask, Mr. Lane, since it would also project this image?

MR. LANE: It would imply it had the status of a correspondent associate.

MR. O'CONNELL: Would I understand that there is in your mind a difference between correspondent associate and correspondent?

MR. LANE: Yes, sir. A correspondent associate is one in which we have a five percent investment and where the bank says so.

MR. HALL: And it is also where there is an ex-C and S man in charge of the bank. I think this is a big difference.

MR. SMITH: In a case like the Citizens Bank in Sandy Springs, which is now Citizens and Southern, do they apply to the Comptroller of the Currency for a name change and the Comptroller of the Currency clears this with you?

MR. HALL: I believe the Comptroller cleared it with us. Obviously it had our permission because Howard Starks was a member either on the board or advisory board member at that time and they would clear it with us.

MR. LANE: I think this subject has come up once or twice with the Comptroller and the State Superintendent of Banks. They think this name is unusual and I don't think they would approve the use of the name Citizens and Southern without our approval.

MR. O'CONNELL: Am I correct that under Georgia law basically you are the ones who have the right of objection to the use of such name by another bank?

MR. HALL: That is my understanding.

MR. STARKS: They bring us a letter each time and we have approved or stated no objection.

MR. NOBLE: What assurance do you have that the bank using that name will not engage in a type of business which would not reflect well on the name?

MR. LANE: That is the gamble we have taken. The only misgiving I ever had about our lack of control is the use of this name.

Your Ref: WBC:DIB, 60-111-2041

Dear Mr. Baker:

I am writing in reply to your letter to me dated March 2, 1972, regarding the above-captioned matter in which the complaint alleges a violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. § 1) by Citizens & Southern by virtue of operating relationships between Citizens & Southern and various other banking institutions in which Citizens & Southern has held a stock ownership interest of 5 per centum or less. A motion to dismiss and to strike the section 1 allegations has been filed by Citizens & Southern in the captioned matter based in part upon their representations concerning the conduct and outcome of an "investigation" conducted by Board staff under the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 into the affairs of Citizens & Southern respecting certain relationships with the banking institutions referred to above in 1968. You have set forth in your letter a number of specific questions concerning such investigation to which you request response. For convenience of reference, these questions are repeated hereinafter with the appropriate response following immediately.

60-111-2041
DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE
MAR 20 1972
R.A.O.
ANTITRUST

(1) Was the "investigation" referred to by defendants initiated as a result of the submission of an application to the Board for approval of an acquisition, merger, or consolidation transaction under Section 3 of the Bank Holding Company Act?

E- 232

No. The fact finding inquiry undertaken by Board staff into the relationship between Citizens & Southern and the other banking institutions referred to was begun in 1966 and continued into 1968. The principal focus of the inquiry concerned essentially two questions: (1) whether Citizens & Southern had unlawfully acquired a direct or indirect stock ownership in these banking institutions in excess of 5 per cent without first having secured the requisite prior Board approval; and (2) whether the banking institutions had unlawfully become subsidiaries of Citizens & Southern by virtue of the election of directors without first having received the requisite prior Board approval. The inquiry arose in 1966 out of information contained in Citizens & Southern's registration statement filed with the Board and in 1968 as a result of information supplied by the Comptroller of the Currency in connection with the merger of the Citizens and Southern National Bank and the Citizens and Southern Bank of Augusta. The inquiry referred to was not initiated as a result of any application filed with the Board for approval of an acquisition, merger, or consolidation transaction under section 3 of the Bank Holding Company Act.

(2) Did the Board of Governors issue any formal order approving these "affiliation" relationships under Section 3 of the Act?

No. The Board of Governors did not issue any order approving the relationships between Citizens & Southern and the other banking institutions under section 3 of the Bank Holding Company Act.

(3) If not, what other decisions were reached or actions taken concerning the relationships in question by the Board or its staff? Was there any determination that the Board's approval under Section 3 of the Act was required in order for the "affiliation" relationships in question to continue?

There was no determination made that approval of the Board under section 3 of the Bank Holding Company Act was required for Citizens & Southern to retain an ownership interest of 5 per cent or less in the banking institutions referred to or to maintain the relationships with those banks in circumstances where Citizens & Southern did not elect a majority of the directors of any such bank. There was an understanding reached between members of the Board's staff and representatives of Citizens & Southern that in those cases where Citizens & Southern purchased 5 per cent or less of the stock of a bank, in some instances furnishing a principal operating officer for such bank, as well as other employee benefits, Citizens & Southern would not be deemed to have control of a majority of the directors of such bank on these facts alone. Further, where the foregoing circumstances existed and where control of additional shares was purchased by the bank's executive officer, control of such shares purchased would not be attributed to Citizens & Southern so long as Citizens & Southern did not finance the purchase of such shares, directly or indirectly. Finally, it was understood that even though Citizens & Southern was responsible, directly or indirectly, in placing one or two directors on the boards of such banks, if that number did not constitute a majority of directors of such bank, the Board's staff would not consider that Citizens & Southern could reasonably be held to have control of a majority of the directors of such bank.

(4) If the answers to (2) or (3) above are affirmative, was the Attorney General notified of these actions?

Reply not necessary.

(5) Why was a representative of the Department of Justice invited to attend the conference referred to by defendants?

A representative of the Department of Justice Antitrust Division was invited to attend the conference in April 1968 inasmuch as the Department is the agency of the Government having primary responsibility for enforcement of Federal laws with particularized responsibilities relating to possible anticompetitive practices and in view of the fact that any willful violation of any provision of the Bank Holding Company Act may be referred by the Board to the Department of Justice for appropriate investigation and action.

Very truly yours,

Re: United States v. The Citizens and Southern National Bank, et al., Northern District of Georgia

Dear Mr. Doyle:

This is in reply to your letter of March 31, 1972, requesting a response to each of seven questions respecting issues raised in the above-captioned matter. For convenience of reference, those questions are repeated hereinafter with the appropriate response following immediately.

1. What was the jurisdictional authority of the Federal Reserve Board in 1966 and 1968 to conduct its inquiry in 1966 and 1968, which included investigation by written questions and the Washington hearing?

The principal jurisdictional authority of the staff of the Board of Governors to conduct a fact finding inquiry into certain of C&S's affairs in 1966 and 1968 -- including the submission of written questions to C&S and the holding of various meetings or conferences between the representatives and staffs of C&S and of the Federal Reserve -- was the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956, specifically those provisions authorizing the Board to issue necessary regulations and orders (Sec. 5(b) of the Act); requiring reports to assure compliance with the Act and regulations issued thereunder (Sec. 5(c)); and proscribing willful violations of any provision of that Act (Sec. 8). At the conference held in Washington, D. C., on April 22, 1968, it was also stated to representatives of C&S that one further purpose of that meeting would be to ascertain whether the types of questions raised in the C&S matter should be the subject of a recommendation to Congress concerning the need for legislation.

2. Did the Board find any practices or activities on the part of C&S which were regarded as unlawful? If so, did representatives of the C&S agree with the Board's staff to discontinue them?

Neither the Board nor its staff denominated any practice or activity on the part of C&S as "unlawful". Representatives of C&S conceded that certain of its actions resulted in its having owned shares in various banks in excess of the 5 per cent statutory ceiling. Accordingly, C&S agreed to limit its activities in relation to the acquisition of shares by other persons in those banks (in which C&S had or might obtain a direct 5 per cent ownership interest) to the end that C&S would not be held to indirectly own or control additional shares.

3. Was an understanding reached between members of the Board's staff and representatives of C&S that C&S could continue to help organize new banks and supply management for existing banks when requested to do so by persons in the community whereby C&S Holding Company would purchase 5% of the bank's stock, furnish a President and one or two directors or advisory directors and extend employee benefits to employees of the 5% banks? In this regard I attach as exhibits letters from Mr. Henry J. Miller to Mr. James D. Smith, Counsel of the Federal Reserve Bank, following a meeting between C&S representatives, Mr. Smith, and Mr. Thomas J. O'Connell, General Counsel of the Board, and refer to paragraph (4) thereof.

There was no affirmative understanding that C&S could continue to engage in the prescribed actions. There was an understanding reached between members of the Board's staff and representatives of C&S that in those cases where C&S purchased 5 per cent or less of the stock of a bank, in some instances furnishing a principal operating officer for such bank, as well as other employee benefits, C&S would not, on those facts alone, be deemed to have control of a majority of the directors of such bank. Further, where the foregoing circumstances existed and where control of additional shares was purchased by the bank's executive officer, control of such shares would not be attributed to C&S if C&S had not financed the purchase of such shares, directly or indirectly. Finally, it was understood that, even though C&S was responsible, directly or indirectly, in placing one or two directors on the boards of such banks, if that number did not constitute a majority of directors of such bank, the Board's staff would not consider that C&S could reasonably be held to have control of a majority of the directors of such bank.

4. If the outcome of that investigation and hearing had been different, what were possible consequences under the Board's jurisdiction? For instance, if the Board had found that C&S had controlled the election of a majority of the directors of the 5% banks, is it possible that C&S could have been required, or that C&S would have been permitted, to file an application under Section 3 of the Bank Holding Company Act? Is it possible that the Board could have requested initiation of criminal proceedings against C&S and/or its representatives if willful violations of the Bank Holding Company Act had been found?

It is possible that the Board of Governors could have requested the Department of Justice to initiate criminal proceedings against C&S if C&S had been deemed to have willfully violated the Act either by its having acquired a stock ownership interest in a bank in excess of 5 per cent, or by its having caused such bank to become a C&S subsidiary by virtue of the fact that C&S controlled the election of a majority of its directors without, in either case, having obtained the prior approval of the Board of Governors. It is likely that if the Board's staff had believed that such a willful violation of the Act had been presented, it would have recommended to the Board that opportunity be given to C&S to cease such violations through termination of the unlawful relationship before the matter would be referred to the Department of Justice, or before an application under Section 3 of the Act would be considered by the Board.

5. Was an understanding reached between members of the Board's staff and representatives of C&S that if the C&S desired to expand its ownership of stock in the 5% banks by using its Profit Sharing Plan, yearly applications under §3(a) would be made for each bank involved? I refer to paragraph (3) of Mr. Miller's letter. Was it also understood that in view of the potentially large number of applications that C&S might be able to use a modified form for the application?

There was no understanding that C&S could expand its ownership of stock in any such banks beyond a 5 per cent interest. There were discussions concerning C&S's proposal to use its Profit Sharing Plan as a vehicle for acquiring stock in such a bank for the employees of that bank (hereinafter, "5% bank"). C&S proposed to submit one application for each 5% bank per year wherein Board approval would be sought for the acquisition of a specified percentage of such bank's outstanding stock. The proposal contemplated that each employee of a 5% bank would be given a year-end opportunity to designate investment of his contributed funds and those contributed by the bank for the purchase of the employer-bank stock. In September of each year, an employee would be given the opportunity to change previously designated investment plans. C&S hoped to combine the September-December designations into a single application seeking approval of acquisition of the aggregate amount of bank shares designated. Thus, in a given year, C&S could have filed as many as 20 or more applications, as few as one, or perhaps no application would have been filed. C&S was told that each application would be viewed in the light of the standards set forth in section 3 of the Act; that, unless otherwise ordered by the Board, consummation of each acquisition approved would be subject to the usual 30-90 days' time condition; and that the Board's staff would cooperate with C&S in an effort to permit utilization by C&S of an abbreviated version of the section 3 application form.

6. Was any part of the Board's reason in conducting its inquiry and for inviting a representative of the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice to the 1968 hearing, because of concern on the part of the Board of possible unlawful anticompetitive practices by C&S?

Although the stated reasons for the conduct of the fact finding inquiry were as referred to in response to the answer set forth to Question 1. above, it should be remembered that with respect to banks, banking associations, and trust companies, the Board and the Department of Justice share dual enforcement responsibilities under the terms of the Clayton Act. The 1966-1968 inquiry was neither premised nor focused on any Clayton Act question, although any anticompetitive practice found to have been engaged in by C&S could have given rise to further inquiry under the Clayton Act.

7. Was there any finding of such anticompetitive practices which required the initiation of proceedings against C&S?

The Board of Governors neither recommended the initiation of nor initiated any such proceeding.

Very truly yours,

Tynan Smith
Secretary of the Board

Here's our new service charge schedule for regular checking accounts:

Maintenance charge: 75¢ per month
Activity charge: 10¢ per check

Accounts are exempt with $250 minimum balance or $1000 average.

There is no change in special checking account charges.

Timing has not been definitely set. We are preparing notices to customers and will give them 30 days notice before the new charges are applied, since we are raising the price on most accounts.

At this point, this applies to C&S National Bank in Atlanta only. I'll let you know as the affiliate and 5% banks make their decisions which are affected.

As we discussed, please proceed with the necessary programming.

Howard Starks has proposed, and Mr. Lane has approved, our eliminating service charges on "Senior Citizens" accounts. Augusta, Savannah and Valdosta are already offering this.

We are preparing an advertising program for Atlanta media that will promote this feature. It consists largely of small space newspaper ads.

Operationally it amounts to a change in the service charge program, giving distinct identification to these exempt accounts so they can be eliminated from periodic reviews of exempt accounts. There will be no forms involved; just memos indicating account names and numbers for the computer centers.

Please let me know whether your bank will or will not adopt this feature. Ads will be available shortly if you wish to use them.

REPLACES GOG 9.19 DATED JULY 1, 1969, SAME SECTION AND TOPIC.

The policy of assessing a $10.00 base charge plus interest on all time notes under $5,000 has been modified. In certain instances we will operate under the Georgia Industrial Loan Act, which necessitates a flat charge instead of a base charge plus interest. Loans renewed for six months or less cannot be charged a second base charge, and new loans made to a customer less than fifteen days after a loan pays out will be exempt from the charge. Thus the use of realistic final maturity dates at the inception of the loan is most important.

Please refer to Consumer Credit Operating Guide Bulletin "Over-the-Counter - Single Payment Time Loans to Individuals" for complete instructions for determining charges on single payment loans. Additional copies of this Consumer Credit Bulletin may be requested from Retail Banking Department, 17 N.B.G. Building, Atlanta.

MEMORANDUM

TO: Presidents - Correspondent Associate Banks
Presidents - Affiliate Banks
Executive Vice Presidents - National Banks

In 1962 and 1964, I sent out memos relating to certain prohibitions of the antitrust laws. The "rules" of those memos, which are a part of our operating guide, have ever since stated our policy and guided our practice in the areas they cover. They are good rules for today. I suggest a review of them would be helpful for everybody.

Recently our attorneys have quite naturally been looking closely at the relationships of C&S National and C&S Holding (plus affiliates) with the C&S 5% banks, and between and among C&S 5% banks, in connection with the Government's suit against our mergers. I enclose a copy of a letter written by Mike Doyle which states that background which leads to this memorandum. As Mike has suggested, we should emphasize some specific areas of our antitrust rules as they apply to our 5% bank relationships.

We should treat the kinds of agreements referred to in the nine numbered paragraphs of my February 26, 1964, memorandum (plus agreements to allocate customers and markets, which are not covered by those paragraphs) as being out of bounds in the relationships between C&S National (including its affiliates), and C&S 5% banks, and between and among C&S 5% banks.

Further, we must all remember that agreements to not compete do not have to be express, written or oral promises to be illegal; they may be implied from actions if those actions are equivalent in effect to an agreement. Thus if Bank A and Bank B exchange "price information" as to service charges, interest rates and the like, the purpose and/or effect of which is to fix prices or divide up the customers, then an unlawful agreement would be inferred.

Nonetheless, because the business of credit depends on information exchanges, we do not have to stop the continuing exchange of credit information which is necessary for sound banking. The information our 5% banks receive in the form of memos and other in-house communications from C&S National have been and continue to be for information only, and are neither mandatory, directory or suggestive. Each 5% bank must make its own unilateral competitive decisions.

The credit review and administration procedures we use to assure quality and soundness of our loans must not be the basis for setting the rates, except on a unilateral basis. We can continue to help each other be better bankers and help our banks be of greater benefit to the communities without violating this forbidden area. Officers involved in credit reviews should keep this primary in reviewing the worthiness of credits.

Similarly, the necessary exchange of credit information must not be used indirectly to allocate customers or markets between banks. (The limitations of the Fair Credit Reporting Act are another matter entirely.) Central Information Files should continue to be utilized by all banks, and bank officers should continue to feel free to exchange first-hand ledger information in connection with particular loans. Antitrust law does not require us to sit back and let one customer obtain his maximum credit from each of three C&S banks. The point is, though, that information exchanges to protect the soundness of loans should not be perverted either explicitly or by implication, into a conversation of "he's my customer; you stay away from him."

C&S 5% banks compete across the board with C&S National and its affiliates, and with each other, for all customers, of all types, and all locations, for all types of business, and of course this goes the other way, too. The same goes for banking hours, new bank office sites, and locations of other facilities. There are no exceptions to this general rule.

Antitrust is not all "don'ts" however.

Where participations are involved, or other transactions where two or more banks are actually parties to a transaction, or are negotiating a joint transaction, then clearly a price agreement between them as to that situation is lawful.

There is nothing in the law which requires that a 5% bank decision, unilaterally reached, be different from a C&S National decision.

There is nothing that we know of, outside of the above areas, which prohibits C&S National and C&S Holding from doing all that they can to help the 5% banks be more competitive. Therefore you should be assured that we at C&S National and C&S Holding will continue in the future as we have in the past to be vitally concerned for the safety and success of our C&S 5% family. As parent and as stockholders, we will continue to offer every help and assistance permitted by the law, to bring better banking services to your communities and customers.

As I am sure many of you are aware, we have at various times in the past adjusted aspects of our 5% bank relationships to accord with changes or developments in the law, or to follow suggestions of bank regulatory authorities. We believe that we have at all times throughout this history stayed well within the requirements of the law in fulfilling our basic commitment that banking is, in the first instance, a public service, and that we are committed to bring full service banking to meet the convenience and needs of communities in Georgia. In that spirit, all of us can and will continue to offer the best banking around, while at the same time operating well within the laws as they may be interpreted from time to time; and we can't go wrong doing that.

Mr. Joseph A. Hall, III
First Vice President
Citizens & Southern National Bank
Atlanta, Georgia

Dear Joe:

The position taken by the Antitrust Division in the Government's lawsuit to enjoin the mergers with the 5% banks is significantly different from the Division's earlier posture.

This new stance of the Government is of significance to the relationship between C&S National (and its affiliates) and the C&S 5% banks, and between and among C&S 5% banks. Let me outline this change in the Antitrust Division's posture.

In the consent judgments entered in the 1964 cases against the Duluth, Minnesota banks, the proposition was accepted by the Government that combinations and agreements which would otherwise violate the Sherman Act were not unlawful if they were between regulated bank holding companies and their subsidiaries, recognized as such by the Bank Holding Company Act.

In 1969, the Antitrust Division reported on the competitive factors involved in the application of C&S DeKalb (a majority-owned C&S affiliate) to purchase assets and assume liabilities of C&S Belvedere (a C&S 5% bank). That application was, of course, approved; the facts involved in that merger application were, in all material respects, substantially the same as those involved in the mergers now under attack in the District Court. The 1969 report of the Antitrust Division stated in pertinent part that:

> The immediate anticompetitive effects of this merger may well be lessened by the fact that the Citizens and Southern Holding Company has had full management control of Belvedere Bank since its inception.

Since Citizens and Southern acquired its interest and management control at the time Belvedere Bank was established, the situation is not unlike de novo branch banking in those states where such activity is lawful. . . .

Because of the existing relationship between the merging banks, the increase in concentration of banking resources in DeKalb County as a result of this merger would be more apparent than real.

Thus through 1969, the Antitrust Division accepted the view that the 5% relationships were essentially equivalent to de novo branching because of C&S management control, and justified the asserting by C&S that the mergers had no anticompetitive effect, being essentially an internal reorganization. The Justice Department made no challenge whatsoever to these relationships at that time.

Then in 1970, amendments to the Bank Holding Company Act clearly brought the 5% banks within that Act's definition of "subsidiary." Thus the Antitrust Division's positions were clearly consistent in their application to the C&S facts—management control equaled the "subsidiary" exemption from the Sherman Act, and the present and contemplated 5% mergers were not anticompetitive because of that very control.

The position now taken in the District Court action by the Antitrust Division, in asserting that the 5% relationships constitute a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, represents a sharp change of direction. The defenses we are asserting on behalf of the banks essentially are that the Antitrust Division was correct before it changed its position. Thus, we are asserting the "subsidiary" defense to the Sherman Act, and we are arguing further that our history of "management control" from the organization of the merging banks, means that the mergers will not have any anticompetitive impact.

Nonetheless, conservative practice dictates that the Holding Company and Bank should focus precisely on those aspects of the 5% relationships affected by the Government's new position. Even though we contest the legality of the Government's position in court, the Holding Company and Bank should make certain that their relationships accord with that position until a definitive court interpretation is received. Explicitly, we recommend that the Holding Company should make absolutely clear to all involved, those areas of their relationships with C&S National which are affected by the Division's new position are without the umbrella of C&S "management control."

As a means of accomplishing this purpose, we recommend that you send a memorandum emphasizing these aspects of the 5% relationships, perhaps along with this letter, to the appropriate bank officers, and add them as well to the general operating guides.

Sincerely,

Michael Doyle

None of us would like to go to jail. None of us would like to be fined. these thought in mind, I call your attention to the results of the civil and crimina antitrust actions against 17 Minnesota banks, the First Bank Stock Corporation and th Duluth Clearing House Association.

They were fined a total of $253,000.

Consent judgements resulted in setting forth the following antitrust guidel for banks in general:

1. Agreements between banks to fix uniform service charges on checking accounts or to exchange data relating to service charges is prohibited. This reaffirms the consent decree in the case of the Hunterdon County Trust Company of New Jersey in 1962.

2. Agreements between banks to fix interest rates on deposits are prohibited.

3. Agreements between banks to fix the rate of interest, terms and conditions of any loans are prohibited except where the other bank is an actual party to the negotiations or the loan transaction itself.

4. Agreements between banks to restrict the advertising of interest or loan rates, service charges or other services rendered bank customers, or the media used for such advertising are prohibited.

5. Clearing Houses are prohibited from engaging in any activity except to effect the daily exchanges between members and the payment of the balances resulting from such exchanges and activities relating to civic, charitable, educational or eleemosynary promotions.

6. Agreements between banks to restrict the solicitation of business from correspondent banks are prohibited.

7. Agreement between banks concerning the furnishing of bank drafts, stationery, bank supplies or other gifts to correspondent banks are prohibited.

8. Agreements between banks to restrict absorption of exchange charges, or absorption of loss on securities, for correspondent banks are prohibited.

9. Agreements between banks to fix rebates or commissions on loans originated by correspondent banks are prohibited.

All three judgements state specifically that "transactions or communica solely between a registered bank holding company under the Bank Holding Company A of 1956, or any servicing subsidiary of such bank holding company, and subsidiari of such bank holding company recognized as such under such Act, shall be deemed to transactions and communications not prohibited by this Final Judgment, . . ."

Please do review these carefully and keep them in mind in your dealings with your local competitors. Should there be any questions about any of the items let's be sure we talk with someone else before we decide to do anything that might cause us to get into trouble with the antitrust folks.

Correspondent Banking Services

Highlighting the advantages of having the Trust Company of Georgia as your Atlanta Correspondent.

E- 251

The Trust Company Tradition

THE TRUST COMPANY OF GEORGIA was established in 1891, and for more than 72 years has followed unswervingly its policy of bringing the best in banking services to Georgia and the South. It is now the largest state-chartered bank in the area.

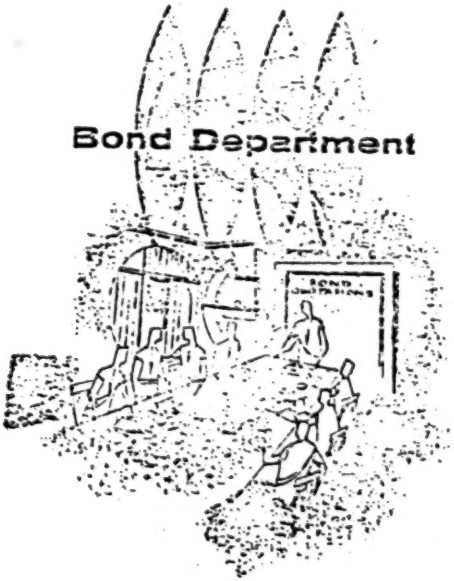
Old in tradition and experience, the Trust Company is young in its concept of what complete banking service should be. It has, for example, Georgia's largest and Atlanta's oldest Trust Department. It has one of the South's most active Bond Departments. The Trust Company was the first bank in the state with a truly complete International Department, and even today is one of three banks in the entire nation with a Factoring Department.

A second cardinal principle woven into the Trust Company fibre is that of individual, personal attention to every account. This bank does not believe that service can be rendered en masse. Rather, we remain convinced that each banking relationship is an individual matter, requiring personal attention by our staff for complete mutual satisfaction.

Just as the Trust Company has always aimed to bring to its commercial customers every worthwhile banking service for which a need existed, so has it served its correspondent banks in many states. Cooperating closely with our correspondent banks has always been a tradition at the Trust Company of Georgia. Service is our goal, and we encourage our correspondents to use freely those specialized banking services which are available here.

Working together, we can be of help to each other. Cooperation in this spirit is just one of the many ways in which the Trust Company of Georgia can be helpful to you as your Atlanta correspondent.

E- 252



We have been active as an underwriter and distributor since the 1890's. Our Bond Department is one of the oldest and most active departments of its kind in the Southeast. Because of a direct wire service to New York our facilities are complete for buying and selling Government bonds at net prices without commission. We underwrite and distribute state, county and municipal bonds originating not only in the Southeast but throughout the United States.

Portfolio Analysis and Management —

Officers of the Bond Department are men of wide experience in their fields. They can be helpful in making constructive suggestions affecting the composition, liquidity, earnings and taxation aspects of your portfolio. They relate your investment problems to trends of your deposits and loans, analyze your portfolio and discuss your investment policy. Feel free to call upon them for this service.

Daily Bond Quotation Sheet —

This unique report supplies you with current quotations on bonds you may consider buying or selling. We will send it to you regularly on request.

Trust Company Review Forms —

To help you analyze your own portfolio, the Trust Company of Georgia makes Review Forms available to you without charge. They are used to list your holdings of U. S. Government Securities and show the maturity schedule. With this form before us, we are glad to make recommendations about your portfolio.

Yield Table for Viewing Bond Income —

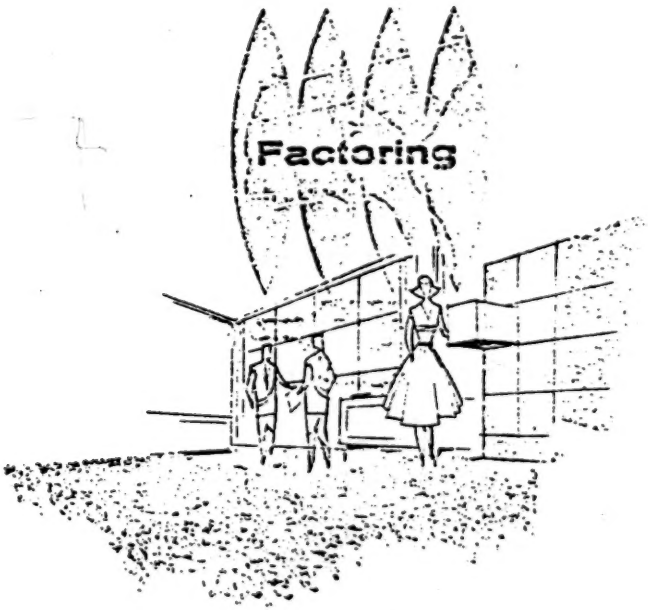
In addition, you may find our Table of Comparative Yields helpful. It enables you to view yields of tax-free and taxable bonds at a glance.

Safekeeping of Securities

Our services are designed to receive and deliver securities for your account. We will ship them to you, or keep them in safekeeping here. When securities are held by us for you, we collect income as payable and principal when due, notify you of redemption calls, subscription or conversion privileges. This service has been very helpful in saving time and money for our correspondents.

E- 254

Factoring



E-255

To serve your customers and you —

Factoring can be of great value to your customers, especially those who have requirements that may exceed your desired line or limit. Its advantages enable your customers to improve their financial position and thereby make them better customers for you. It does not disturb established relationships.

Primarily, factoring performs two services. It approves the credit of your clients' orders before shipment. It purchases the invoices arising from these approved orders. Credit risks are assumed by the Trust Company. Cash is available to your customers immediately, or as desired. Payment is made through your bank's account with us.

Only three banks in the United States offer a factoring service. The Trust Company of Georgia is proud to be one of the three.

FOREWORD

My congratulations and best wishes are extended to bank directors, those citizens of Georgia who have been complimented by being elected to positions of high trust and honor in their communities. Election as a bank director implies the highest confidence of the stockholders in the citizen's integrity, business morality, ability, responsibility and public trust.

This booklet has been compiled by the Department of Banking for the use of directors of State chartered banks. It contains a digest of the laws relating to election and duties of directors and of those governing a bank's operations. It is hoped that it will be of benefit to the newly elected director and of interest also to the experienced director.

It does not purport to be all inclusive on the subjects presented, but points out the basic principles of directors' responsibilities and covers some questions with which directors are most frequently confronted.

LESTER MADDOX
Governor

March, 1967

E-272

PREFACE

This booklet was prepared by the Department of Banking from material gathered and experience gained over the years. There have been similar publications on the subject of directors' duties and responsibilities. The need, however, was felt for a presentation based on court decisions and statutory laws directly governing the approximately 338 banks chartered by the State of Georgia.

The emphasis placed on the prerogatives of directors, as such, as distinguished from those of executive officers of their banks, should not be taken as a reflection on the latter. Rather, it is believed, the level of competence, conscientiousness, knowledgability and devotion to duty among Georgia bankers is higher than ever before and compares favorably with those of other jurisdictions. It is further believed that bank officers recognize that their effective operations are greatly enhanced by directors who are well informed and appreciative of their duties and responsibilities.

W. M. JACKSON,
Superintendent of Banks

E- 273

CARE AND DILIGENCE

To be selected by the stockholders of a bank to serve as a director is an honor. It implies confidence on the part of the stockholders in the ability and integrity of the individual so selected. Moreover, it reflects the reputation of the individual as successful in his own affairs, as public spirited, and as entitled to confidence in the care of funds entrusted to the bank by the depositors.

To accept the honor fixes legal responsibilities to exercise ordinary care and diligence in the administration of the bank's affairs. Any failure to exercise this degree of care and diligence which results in losses to the bank or its depositors gives rise to a cause of action for the losses sustained.

Here are a few Georgia court decisions which illustrate this point:

"The general rule in this State is that directors of a bank must exercise ordinary care and diligence in the administration of its affairs. The active management of the bank may be delegated to certain officers authorized to manage its business. The directors, however, must exercise a reasonable supervision over such officers." (Woodward vs Stewart, 149 Ga. 620)

"A director of a bank has duties to perform more essential than that of allowing his name to be printed on the bank's stationery, and negligent ignorance is sometimes equivalent to knowledge." (Marietta Trust Company vs Faw, 31 Ga. Ap. 508)

"Unfortunately, some directors appear to think that they have fully discharged their duties by acting as figureheads and dummies; but this is a mistake, and a delusion from which some of them are now and then awakened by a judgment for damages arising from allowing the corporation to be looted while they sat negligently by and looked wise." (McEwan vs Kelly, 140 Ga. 720)

"If by reckless inattention to the duties confided to them by their corporation, frauds and misconduct are perpetrated by officers, agents, and co-directors, which ordinary care on their part would have prevented, then I think it may be said with truth that it is now elementary law to be found in all the books, that directors are personally liable for the losses resulting." (From a Federal Case cited in Shannon vs Mobley, 166 Ga. 430)

These decisions are not based on statutory laws of the State, but upon the view of the common law that a bank director is a trustee and responsible for using, in good faith, ordinary care, diligence and prudence in administering the bank. This does not mean that directors are held to the highest degree of care and diligence, nor that they can be held liable for every loss or for errors of judgment. Banks sustain losses at times when there is no lack of diligence, care or prudence. The important thing is that the director be informed and that he use judgment in the decisions he is required to make, even though his judgment was wrong but reasonable under the circumstances then present. The courts have never gone so far as to require the highest degree of judgment. They recognize that directors are mortals.

Instances that have resulted in judgments against directors are failure to attend directors' meetings; ignorance of the condition of the loans or other assets of the bank; acquiescence in violation of legal loan limits; failure to create committees called for by the bylaws and to see that they function; failure to take action for the bank's best interests against borrowers; failure to investigate and deal with questionable acts on the part of officers and employees; and failure to require proper bond coverage on officers and employees. There have been many more, but all were instances of failure to exercise ordinary care, diligence and prudence.

There should be added this observation pertaining to Federal Deposit Insurance. When a bank closes and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation makes payments of insured amounts to depositors, the Corporation, by law, becomes subrogated to the rights and claims of the depositors against the bank. These include any rights that may develop against directors of the bank for losses considered due to their failure to exercise care and diligence required by law in the operation of the bank. These rights are freely asserted by the Corporation when investigations covering a period of years prior to the closing indicate lapses in prudence, diligence, and care on the part of directors. Bank failures since 1933 have been comparatively few and most of them have resulted from defalcations or embezzlements in amounts exceeding the surety coverage provided. Some of these cases have gone to court while others were negotiated and settled out of court, resulting in recovery by the Corporation of some millions of dollars from directors.

STATUTORY PROVISIONS

Directors' Qualifications

As regards directors, the Banking Laws of Georgia specifically require that:

Every director be a citizen of the United States; at least 60% of the board be citizens of Georgia and residing in the city or town where the bank is located or within 40 miles. Every director own in his own right, unpledged and fully paid for, capital stock of the bank of at least $1,000 par value; except that if the capital stock does not exceed $25,000, the minimum par value to be owned is $500.

Directors be elected annually at meetings held at times fixed by the bylaws; the number of directors be not less than three nor more than 25, the actual number fixed by resolution of the stockholders at an annual meeting and remain so fixed until changed in like manner; vacancies occurring between elections be filled by the board of directors.

Each director, when elected, take an oath that he will, so far as the duty devolves upon him, diligently and honestly administer the affairs of the bank; that he will not knowingly violate or willingly permit to be violated, any of the banking laws or the bank's bylaws; and that he is the owner in good faith, and in his own right, stock of the required par value standing in his own name on the books of the bank.

Directors' Meetings

As regards meetings of boards of directors, the banking laws specifically require that:

Regular meetings be held at least monthly at such times as fixed by the bylaws; special meetings be subject to call by the president or any two members of the board; a majority of the members constitute a quorum for the transaction of business; correct written minutes be kept in well-bound permanent books signed by the chairman and secretary of the board and showing the names of the directors present; minutes of the preceding meeting be read, corrected and approved.

The board of directors, at first meeting after the annual election, elect one of their members president, also elect one or more vice-presidents, a cashier and such other officers as provided by the by-laws or as required for prompt and orderly discharge of the business of the bank.

The board of directors fix the amount of bond to be given with a qualified surety company by all officers and employees having custody, control or handling of the bank's funds, the amount to be subject to approval by the Superintendent of Banks.

Directors' Borrowings

The Georgia Banking Laws restrict borrowings from the bank by its directors, officers or employees.

No director, officer or employee of a bank may borrow from the bank, directly or indirectly, for himself or any firm or partnership of which he is a member, without the express written approval of a majority of the directors or an authorized committee of the board. Such a borrower may not participate in any way in passing on any loan or discount in which he may be interested.

No bank shall lend to any of its directors, officers or agents any amount except on good collateral or other ample security.

Statutory Liabilities

The directors of any bank who shall approve or permit any loan to be made in excess of the limit fixed by law shall be personally and individually liable and responsible to the bank for such loan if it is not paid by the borrower. Any director not in favor of such loan may have his dissent or disapproval recorded in the minutes of the meeting at which such loan is authorized, or at the next meeting held after he has discovered it to have been made, and be relieved of personal liability.

Every president, director or other officer "shall be deemed to possess such a knowledge of the affairs of the bank as to enable him to determine whether any act, proceeding, or omission is a violation of the charter." (Sec. 13-0913). If he is present at the meeting when the violation occurs, he is deemed to have concurred in it unless his dissent is entered in the minutes. If he was not present, but remains on the board for three months and does not within that time require his dissent to be entered in the minutes, he is deemed to have concurred in the violation.

Any director who participates in declaring a dividend, except from the net earnings, or in other misuse of its capital funds, has responsibility under the criminal laws. The same is true of a director, officer or employee accepting a fee, commission or gift for obtaining a loan from his bank.

Loan Limitations

No bank is allowed to lend to any one person, firm or corporation more than 20% of its capital and unimpaired surplus. There are exceptions to this rule involving discount or purchase of commercial paper, advances against commodities or products having ready sale in the open market, loans fully secured by obligations of the United States or State of Georgia and loans covered by commitments to take over made by the United States Government or any agency thereof. This is all dealt with in Section 13, Article 19 of the Georgia Banking Law which is interpreted and clarified by regulation of the Superintendent of Banks.

Loans exceeding 10% of the capital and surplus must be fully secured and have the prior written approval of the board of directors or duly authorized loan committee. An exception to the requirement of full security is made in the case of loans to a county, municipality or political subdivision authorized to levy taxes or to a county board of education extended under certain provisions of State laws.

In figuring whether loans to any one person exceed either the 20% or the 10% limitation of capital and surplus, all loans made to the person and to firms and partnerships of which he is a member are included.

E-278

There are special provisions of the law relating to loans on real estate. These are contained in Section 15, Article 19 and are interpreted and clarified by a regulation of the Superintendent of Banks. The basic provisions are that not more than 50% of the market value of the underlying real estate can be loaned by a commercial bank, except that 75% of the market value may be loaned on basis of a regular amortization; and that the aggregate amount of real estate loans may not exceed the total of savings and time deposits or the total of capital and surplus whichever is greater. Loans insured, guaranteed or committed by Government agencies, construction loans and loans made for business purposes and not exceeding $3,500, are excluded from the limitation as to total.

General Loan Supervision

The fact that directors' prior written approval is required only on loans exceeding 10% of capital and surplus and on loans to directors, officers and employees, should not give rise to the thought that all other loans can be properly left entirely to the consideration and judgment of the loan officers. This is what the court said:

> Loans of less than 10% — "As to loans of less than 10%, which under the rules and regulations of the bylaws might be made by designated agents and officers of the bank, it is nevertheless incumbent upon the directors in the exercise of ordinary care and diligence, to retain a general supervision over the acts and doings of such agents and officers in making such loans, and to keep sufficiently informed about them to enable them to pass intelligently on the value of such loans and the condition of the bank which they are charged with supervising. Accordingly, directors are not justified in absolutely relinquishing to any officer or agent unlimited discretion, and thereafter acquiescing blindly in all that he does, but under the general duty devolving upon them to manage the bank's affairs, they must retain and exercise reasonable control and supervision over such officers, amounting to the exercise on their part of ordinary care and diligence. Thus should it appear that the directors had absolutely surrendered and relinquished their control and supervision . . . in the making of such loans, there would be a failure on their part to perform the functions devolving upon them by law, which would necessarily amount to a lack of ordinary care and diligence on their part as directors." (Mobley vs. Faulk, 42 Ga. Ap. 314)

Investments

Banks, except for those doing a savings business only, are prohibited from investing in stocks. There are exceptions granted in the case of stock of the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta, of an agricultural credit corporation organized under special laws of the State, of a small business investment company organized under Acts of Congress, or of a subsidiary corporation organized to own banking premises.

Banks may invest without limitations in obligations of the United States and those guaranteed as to principal and interest by the United States; in obligations of the State of Georgia and those of State Authorities secured by leases with the State or a Department thereof; or in obligations of Federal Land Banks, Federal Home Loan Banks, Federal Intermediate Credit Banks and those of five U. S. Government-organized Credit Corporations which are specifically designated in the Banking Law. Investments in Water and Sewer Revenue Certificates of Georgia Cities and Counties are subject to the 10% limitation of a bank's capital and surplus for the obligations of any one obligor. The 10% limitation also applies to obligations of U. S. Government Corporations not guaranteed as to principal and interest by the United States. Investments in general and direct obligations of political subdivisions of the State of Georgia are subject to the limitation of 25% of capital and surplus for the obligations of any one obligor. These limitations do not apply to banks with capital and surplus of over $1,000,000. Other than the above, banks are restricted in their investments to those classed as "Investment Securities" as defined by regulation of the Superintendent of Banks and the total amount of such securities may not exceed 50% of the bank's capital and surplus. This limitation does not apply to banks with capital and surplus of over $1,000,000.

Cash Reserves

A bank is required to maintain a reserve of 15% of its total demand deposits and 5% of the amount of its savings and time deposits. Reserve funds may consist of currency on hand and moneys on deposit subject to call with other banks approved as depositories by the Superintendent of Banks. However, the reserves against savings and time deposits may consist of bonds of the United States or the State of Georgia at the market value thereof. A bank that is a member of the Federal Reserve System may, in lieu of complying with these rules, keep such reserves as are required of it as a Federal Reserve Member. The Superintendent of Banks has issued regulations clarifying the rules for computing required reserves.

The Banking Law provides that if a bank's reserves fall below the level required, it is unlawful for the bank to make any new loan or declare a dividend. Further, if the Superintendent of Banks notifies a bank whose reserve is short of the requirements to make good such reserve, and, if the bank fails within 30 days to do so, the Superintendent of Banks may take charge of the business and assets of the bank.

Real Estate

A bank may acquire real estate only for banking house purposes or in satisfaction of debt previously contracted. That acquired in satisfaction of debt must be disposed of within five years unless the period is extended by the Superintendent of Banks.

As to real estate acquired for banking house purposes, the amount, including furniture and fixtures, may not exceed 50% of capital and surplus, except that the Superintendent of Banks, upon application, may allow a greater sum invested.

Investment with the approval of the Superintendent of Banks in all of the capital stock of a subsidiary corporation holding the bank's banking house property is considered as banking house investment. But the amount so invested, along with the bank's direct investment in land, buildings and furniture and fixtures, may not exceed 50% of capital and surplus, except with the approval of the Superintendent of Banks.

DIRECTORS SHOULD DIRECT

Overall

It is true that most bank directors are principally occupied with their own businesses. Except for those few who are also active officers and paid for their full time, they can spend only limited time at the bank. They cannot be expected to see to details for the bank's operations, but they are bound to know what goes on generally without impeding the executive management in carrying out its duties. Directors should direct and set the policies and executive management should execute the policies and carry out the details.

Although, as we have seen from the court decisions, a director can be held individually liable for lack of care and diligence, a board of directors should act collectively in setting policies and in supervision of the active management. The directors, as a board and as equals, derive their authority from the stockholders and should act as a board and not as individuals in carrying out such authority. Proper procedure requires that this be done at meetings of the board and as the result of decisions made there by a majority.

Board Committees

As a practical matter, it is advisable for the board to appoint committees of the board to carry out specific functions. As a minimum in a small bank, there should be a Loan Committee, an Investment Committee and an Examination Committee. The number of committees increases with the size of the bank, the diversity of its activities and added departments; for instance, a trust department.

The Loan Committee can be given authority to pass upon loans exceeding 10% of capital and surplus; to loans to directors, officers and employees of the bank; and to such other loans of amounts and types as the board sees fit. Approvals and disapprovals should be in writing and a report of the actions taken should be made to the board at each meeting and made of record in the minutes. The Loan Committee or any individual member can take over the making of appraisals of real estate and other property offered as security to loans. All appraisals, whether made by the Loan Committee, an individual member or an outside appraiser, should be in writing and placed with other papers pertaining to the loans. It is to be hoped that the appraisals be realistic and not tailored to fit the size of the loan applied for. Needless to say, every loan application should be considered in the light of the restrictions imposed by the State Banking Law as previously outlined; also of general policies of the board as regards loans. The Loan Committee can also function with the Examination Committee in making board examinations of the bank whether such examinations are made by board members, the bank's auditors or outside auditors employed to make examinations. Further, it is very beneficial for the Loan Committee to be present at loan reviews made by State and Federal Examiners in their examinations of the bank.

The Investment Committee should oversee the bank's investment account, approve purchases and sales of securities and periodically consider whether investment holdings are in line with the bank's need for quality, safety, liquidity, income, secondary reserves and tax considerations. The relative size and composition of the investment account varies greatly from bank to bank, depending on the type of community, proportion of deposits in time and savings, availability of good loans, degree of liquidity and turnover in the loan account, and seasonal and other fluctuations in the demand deposits.

Both committees discussed above should, of course, keep in mind the statutory restrictions as to types and amounts permitted for the loan and investment account; also the policies set by the board.

The Examination Committee will be discussed further on.

The Individual Director

A great number of bank directors, when they are first elected, have no technical knowledge of banking and feel that they must depend on someone who does. This should not become a habit. The managing officer of the bank, if he is the right kind, wants directors who are thoroughly familiar with the bank's affairs and will take active part in making policies and decisions. It makes his work easier and lightens his tensions. It helps to keep the bank progressive, sound and profitable.

A man selected to be a bank director should have a background of successful business experience, preferably experience with credits. He should have ideas of his own and backbone to express them. He should have available time for the bank. Sometimes the director gives too much weight to the prestige he achieves by becoming a director. Sometimes the bank gives too much weight to the prestige it achieves by adding prominent names to the board. Many professional men do not make good directors, however high they stand professionally. They do not have the time and many do not have the needed background of business experience. A man should not be selected as a director if he is likely to embarrass the bank with his own borrowing requirements and those of his business interests. A director ought to have enough stock in the bank to have a stake in its successful operation. But control by a very small group, one man or one family, is not always good. Very often it is good until illness or death brings about changes that turn out badly. Also, some boards are too large. This usually results from efforts to obtain business in a strongly competitive situation. If there are too many directors, the board is hard to organize, to keep interested in the bank's affairs and working out real decisions. It may be hard to get a quorum for meetings. A bank needs a working board if it is to achieve its proper place in the community, but the work should consist of much more than getting business for the bank, though that is important, too. Generally speaking and summarizing somewhat:

1. The director should have thorough knowledge of the duties and responsibilities of his office.

2. The director should have a genuine interest in his office, attending all meetings regularly and keeping well informed of the affairs of his bank at all times.

3. The director should be well known and respected in the community, with unquestioned reputation for integrity.

4. The director should give undivided loyalty to his office and not loyalty split with some interest adverse to the bank.

E-284

5. The director should possess the integrity not to use his office for personal benefits through information gained by virtue of his position.

6. The director should be capable of retaining confidences and refrain from divulging confidential information gained through his position.

7. The director should be a successful businessman in his own right and a leader in the community, as demonstrated by affiliation with such community projects as growth, development, civic and religious affairs.

8. The director must be capable of recognizing facts as distinguished from prejudices or personal interest in reaching sound, independent decisions.

9. The director should be capable of distinguishing between policy matters and management matters and be willing to refrain from entering into management functions.

10. The director should not lose sight of his primary responsibility, which is to protect the depositors who have placed their trust in him.

Board Functions

1. Appoint officers, designate their duties and fix salaries; appoint the chairman and secretary of the board. Designate the committees of the board; decide on fees for board attendance and compensation for committee members devoting considerable time to their duties.

2. Set the amount of bankers blanket bond coverage and periodically consider the adequacy of coverage of fidelity, burglary, robbery and other risks.

3. Set policies and standards for loans and investments.

4. Fix interest rates to be charged on various types of loans and those paid on time and savings deposits.

5. Consider earnings, expenses, losses to be taken, bonuses, dividends, transfers to surplus, adequacy of capital funds, adequacy and suitability of banking quarters.

6. Set procedures for verification and evaluation of assets, proof of deposits and other liabilities, control of earnings and expenses, whether by the board, a board committee, an inside auditor reporting directly to the board, or an accounting firm making periodic audits.

7. Consider and take measures for management succession to assure adequate replacement of officers dying or retiring.

8. Consider advisability of setting up pension benefits for retiring officers and employees, also contributing to life insurance and health insurance programs.

9. Take measures to insure good public relations, consider advertising services; contribute to civic welfare and financial progress and development.

Directors' Meetings

Performance of directors cannot be adequate if they are uninformed or if they tend to defer unduly to the chief stockholders or the managing officers; or if there is not an orderly and systematic program adopted for directors' meetings. Under these circumstances, board meetings are apt to take on the character of social gatherings, while the executive officer is left free and perhaps encouraged to assume prerogatives of the directors and make all policies and decisions and carry them out.

To an extent, this can be avoided if a regular program is followed at all meetings. The procedure should include reading and approving minutes of the preceding meeting; receiving reports of committees and individual directors; receiving reports of the bank's condition with analysis and comparison with condition at previous dates; having report on overdue loans and other loans of doubtful collectibility, slow loans, large loans, loans to directors and officers and all loans made since the previous meeting; reviewing securities transactions in the investment account; having report and analysis of bank expenses and income; considering and taking action on reports of examination and correspondence from the examining authorities and other matters such as listed under "Board Functions" above.

Loan Policies

Bank credit, like a stream of water, should flow and not stagnate. To be sound, loan policies should be set with the view of having every loan that is put on the books get off the books by a time that is mutually understood and agreed upon between the borrower and the lender. What is the purpose of the loan? How are the proceeds to be used? Where is the money coming from to repay the loan? Is the project practical, is it sensible and does it represent good judgment? Is there some margin for error or miscalculation or bad luck so that the bank may still get its money back if things don't go just as projected? With every approved loan application, there should be good answers to these questions.

Assuming that the good answers are there, there still is the matter of supervising the loans and seeing them paid. Loans that were well made can deteriorate and become problems if renewed time after time as a matter of habit. Bank credit is not properly used to furnish capital for the borrower. It can only be soundly used to meet the present specific needs of the borrower who will be able to repay from his earnings or proceeds of contemplated transactions.

The board should form a policy as to the limit of total loans in relation to total deposits with consideration, too, of totals of demand deposits and time and savings deposits and degrees of fluctuations in each. There have been cases of acute embarrassment where banks confronted with increased loan demands, undertook to meet them and found themselves seriously over-loaned. Sometimes this was done without consideration of the volume of work the officers and employees were equipped to handle, the result being overall deterioration, stagnation and development of large losses.

Loan policies should also define limits as to various types of loans which it makes, real estate loans, automobile loans, business loans, and personal loans. Quality and safety in bank lending has been greatly improved through the still growing tendency to place all loans possible on a regular installment basis for repayment. Properly administered, this system gives the bank flexibility in raising or lowering its loan volumes and gives greater margins of safety. It also helps the borrower who has brought to his mind the necessity to apply monthly a set portion of his income to reduce the debt.

Banks considering going into new types of lending on a considerable scale, should look into proper methods and standards of setting up and administering such a program. Take for example automobile purchase loans. In many cases, banks have leapt into this field without any particular plan, without standards and lacking trained personnel and systems of records and supervision. The results have been bad and particularly so in those banks which purchased paper from dealers without investigating the credit quality. The bank's city correspondent which has the benefit of having the bank's reserve funds on deposit, will gladly furnish expert help in setting up a loan system.

Credit files should be maintained on borrowers, particularly in connection with sizeable unsecured loans. Current financial statements should be on hand when the loans are applied for; also operating statements in the case of business concerns. They should be kept up to date. Judgment of a loan application can be no better than the information at hand. General knowledge of a borrower is no substitute for a detailed statement of his assets and liabilities and can be faulty and misleading.

While conservative loan policies are to be held and carried out, this does not mean that reasonable risks should not be taken. Lending operations involve risks that are necessary in properly serving the community and losses should be recognized when they occur. There have been cases where refusal to meet reasonable local credit needs have resulted in successful moves to organize new banks in competition. In one such case the managing officer, a majority stockholder of the existing bank, had been in the habit of boasting that he had not had a loan loss in the twenty years or so that he had been in charge. With the bulk of the bank's funds carried in government securities, about all he had to offer was a safe place for deposits. And while a safe place for deposits is a fine thing, it does not take care of other needs just as important.

Transfers to a reserve for loan losses account can, to a certain extent, be made free from income taxes. This should certainly be taken advantage of, with all realized losses promptly charged to the reserve account. There should be some recoveries to re-credit to the account and with this in view, the charged off loans should be carried in a separate ledger and kept under review for collection efforts.

Investment Policies

No less than with loans, a bank's investment policy is the responsibility of the board of directors though authority for specific transactions may be delegated to the Investment Committee and officers in charge of investments.

The size of the investment account represents what is available for investment after deducting loans and discounts, cash reserves and fixed assets. A portion of the account should be designated as secondary reserves and invested in highly liquid securities that can be quickly turned into cash with minimum risk of market loss. These consist usually of U. S. Treasury obligations maturing in less than a year. The amount of secondary reserves to be carried will vary with the ratio of demand deposits to time and savings, the degree of liquidity in the loan account and seasonal variations.

The remainder of the investment account can be placed in quality securities of longer maturities and higher yields. The maximum maturity is a matter to be determined and set forth in the investment policies of the board. The maturities should be spaced over the years more or less evenly. Then in the normal course, if the maximum maturity is, say ten years, approximately a tenth of the total will mature each year and be converted to maturities within the maximum.

It is not intended to suggest that ten years is the ideal period to be set for maximum maturities, either in general or for the individual bank. It will depend on a number of factors such as the amounts of cash reserves and secondary reserves normally carried, the degree of liquidity in the loan account, proportion of time and savings to total deposits and yield requirements for paying interest on time and savings deposits, to name some.

Management of a sizeable investment account, to get the best results, requires skills and knowledge of the money market not ordinarily present in smaller banks. For this reason, it is recommended that the bank have investment counsel in setting investment policies and also in individual transactions. Such expert counsel can usually be obtained from the bank's city correspondent which has the benefits of being the bank's depository.

Trust Department

A soundly managed trust department calls for a high degree of legal and technical competence. The amount of work detail and the costs are such that the department loses money unless a large volume of trust business is available. Some smaller banks feel they are losing deposit business by not being in a position to accept trust accounts and are inclined to undertake to qualify. Before doing so, both sides of the question should certainly be investigated. Consult your city correspondent bank. There may end up an arrangement to direct local trust accounts to the corresponding bank, with the local bank acting as intermediary, carrying out local contacts and getting the deposit business associated with the accounts.

E-289

Personnel

The board of directors, as elected by the stockholders, constitutes the bank for all legal purposes. The directors are responsible to the stockholders, to the depositors and to the regulatory authorities to see that the bank is operated with prudence, diligence, care and a reasonable degree of ability.

The directors elect the president and the other officers, but ordinarily delegate authority to the officers to select the other personnel. The latter, however, are also employees of the board and accountable to it. The directors should, therefore, take an interest in the bank's personnel.

In numerous embezzlement cases, it developed that the embezzler had been living high, had been gambling, had been speculating or had been leading an immoral life. All of these created personal financial problems and in some cases, brought on blackmail. In small communities where many of these cases arose, it should have been simple and easy for the directors to know that all was not well with the individual and to take steps to develop the full facts. In larger banks, the personnel officer can take steps to keep well enough posted on the personal life and habits of employees to know of any serious financial and other problems.

The directors should see to it that the bank pays salaries that compare favorably with those elsewhere in the area for similar kinds of work. The best people available should be employed and promotions should be on the basis of performance rather than family relationships.

There should be a set policy for annual vacations for all personnel. Banking authorities are in agreement that each officer and employee should be required to be continuously absent from the bank's premises for a minimum period of two consecutive weeks each year. Aside from the well-being of the individual, this is also an important item in safeguards against manipulation of customers' accounts.

To promote incentive, well-being, good morale and the feeling of security, banks now offer a variety of fringe benefits to officers and employees. These are mainly retirement plans, medical and hospitalization programs and life insurance. These can be provided outright by the bank or a share of the cost contributed. Health and life insurance can be set up on a group basis with cheaper rates than to an individual. As to retirement or pension plans, these can be set up on a collective basis. A bank with small or medium number of employees can well consider using the services of the trust department of its city correspondent in devising the plan and operating it.

Along with the other benefits of the establishment of a retirement plan, there will be included the fixing of the mandatory retirement age for officers and employees. This has been a difficult and touchy matter in many banks and left unsolved, with the result that they have continued under management which had passed the age of energy and effectiveness.

While on the subject of retirement, there should not be overlooked the need for directors to retire gracefully from active participation at a certain age and make way for selection of active and vigorous successors. There can be set up an arrangement whereby the retired members continue their association by being designated "Honorary Director" or "Advisory Director", attending such board meetings as they wish, but having no vote.

Banks can greatly benefit by providing officers and employees the advantage of education along banking lines. The American Institute of Banking has chapters set up in several Georgia cities where courses are offered those who can attend classes in person. The same courses, and more besides, are given by the Institute by correspondence from New York. These courses are specialized by subject and cover the entire field of banking. Graduate study is provided at the Graduate School of Banking at Rutgers University in New Jersey, and at the School of Banking of the South at Louisiana State University. Enrollment in these graduate schools is for two weeks each summer over three years.

The Georgia Bankers Association sponsors the Georgia Banking School at the University of Georgia. Enrollment is for one week each summer over three years. The School offers a special opportunity for Georgia bank personnel. Considerable attention is devoted to development of the executive viewpoint in the student, as well as to practical instruction on banking operations. The objective is to give a training experience bridging the area between American Institute of Banking and the graduate banking schools.

Earnings, Expenses, Dividends

To be sound, a bank must be profitable in its operations. Directors should be very much concerned with a reasonable return to shareholders, and this involves consideration of operating income, expenses, net income and their interrelation. After provision for adequate cash reserves, all available funds should be kept in use. Aside from interest and discount income, there are other important sources which are overlooked. Rather, they are ignored because it has been the practice for so long to furnish the services free; and either through inertia or fear of customer attitudes, nothing has been done about it.

The principal one of these overlooked sources of income is service charges on checking accounts. Personal checking accounts that are active, carry no balances of consequence and are sometimes overdrawn, involve considerable expense to the bank. A reasonable system of service charges should be imposed against these accounts with the aim that either they be put on a profitable basis or be closed out. Then there are checking accounts of business firms that draw dozens or hundreds of checks each month and deposit a volume of checks on out-of-town banks but draw on the proceeds before they can be collected by the bank. As the result, the bank is actually advancing money to the depositor though no overdraft is shown on the books. There is always the danger, too, that out-of-town checks may be returned unpaid, leaving the bank holding the bag. Active business accounts, involving little or no actual collected balances, should have service charges imposed that will compensate for the bank's costs.

A service charge system charges the depositor proportionately to the activity in the account with charges offset in part or in full in proportion to the balances maintained in the account. Official statistics show that all banks in the nation on the average collect 5½% of their operating revenue from deposit account service charges. Banks that have not set up service charge arrangements or that need to improve the arrangements they have, should consult their city correspondent bank for help and advice in devising a system that is fair to the bank and the customer alike.

Other leaks from legitimate income or absorbed costs are in the fields of collection fees, payroll services and safe deposit box rentals. There are no doubt others to be found by investigation.

Proper board supervision calls for careful scrutiny of all expenses. The largest item is salaries, which should be adequate to attract and hold good people but in line with the services rendered by each individual. Interest on time and savings deposits is the second largest outlay in many banks. Aside from the legal limits imposed by the supervisory authorities, determination of the rates to be paid should involve consideration of the opportunity for profitable employment of the funds, as well as competition with other institutions.

An important expense in bank operations is for occupancy, use and maintenance of banking quarters and equipment. Banking quarters can be adequate, suitable and dignified without being lavish. Some banks have tended to handicap their earnings potential unduly by tying up too great a proportion of their capital funds in fixed assets; while others have put out large sums without taking future growth and expansion prospects into consideration. As previously stated, fixed assets costs are limited by statute, but costs may be exceeded with the prior approval of the Superintendent of Banks. Where such approvals are given, they are conditioned on initial charge-offs of part of the costs or on agreement for annual special charge-offs over and above tax-allowable depreciation rates until book values are within the statutory limit. Sometimes there is a combination of initial charge-off and continued extra charge-offs. Banks contemplating new quarters in the foreseeable future would do well to set aside a fund from earnings with the view to its use in absorbing land and building costs and reducing the carrying values.

Taxes are, of course, an important expense item, particularly income taxes, though they vary from bank to bank. Some banks are in position to minimize income taxes by leaning toward obligations of States, Counties and Municipalities in managing the investment account.

Other expense costs to be watched by the directors include office supplies, stationery, advertising, insurance, fees for legal and other services, dues and donations. Excessive expense charges for attendance at conventions, entertainment and the like should be guarded against.

Directors will find it of interest and benefit to compare the bank's operations as to income and expenses with those of other banks. This can be done by using the banking statistics published annually by the Department of Banking. These statistics afford interesting comparison between all Georgia State banks and your bank of percentage relationships of the various categories of income and expenses to total income.

Banks with capital funds on the low side, considering the volume of business, will do well to limit or omit cash dividends until the situation is corrected by addition of earnings. Those experiencing growth and having growth prospects should do the same. This might hit some stockholders as objectionable, but there can be explained to them the advantages to the individual stockholder of accumulating surplus to be later used for stock dividends. Stock dividends are exempt from federal income taxes, while cash dividends are not. It can be explained further that the alternative would probably be that they will be faced in the future with making cash subscriptions for new capital stock after having paid income taxes on the cash dividends over the intervening period.

As a final thought pertaining both to the bank's income tax liabilities and to the payment of dividends, all items on the bank's books that can be considered worthless or doubtful of collection, should be charged off before the close of each tax year and before declaration of each dividend. This is also a good thought for directors whose names appear on the bank's published statements.

Audits and Controls

Although official governmental examinations include some elements of audit and verification, they are not audits of the bank's operations. Their purpose is rather to determine whether the bank's assets are adequate to cover all liabilities and that all laws applicable to the bank and its operations are being observed. Bank directors cannot meet their duties and responsibilities in the field of audits and controls by reliance on governmental examinations, nor can they rely on fidelity bond coverage in this regard.

At the same time, it is true that many boards of directors do not include competent accountants. Also, in banks of size, it is not practical for directors to perform audits, considering the time involved, though directors with accounting experience can well represent the board as an Audit Committee to oversee audit functions.

Thus, it devolves on the directors of most small banks to have outside help — an accountant or a firm experienced in bank auditing.

Banks in some areas have grouped together to employ auditors on a revolving basis, thus reducing the expense. Also, some city correspondent banks regularly assist their small bank customers in audit arrangement and functions.

Although not preferable, an outside auditor can use personnel of the bank in performing some of the audit work. If this is done, it must be arranged that no individual undertakes to list, prove or verify records, property or transactions with which he or she has had connection and this is often not possible in a small bank.

Banks of medium size employ an inside auditor on a full time basis to make regular or continuing audits. Such an auditor is accountable to and makes regular reports to the board or the Examination Committee and not to the principal executive officer. In the large banks, the auditor becomes comptroller or manager of the Audit Department. Some banks, both large and small, add to this by employing firms of certified public accountants to make regular audits.

There follows a check list which is in use in examination reports made by the Georgia Department of Banking. It illustrates basic principles of routine safeguards but may not include all functions of any individual bank. It can be expanded or changed to fit the individual bank. The more "yeses" and the fewer "nos" that can be recorded, the better the safeguards. A "no" answer indicates an unsatisfactory condition which should be corrected and reference to such answers may be noted under "comments".

BANKERS BLANKET BOND COVERAGE

Protection against dishonest acts of officers and employees is afforded by coverage in a standard form of Bankers Blanket Bond which also insures against losses from burglary, robbery, theft, forgery and certain other risks common to financial institutions. Fixing the amount of the coverage is the responsibility of the board. In this regard, some assistance is provided by a schedule of minimum amounts as recommended by the Insurance and Protective Committee of the American Bankers Association. The schedule of minimum amounts is related to total deposits after study of loss experiences of banks. Many boards have fixed the amount of the coverage higher than the schedule amount. The fixing of a smaller amount than recommended for the size of bank might entail some personal risk of liability on the part of the directors, should a loss occur beyond the limit of the bond.

Several years ago, following a number of embezzlements of bank-breaking size, there evolved the Excess Bank Employee Dishonesty Blanket Bond, commonly termed "umbrella coverage", available if the bank has the minimum recommended or larger basic coverage as discussed above. With this bond, a bank acquires, at moderate cost, $1,000,000 dishonesty coverage over and above the basic coverage. No director anticipates dishonesty shortages of that range in his bank. At the same time, they do occur and, as often as not, they occur in small banks where, with "one man" domination, there is greater ease of concealment.

The standard forms of bankers blanket bonds all include one provision that should not be forgotten. It is to the effect that the bond becomes cancelled as to any employee "as soon as the Insured shall learn of any dishonest act on the part of such employee". Some years ago the directors of a small bank in Georgia learned that the Assistant Cashier had converted several hundred dollars of the bank's funds to his personal use. He replaced the funds by borrowing from relatives, was permitted to remain in his position, and no information of the matter was given to anyone outside the bank. Several years later, the Assistant Cashier was detected short in a heavy amount. Claim was made against the surety company and, in its investigation of the shortage, the company learned of the previous shortage and denied liability for the large one. Thereupon, the Superintendent of Banks called on the directors to make good the amount and they did so, recognizing their responsibility for the loss. Had they not done so, it would have been necessary to obtain new capital funds from the stockholders or place the bank in liquidation.

In any case of misappropriation, however small, the offending employee must be relieved and the bonding company notified, whether claim for the loss is made or not. Violation of both federal and state criminal laws being involved, report should be made to the prosecuting authorities of each as well as to the Superintendent of Banks and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation or the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta if the bank is a member of the Federal Reserve System.

Credit Life Insurance

Credit Life Insurance has become rather prevalent in connection with bank lending in recent years. Through it the bank realizes payment from the insurance in the event of the borrower's death during the term of the loan. The Georgia insurance laws prohibit a bank from acting as insurance agent and this function usually devolves either upon an insurance agency affiliated with the bank or upon the loan officer who may be appointed agent by the insurance company.

No credit life insurance arrangements should be made except with the approval of the board of directors. If a loan officer acts as agent and personally benefits from the premiums or fees, it is to be hoped and guarded against that this will not affect his credit judgment, as has seemed to occur in a number of instances. Moreover, the board should require the officer-agent to report annually on the premiums realized, the amount to be taken in consideration in fixing his salary paid by the bank.

Directors' Examinations

These general suggestions are made in connection with examinations made by the board of directors, the examining committee, accountants under the direction of the board or a combination of these. The suggestions are not all inclusive and represent a scope that would be modified by the size of the bank and types of operations; also by the extent considered feasible for detailed audit of individual transactions. Examinations should be made without the personnel of the bank having prior information as to the time of starting.

Cash should be counted and the total compared with the general ledger total or total shown by the balance sheet of the bank's assets and liabilities. Cash items should be carefully scrutinized and any improper items, such as unposted checks or other items held to conceal overdrafts, should be reported.

Due from Banks. The bank's last reconcilements of accounts with correspondent banks should be compared with the books and exceptions checked out. Requests should be sent to the banks for statements for the period from the last statement to about 10 days after date of examination, but showing balance also as of date of examination. The new statements can then be reconciled, with the 10-day period allowing for clearance of exceptions. It should be determined whether cash reserves meet requirements of state law or Federal Reserve regulations and whether such requirements have been habitually met.

Securities should be examined, totaled and compared with balance sheet totals. Those not on hand should be verified by receipts of the holders. Unless the receipts are unconditional as to time (require return of the receipt before delivery of the securities), the securities should be verified by correspondence. It should be ascertained whether the bank's holdings of securities, including any stocks, were legally acquired and are so held; and whether holdings are in accordance with investment policies set by the board of directors. An itemized list should be made showing book values compared with present market values.

Loans and Discounts. Notes should be added and the total compared with the balance sheet. Genuineness, value and security of each note and of the collateral thereto should be determined. Any items considered as losses or doubtful of collection should be noted. The liabilities of each of the larger borrowers, including endorser liabilities and liabilities of affiliated interests, should be totaled and considered as to conformance with law as to legal limitations and required approvals of the board or the loan committee. Report should be made on the distribution of loans as to types and kinds of collateral and whether in accordance with loan policies set by the board. Lists should be made of all loans made to or endorsed by directors, officers, employees or their affiliated interests, and showing whether any are lacking required approvals of the board or loan committee. It should be noted whether all notes are made to the bank or properly transferred to it, whether collateral notes and securities are properly assigned, whether mortgages are recorded and whether insurance policies for the bank's protection are on hand with loss payable to the bank. All overdue loans should be listed and commented upon as to collectibility and any recommendations for handling.

Deposit Ledgers. Account balances should be added and totals compared with controls and the balance sheet of the bank's books. Overdrawn account balances should be compared with the overdraft record and the total of overdrafts shown in the balance sheet or shown as memorandum to the balance sheet. Extensive or habitual overdrafts should be noted and commented upon. Any estimated losses should be indicated.

Certificates of Deposit, Cashiers Checks, Money Orders. Paid and cancelled certificates and checks should be checked from the registers and amounts of those outstanding added and compared with respective totals shown on the balance sheet.

Income Accounts. If detailed audit of these accounts is not to be undertaken, there are nevertheless a number of test checks and reviews that are of value in forming opinion whether items of income are properly accounted for. For example, if an average interest rate can be estimated for the bank's entire loan portfolio, the average rate can be applied to the average total of loans over the past year and the result compared with actual collections of interest and discounts entered over the same period. The same can be done for categories of loans bearing different rates if they are carried under separate controls or the average totals can be estimated; for example, business loans, installment loans, mortgage loans. The same can be done with the investment account with sizeable purchases and sales during the year taken into account. If the bank is a non-par bank and deducts exchange in remitting for checks drawn on it, the rate of exchange can be applied to total remittances for checks over a period for comparison with the book total shown for the same period. Service charges and collection fees should normally run steady from month to month though there may be seasonal variations, particularly in volume of drafts handled as regards collection fees. Again, as regards loan income, test checks can be made for any one day or longer period of time by identifying the loans made and loans paid during the period, computing interest and discount that should have been collected and comparing the amounts with those entered on the books.

Expense Accounts. Aside from a detailed audit, salary and other expense items carrying fixed rates can be figured over a period and results compared with expense account ledger figures. This is true provided the bank maintains a record of distribution of expense, as it should do. Other expense items should be supported by statements and should be examined with the view to determine that charges are proper. Interest paid on savings can be approximately computed by applying the savings rate to the total of savings accounts averaged over an interest period and the result can be compared with the amount entered for the period. The test for interest paid on certificates of deposit would need to be made differently, due to varying maturity dates. Also, if interest paid is all charged to one control and the bank has incurred interest costs for borrowed money, allowance would be made for these charges to the account. Entries made to the undivided profits account and "profit and loss" account should be examined and reported.

Direct Verification. No system of examination and audit can be complete without some measure of direct verification, both with the individual borrowers and the individual depositors. Manuals showing how this can be best and most easily accomplished, together with the forms to be used, are available through your city correspondent.

In General. Arrangements of the working affairs of the bank should be looked into and compared with the set of tests given above under the heading of Audits and Controls. The report of examination should include statement of any matters deemed to affect the solvency, stability and prosperity of the bank. The report should be presented to the board, noted in the minutes as to action taken, preserved in the bank's files and shown to state and federal examiners at their next examinations of the bank for notation in their reports.
